Backlog of Major Issues Facing Congress Session

THIS IS THE WAY the Capitol will look to the members of Congress returning for the session beginning Jan. 10. The east front of the Capitol has been extended in line with plans formulated by the late Speaker Sam Rayburn, and now "balances" other sections correctly beneath the dome.

Textile Unit Hit by T-H Injunction

Anderson, S. C.—A federal judge here has enjoined a southern textile manufacturer from using unlawful methods—specifically including threats, interrogation and discharge of employes—to prevent his workers from organizing. At the same time, he denied a request by the National Labor Relations Board for a court order immediately reinstating three workers allegedly fired for union activities so that the "status quo" could be restored while the board proceeded with formal hearings.

Judge Robert J. Martin, Jr., said there is "sufficient evidence" on the record for the NLRB to conclude that the three union committeemen were "unlawfully discharged" by the Wellington Division of the West Point Mfg. Co. in order to break up a Textile Workers Union of America organizing drive.

But he said this was a decision the labor board itself would have to make after weighing the evidence and evaluating conflicting testimony.

"A court should proceed with caution before prejudging issues that Congress has said are for the board," the judge declared.

He held that reinstatement of the employes by court order before the NLRB held hearings would "go beyond maintaining the status quo."

The injunction was one of a series sought by the NLRB in recent months under the little-used Sec. 10j of the Taft-Hartley Act, which permits the labor board to petition federal courts for immediate relief against unfair labor practices by unions or employers.

In Dallas, Tex., last month, U.S. District Judge Sarah Hughes granted an NLRB petition and ordered the immediate reinstatment of 14 workers allegedly fired for union activities at a chemical plant. Earlier an attempt by the NLRB to prevent the closing of a Peerless Woolen Mills plant in Georgia had been turned down by U.S. District Judge Frank Hooper, who refused to enjoin the closing until the NLRB had an opportunity to rule on whether it was an illegal retaliation against workers who had voted for union representation.

The limited injunction in the Anderson case enjoined the company from hereafter:

- Discharging employes because of union membership, activities or sympathies.
- Unlawfully interrogating employes concerning their union membership or that of other employes.
- Threatening, surveilling or dis-

Urges $1.5 Billion a Year:

Meany Asks Equal Access to Education

The AFL-CIO is committed to a "massive assault" on inequality of educational opportunity and looks to the colleges and universities as "allies in a common cause" to establish as public policy the sole yardstick of individual ability.

To mount such an assault, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told a conference on Equal Opportunity for Higher Education, will take $1.5 billion a year under proposed federal aid legislation, compared to a gross national product nearing $540 billion a year and federal tax receipts of $70 billion.

But, he emphasized, "in a very real sense the dollar amounts don't matter. We are not talking about an expenditure; we're talking about an investment, an investment in our most valuable resource, an investment in our future. The danger is not that America will go bankrupt by making such an investment. The danger is a far more disastrous kind of bankruptcy by not making it."

The AFL-CIO president spoke at a dinner session of the two-day conference held in cooperation with the American Association of Land Grant Colleges and State Universities on equal opportunity for higher education.

He noted that 100 years after enactment of the Morrill Act establishing land grant colleges, the nation is about as far "from realizing" the objectives of the act "as we are from fulfilling the purposes of the 14th and 15th Amendments which are nearly as old."

"Time for Reality to Catch Up"

In both civil rights and educational opportunity, he stressed, "the time has come for reality to catch up with ideals."

Reviewing established scholarship and loan programs to aid youngsters to receive college educations, Meany noted that the total of all scholarships amounted to only 5 percent of the overall expenses of the college population and that each averaged $145 a year. Student loans under proposed legislation likewise would amount to only a fraction of the need, he said.

To redeem the 100-year-old promise of the Morrill Act, a

Redistricting Formula Adopted in Minnesota

St. Paul, Minn.—A special session of the Minnesota legislature has adopted a compromise congressional redistricting plan which is expected to cost the Republican Party at least one House seat next November, and possibly as many as three.

The state, now represented by six Republicans and three Democrats, will lose one representative in the 88th Congress as a result of population shifts revealed by the 1960 census. If it had failed to redistrict, all eight congressmen would have had to be elected at-large.

If voting in the realligned districts follows past patterns, Democrats and Republicans can each count on two safe seats. Each party will also have a distinct edge for a third seat. The two remaining districts are marginal and could go either way.

Bipartisan agreement on redistricting was not reached until late in December, after both the regular session of the politically-divided legislature and the first of two special sessions had adjourned in deadlock.

The compromise bill, signed by Gov. Elmer L. Andersen (R) after winning overwhelming approval in both the liberal House and the conservative Senate, places incumbent Democrat Fred Marshall and incumbent Republican H. Carl Andersen in the same district.

While the district, in the west central part of the state, is largely

GOP Senate Leadership Fight Looms

By Willard Shelton

A Senate Republican leadership fight was in sight as Congress headed back to Washington for its 1962 session with Sen. Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts campaigning hard for the post of GOP Senate Policy Committee chairman against the challenge of Sen. Bourke Hickenlooper of Iowa.

Saltonstall, backed by the Senate Republican liberals who in 1959 failed in an effort to elect Sen. John Sherman Cooper of Kentucky as party floor leader, sought the Policy Committee post in letters to his GOP colleagues backed by personal telephone calls, according to reliable Republican sources.

On the House side, as Congress neared its appointed Jan. 10 date for the second session, Democrats settled the great changeover from the 21-year benevolent rule of the late Speaker Sam Rayburn by slating Rep. John W. McCormack of Massachusetts as Speaker and Rep. Carl B. Albert of Oklahoma, assistant leader in recent years, to succeed the 71-year-old McCormack.

Albert's election became a certainty in the House Democratic caucus scheduled for Jan. 9 when Rep. Richard Bolling of Missouri, long Rayburn's key spokesman on the powerful House Rules Committee, pulled out of the race on Jan. 3, saying in a news conference, "I do not have enough support to win."

Albert, a Border State Democrat and a former Rhodes scholar, is credited by the White House with having worked diligently last year for major portions of Pres. Kennedy's program. His backers suggested that he would be able, as floor leader, to attract southern sup-

Jobs, Trade, Health Top '62 Agenda

By David L. Perlman

A heavy backlog of unfinished business awaits the reconvening of Congress on Jan. 10—a Congress whose first session record last year was rated a "qualified success" by the AFL-CIO.

The tug-of-war between the conservative coalition and Administration supporters is expected to be renewed with election year intensity in the House, where the division on many key issues last year was so close that a scant handful of votes determined the outcome.

Important Administration and labor-backed bills awaiting second session action include health care for the aged under social security, federal aid to education, and a series of measures aimed at providing jobs, retraining and income protection for millions still unemployed.

A major battle is anticipated over Pres. Kennedy's announced intention to seek greater two-way trade to keep "people working at home and around the world." The expiration of the Reciprocal Trade Act this year and the growing significance of the European Common Market combine to make world trade and tariff policy one of the key issues before Congress. An expanded trade program has been strongly backed by the AFL-CIO.

Other Bills Await Action

On the agenda, too, is tax reform. The House Ways & Means Committee began work last year on Administration proposals for revamping the tax structure.

Legislation to help migrant farm workers, civil rights proposals, and bills easing restrictions on picketing and tightening safeguards against abuses of welfare and pension funds are also awaiting action.

Before the session is over, proposals for a pay raise and checkoff

Meeting of Council Moved to Miami

The mid-winter meeting of the AFL-CIO Executive Council will be held at the Americana Hotel in Miami Beach, Fla., beginning Feb. 19, Federation Pres. George Meany has announced.

Previously the meeting had been scheduled for San Juan, Puerto Rico, beginning Feb. 26. The change was made because of a shortage of hotel accommodations in San Juan.

THE THREAT TO BARGAINING and working conditions inherent in new techniques for setting industrial production standards was explained to AFL-CIO union industrial engineers and researchers by Dr. Malcolm H. Gotterer (speaking) of the University of California, who has done extensive research in the field. Around the table, from left to right, are Lester Spielman of the Ladies' Garment Workers; Charles Rause, Pulp-Sulphite; Chuck Kimble and David Lasser, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; Ted F. Silvey and Bert Gottlieb, AFL-CIO Dept. of Research; Charles N. Hall, AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.; Ed Peresluha and Don Wasserman, Machinists; William J. McGrath, Postal Clerks; Fred H. Simon, Auto Workers, and John Price and Glenn E. Watts, Communications Workers.

Motion-Time Systems Assailed at Conference

Predetermined motion-time systems, management's latest technique for setting work standards, don't work well, cannot be justified and have no scientific basis, Dr. Malcolm H. Gotterer of the University of California told a meeting of union industrial engineers and researchers with responsibilities in the area at a meeting in AFL-CIO headquarters.

They have values for management, he said, so long as they are used for purposes which have no direct effect on workers. They should not be used, he maintained, to set production standards which workers would have to meet to hold day-work jobs, or as a basis for wage incentive systems.

The meeting was set up by Bert Gottlieb, industrial engineer in the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research.

Former Consultant

Gotterer, after a decade of business experience as an industrial engineer, management consultant and administrator, returned to the academic world to work for advanced degrees. For his doctoral thesis he undertook research into predetermined motion-time systems. Under these systems industrial engineers do not make time studies of an operator at work, but instead apply tables of predetermined times to basic body motions.

Gotterer expected to end up with objective proof that the systems are good for management and for labor relations, but instead found the opposite to be true.

Organized labor has frequently attacked the motion-time systems because they fail to take into account the human element in the production process.

The recent AFL-CIO convention in a resolution declared that these and other so-called "statistical" techniques for setting production standards "are based . . . on false assumptions which have historically characterized the work of the management engineer."

"When applied to the work place these techniques yield results which are neither accurate, reliable or valid," the resolution said.

All too often workers find, it went on, the alleged "scientific" method "merely is a device to circumvent established bargaining arrangements."

The resolution urged affiliates to make all members aware of the threat of such practices to working conditions and to bargaining; to fight the spread of "abusive and arbitrary applications" of questionable industrial engineering techniques; to persuade industrial engineers to channel their efforts "to the basic human problems of work," and to take advantage of the AFL-CIO Union Industrial Engineering Institutes, held annually at the University of Wisconsin, to train union representatives to cope with the new systems.

During floor discussion Pres. E. C. Hallbeck of the Postal Clerks called the federal government "one of the worst offenders in this field." He cited "what they call a work measurement system" in the Post Office Dept. which he said is "nothing except a speed-up system designed to wring the last ounce of effort out of an employe."

Ship Union Elects New York Officers

New York—Ninety days of mail balloting by 1,019 members of Local 88, Masters, Mates & Pilots, resulted in the re-election of Capt. Arthur Holdeman as president, Capt. Lloyd Sheldon as secretary-treasurer, Capt. Frank Scavo as first vice president and Capt. James Logan as patrolman.

The American Arbitration Association, conducting the election, reported also that Ray Kruse was chosen as second vice president, Richard Polachek and Capt. Joseph Gaier as patrolmen. Their new terms started in January.

High Court Upholds Goldberg's L-G Powers

The U. S. Supreme Court has refused to review a lower court decision upholding Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg's subpoena power under the Landrum-Griffin Act.

Teamster Locals 614 in Pontiac, Mich., and 299 in Detroit—the latter headed by IBT Pres. James R. Hoffa—had refused to honor subpoenas for financial records. The decision of the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals upholding the subpoena power of the Secretary of Labor stands as a result of the denial of review.

TWU Wins Pacts on Bus, Subway Lines

New York—A four-day strike of the Transport Workers against the Fifth Avenue Coach Lines and its subsidiary Surface Transit, Inc., resulted in a new one-year agreement with substantial improvements for 6,700 employes of the two private lines.

The strike started at 12:01 a.m. New Year's Day and ended with a vote of acceptance of the new contract at a union mass meeting. Terms included wage increases of 13 cents an hour, retroactive to Dec. 1, four weeks of vacation after 15 years of service, and one more paid holiday, Election Day.

6 Others Had Settled

The two lines were the only holdouts in TWU contract negotiations with the New York Transit Authority and seven private lines. The others had settled before a strike deadline on terms of new two-year contracts affecting 30,300 bus and subway workers.

During the strike, union pickets were stationed at all shops and terminals of the struck lines, which had franchises to serve 107 routes in Manhattan, the Bronx, and parts of Queens and Westchester county.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner (D) blamed management's original refusal to settle with the TWU on a bitter internal fight between two factions of Fifth Avenue Coach stockholders. He warned management that it could lose its franchise.

TWU Pres. Michael Quill said the new agreement was due to union solidarity. The last strike, in 1953, brought the five-day week to union members then working on the private lines, he said.

The new agreements with the New York Transit Authority and the five other private lines provide these improvements:

- Wage increases of 4.5 percent this year, another 3.5 percent next Jan. 1, or an average boost of 22 cents an hour.
- Reductions of 2.5 percent this year and next year in worker payments to the city retirement fund.
- Vacations of four weeks after 15 years of service instead of the former 20.

The agreements also provide for working condition improvements costing about $200,000 with another $200,000 worth of improvements to be worked out by a joint labor-management committee within 90 days, the union said.

NLRB Upsets Examiner:

Unions' 'Unfair' List Backed in TV Strike

Sacramento—The National Labor Relations Board has ruled that two broadcast industry unions have a legal right under the Landrum-Griffin Act to handbill a struck television station here and to put station advertisers on an "unfair" list.

An NLRB panel voted, 2-1, that Local 55 of the Broadcast Employes & Technicians and the San Francisco local of the Television & Radio Artists were protected by the L-G publicity proviso when they handbilled Station KXTV, owned by John Hay Whitney, former U.S. ambassador to Great Britain.

In so ruling the panel majority—Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and John H. Fanning, with Philip Ray Rodgers dissenting—followed a precedent set in the Lohman Sales Co. case in August and the Middle South Broadcasting Co. case in November in arriving at this rule:

Unions have a right to issue "Do Not Patronize" handbills listing advertisers over a struck station when the handbilling is truthful, orderly, and does not result in a work stoppage by employes of the advertisers.

Union members at KXTV have been on strike since Sept. 26, 1960, for a contract with Whitney's Great Western Broadcasting Corp., which bought the station from former owners. They picketed the station, distributed handbills with the names of advertisers, and got the Sacramento Labor Council to put persistent advertisers on an "unfair" list.

After a charge filed by station management, NLRB General Council Stuart Rothman issued a complaint accusing the unions of unfair labor practices and obtained from U.S. District Court here an order restraining them from publicizing the names of any advertisers on the struck station.

Nine months later the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals lifted the injunction and NABET and AFTRA then resumed their handbill campaign.

McCulloch and Fanning in their ruling overruled the finding of an NLRB trial examiner that the unions had violated the law.

It is clear, the NLRB majority said, that the Landrum-Griffin Act's publicity proviso "specifically enables a union" involved in a primary dispute to "seek assistance in such dispute from members of the public including members of a labor organization."

McCulloch and Fanning rejected the claim that KXTV provides a service and not a product. They held that the station, by adding its labor to the products it advertises for secondary employers, becomes one of the producers of the products it advertises.

They concluded that "the request of the Central Labor Council that its members not use the products of the named advertisers was fully protected as permissible dissemination of truthful information."

Goldberg Sees Economic Rise 'Through '62'

The country will continue to set job records in the immediate months ahead, Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg forecast in a year-end statement in which he reported that "all signs point to a further vigorous improvement in our economy."

"I think we can confidently look forward to a continued rise in the economy through 1962," he predicted.

He warned labor and management that "a recovery can be impeded by a lack of restraint to both prices and wages" during crucial months.

"While we look forward to improvement in the employment situation, nevertheless I must also record that our unemployment situation, though significantly improved, is still not satisfactory," he continued.

"We have too many of our people out of work. We owe the continuing obligation to them to restore to the maximum extent practicable full employment so that all people who are willing and able to work can find a job.

PRES. AL BARBOUR, left, of the Wayne County, Mich., AFL-CIO, signs a document that makes him a county road commissioner—the first labor man named to the commission since its formation 57 years ago. At the swearing-in ceremony, Barbour recalled that the last time he worked "on the roads" in Detroit was in 1934, when he was a WPA worker. His $4,200 yearly salary as a road commissioner will be deducted from his salary as central body head. Watching Barbour is Sylvester Noetzel, road official.

'To Keep Record Straight':

Oklahoma Group Fights 'Work' Drive

Oklahoma City—A citizens' group of prominent educators, public officials, businessmen, farmers and attorneys has been formed here to fight a drive for a so-called "right-to-work" law in Oklahoma.

Charles Schwoerke, Oklahoma City attorney and insurance executive, said the 24-member committee "will attempt to keep the record somewhat straight" by exposing "right-to-work" as "a clever gimmick for destroying collective bargaining and lowering wages for both union and non-union workers."

He said members of the group, called the Oklahoma Committee to Preserve Free Marketing & Bargaining, did not necessarily support labor's position "in every respect" but were agreed that a ban on union shop agreements would hurt the people of the state.

"Right-to-work" groups, with the active backing of the state Republican organization, have announced that they will begin circulating initiative petitions Jan. 15 in an effort to force the issue to a statewide referendum. The legislature has rebuffed lobbyists' efforts to obtain a "work" law by statute.

Oklahoma State AFL-CIO Executive Vice Pres. Len Yarborough charged that "reactionary" publishers of two of the state's biggest newspapers have pushed the "right-to-work" drive "with the aim of destroying free collective bargaining."

Yarborough charged that E. K. Gaylord, publisher of the Oklahoma City Daily Oklahoman and Times, and Jenkin Lloyd Jones of the Tulsa Tribune have joined forces with the National Right-to-Work Committee and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce "to shackle the people of Oklahoma with an unneeded, unwanted, punitive law."

He said the anti-labor publishers have used the columns of their newspapers to push for "right-to-work" through "false propaganda."

Announcement of the formation of the citizen's group to oppose the "right-to-work" drive listed these founding members, in addition to Schwoerke:

Prof. George Benz, Central State College; Homer Bishop, Seminole attorney; Prof. Paul Brinker, University of Oklahoma; Edward Carlson, Alva farmer; Joseph Coughlan, Dover farmer; J. T. Daniel, Ryan publisher; State Rep. Heber Finch, Sapulpa; Ira Finley, Oklahoma City; Prof. John Graham, Central State College; Prof. Joseph Klos, Oklahoma State University; John F. Martin, former mayor of Oklahoma City; Wheeler Mayo, Sallisaw publisher.

Also, Pat Malloy, Tulsa attorney; J. D. McCarty, speaker of the Oklahoma House of Representatives; Prof. Rodney Mitchell, Cameron State College; State Sen. Tom Payne, Okmulgee; State Sen. Jean Pazoureck, El Reno; Paul Pugh, Oklahoma City attorney; Gordon Rockett, Drumright publisher; Dr. Michael Shadid, Oklahoma City physician; Don Snyder, Oklahoma City contractor; B. N. Voss, Tulsa contractor; Lewis Watson, Ada attorney.

Marine Officers Get 4 Percent Hike

Hoboken, N. J.—Some 500 deck and engineer officers on American Export Lines ships get a pay rise of 4 percent, plus adjustments, in a new three-year agreement between management and the National Maritime Union's Brotherhood of Marine Officers.

Additional increases of 2.25 percent in base pay and overtime rates are provided for at the end of each contract year. The agreement also increases vacations for masters and chief engineers by 90 days annually, and improves insurance and sick leave provisions.

MRS. THELMA MAHONEY, left, the first labor representative and the first woman ever named to the three-member Los Angeles Civil Service Commission, is given the oath of office by Appellate Justice Mildred Lillie. Mrs. Mahoney, COPE county coordinator, was appointed for a six-year term by Supervisor Warren Dorn, center, and will deal with work of 43,000 county employes.

criminating against union members or supporters.

- Promising benefits to employes to discourage union membership.
- Using company-sponsored employe organizations to carry out any of the above activities.

The last reference was directed at the so-called "Citizens' Club" organized at the plant to fight the union. Martin noted in his decision that there was "substantial evidence" that the group was organized and sponsored by management" and had made a threat tha the plant would be closed if the workers voted for a union.

In dealing with the discharges of the union leaders, the court said the company claimed that one had been fired because of "production curtailment," another because of "inattention to work," and the third on the grounds that he had "interferred with production by his union activities."

Although "there is sufficient evidence from which it may be found that these three employes were unlawfully discharged," Martin noted, he said there are "sharp conflicts" in the testimony of company officials and union supporters "which will have to be resolved by the NLRB in making its ultimate determination."

Film Unions Ask 'Runaway' Parley

Hollywood—The Hollywood Film Council has voted unanimously at a meeting here to invite motion picture producers to a conference on problems raised by "runaway" production of films in foreign countries."

The goal, the council said in its resolution, is "voluntary agreement upon ways and means of overcoming the economic pressures created by the U.S. tax structure and the production incentives available in a number of foreign countries, and other factors, which threaten to destroy the Hollywood motion picture industry through runaway production."

The resolution said the meeting would examine the industry's economic problems "with emphasis on increasing the number of pictures made in Hollywood and reducing the number of American-interest pictures being made abroad."

Auto Workers Strike Studebaker-Packard

South Bend, Ind.—Six unsettled contract issues have led to a strike of 6,500 members of the Auto Workers and a shutdown of Studebaker-Packard Corp. plants here.

The walkout started at midnight Jan. 1 after almost daily negotiations beginning Oct. 2 failed to produce a new agreement. Woodrow Frick, president of UAW Local 5, said some 85 meetings had been held and that the local executive board voted a work stoppage after management had terminated the contract as of midnight Dec. 30.

Local 5 scheduled a membership meeting for Jan. 7 and a meeting with management Jan. 8.

Frick listed among issues still unsettled: recognition of the UAW as exclusive bargaining agent for workers, including those at the newly-acquired Curtiss-Wright plant here, and clear recognition of union rights on grievances and other on-the-job issues.

Also listed were issues involving overtime computation, relief and cleanup time, shift premiums, insurance and the annual improvement factor.

The union said Studebaker management proposed changes which Local 5 negotiators and members had found unacceptable, including changes in shift premiums, in payment for weekend work, and in the method used to calculate vacation pay, and a proposal to transfer some funds from the improvement factor to pensions.

Local 5 is maintaining picket lines and all production has been halted, Frick said.

Studebaker's last economic offer was for an annual improvement factor increase of 6 cents an hour, or 2.5 percent, and a cost-of-living increase of 1 cent an hour, the UAW said.

UAW Regional Dir. Raymond H. Berndt denounced the company proposal as wholly "one-sided." He said workers are "expected to bear the total burden of the company's misfortunes while executives continue to enrich themselves with bonuses and dividends."

Unions Get Simplified L-G Reporting Form

The Labor Dept. has mailed a "simplified, streamlined" one-page report form to almost 40,000 unions required to file financial reports under the Landrum-Griffin Act, the department has announced.

Commissioner John L. Holcombe of the Bureau of Labor-Management Reports said the new revised form, LM-3, may be filed by labor organizations whose total receipts were less than $30,000 in the 12-month period covered by the report, provided the organizations were not under trusteeship at the end of their fiscal year. Formerly the limit was $20,000.

For about 80 percent of the unions affected by the law, the new form replaces a two-page form and also, Holcombe said, eliminates the need to file a separate form reporting amendments to the labor organization information report.

In addition, carbon papers are provided so that six copies of the new short form may be made—two for the bureau, one for the Internal Revenue Service, one for the union file and two "extras" for state agencies or international unions.

Holcombe said the bureau intends to hold financial report clinics during the first three months of 1962 to help advise union officials and will also answer questions at any of the 25 area offices in the states and Puerto Rico.

IUD Membership Ended by IBEW

Pres. Gordon M. Freeman of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers has announced that the brotherhood has ended its membership in the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.

In a letter to Walter P. Reuther, IUD president, dated Dec. 28, with which he transmitted the IBEW per capita tax in the IUD for December 1961, Freeman advised that the IBEW was discontinuing its affiliation with the department, effective Dec. 31.

The IBEW had been a member of the IUD since is creation in 1955.

Typical Illinois Jobseeker Is Man 20-44, Unskilled

Springfield, Ill.—A composite portrait of the Illinois jobseeker is beginning to emerge from a survey of 143,650 unemployed.

The typical jobseeker in Illinois is . . .

Young (20 to 44).

Unskilled.

A high school drop-out.

Ready, able and willing to accept training in a school to learn a new skill.

Gov. Otto Kerner appointed a committee last summer, headed by Frank H. Cassell, an Inland Steel Co. executive, to examine unemployment in Illinois and suggest what to do about it.

During August, the committee made a survey through the State Labor Dept. Applicants at the Illinois State Employment Service and at unemployment compensation offices were questioned on their personal and occupational characteristics, educational background and length of unemployment.

The results haven't been published yet, but some of the information gathered was disclosed by Kerner at a meeting of the Chicago Association of Commerce and Industry.

Students returning to school and workers involved in a labor dispute were excluded from the survey. All of those surveyed were unemployed and seeking permanent full-time jobs.

Among the findings:

Nearly 65 percent of the jobseekers were men.

A full 60 percent were 20 to 44 years old.

Unskilled workers were the largest single occupational group.

Sixty-eight percent had not completed high school.

Seventeen percent had not even completed the eighth grade.

Seventy percent of the jobseekers said they would take training in a school to learn a new job skill.

"It is likely that an even higher number would take training were it made available without cost, as is contemplated by current and pending legislation," said Kerner.

Illinois is the first state to conduct a pilot study for use in planning a vocational retraining program. A full report will be issued early this year, the governor said.

"It will be useful in planning for retraining of workers whose present occupations are becoming obsolete or are in surplus supply for some other reason," said Kerner.

Congress Comes Back

THE SECOND SESSION of the 87th Congress opening Jan. 10 faces the challenge of finishing the task on which it made a partially successful start in 1961.

In the next six months or so Congress must face up to legislation to wipe out the high chronic unemployment that still plagues the nation despite a general economic recovery. This means action on a public works program, presidential authority to reduce withholdings on income taxes temporarily, federal standards to shore up the sagging unemployment compensation system, and an effective manpower retraining program.

Hearings have been conducted in many of these areas over the past few years and the need for action has been sharply delineated. The bills are before the appropriate committees and there is no reason to postpone action.

In the general welfare area two high priority measures are urgently needed—health care for the aged under the social security system and federal aid to education. These have been thoroughly debated and explored and the time for definitive action is at hand.

The first session of the 87th Congress, working with the new Kennedy Administration, helped get the nation moving again—not fast enough but in the right direction. The second session must continue this momentum to clean up the backlog of aggravated economic and social problems that has accumulated in in past years and set out new directions for the nation in this turbulent decade.

We Pay as We Go

THE WILLINGNESS of American workers to support a sound system of social insurance is being demonstrated again as first-of-the-year paychecks reflect an increase in social security deductions to cover the new benefits written into the basic law last year.

The increase of one-quarter of 1 percent, divided equally between employer and employe, will cover the cost of the new benefits and maintain the Social Security Trust Fund on a sound actuarial basis.

The worker's payment of 3.25 percent of his weekly income up to $4,800 is indisputable proof that Americans are completely dedicated to the proposition that retirement benefits, survivor's insurance, and disability payments are a matter of right paid for over the years of gainful employment.

The extension of this simple principle to health care for the aged is an urgently necessary next step in extending the effectiveness of social insurance laws that have proven their incalcuable worth in over 25 years of experience.

Strike Record—0.15 Percent

LOST IN THE SHUFFLE of year-end analyses and prognostications for 1962 was a report from the Labor Dept. putting into proper perspective the line, so beloved by employers, that unions are "strike-happy."

There were fewer strikes in 1961 than in any year since the end of World War II, the Labor Dept. reported, and the total lost working time due to labor disputes was recorded at fifteen-hundredths of 1 percent.

The Labor Dept.'s report goes deep, covering all work stoppages involving six or more workers and lasting a full shift or more.

Given the provocations of management, the "hard" Boulware bargaining line and the aggravations of automation and runaway plants, the 1961 strike record is a tribute to the responsibility of the trade union movement and its dedication to the national interest.

Special Ceremonies Jan. 14-20:

National Civil Service Week Marks 79 Years of System

The merit system of federal employment will be 79 years old on Jan. 16 and government agencies and employes throughout the country will mark the anniversary with special ceremonies during National Civil Service Week Jan. 14-20. The following is excerpted from material prepared by the American Federation of Government Employes.

SINCE THE ESTABLISHMENT of the Civil Service Commission in 1883, when only 10 percent of all federal jobs were placed in the competitive service, the merit system has been extended to over 90 percent of the jobs in the United States and to many of those located in foreign countries. The career civil service has become the backbone of the federal government.

Under the leadership of the Chief Executive and his top-level appointees, the 2 million career civil servants are responsible for the day-to-day operation of a wide range of vital government programs and services to the people.

Pres. Kennedy has stressed the importance of the public service on a number of occasions. In his first State of the Union message he said:

"Let the public service be a proud and lively career. And let every man and woman who works in any area of our national government, in any branch, at any level, be able to say with pride and honor in future years: 'I served the United States government in that hour of our nation's need.'"

In a later message to government employes, the President wrote: "Government service must be attractive enough to lure our most talented people. It must be challenging enough to call forth our greatest efforts. It must be interesting enough to retain their services. It must be satisfying enough to inspire singleminded loyalty and dedication. It must be important enough to each individual to call forth reserves of energy and enthusiasm.

"In meeting the grave problems confronting us at home and abroad it is my intention that the career civil service be a full partner. Together we can lead our nation to new peaks of achievement."

For too many Americans the very term civil service conjures up a vision of an army of clerks and unimaginative bureaucrats engaged in routine and pointless work in Washington. The truth is that barely 10 percent of all federal civil servants work in Washington, and their work is anything but dull and unimportant.

Actually, the bulk of the work force—90 percent of the career service—is located in communities throughout the United States and at posts around the world. In the 50 states there are at least 150 major centers of federal employment where more than 1,000 employes are at work. The scope of federal employment encompasses virtually every profession, trade, and skill—Uncle Sam is the country's No. 1 employer of scientific talent, with more than 165,000 scientists, engineers, and technicians engaged in scientific work in hundreds of laboratories and installations.

THE ACCOMPLISHMENTS of government scientists are an example of the oft-ignored importance and significance of the federal civil service. In listing the "top 10 conquests of the Fifties," the research and development heads of major U.S. corporations cited not less than seven to which scientists in civil service had made major contributions.

In discussing the federal work force it is also worth noting that almost half of the workers of the executive branch are employed in direct support of our nation's air, ground and sea forces as civilian employes of the Defense Dept. and nearly a quarter of the executive-branch employes are responsible for delivery of our mail.

The career civil service is at the forefront in pursuit of urgent national goals. For example, career scientists, engineers, and technicians are the heart, mind, and muscle of our space exploration effort, for which the President has fixed the goal of placing a man on the moon in this decisive decade.

In one way or another, the work of federal employes touches every American every day. Government workers print and mint our money, control narcotics, regulate immigration, collect taxes and duties. They help to conserve and revitalize land that is unproductive, bring electricity into rural homes, enforce federal laws and administer social security. They operate the atomic energy program, forecast the weather and protect national parks and forests. They conduct research in physics, electronics, meteorology, geology, metallurgy and other scientific fields which has far reaching efforts on the health, welfare, security and economy of our nation.

Good government is important to everyone and would be virtually impossible without an effective civil service. As Pres. Theodore Roosevelt put it more than 50 years ago:

"The observance in letter and spirit of the civil service law is the first requisite in obtaining clean, decent and efficient government service."

Morgan Says:

High Hopes and Deep Despair In Constant Collision During '61

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m. EST.)

WHAT IS THERE most to remember of the year just spent? Offhand, I cannot recall another 12 months since World War II in which high hopes and deep despair were in such constant collision. The world seemed to spin, not on its normal axis, but giddily to and fro like a crazy top on wires of tension strung between the poles of promise and doom.

Morgan

In the January beginning, over the cold bleakness of winter, there sounded the bold note of courage and confidence. The lean young words of the Kennedy inaugural address traveled far and fast, fleet messengers of a new, restlessly eager regime. Then came the brutal pratfall off Cuba and the world was reminded that miracles are not easily substituted for the seasoning of experience in any leadership.

During that same fateful month of April man—a Communist man as it turned out—established a new frontier in outer space by orbiting the globe with the apparent ease of a child, fueled with curiosity, circumnavigating a goldfish bowl. Mankind's irrepressible spirit of adventure soared with Gagarin in his capsule but it was mixed with fear—fear that instead of stretching our horizons, giving us more room for the competition of peaceful conquest of far alleys of the universe, science was merely building more monstrous battlefields beyond the sky.

The fears were not imaginary. The mounting arms race threatened to spiral upward out of the atmosphere into an orbit of its own. On the first day of September the Russians shattered the Big Power moratorium on the testing of nuclear weapons with explosions in the atmosphere which broke up the tedious test ban talks in Geneva. And on the next to the last day of October they let loose the biggest explosion man had ever contrived, equivalent to more than 50 million tons of TNT.

Yet we were mauled and torn by other events too which some men tried to combat against staggering odds and with inspiring sacrifice. An ugly wall split Berlin, penning up freedom, in a measure, on both sides, and a Swede named Hammarskjold lost his life trying to bring order to the Congo in which freedom could thrive.

NOW AND THEN it seemed as if men and women of good will might lose heart in the year's sickening swings between hope and despair but, of course, they did not and this may be the most important legacy that 1961 has left us—this nugget of stubborn perseverance in a cavern of uncertainty.

It was such unshakeable resolution on the part of a remarkable Frenchman named Jean Monnet that brought the European Economic Community into being. This near miracle, by combining its productive and purchasing powers and burying its narrow nationalist prejudices, may prove to be "decadent" capitalism's most devastating answer to Karl Marx. There is still a good chance that historians will mark the flowering of the Common Market as a more auspicious event in 1961 than the flowering of fallout from Khrushchev's 50-megaton bomb. There is still a warm possibility the refinement of methods to salvage fresh water from the sea will rank above the progress made during the year just gone on missiles and anti-missiles.

We Americans particularly need to keep such matters in mind because we have been under special strain. We celebrate the coming of the New Year with the circulation of a government booklet about fallout shelters. The Agriculture Department used to send you, on request, free packages of vegetable seeds. Now you write to Washington and you get instructions on how to shield yourself, somewhat, from clouds seeded with radioactive dust.

With civilization trembling in its most complex state of precariousness, we are told by the radicals of the political right that all we have to do to solve our woes is to return to the simplicity of the past. Instead of being urged to push onward and upward we are being told to look backward and downward.

It seems to me however that the country is less likely to accept negative counsel than it was 10 years ago. Despite fanaticism on the fringes it shows no real inclination to be stampeded. It just occurs to me that this silly new dance craze called the twist is symbolic of both the radical right and the far left—there they are wiggling in isolated and frantic frustration without making, as it were, any contact with reality.

Morgan Says Thanks

Said Edward P. Morgan in his opening broadcast of 1962:

"The time has come 'round again for me to doff a hat of gratitude to my network, ABC, and my sponsors, AFL-CIO, for the rare and continuing opportunity of making my interpretations, such as they are, in public.

"Tonight marks the beginning of the eighth year of these broadcasts of news and comment, with the rules unchanged: freedom to report and editorialize without censorship. It is a formula weighted increasingly with responsibility, which I shoulder with enthusiasm, pride and, I hope, some humility."

On Labor Press Conference:

Press Urged to See that Public Has 'Full Facts' on Union Labor

The press has the responsibility for seeing to it that the people have the "full facts" about the trade union movement and what it does in order to arrive at "responsible" conclusions, according to AFL-CIO Public Relations Dir. Albert J. Zack.

Where the public is informed organized labor's "image" is good, he declared on Labor News Conference, public affairs program heard over the Mutual Broadcasting radio network.

When the public sides with the union in a labor-management disputes, it is because the press has "adequately and fairly presented the facts," he said; if a strike makes the public anti-union, he went on, it is because it "doesn't understand what the issue of the strike is."

Zack was questioned by Dick Preston, labor reporter for Scripps-Howard, and Joseph Gambatese, associate editor of Nation's Business, published by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

The "image" the AFL-CIO is trying to create is simply "the truth about the trade union movement . . . trying to put the picture in the proper perspective," Zack said.

In answer to a question, he said the AFL-CIO would like the public "to understand exactly what the depths of labor racketeering were and are, and, too, the depths of racketeering in the ranks of management."

"You remember," he added, "the McClellan committee listened to improper activities of both labor and management. It discovered many improper activities of management which were never publicized to the extent that the improper activities of the trade union movement were publicized."

Zack declared that jurisdictional disputes "have been blown up out of all proportion" and that the statistics show the actual number to be "very small."

"When the facts are not stated accurately, then the public gets the wrong impression," he added. "There are not as many jurisdictional disputes as one would gather from reading the headlines."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

MORE THAN THREE MONTHS ago the AFL-CIO News published a news story about a "grossly distorted" Reader's Digest article on the Labor Dept.'s and Commerce Dept.'s statistics on employment and unemployment. The story reported that this article, written by a Digest staffer, James Daniel, had been repudiated in a letter sent to the magazine by Commissioner Ewan Clague of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics. Clague requested the opportunity to set the record straight by another article in the Digest. Readers might be interested in the sequel.

Clague has never received a reply from DeWitt Wallace, publisher of Reader's Digest, nor did Daniel, the "roving editor" who wrote the article, find time to rove into Clague's office either before or after publication to get the commissioner's ideas about what Clague called the writer's "inaccurate" statement of alleged facts and "unpardonable" and "wholly unsupported" conclusions.

Daniel has never found time to rove into a witness chair before a subcommittee of the Joint Congressional Economic Committee, although such an opportunity was offered to him by subcommittee Chairman William Proxmire (Wis.), to restate his version of the facts if he still thought them accurate and to defend what Clague had branded as "unpardonable" conclusions.

Instead, Clague himself went before the Proxmire subcommittee and testified for five long hours. He was asked the same series of questions that Daniel would have been asked had the Digest staff writer been present, he replied fully, and the record of the hearings will soon be published.

IN THE MEANTIME, bipartisan members of the Congressional Economic Committee have denounced the Daniel assault as unjustified. So have two members of the Cabinet, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg and Commerce Sec. Luther H. Hodges. So has the chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, Walter W. Heller.

Daniel in his article charged that the Bureau of Labor Statistics juggled figures "to show progressive deterioration in the U.S. economic system."

He said that a "claimed rise" in unemployment from recession to recession "has to a large extent been engineered" for political purposes. He said that the "worse unemployment grows—or can be made to appear—the easier it is to push Uncle Sam into new federal spending programs and new controls over the economy."

This is a direct imputation to respected and veteran government careerists of disgraceful political motives. But after the thesis, the alleged facts and the conclusions were challenged, neither Reader's Digest nor Daniel seemed to feel impelled to make a defense.

As the runaway continues, according to Clague, the thesis has been picked up—mostly without credit—by editors of small daily newspapers around the country, all of them charging that joblessness is just a fiction.

SO A LITTLE MORE EVIDENCE must be added. Statisticians representing business, labor and the government agreed in a New York meeting that U.S. statistics on jobs and joblessness "are the best in the world." Everyone acknowledges that they can be improved and refined, but the precise description of them as already "the best" came from Martin R. Gainsbrugh, chief economist of the National Industrial Conference Board, which is a businessmen's organization.

Raymond T. Bowman and Margaret E. Martin, of the government's Office of Statistical Standards, said that the persistence of high-level unemployment in the midst of a business boom was a "significant economic symptom" and warned that the public "is not well served" if attention is diverted from thinking about it "by a denial that it exists."

Clague himself told of efforts being made to improve the standards of data-gathering and analysis, but an economist for the Bethlehem Steel Co., Laurence Fenninger, Jr., was the spokesman who urged Clague that in any revisions special care should be taken to maintain "continuity" with past statistics so that revised techniques will remain significant for analytical purposes.

Clague has had from Reader's Digest a letter from a vice president saying the purpose was to stir up interest and draw attention. There was no offer of space to reply to the Daniel article or of space for a letter citing specific factual inaccuracies and "unpardonable" accusations.

House Democratic Caucus to Name McCormack and Albert as Leaders port for some of Kennedy's economic proposals.

Deviation on Some Issues

Bolling has been rated as generally more closely attuned to Kennedy's New Frontier approach. Albert and Bolling have deviated in their votes on certain issues in the past, notably on civil rights legislation and bills involving southwestern oil and gas interests.

Albert is 53 years old. He and McCormack together will pick an assistant, or whip, to serve under the floor leader without reference to the House Democratic caucus.

A fourth House Democratic leadership post may be upcoming, that of chairman in a newly strengthened Steering or Policy Committee, chosen by election from members in various regions. The committee chairman, under the plan, would participate in legislative meetings of the leadership at the White House.

Most observers believe that the party program nevertheless will continue to be run in the House by the speaker and floor leader, subject to whatever modification is compelled by the House Rules Committee controlled by conservative Democratic Chairman Howard W. Smith of Virginia, who works closely in alliance with Republican Floor Leader Charles A. Halleck of Indiana.

In the Senate Republican contest for the Policy Committee chairmanship, the full strength of conservative GOP members behind Hickenlooper has not yet been revealed. The formal choice of a new chairman will be made in a Jan. 9 caucus.

A vacancy was created in the chairmanship by the death of the late Sen. Styles Bridges of New Hampshire, senior Republican member and a powerful member of the party's right wing conservative bloc.

The last time GOP liberals attempted to challenge conservative control of key Senate leadership posts, in 1959, they lost by an 18-to-12 vote when Cooper was defeated for the floor leadership by Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen of Illinois. They salvaged the second-ranking post of assistant leader by the same vote when Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel of California was chosen.

Republican conservatives from the Midwest and Mountain States are said by liberals to favor Hickenlooper for Policy Committee chairman because they rate Saltonstall "too internationalist" in his leanings "for an election year."

On economic issues, Saltonstall generally votes with the party's conservatives, and he did not join Sen. George Aiken of Vermont, Sen. Jacob K. Javits of New York and Sen. Clifford Case of New Jersey in their effort to block Dirksen's election in 1959 as floor leader.

He is generally rated by Washington observers as a strict middle-of-the-roader but representative of eastern internationalist attitudes on foreign policy. His relations with Kennedy were cordial and cooperative when the President was in the Senate.

Hickenlooper is rated as one of the central leaders of Republican conservatives, on both foreign and domestic policy, and he is given an even chance of defeating Saltonstall for the Policy Committee chairmanship despite the Massachusetts senator's long service as chairman of the Senate GOP Conference, which comprises the entire Republican membership.

CLC Leader Bids for 'Better Relationships'

Ottawa, Ont.—President Claude Jodoin of the Canadian Labor Congress in his annual New Year's message has challenged "those who direct" business and government to sit down with "those who labor" and seek to develop better relationships "aimed toward a more closely coordinated effort for our mutual advantage and for the advantage of the country in which we share citizenship."

He specifically suggested that "the time has arrived" for the appointment of a tripartite Social-Economic Advisory Council "as a first step toward a better relationship and a united attack on our economic problems."

"As we enter this New Year," said Jodoin, "the CLC is determined to renew its efforts toward the establishment of better labor-management relations in Canada.

"We feel, very strongly, that no realistic approach has yet been made to this very fundamental need. We propose to advance specific suggestions to this end and we hope that this determination may be shared by responsible management, by government, and by all others who recognize this as an essential need to the very future of Canada."

Jodoin pointed out that labor-management relations "have for some time been well in advance of those in our own country" in many other nations which are adopting Western Hemisphere production techniques and providing increased competition in international trade for Canada.

"It seems significant," he observed, "that employers in these countries . . . do not engage themselves in seeking legislation which would be restrictive to a free trade union movement."

Speedy Vote Predicted at Nickel Plant

Toronto, Ont.—A representation election before the end of January was forecast for the 15,000 workers of the Intl. Nickel Co. at Sudbury, Ont., following a hearing before a three-man panel of the Ontario Labor Relations Board.

The Steelworkers and the Communist-dominated Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers have been contesting for a year for the right to bargain for the workers, who have been represented by Mine-Mill for some 20 years.

At the hearing, attorneys for Mine-Mill and counsel representing groups of employes tacitly backed by Mine-Mill urged a delay in the vote until current court actions are cleared up. Counsel for the USWA, asking a vote as soon as possible, pointed out that disposal of the lawsuits could take as long as two years. The company has objected to proceeding with conciliation on a new contract because of "uncertainty" as to the bargaining agent.

Union Victorious In Pension Fight

Detroit—Circuit Judge Neal E. Fitzgerald has ordered the City Council to pay $10 million to the police and fire pension fund to make up the full amount recommended by fund trustees for the last three years. The suit was brought by Fire Fighters Local 344 when the council decided to use the money for other city purposes.

Union Pres. Robert E. Tighe said the local has been fighting for 20 years to preserve a good pension system against "deliberate underfunding" and other practices.

School Aid Fight Due:

Key Issues Await Congress Session

of union dues for government workers may develop into major issues, along with an Administration-sought hike in postage rates.

The recent death of House Speaker Sam Rayburn, legislative field general for the Administration, makes more difficult the search for votes to put through the President's program.

Both parties face leadership shifts as Congress reconvenes—the Democrats in the House, where the expected succession to the speakership of Majority Leader John W. McCormack (Mass.) will create lower-level vacancies, and the Republicans in the Senate, where the death of New Hampshire's conservative Sen. Styles Bridges left open the chairmanship of the influential GOP Policy Committee.

Kennedy will spell out his second session priorities, soon after Congress reconvenes, in his State of the Union message, his Budget message and his Economic Report.

Here is a rundown on the status of some of the key measures in labor's legislative program:

Health Care—The House Ways & Means Committee held hearings last year on the labor and Administration-backed Anderson-King bill to provide health insurance through the social security system for retired workers and their families. There is yet no clear sign that the bill will be reported by the conservative tax-writing committee headed by Rep. Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.). Kennedy has said the measure will carry the Administration's "highest priority" and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany described it as "a very definite must" on the federation's legislative program.

Manpower Retraining—The Senate last year passed, by a 60-to-31 vote, a four-year $650 million program for training and retraining of unemployed workers which, after the second year, would be jointly financed by the federal government and the states. A pared-down two-year bill was reported by the House Labor Committee but the measure was sidetracked by the House Rules Committee. Pending in both houses are committee-approved bills establishing a Youth Conservation Corps.

Aid to Education—The Senate last year approved a three-year program of aid for school construction—part of which could be used for teachers' salaries at the option of the states—but the House Rules Committee tabled three bills cleared by the Education Committee. Renewed efforts to reconcile controversies over church-state relationships are expected. The AFL-CIO convention called for a broad program of federal aid for construction and teachers' salaries, a "long-overdue" federal college scholarship program, and increased federal and state funds for colleges.

Unemployment Compensation Standards — Administration proposals to raise levels of state jobless benefits through federal minimum standards are awaiting action by the House Ways & Means Committee. Only improved federal standards can correct "basic deficiencies" in state programs, the AFL-CIO has declared.

Public Works—A labor-backed bill by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) to provide federal funds for public works projects during periods of recession-level unemployment is expected to have Administration endorsement. Kennedy told the AFL-CIO convention that he intends to ask Congress "for stand-by authority," along the lines of the Clark bill.

Trade and Tariffs—Expiration of the Reciprocal Trade Act this year assures congressional consideration of the broad area of export-import policies. In his address to the AFL-CIO convention, Kennedy stressed that the United States "must expand job opportunities by stimulating our trade abroad." Citing his previous sponsorship as a senator of legislation to assist industries which are hard hit by imports, Kennedy declared:

"I am going to recommend in January a program which I hope the Congress will pass, which will provide a recognition of the national responsibility in the period of transition for those industries and people who may be adversely affected."

Tax Reform—The House Ways & Means Committee held hearings last year on Administration tax proposals but put off action until the second session. The Kennedy package includes labor-supported proposals to plug loopholes along wtih new incentives for business which labor opposes. The AFL-CIO has also asked for flexible tax-reduction authority for the President as an anti-recession measure.

Labor Legislation—Labor and the Administration strongly back committee-approved bills tightening welfare and pension plan reporting requirements for unions and employers and giving stronger enforcement powers to the Secretary of Labor. The recent AFL-CIO convention referred to Meany various recommendations to ease Taft-Hartley bans on jobsite picketing.

Civil Rights—The AFL-CIO has called for strengthened civil rights statutes and a federal Fair Employment Practices law. House Labor subcommittee hearings have been scheduled for early in the session on FEPC.

rural, past election figures indicate a normal Democratic plurality. Congressional Quarterly, a reliable non-partisan source, rates the new district as "leaning Democratic."

The marginal districts are Minneapolis, where incumbent Republican Walter H. Judd has to buck a Democratic voting edge, and the northwestern agricultural and resort area now represented by Republican Odin Langen. This has been a see-sawing district, which in 1960 gave Langen and Nixon 50.4 percent of its vote and, at the same time, cast 50.8 percent for Democrat Orville Freeman in the gubernatorial race.

A Minnesota gain of as many as three seats for Democrats would still leave the GOP with an apparent edge in the reshuffle of seats throughout the nation—largely as the result of the redistricting in New York last fall, which is expected to cost the Democrats six seats and give the Republicans four additional representatives.

Two big, closely-divided states—Pennsylvania and Massachusetts—have as yet been unable to agree on redistricting. Statewide at-large elections of 27 congressmen in Pennsylvania and 12 in Massachusetts could swing either way.

Labor's Economic Review:

Remedy Urgent for Drug Price Abuses

The American prescription drug industry clearly stands in need of a remedy for abuses that have made U.S. drugs the highest priced in the world, according to an article in the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

The article, prepared as a Labor's Economic Review feature by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, presented an analysis of industry abuses titled "The Wayward Drug Industry: A Study in Profiteering."

Saying that few "consumer" issues have so aroused the public as the Kefauver committee's exposure of the drug manufacturing industry, the magazine made these conclusions:

- The abuses revealed by Sen. Estes Kefauver's investigating Senate subcommittee, are economic, medical and moral.
- The structure of high prices rests on a system of patent monopolies and restrictive licensing agreements, plus brand name specialization and "huge advertising outlays."
- On the medical side, basic advances in drug research have been subordinated to the development of minor drug derivatives and new combinations of existing substances, frequently valueless, which can be sold at a "rewarding profit."
- The proliferation of often useless drugs accompanied by unsubstantiated claims poses a danger to the public health, as does the "concealment of hazards associated with powerful drug agents."

"In the light of all the facts developed during the hearings," the federation researchers said, "Sen. Kefauver's proposed remedies, set forth in his bill S. 1522, represent minimum reforms."

The committee itself, after lengthy hearings and testimony from scores of witnesses, expressed the belief that no one should "make a monopoly profit" or have the right to withhold from the public products which "may spell the difference between life and death."

"New drug products are put on the market with bewildering rapidity each year as each company strives to get ahead of its competitors by coming out with 'the latest,'" the magazine said.

"The medical authorities have sharply questioned the need for such a torrent of products. Too many of the new drugs are designed strictly for sales appeal and contribute little or nothing to the art of medicine."

The Kefauver committee report found that leading prescription drugs generally sell at much lower prices abroad than in the U.S. In Senate Report 448, it said that manufacturing costs for 22 companies in 1958 were 32.1 percent of the sales dollar while selling expenses were 24.8 percent, profits 13 percent and research—the factor heavily stressed by U.S. companies in explanation of their prices—6.3 percent of the sales dollar.

Stone, Glass, Clay Unions Form Link

New York—AFL-CIO unions in the stone, glass and clay industries have formed a coordinating committee to provide mutual aid and to function in accordance with AFL-CIO policies.

Pres. Lee W. Minton of the Glass Bottle Blowers is temporary chairman and Sec.-Treas. Lewis McCracken of the Glass & Ceramic Workers temporary secretary-treasurer.

The new organization is expected to supply to the member unions services they would be too small to provide individually, as in the areas of legislation, tariffs, organizing the unorganized, research, education, and political education. At some time in the future it is anticipated headquarters will be opened in Washington, D. C., and an executive secretary named.

Ten AFL-CIO unions with a total of about 220,000 members are active in the stone, glass and clay industries.

TWUA Pact Settles Strike in Hamilton

Hamilton, Ont.—A 17-day strike at three mills of the Hamilton Cotton Co. has gained a package of 8.5 cents an hour in a new 20-month contract for 780 members of the Textile Workers Union of America.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR DUES CHECKOFF for members of the State, County & Municipal Employes working for the State of Illinois were made recently with State Auditor Michael J. Howlett. The legislature, at its 1961 regular session, directed department heads to deduct union dues at the request of employes. Left to right are Robert McEnroe, AFSCME organizer; Joseph Gleason, international representative of the union, and N. C. Pemberton, president of AFSCME Council 34, with Howlett and Fred Taub, accounting division chief.

Strike Starts Hit Post-War Low in 1961

Fewer strikes started in 1961 than in any year since the end of World War II, and mandays of idleness matched the previous low level set in 1957, the Labor Dept. has reported.

The record is "extremely gratifying," Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg said, and shows that "responsible collective bargaining, the cornerstone of industrial democracy, is finding new solutions" to the problems of change.

Goldberg expressed confidence that labor and management will "continue to exercise the responsibility" reflected in the figures and said a continuous understanding is "imperative if we are to meet" the challenges of the months and years ahead.

A preliminary report of 1961 work stoppages showed these totals: 3,300 stoppages beginning last year as against 3,333 in 1960; 1.45 million workers involved, the third lowest figure since 1946; 16.5 million mandays of idleness, down from 19.1 million the preceding year; 11.4 days lost per worker, the third lowest total in 15 years; only 15 percent lost from estimated total working time, third lowest since 1946.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics report listed all work stoppages involving six or more workers and lasting a full shift or longer.

R. J. McKenna Dies, AFL-CIO Auditor

Funeral services were held in Washington for Robert John McKenna, for 22 years an auditor for the AFL-CIO and the predecessor AFL, following his death from a heart attack in Stafford Spring, Conn. Burial was in Arlington National Cemetery.

A native of Washington and a graduate of the Catholic University of America, he started work for the former AFL in 1939, served with the Marines during World War II, and was transferred in 1959 to the AFL-CIO's New England division. He was living at the time of his death in Hazardville, Conn. He was a graduate of Columbus University Law School and had been an instructor of music for the Catholic University band. He was 47.

Surviving are the widow, Mrs. Mary Murphy McKenna; four sons, three daughters, his mother, six brothers and a sister.

Meany Asks $1.5 Billion Education Equality Plan

"first essential step" is a comprehensive program of federal scholarships that will finally eliminate financial barriers to higher education, he said.

"I am convinced that the American people want this kind of program and that Congress will ultimately adopt it," Meany declared.

It must be recognized, the federation president said, that the most generous scholarship program may not be enough for children of wage-earners if they must go away to college. This calls for bringing the college to the student in the form of junior colleges, community colleges and branches of universities.

Opportunity at Lower Levels

Underlying equal opportunity for higher education must be equal opportunity for primary and secondary schooling, Meany said, and this is a responsibility of the federal government and the only way equal opportunity can be achieved. He pledged a continuing drive to secure federal aid to education legislation.

Meany hit out at a "special form" of inequality, "the poisonous evil of racial segregation" still the official practice in the South and "far too often the unofficial practice in the North and West as well."

Citing the growing need for skilled craftsmen, he called also for a vigorous program to enlarge apprentice programs and to remove any vestiges of discrimination with better guidance and counselling programs at the high school level.

He urged also more "'widespread recognition" that higher education through extension services should be made available to all groups in the community, including labor, based on the belief that "higher education belongs to the working people as much as to scholars."

Cancer Goal Met By Paper Union

In a listing of AFL-CIO affiliates that, during the recent federation convention at Miami Beach, were announced as having met or surpassed their quotas for contributions to the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation, the name of the Papermakers & Paperworkers was inadvertently omitted. The name of the union was also inadvertently omitted in a story in the AFL-CIO News of Dec. 16.

The Papermakers & Paperworkers had made a firm commitment to meet or surpass its quota and should have been included. This makes a total of 28 national and international unions that have met their quotas. Funds and pledges from other unions are continuing to reach the AFL-CIO to build the total toward the $1 million goal in labor's drive for the Cancer Foundation.

Mine-Mill Labeled Red By Examiner

A recommendation that the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers be declared Communist-infiltrated and hence unable to bargain for workers under federal law has been filed with the Subversive Activities Control Board by Francis A. Cherry, a member sitting as an examiner.

Cherry heard evidence from Feb. 25, 1957, to May 17, 1961, and concluded that the union "is substantially directed, dominated or controlled" by persons who support or have supported the Communist Party. In one of 238 separate findings, Cherry said the "aid and support flowing to the Communist Party," from the union and its leadership has been "real, substantial and significant."

The former CIO expelled the union in 1950 on charges of Communist domination. The former Canadian Congress of Labor followed suit.

Kennedy Calls on Congress For 6-Point Job Plan Action

Asks Bold Program On World Trade

By Willard Shelton

Pres. Kennedy asked the second session of the 87th Congress for a six-point anti-recession program and urged, in addition, a "wholly new approach" to tariff cuts and trade expansion designed to tie the U.S. economy in an intimate partnership with the rapidly emerging European Common Market.

In his first full-scale State of the Union message delivered to a new session, the President declared that a "global civil war" still divides and torments mankind. He reiterated his Inaugural Address warning that the path to a peaceful world involves "an agony of choices" and burdens that this generation of Americans may not escape "in our lifetime."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany described the address as "a good, sound message."

"The President," he said, "has called for much of the legislation that the AFL-CIO's recent convention established as our goals."

Noting that an AFL-CIO Economic and Legislative Conference is scheduled in Washington, Jan. 22, Meany expressed the hope that Congress would "begin to move forward on the legislative front."

The 6,000-word message reemphasized Kennedy's requests of last year for an attack on chronic high joblessness through a worker retraining act for those automated out of jobs and a youth employment program for more than 1 million young people who are now "both out of school and out of work."

In addition, he repeated his request for a tax credit to business firms to spur modernization of plants.

To deal with future recessions, Kennedy repeated his 1961 request for a permanently strengthened un-

Job Force Static, Idle Rate 6.1%

The unemployment situation remained unchanged in mid-December with 61 of every 1,000 persons in the labor force jobless, the Labor Dept. reported.

While the unemployment rate matched the November figure of 6.1 percent, an additional 100,000 persons were added to the unemployment rolls, bringing the total to 4.1 million. The rise was considered within seasonal variations for the month.

The government's monthly report, however, showed that there has been no change in the total civilian labor force from December 1960 to December 1961 as against an estimated 1 million increase normally expected, indicating a heavier unemployment load.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Golberg told a press conference that possibly four catergories of workers were not in the labor force—actively seeking employment—during the year because of the lack of job opportunities.

He said that about 300,000 of the anticipated 1 million increase went

Exports, Wages Rise:

Italian Ownership Revives U. S. Firm

By David L. Perlman

Expanded world trade has bread and butter, meat and potatoes meaning to some 3,400 workers who make Underwood typewriters at a 60-year-old red brick factory in Hartford, Conn.

They have seen money and management imported from Italy revive a company which in 1959 was on the verge of bankruptcy.

They have seen both wages and employment rise, while production costs declined. And on each typewriter coming off the assembly line goes the union label of the machinists.

They have seen exports of Underwood typewriters to other nations tripled in two years.

And they have shipped Hartford-built standard and electric typewriters to Italy at the same time Italian-built portable typewriters and business machines were being channeled into the United States through Underwood sales offices.

The purchase of the Underwood Corp. by the Olivetti Co. of Italy in the fall of 1959 was the type of man-bites-dog story that created a sensation in the American business community.

"Everyone knew" that you could produce goods cheaper in Europe—particularly in manpower-surplus countries such as Italy—than in the United States. America's chief "asset" was its management know-how and its advanced technology. Or so the fable went.

To help separate fact from fiction, a member of the Olivetti management team—Sergio Pizzoni-Ardemani—agreed to meet recently with AFL-CIO Research Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg and his staff for an around-the-table, no-questions-barred discussion.

Pizzoni-Ardemani is special assistant for international affairs to Ugo Galassi, president of the Underwood Corp.

Articulate and world-minded, he is as much at home in Washington, New York and Hartford as in Rome, Milan or Ivrea, the ancient community where the strikingly-modern Olivetti home plant rests at the foot of the Italian Alps.

This is a company which competes aggressively for sales in more than 100 nations, which operates plants in half a dozen countries from Britain to Argentina. Admist the gleaming complex of modern factories in its home base at Ivrea is a small, anachronistic red brick building which strangely resembles Underwood's Hartford plant.

As Pizzoni-Ardemani relates the story, the resemblance is no coin-

NLRB Orders Back Pay in 13-Year Case

New Orleans—Thirteen years of effort by Local 79 of the Boiler Makers to get back pay for workers laid off because of union activity have resulted in an order that 11 machine shop employes are entitled to $100,712.

The National Labor Relations Board decided the case by a 2-to-1 split, with Fanning in the majority and Philip Ray Rodgers dissenting on the amounts due.

In the case that has been before the NLRB and the courts since 1948, the latest decision directs W. C. Nabors, who sold his W. C. Nabors Co. two and a half years ago, to give back pay ranging from a low of $544 to a high of $17,845 to the laid-off workers. Nabors has the right to prolong the fight further by appealing to the courts again.

It was on Apr. 19, 1950, that the NLRB found Nabors had laid off 19 employes for union activity Apr. 8, 1948, and ordered reinstatement with back pay.

Since that time these events have taken place:

- A U.S. Court of Appeals entered a decree enforcing the NLRB order.
- The NLRB asked that the company be found guilty of contempt and the Court of Appeals approved an agreement that some of the fired workers be reinstated, with back pay to be worked out.
- An NLRB regional director

Mediation Panel Named For Internal Disputes

Appointment of a panel of 42 mediators to serve in the internal disputes program adopted at the recent AFL-CIO convention has been announced by Pres. George Meany.

The panel includes all members of the Executive Council except the three who will serve on the subcommittee set up by the program to weigh appeals from determinations of impartial umpires, and their three alternates. It includes, in addition, a number of general officers of international unions.

The internal disputes plan provides for mediation as a first step in settling a disagreement between unions and determination of the dispute by an impartial umpire, if mediation fails, as a second step. Meany has announced appointment of David L. Cole as impartial umpire with others to be named later.

Any union disagreeing with the umpire's determination may take an appeal. The appeals subcommittee can reject the appeal, closing the case, or refer it to the Executive Council, which can set aside the determination by a majority vote of all members. The council can impose sanctions for noncompliance with a final decision.

Meany will name from the panel of mediators one or more members, as soon as a complaint is filed with his office, who will attempt to effect a settlement of a dispute.

MEETING SANTA CLAUS for the first time was quite an experience for Helen Mlodzianowska, 12, because only a couple of months prior to making his acquaintance in the Home of the Little Flower, in Hyde Park, Mass., she and her mother had fled from behind the Iron Curtain. Her father died in a Siberian labor camp. Div. 589, Street & Electric Railway Employes, of Boston, and other employes of the Boston Metropolitan Transit Authority for years have helped support the Home of the Little Flower.

NLRB's Huge Backlog Cut to Workable Size

Substantial progress in reducing a "record backlog" of unfair labor practice cases in 1961 has been reported by the National Labor Relations Board.

The NLRB also made unprecedented use of the discretionary injunction section of the law, Chairman Frank W. McCulloch reported. The agency obtained the first court injunction in its history ordering a manufacturer to reinstate fired employes while the board prepared to investigate the case and hold hearings.

Also the board secured injunctions to halt alleged unfair practices in three other states, but was refused an order preventing Burlington Industries from closing its Peerless Woolen plant at Rossville, Ga., without first bargaining with the Allied Industrial Workers.

McCulloch, in summarizing the year's work, said the NLRB is "moving toward a workable backlog of cases" but still has the problem of further reducing piled-up cases that pour in like a "relentless rising tide."

Last year, McCulloch said, the NLRB:

- Cut its backlog of "unfair" cases from 454 to 363.
- Cut all types of cases from 1,018 to 489.
- Issued 587 formal decisions in contested cases involving unfair labor practices—55 percent more than in 1960, and an all time record for the 26 years of NLRB existence.

McCulloch said the principal factor in cutting the caseload has been the work of the 28 regional directors in relieving the board of handling representation election petitions, and in cutting the time between filing and decision—from an average 104 days to 47.

The board received a new high of 24,005 cases in 1961. Of these, 13,074 were unfair practice charges, 10,931 were election petitions. Just five years earlier, the total intake of cases was 13,117.

Emphasis on voluntary settlement resulted in the adjustment of 74 percent of cases in 1961.

NLRB Jurisdiction Spelled Out in Guide

A guide to the jurisdiction asserted by the National Labor Relations Board under the Wagner Act, as amended by the Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin acts, has been put on sale at 15 cents by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C.

Jurisdictional Guide is document No. 617154-61. It lists the legal origins and functions of the NLRB, its jurisdiction, and standards for accepting cases.

In an editorial note, the NLRB's Division of Information said the seven-page pamphlet is an "informal publication offering guidance to interested parties" and that the board is not bound by its interpretive statements.

Brown Scores Texas' Jobless Aid Policies

Austin, Tex.—The Texas Employment Commission has been piling up cash reserves while denying unemployment compensation to nearly one-third of the applicants, Pres. Hank Brown of the Texas State AFL-CIO has charged.

"The commission should be reminded, perhaps by a legislative investigation, that its primary duty is not banking but helping unemployed workers weather periods of joblessness," he said.

"Perhaps legislators will be curious, as I am, to know by what standards the commission finds almost one-third of all persons applying for benefits wholly or partly disqualified."

The commission's report for the fiscal year ending last Aug. 31, recently published, showed that total benefits paid during the period were but $66 million, and that when the year ended $244 million was available for the jobless.

Brown pointed out that, in addition, the report showed applications from 337,757 individuals, of whom 155,779 were denied all or part of their benefits.

"Dollars stagnating in a vault contribute exactly nothing to the general economy," Brown said.

Business Ethics Due for 'Rinsing':

Government Orders Cleanup Of TV Ads, Stock Exchange

By Gervase N. Love

The hard-sell business ethics that every now and then get an industrialist or a financier into trouble are in for a bit of rinsing in a couple of limited areas following dual crackdowns by federal agencies.

In one case, the Federal Trade Commission bluntly told the television industry through the Colgate-Palmolive Co. and its advertising agency, Ted Bates & Co., to stop faking commercials.

In the other, a Securities & Exchange Commission staff report just as bluntly warned the American Stock Exchange to clean up an administrative mess and to end "manifold and prolonged" abuses of rules for members, or the commission would do the job itself.

The FTC policy decision was handed down in a ruling on a charge that the two companies had phoneyed the qualities of Palmolive Rapid Shave through television commercials that ostensibly showed how quickly and easily sandpaper could be shaved after being marinated in the shaving cream. Only it was not sandpaper, but a sheet of plexiglass sprinkled with sand, because sandpaper doesn't photograph realistically.

Colgate promptly said it would appeal the FTC decision to the courts.

The ruling reversed the finding of an FTC examiner that there was "harmless exaggeration," but no deception. It covers all advertising conducted by the two firms.

"The limitations of the medium may present a challenge to the creative ingenuity of copywriters," said Commissioner Philip Elman in the FTC opinion, "but they surely would not constitute lawful justification for resort to falsehoods and deception of the public.

Elman maintained the argument that the trick was a "harmless" exaggeration "is obviously out of place."

"They represented unqualifiedly that 'Rapid Shave' will dramatically facilitate the shaving of sandpaper," he said, "and that they were demonstrating this fact before the television audience to prove it. Both of these were factual representations; neither is true."

The FTC tried shaving sandpaper, but found it wouldn't work even though the shaving compound was given up to an hour to soak in instead of the one minute the TV commercial cited.

'Time-Honored Distinction'

The FTC said the difference between what is legal and what is not "is the time-honored distinction between a misstatement of truth that is material to the inducement of a sale and one that is not."

The case was one of 10 the FTC has tackled in a cleanup of TV commercials that started late in 1959. The Bates agency has figured on two others, one of which also involved Colgate.

When the FTC complaint in the Palmolive Rapid Shave case was issued in January 1960, the Bates agency criticized FTC Chairman Earl Kintner in newspaper ads claiming FTC investigators had been present at demonstrations showing the cream could be used to shave sandpaper.

The SEC staff report on the American Stock Exchange is expected to be followed soon by an SEC order embracing some or all of its recommendations.

Exchange Officers Criticized

In its attack on the exchange's administration, the report particularly criticized the officers' discipline over stock "specialists" and floor traders.

A specialist is a member of the exchange who deals on the floor to maintain an orderly market in certain stocks in which he specializes. A floor trader buys or sells for his own account.

For the last decade, the report charged, four members of the exchange have rotated key positions in its administration among themselves "and thus have been able to maintain continuous and effective control." Three of them, the report said are specialists—Charles J. Bocklet, vice chairman of the board; James R. Dyer, chairman of the committee on finance, and John J. Mann, chairman of the committee on floor transactions. The fourth, Board Chairman Joseph F. Reilly, is a former specialist.

The Amex president, Edward T. McCormick, resigned under fire last month. The report charged that while he was president he had become a stockholder in several firms whose securities were not listed on the exchange until after his acquisition of the shares. In most cases, the report went on, the specialist firm of Gilligan, Wills & Co. became the registered specialists in the issues.

The report also charged that Alexander L. Guterma, who has been convicted of violating the Exchange Act by failing to file required reports, and who is now in a penitentiary, paid McCormick's Havana gambling debts of approximately $5,000. Guterma was attempting, in 1955, to obtain Amex listing for the stock of a firm in which he had a controlling interest, the report said.

Michael E. Mooney, who resigned as general counsel of the exchange at the same time McCormick quit as president, "became so closely associated with certain specialists as to raise conflict-of-interest problems," the report declared.

Further Violations Charged

In addition, it detailed further alleged violations of exchange rules by the Gilligan, Wills firm and association between officials of the firm and Lowell Birrell, the fugitive financier, and Gerard A. Re and Gerard F. Re, father and son respectively, who were expelled from Amex last spring on SEC orders. The Res have since been arrested on charges of stock manipulation and are awaiting trial.

The report said among its conclusions that there is "little doubt" the statutory "scheme of self-regulation in the public interest has not worked out in the manner originally envisaged by Congress." It expressed the hope that "fundametal correction" will be "accomplished promptly within the present statutory framework of self-regulation."

"But the commission must be prepared," it continued, "to exercise its supervisory powers if the necessary reform is not forthcoming."

Girl Next Door to Lose Stand-In?

New York—From an article in Advertising Age, advertising industry trade magazine:

"While nobody can be sure of the place of the 'sandpaper' incident in TV advertising history, one film producer quipped: 'Let's just hope they don't go too far with this realism stuff. Next thing you know, models will be out and we'll have to show the Girl Next Door as ugly as she really is.'"

Labor Advisers Named To Aid Latin Alliance

A 10-man labor advisory committee headed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has been appointed by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg to assist in efforts to "promote a sound labor program" for Latin America in line with the Alliance for Progress launched by Pres. John F. Kennedy.

Meany and his committee will assist a federal agency task force representing the White House, Dept. of Labor and Dept. of State, including the Agency for Intl. Development, the Central Intelligence Agency and the U.S. Information Agency.

"It is essential," Goldberg said in setting up the committee, "that the government receive the benefit of the advice and cooperation" of the U.S. labor movement. He is confident, he said, that "this committee will have the opportunity to exercise a most important role."

At a White House meeting last Mar. 13, Pres. Kennedy called on "all the people of the hemisphere" to join in a new Alliance for Progress to "satisfy the basic needs of the American people for homes, work and land, health and schools."

Five months later the Inter-American Economic and Social Council met at Punta del Este, Uruguay, and adopted a charter in which the Latin American nations committed themselves to economic and social reform. The developed nations would be called on to help in the process. To attain the goal, the U.S. offered to raise a major part of the $20 billion seen as needed in the next 10 years.

Kennedy and Goldberg have emphasized that the Alliance must be all-American and have the full participation of the Latin countries involved if it is to develop a "meaningful, imaginative, energetic and progressive" labor program.

Other committee members besides Meany are Pres. Joseph Beirne, Communications Workers; Pres. William Doherty, Letter Carriers; Pres. David Dubinsky, Ladies' Garment Workers; Pres. O. A. Knight, Oil Chemical & Atomic Workers; Pres. David J. McDonald, Steelworkers; Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Auto Workers; Emil Rieve, chairman, executive council, Textile Workers Union of America; Pres. James A. Suffridge, Retail Clerks, and Serafino Romualdi, AFL-CIO Inter-American representative.

500,000 in New AFL-CIO Body:

Labor Center Unity Achieved in Chicago

Chicago—Merger of the AFL and CIO, begun in New York Dec. 5, 1955, was completed in Chicago Monday night, Jan. 8, 1962, with creation of a new Chicago Federation of Labor & Industrial Union Council.

Nearly 1,000 delegates from four major central bodies of organized labor pushed and slid through the snowy aftermath of winter's worst storm to attend the charter ceremonies in the majestic auditorium of the Chicago Plumbers' Union.

More than 500,000 local union members are represented in the new union, formed from the Chicago Federation of Labor (organized in 1896), the Cook County Industrial Union Council (1941), the South Chicago Trades & Labor Assembly (1895) and the Calumet Joint Labor Council (1905).

"This is the last step," Pres. George Meany of the AFL-CIO told the enthusiastic crowd. "All the state federations, all the city central bodies, are now merged in every part of the country.

"More important than the physical merger is the fact we are merged spiritually. Despite the crystal-ball gazers, we do have real unity in the trade union movement.

Stands for Freedom

"Where does the trade union movement in the United States stand? We stand for freedom, with the free peoples of the world.

"It is only under our democratic form of government that we can have a trade union movement. Those who would destroy the American way of life can't do it unless they first destroy the American trade union movement."

Meany remarked that organized labor, with millions of members and substantial treasuries, can no longer take the position it is an oppressed, aggrieved minority.

Labor must take its place in community leadership, Meany said. He reviewed the history of labor's leadership over the years—for free common schools, for the social reforms of the New Deal, for resistance to Communist ideology.

"There's no moral decay in the trade union movement," he said. "We kicked out 10 percent of our membership three years ago—cut off 10 percent of our income—cut off 1.5 million members, most of whom are as good trade unionists as anyone sitting in this room.

"We did it because we don't think it is good for unions to be controlled by any but their own members. We don't believe they should be controlled by government, or by big business. And we don't believed they should be controlled by thieves or racketeers."

William A. Lee, elected president of the new federation, said the officers and executive board are pledged to expand Chicago labor's participation in politics.

Political Action to Be Stressed

"In today's world, political action is a natural obligation of every person who is active in the trade union movement," Lee said.

"For over 50 years we have had representation on the School Board. Our influence is felt in the parks, in housing, human relations, health and all the welfare services. Now we will have more manpower and fresh ideas so we can make even more impact on our community."

Officers elected, in addition to Lee, were Stephen M. Bailer and William F. Cleary, from the former federation, as first vice president and secretary-treasurer, respectively. Albert M. Towers, second vice president, and Paul A. Iaccino, assistant to Lee, are from the former IUC. Eleven board members also were named.

Archbishop Bernard J. Sheill of the Chicago Catholic Diocese suggested a library should be founded by the central body to house labor's literature and documents for scholars so its history will be correctly written.

Speakers at the meeting included Mayor Richard J. Daley; Pres. Reuben G. Soderstrom of the State AFL-CIO; Joseph Germano, district director of the Steelworkers; Robert R. Donnelly, State labor director; and William L. McFetridge and Joseph D. Keenan, AFL-CIO vice presidents.

Cavender Named Denver Postmaster

Denver—George Cavender, president of the Colorado AFL-CIO since 1956, has resigned to accept appointment by Pres. Kennedy as postmaster here. The state federation's executive board was slated to meet Jan. 12 to pick an interim president for the term ending in June.

Cavender began an active labor career in 1945 when he helped organize a Denver local of the Teachers. He became president of the Colorado Federation of Labor in 1949, was re-elected three times and was serving his third term as state AFL-CIO head.

Hire 167, Pay $190,000, Runaway Firm Told

St. Louis—The U.S. District Court here has ordered an airplane parts manufacturer to put 167 laid-off employes back to work and pay them more than $190,000 in wages lost because of a "runaway" plant situation.

The court ruled in favor of Machinists District 9 in upholding an impartial arbitrator's decision that Selb & Blades, a unit of Western, Inc., which does subcontracting for major airframe and missile firms, violated a contract clause prohibiting the farming-out of work.

The clause was part of a two-year contract effective July 1, 1960. Soon after the effective date, management claimed some work could not be performed in St. Louis and moved machines and work to new plants it set up in Denver, Colo., Rector, Ark., and Walnut Ridge, Ark., the union said.

When layoffs followed, the IAM charged management with violating the contract and took the case to arbitration. The company refused to comply with the arbiter's award, so District 9 went to court and got an order directing it to reinstate the workers and pay them lost wages, plus 6 percent interest from Jan. 11, 1961.

Meanwhile, employes for the two new plants in Arkansas have joined the Machinists and voted for the IAM in two National Labor Relations Board elections. The Walnut Ridge group has been chartered as Lodge 1568 and the Rector members as Lodge 1920.

FIVE THOUSAND SENIOR CITIZENS from the Miami area attended a rally for health care through social security in the Miami Beach Auditorium, a partial view of which is shown above. Representatives of more than 40 groups, including unions, appeared on the platform and the program included talks by Dir. Nelson Cruikshank of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, Pres. David Dubinsky of the Ladies' Garment Workers, Pres. David Sullivan of the Building Service Employes, Roy Reuther of the Auto Workers and Pres. Harry Van Arsdale of New York City Central Labor Council. Rallies like this dramatize the need for a practical solution to the problem of health care for the aged.

New Blue Cross Plan for Aged Concedes Need for Federal Aid

By John Barry

Chicago—The American Hospital Association and the Blue Cross Association at concurrent meetings here have acknowledged the need for government aid in providing health care for the aged and put forth a national Blue Cross plan for persons 65 and older that might be financed through the social security system.

The action was a departure from previous AHA and Blue Cross policies opposing the social security method of financing a pre-paid health care program for the retired aged.

It also represented the first break between the AHA and the American Medical Association on the issue of social security financing, which the AMA has assailed as a step toward "socialized medicine."

But the AHA and Blue Cross reaffirmed their opposition to the use of the social security system to administer a health care program, as distinct from financing the program.

"Conditional upon the administration of this proposed plan by the voluntary nonprofit prepayment system, the tax source of the funds is of secondary importance to us," said a statement adopted at the AHA meeting.

Blue Cross Views Similar

Blue Cross delegates, in a similar policy statement, were silent on the source of government funds, but officers of the two organizations said there was no basic difference of views. Blue Cross was formed by the AHA about 30 years ago and, although now independent, maintains a close working relationship with the hospital group.

In Washington, Director Nelson H. Cruikshank of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security described the AHA and Blue Cross shift of position as "a major step toward a realistic appraisal of the problem of financing the health care of America's aged."

"It's clear from this action," Cruikshank continued, "that the AHA and the Blue Cross have learned a great deal about the health needs of older people.

"It is also clear, however, that they still have much to learn about the practical ways of meeting these needs.

"We hope that within the context of their new policy positions, both the AHA and Blue Cross will find it possible to work constructively with the growing forces seeking a practical and equitable solution to one of America's major domestic problems.

"We hope that their logic will soon lead them to conclude—as other organizations have concluded—that the Anderson-King bill, which the AFL-CIO supports, represents the only sound approach to the problem of providing health care for the aged."

Both the AHA and Blue Cross, despite their abandonment of opposition to social security financing, maintained their stand against the Anderson-King bill, which is backed by the Kennedy Administration and calls for both administration and financing through social security machinery.

The two organizations declared the retired aged would be "better served" by the proposed Blue Cross plan.

That plan was outlined by Walter J. NcNerney, president of the Blue Cross Association, at a joint meeting of AHA and BCA delegates. Basically, it would offer persons 65 and older uniform nationwide benefits to include:

- Up to 70 days of in-patient care and related medicines and services in an acute general hospital.
- Up to 90 days in-patient care in other institutions, such as rehabilitation hospitals and nursing homes, following release from an acute general hospital, with a maximum allowance of $10 a day in AHA listed institutions.
- Hospital out-patient services, including emergency accident treatment, out-patient surgical procedures and X-ray and radiation therapy.
- Visiting nurses services, including up to 60 visits per calendar year at $3 per visit.

Benefits Held 'Superior'

McNerney said these benefits were "superior" to those offered in the Anderson-King bill, although the latter would provide up to 90 days of hospital care and 180 days of nursing home care.

He described the deductible provisions of the Anderson-King bill as "particularly bad," charging that they would lead to "under-utilization" of hospital facilities by many persons who need them. Under Anderson-King, patients would be required to pay the first $20 to $90 of their hospital bills.

The Blue Cross plan, McNerney said, would be made available to all of the 17 million Americans in the 65-and-over age group with no waiting period and no restrictions for pre-existing conditions. About 12 million aged now receive social security retirement benefits, he said.

Still in sketchy form, the Blue Cross plan is expected to be worked out for further discussion at meetings of the two groups next April, McNerney said. He estimated the cost at from $10 to $12 a month per subscriber on a uniform national basis.

Surgical Plan Sought

He also reported that Blue Shield officials were developing a parallel plan to provide medical and surgical insurance for the aged, but said he had no details.

In endorsing the Blue Cross plan, AHA and BCA delegates said government aid to subscribers unable to meet the full cost of the plan should be on "a decreasing scale related to income" but that "the determinations should not be made in accordance with the usual means test determinations made under public welfare programs."

Asked at a press conference whether this position conflicted with the Kennedy Adminstration's firm opposition to a means test, McNerney said he didn't know. He added later, however, that "I don't think we are at odds with the Adminstration."

McNerney said Blue Cross was in the best position to administer any government-backed health care plan for the aged because of its experience in covering some 57 million persons now on its rolls, including about 5 million in the 65-plus age group; the economy of its operation as a non-profit institution, and its existing relationships with the nation's hospitals.

Health Costs Higher

Any government health care program for retired persons, including the Anderson-King approach, would improve Blue Cross's competitive position, spokesman for the organization acknowledged. Blue Cross, they said, now pays out, in benefits for the aged it covers, four times the amount it receives in premiums on their behalf. The difference thus must be absorbed by other subscribers.

If the aged were covered by government subsidy, Blue Cross would then be able to lower rates to younger groups or improve services at the same rates, the spokesmen noted.

Curran Urges Steps to Save U.S. Shipping

Vigorous cooperation of the government, management and labor has been called for by Joseph Curran, president of the National Maritime Union and chairman of the AFL-CIO Maritime Committee, to prevent the U.S. merchant fleet from disappearing "from the world's harbors."

In a year-end statement Curran said reports on world shipping "show no improvement in the disastrous position" of ships sailing under the U.S. flag and that increased American imports and exports "have proved a boon for the shipping industry" only in other nations but not in this one.

The committee urged that to protect the future of the U.S.-flag merchant marine the nation must:

- Carry out the 1936 Merchant Marine Act proclaiming that a "substantial portion" of waterborne U.S. commerce shall be carried in American-flag ships, and providing for the building of merchant ships in private shipyards by skilled U.S. workers.

Legislation Asked

- Take the legislative steps needed to bring under the U.S. flag all ships owned by Americans, hundreds of which are now "runaways" under foreign registry and "flags of convenience."
- Continue and expand the subsidy provisions of the 1936 law to enable the American merchant marine to "compete effectively with low-wage foreign competitors."

Curran proposed more than a dozen additional ways of aiding the merchant fleet and its workers, including congressional action to "improve and cordinate government methods" of acting on maritime problems.

Boston Labor Council Suspended by Meany

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has placed the Greater Boston Labor Council under suspension and appointed Franklin J. Murphy, assistant AFL-CIO regional director, trustee over the affairs of the central body.

Meany's decision was based on a report of a hearing officer on charges that the local council was operating under an illegal constitution and failed to comply with the AFL-CIO constitution and rules and regulations pertaining to central body constitutions.

Unions Fill Santa Role At Coast VA Hospital

Los Angeles—Continuing a 20-year tradition, organized labor here recently presented Christmas gifts to some 6,000 veterans hospitalized at the Veterans' Administration facilities in nearby Sawtelle.

The gifts, including 500,000 cigarettes and two portable television sets, were presented to VA Facility Director Lowell Like by the Veterans Committee of the Los Angeles County Federation of Labor.

"This is labor's way of saying thanks," declared Veterans Committee members.

A tradition for Los Angeles unions since early in World War II, the program was initiated by the former Los Angeles Central Labor Council to lift the spirits of hospitalized veterans during the Christmas holiday season.

For many veterans, Committee members said, these are often the only gifts provided. Many have no families.

Started in 1942

Since the annual program started in 1942, unions here have contributed 25 television sets, 50 radios, 5 million cigarettes, 5,000 wallets, 5,000 pencils and many other items for individual gifts.

Special gifts provided some 200 women veterans have included cosmetics, perfumes, slippers and bed jackets.

Of key interest to VA officials are the portable television sets, because of their therapeutic value in the neuro-psychiatric wards. They described the TV sets as "about the best medicine we can give" the patients.

The Christmas gift program for the hospitalized veterans is financed by contributions from the Los Angeles County Federation of Labor and affiliated unions.

Pennsylvania Bars Bias in State Hiring

Harrisburg, Pa.—Gov. David L. Lawrence (D) has issued a Code of Fair Practices barring discrimination in state activities and has notified all state employes it will be the governing policy in every office of the executive branch of Pennsylvania government.

The code provides that all state agencies shall adopt and carry out a "clear, definitive written policy" of nondiscrimination and fair practices in hiring, assigning, promoting or discharging employes "without regard to race, color, creed, ancestry, age or national origin."

It calls for nondiscrimination of any type in educational programs, equal treatment of all persons without bias in the performance of state services, and no segregation or discrimination in treatment of the public including referral for employment.

Cooperation Directed

All state agencies have been instructed to work with the Pennsylvania Human Relations Commission on information about discrimination and to take "appropriate action" against any person found engaging in discrimination. Every state contract for public works, or for goods or services, shall have a nondiscrimination clause which shall be fully enforced. Any institution or organization engaged in discriminatory practices shall be denied state funds, the code provides.

Gov. Lawrence called on all political subdivisions, school districts and other government agencies to cooperate in the effort to eliminate discrimination.

Reinstatement Ordered:

NLRB Upholds Wife Who Wouldn't Spy

It's an unfair labor practice for a company to ask a wife to use her marital position to get her husband to halt pro-union activities and then to fire her when she fails.

This was the decision of the National Labor Relations Board, based on the findings of Trial Examiner Louis Libbin.

Libbin held that an official of Brookside Industries, Inc., which makes men's shirts in Reidsville, N. C., asked Mrs. Louise Moore, a supervisor, to get her husband Troy, a non-supervisory employe, to quit attending union meetings. Explained the supervisor, according to Libbin: "You eat, sleep and bear his children and you have more influence over him than anybody else."

Mrs. Moore did as she was asked but her husband told her to "stay out of it" and continued to help the Clothing Workers organize the plant. She was fired Oct. 19, 1960.

The NLRB directed the company to:

- Reinstate Mrs. Moore to her former or equivalent position.
- Pay her for lost wages.
- Stop interfering with employes' rights to engage in union activities.

Mrs. Moore and her husband were employed by the company in December 1958, and the next spring Mrs. Moore was made a supervisor of 40 to 45 girls in the sewing room, answerable directly to the sewing room superintendent. Her husband's job was to match up work for the sewing room operators, and he was answerable to Supervisor Dorothy Breeze.

Active in Organizing

When the Clothing Workers began their organizing campaign at the plant in June 1960, Troy Moore became active in meetings and he solicited union membership among other employes. Across the next several weeks, management officials talked to Mrs. Moore and her husband about getting him on the company's "side of the fence."

Troy Moore, the NLRB found, told his wife he "did not want to have anything to do" with the company's efforts to influence him through his wife.

Mrs. Moore was fired after an NLRB examiner's hearing in October 1960 into a complaint that the company fired eight other employes for union activity. She had sat near the company's attorney at the hearing, and at his request gave him the names of employes who attended a union meeting June 23.

Her husband gave her the names, Mrs. Moore said, after telling her two other supervisors had attended the meeting and "she would know it anyway." Management fired her for not reporting that information as soon as she learned it, the trial examiner found.

The board said Mrs. Moore was not obliged, as a supervisor, to give management information "volunteered to her by her husband in the privacy of their home," and in the "mutual trust and confidence which arises from the marital relationship."

Board Orders Back Pay in 13-Year Case

issued a back pay finding but the company objected to it. After another hearing, a trial examiner brought in the back pay finding which the board has now approved by a 2-1 vote.

The chief point of difference between the parties, and the reason for much of the delay, has been the company's argument that back pay should not include a bonus that the firm began paying some time between 1916 and 1920, and continued to pay with relatively few exceptions until the business was sold in July 1959.

The final ruling was that the bonus should be included from the day after layoff to Apr. 20, 1955, when reinstatement was offered, except for the two workers whom Nabors argued he would have laid off in 1949 because business was slack.

Nabors wanted to make May 25, 1949, the cutoff date for back pay because that was the date on which he said he would have laid off all 11 workers. The NLRB panel majority picked the 1955 date instead for all but two of the 11.

Technically the laid-off workers did not qualify for bonus payment because they were not on the payroll, the board order related, but "the reason they were not on the payroll was because of [Nabors'] unlawful discrimination" and not to award these payments would be to permit Nabors to "benefit from his unlawful discrimination."

Panel of 42 Mediators Appointed Under Internal Disputes Program

members, the federation president expressed the conviction that "timely mediation can be most effective in minimizing friction and discord among affiliates and can lead to the resolution of many disputes at an early stage by voluntary agreement."

He explained the panel is large enough so that the time demanded of any one member will not be "unduly burdensome."

"Those who perform this function as members of the mediation panel," he wrote, "will render a vital service to the AFL-CIO and will make a very constructive contribution to a stronger and more unified trade union movement."

The council appeals subcommittee appointed during the convention is composed of Meany and AFL-CIO Vice Presidents Joseph A. Beirne and James A. Suffridge. Their alternates are, respectively, Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler and Vice Presidents A. J. Hayes and Joseph D. Keenan.

AFL-CIO vice presidents appointed to the mediators' panel are Harry C. Bates, William C. Birthright, L. S. Buckmaster, William A. Calvin, James B. Carey, Joseph Curran, William C. Doherty, David Dubinsky, Karl F. Feller, George M. Harrison and Maurice A. Hutcheson.

Other Officials Named

Also, O. A. Knight, David J. McDonald, William L. McFetridge, Lee W. Minton, Paul L. Phillips, Jacob S. Potofsky, L. M. Raftery, A. Philip Randolph, Emil Rieve, Walter P. Reuther, Peter T. Schoemann and Richard F. Walsh.

Named to the panel, in addition, were these officials of AFL-CIO affiliates:

Pres. Daniel E. Conway, American Bakery & Confectionery Workers; Pres. John M. Elliott, Street Railway Employes; Pres. Gordon M. Freeman, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Pres. John J. Grogan, Shipbuilders; Pres. Felix C. Jones, Cement Workers; Pres. Herman D. Kenin, Musicians.

Also, Pres. William A. Pollock, Textile Workers Union of America; Pres. Alex Rose, Hatters; Sec.-Treas. H. A. Schneider, Grain Millers; Pres. David Sullivan, Building Service Employes; Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock, Auto Workers; John J. Moran (retired), Communications Workers, and Pres. William D. Buck, Fire Fighters.

Volunteers Key to Teachers' Victory

Elated Unionists Hail New York Triumph

New York—He stood in the center of the crowd, short and grey-haired, his elation breaking through the fatigue half-hidden by his eyeglasses.

"I know it sounds trite," he exulted, "but they said it couldn't be done. And we did it. We won!"

Thus did Pres. Charles Cogen of the United Federation of Teachers hail the victory of his union, an affiliate of the American Federation of Teachers and thus of the AFL-CIO, in the biggest collective bargaining election in years—one in which 33,052 teachers in the New York City public school system cast ballots.

These white collar workers, well educated, proud of their profession, overwhelmingly picked the UFT as their bargaining agent with 60.5 percent of the vote cast. The UFT was named on 20,045 ballots; the rival Teachers Bargaining Organization, created as a last-minute device by the long-established National Education Association, got 9,770 votes; the little unaffiliated Teachers Union had 2,575, and 662 votes were marked for no union.

The ballots had just been counted and the results announced as Cogen talked. The four small rooms on the fourth floor of the dingy building where the UFT has its headquarters were jammed, and the hallways with them. The usual calm was missing—a mimeograph machine hummed in regular cadence, a clattering typewriter joined in a duet with the incessant bells of the telephones, and everybody was talking about the big news of the day. Cigaret smoke hung—not like a pall—in the air, papers scattered everywhere destroyed the customary office decorum.

Winning Combination

The celebrating crowd was made up of the UFT activists, the men and women who put together a combination of manpower, legpower and brain power that lined up a huge group of white collar workers beside their organized brothers in the blue collars.

"We had only three full-time organizers and seven staff workers," said David Selden, UFT special representative.

"Everyone else was a volunteers, and these ran into the hundreds. They came from every borough, from every school and every kind of background. Without them we never could have won the support of those who voted for our organization, and certainly we couldn't have reached the city's 40,000 teachers with our message."

But get through the message they did—loud and clear. Despite full teaching loads, Selden said, the volunteers spoke at rallies and meetings, held "election parties" to raise funds, ran errands, wrote letters and postcards, addressed envelopes, manned telephones, operated mimeograph machines, lettered signs, prepared leaflets, solicited campaign contributions from colleagues, circulated all sorts of UFT literature and talked up the election wherever they went.

Labor Press Helped

"We had wonderful cooperation from the labor press," observed UFT Deputy Pres. Samuel Hochberg. "I'm sure we were successful in reaching many teachers through trade union newspapers, which really went all-out in helping us get our story across. Then, too, we had splendid coverage on radio, with the result that we got through to many more teachers than we had hoped might be possible."

Cogen pointed out the UFT conducted its campaign without any attempt to pull away from "full and straightforward identification with the rest of the organized labor movement." But sometimes, he conceded, it had a hard job convincing teachers that they have basic things in common with other workers.

What helped, he continued, was a realization that New York City's Board of Education's stalling in carrying out its promise to hold a bargaining vote was comparable to "the kind of employer resistance factory workers come up against."

"We owe a debt of gratitude to the AFL-CIO and its Industrial Union Dept. for the splendid cooperation and invaluable advice given us," he added. "Throughout these past two years the organized labor movement has stood behind us admirably."

'Real Union' Needed

The UFT victory has been hailed as an important breakthrough in the organization of white collar workers, who dominate today's labor force. Scores of teachers indicated they voted for the UFT because they want to be identified with the AFL-CIO on the ground a "real union" would help win improvements in wages and working conditions. Wages and conditions generally are not bad, they agree, but there are many unresolved grievances.

"At a starting salary of $4,600 a year," one teacher said, "I can't see myself having to be a policeman, psychologist, clerk, lunchroom aide, playground supervisor, bank teller, air raid warden, toilet attendant and general factotum."

But with college degrees more common than they used to be, teachers have come to realize that they are merely part of an expanding army of educated employes. Status is no longer an acceptable substitute for decent wages and working conditions.

Many UFT members are unable to understand why votes were cast for the NEA-created Teachers Bargaining Organization or for no union. One woman said she voted for TBO because she thought it "below the dignity" of a teacher to belong to a union.

"Of course she would feel that way," said another. "Her husband earns a comfortable income and she doesn't have to depend on her earnings. I'll bet if someone did research on the number of women with working husbands who supported TBO, you'd see some very interesting figures. You'd also see why most of us want a union."

HUNDREDS OF PHONE CALLS were made by United Federation of Teachers volunteers during the campaign before the voting. Final count showed the affiliate of the AFL-CIO American Federation of Teachers with 20,045 votes, or 60.5 percent of those cast in the representation election among New York City's public school teachers.

MASS MEETINGS LIKE THIS were instrumental in building up sentiment that was translated into votes which made the UFT bargaining representative for New York City's public school teachers. Photo emphasizes the youth of the union members—average age is about 35.

WHITE COLLAR PICKET LINES were used by the UFT to demonstrate to the New York City Board of Education that teachers wanted to hold a representation election. The election was not ordered until a new board was named following the disclosure of scandals in school construction.

Unionist Heads Education Board

Cleveland — Walter L. Davis, education director of Retail Clerks Local 880 here, has been elected president of the Cleveland Board of Education for 1962.

The only labor official on the seven-member board, Davis was elected with strong labor backing in 1959. Formerly the announcer on a Drew Pearson television program, he was associate editor of the Citizen, labor weekly here, until April 1958, when he became director of labor's campaign against an Ohio "right-to-work" law which was rejected by the voters that November.

'Work' Bid Laid to GOP Group at Michigan Constitutional Convention

Lansing, Mich.—A group of Republican delegates to Michigan's constitutional convention here is attempting to transform Democratic-sponsored civil rights proposals into vehicles for a so-called "right-to-work" provision in the state constitution, the State AFL-CIO has charged.

Four GOP delegates have proposed that language barring the union shop be added to a measure which would:

- Bar discrimination and guarantee equal protection of the laws.
- Specifically prohibit race discrimination in employment.
- Empower the legislature to adopt measures to prevent discrimination.

A separate proposal sponsored by another Republican delegate also would outlaw union shop agreements by prohibiting employers from entering "into any agreement" to exclude persons from employment "because of race, color, creed or national origin or membership or non-membership in any labor organization."

Michigan AFL-CIO officials pointed out that since employers do not normally "enter into any agreement" to discriminate, the only practical effect of the proposal would be to prohibit union shop contracts.

Thus far, the state's top GOP leaders have refrained from backing the "right-to-work" proposals, which would put the "work" issue on a statewide referendum ballot in next November's congressional and gubernatorial elections. The Republicans hold a 99 to 45 edge in delegates to the constitutional convention.

The convention, which got under way early in October, is scheduled to complete its rewriting of the state's basic laws by the end of March.

All actions taken by the convention must be approved by a referendum vote. The convention itself will decide whether to submit the entire constitution to the voters as a single measure or whether to have the more controversial portions voted on separately.

The Hard Truth Emerges

A CANDID APPRAISAL by Labor Sec. Goldberg of the failure of the labor force to grow along projected lines in 1961 has laid bare the seriousness of the unemployment problem.

At the beginning of 1961 it was estimated that the nation's total labor force—persons working or actively seeking employment—would increase by 1 million during the year. In December 1961 there was no discernible increase from 12 months earlier.

Why? Because about 700,000 persons who would normally be seeking employment stayed out of the labor market in the face of persistent high unemployment. The other 300,000 entered the armed forces.

A realistic appraisal of the nation's joblessness would place these 700,000 in the ranks of the unemployed. If they had any hope of finding work, they would be in the job market.

Unless there is an increase in the rate of economic growth, this situation will become increasingly acute in the next few years as population increases throw more and more persons into the job-seeking category at the same time that a strong trend in job displacement through automation continues.

The average rate of unemployment for 1961 was 6.7 percent of the labor force, ranging from a high of 6.9 percent that persisted through most of the year to 6.1 percent for the last two months.

This record takes on special meaning when contrasted with the trend during upswings from previous postwar recessions.

In 1949, from the low point of the recession to nine months later, unemployment declined about 30 percent; in 1954 the same period produced a 26 percent decline in joblessness; in 1958 the persistence of unemployment from the low point to nine months later was even greater, with the decline measured at 20 percent.

In 1961 the failure of unemployment to respond to the general recovery takes on dramatic impact when the decline in joblessness over a nine month period registered a mere 7 percent.

The most optimistic forecasts for 1962 do not indicate any important or meaningful drop in the unemployment rate.

This intolerable situation can only yield to administrative policy keyed to stepped-up economic growth and to specific government action designed to go to the root of the problem, action called for over the past year by the AFL-CIO in the areas of public works, tax withholding, unemployment compensation and manpower and retraining.

Ethics for Businessmen

IN LIGHT OF THE ENORMITY of the price-rigging conspiracy in the electrical manufacturing industry last year and the subsequent convictions, recent findings on fake television commercials and questionable practices in a major stock exchange may seem trifling. But there is a common theme running through all these cases—a failure in business ethics and contempt for consumers.

The fast-buck operator and the hard-sell businessman have long been characteristic of some segments of the business community. But except for an occasional slap on the wrist to gross offenders or small-timers, the business world has done nothing.

The result has been a series of government regulatory agencies created to protect the business community from itself and to defend the public interest in terms of the consumer.

Some of these agencies have in past years fallen into the hands of the groups they were set up to regulate, resulting in a watering down of the original intent of the law.

The Kennedy Administration has revitalized many of these agencies and helped redirect them to their original functions. But in the long run the answer must come from the business community itself in terms of effective self-regulation in the public interest.

Customs Barriers Tumbling:

New Problems Posed for U. S. By European Common Market

BACK IN THE DAYS before World War II, Americans who were used to travelling 3,000 miles across their own country without ever running into a customs barrier got quiet laughs out of what happened in Europe every day.

You could get on a train in Germany, barely get settled down when a Dutch customs officer was searching your baggage and that was scarcely over when a Belgian officer was breathing down your neck and the Belgian had barely got off the train when a French customs man was on.

Tariffs, quotas, exchange controls—every country in Europe, some of them postage stamp size, was doing the same. It made for halting, constricted trade that helped keep Europe's standard of living far below our own.

"You need a United States of Europe, perhaps not a political one, but an economic one," we told our European friends after the war. "Cut down on these absurd trade barriers."

Well, they have taken our advice and now the words "Common Market" have become part of our daily vocabulary and the "Common Market" itself is a threat to our dominant position in the world as exporters.

Some economists think that we ought to join the Common Market. Others say "No—let's put up our own trade barriers." And others, like Pres. Kennedy's advisers, think that we ought to negotiate trade agreements with the Common Market that will help expand foreign trade and yet protect our own industries and jobs at home.

Just what is the Common Market?

Known more formally as the European Economic Community, the Common Market was founded in 1958 by France, West Germany, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg. Its basic program is to eliminate all internal tariffs among the member states by 1970. It would cut down on restrictions on imports and exports among the member nations and erect a common tariff wall against outsiders.

As part of the loosening of economic hindrances to trade, the Common Market nations also have agreed on the free movement of workers and capital among themselves, and are working toward unified economic, monetary, labor and agricultural policies.

THE WAY HASN'T ALWAYS been smooth but the success of the Common Market nations resulted in formation last year of another trading bloc, the European Free Trade Association. This includes Great Britain, Sweden, Switzerland, Norway, Denmark, Austria and Portugal. The EFTA group has not gone beyond a kind of customs union, but it is seriously considering entry into the Common Market. If it does, it will mean a powerful trading block of 300 million highly progressive people in the industrial heart of Europe.

Great Britain is now negotiating for entry into the Common Market. When it finally enters the group, the world trade picture will be drastically changed both for the British Commonwealth nations which now enjoy preferential trade treatment with the motherland and for the United States, which is a keen competitor of Great Britain in the European market.

The Kennedy Administration has been highly alert to the problems the U.S. is certain to face if a great free trade bloc should be established in a Europe that has made giant recovery strides since the end of World War II, largely through our own aid programs.

"Now this new 'house of Europe' that we sought so long, under different administrations, is actually rising, and it means vast new changes in our outlook as well," the President recently told the National Association of Manufacturers. "It could be—it should be—our most reliable and profitable customer."

But, the President warned, the U.S. must have a flexible enough trade policy of its own so that it can negotiate with the Common Market "to reduce external tariffs to a level which permits our products to enter on a truly competitive basis."

This clearly means quid pro quo reductions in our own tariffs, steps that are certain to arouse violent controversy in our own country between those who see liberal trade policies as opening the way to vastly expanded trade among the free nations and those who see cheap-labor European competition as fatal for our own industries.

There are Americans who see the trade question also as part of the struggle of the free world against communism. They ask whether the free world will draw together in some kind of huge trade center or will split into hostile camps whose strength in the face of Communist aggression can only be diminished. Walter Lippmann, noted columnist, has asked:

"Do we come together in one great trading community which includes not only Western Europe and North America, but also Japan, Australasia, Latin America and Africa—or do we go on our separate ways, fragmenting the non-Communist world?"

Kennedy has denied that he seeks to make the U.S. a member of the Common Market. He has asked only the power with which to negotiate agreements with it. But the larger issue of liberal trade policy or a new tariff war still remains. It will be hotly debated in the months ahead. (PAI)

Morgan Says:

Will the FTC's Spoilsports Kill What's Left of TV Drama?

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m. EST.)

SOME SPOILSPORTS down at the Federal Trade Commission are threatening to take the fun out of television commercials. They insist that ads on video must be truthful or at least not deceptive. Now that the cynicism of the materialistic younger generation has pretty well shot the illusion of Santa Claus, what is there left for us doddering romantics if the FTC robs us of that lovely land of make-believe we glimpse in the TV plugs for the perfect products in the best of all possible worlds?

Morgan

The answer, to borrow and distort a celebrated quotation by the chairman of another regulatory agency, the Federal Communications Commission's Newton Minow, is a wasteland of realism, and I'm not sure we can stand it.

In a unanimous and portentous decision which overturned the recommendations of its own examiner, the FTC ruled that TV camera "trickery" must not be used in demonstrating the qualities of a product offered for sale. Involved was a commercial extolling a shaving cream with such qualities that it purportedly could shave sandpaper in one stroke. The main hitch was that the filmed demonstration did not use sandpaper at all but a piece of plexiglas with sand added.

The mills of government grind slowly. The offensive commercial was withdrawn in 1959 when the FTC first objected to it but the decision just rendered—and written, perhaps significantly, by a Kennedy Administration appointee, Philip Elman—was aimed at two industry Goliaths, the Colgate-Palmolive Company and the Ted Bates advertising agency, and its ramifications are large.

The heart of Commissioner Elman's reasoning is revealed in the following passages of his opinion:

"The limitations of the [television] medium may present a challenge to the creative ingenuity of copywriters; but surely they do not constitute lawful justification for resort to falsehoods and deception of the public. The argument to the contrary would seem to be based on the wholly untenable assumption that the primary or dominant function of television is to sell goods, and that the Commission should not make any ruling . . . [to the contrary] . . .

"Stripped of polite verbiage," Elman declares, "the argument boils down to this: where truth and television salesmanship collide, the former must give way to the latter. This is obviously an indefensible proposition. The notion that a sponsor may take liberties with the truth in television advertising, while advertisers using other media must continue to be truthful, is patent nonsense."

But Commissioner Elman, we Americans have come to love this nonsense. With the television fare between the commercials so often so violently dreary, we have come to await with zestful impatience the exciting bit in which the electric razor shaves the fuzz off a peach or a blade mows down sandpaper in a single stroke or a movie camera demonstrates the non-distortional qualities of car safety glass, or a cigarette fully filters out tars or an aluminum foil keeps a ham smokehouse-fresh.

THESE ARE LITTLE DRAMAS that tug at the heart, and who says we want to be told that the peach may not be a peach, that the sandpaper is a phony, that the glass doesn't distort because the camera shot through an open car window, that the filter did not take out any more tars than any other filter or that the ham looked fresh because the competing one was deliberately dried out?

Then there is the matter of what might be called the cross-fertilization of drama, the commercial's enlivening contribution to the humdrum of the home. A newspaperman I know has a 16-year-old daughter who recently was equipped with an evening dress for her first dance. As she descended the stairs, a radiant star in blue satin reducing her father, quivering with pride, to muteness, her 14-year-old brother, an expert on TV commercial taglines, called out like an evangelist pursuing sin: "Are you betrayed by a fickle deodorant." No TV offering that I have caught could match the mixture of mirth and tragedy into which that family scene dissolved.

With considerable force FTC Commissioner Elman in his sandpaper opinion cites another ruling which said with piercing candor: "If respondents 'do not choose to advertise truthfully, they may, and should, discontinue advertising.'"

This brings me back to an earlier point, to wit: How much realism can we stand? Here we've already got those graphic shots of aspirins and seltzers flaking and bubbling away in the plumbing of our stomachs, and on radio at least, the word pictures of roll-on deodorant getting stuck to the under-arm hairs that men don't shave, the gentle expeditions of laxative pills through the lower tract et cetera ad nauseum.

Still, perhaps, the public can stand it if radio and TV can stand Commissioner Elman's abrasive truth that the assumption that the dominant function of broadcasting is to sell goods is an untenable assumption.

Washington Reports:

Rival Senate Leaders See Jobs Major Congressional Problems

UNEMPLOYMENT CONTINUES a major problem for congressional action, Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) and Republican Leader Everett Dirksen (Ill.) declared in interviews beginning the 1962 series of the AFL-CIO public service program, Washington Reports to the People. The program is carried on 500 stations this year.

"Those who are made unemployable because of modern technical devices such as automation ought to be given some degree of protection, some degree of security, and I think that is a federal responsibility," Mansfield said.

Asked about two bills introduced by Sen. Joseph F. Clark (D-Pa.), one for standby public works and another to retrain jobless workers, the Democratic leader noted that the retraining bill has already been passed by the Senate. Whether it becomes law depends on the House, he said.

Dirksen said that getting jobs for the unemployed "is a must in my book.

"Our own leadership has been working on the problem," he said. "We've been talking with people in the scholarly fields in the hope that we could set up a committee to see what can be done."

The minority leader said he had "no categorical answer for the moment" on what should be done about renewal of the Reciprocal Trade Act, which expires June 30. The subject involves American industry and jobs, the effect of the European Common Market, and the problem of international gold balances, he noted.

MANSFIELD PUT "legislation affecting our future trade policy" as an item of first significance for the second session of the 87th Congress. He said he expected specific recommendations from the Administration.

He listed tax revision, medical care for the aged, and a general bill on federal aid to education as other matters to be acted upon.

"Those who do not see eye-to-eye with the Administration would be just as happy if the federal aid to education bill [now blocked in the House Rules Committee] did not come out except in the form we had it in the Eisenhower Administration," Dirksen said.

Mansfield said that even though this is an election year, "I would prefer to stay in session to see that the President's program is passed" rather than adjourn early for campaigning.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

NEW YORK'S GOV. NELSON A. ROCKEFELLER, who must be rated the top prospect for the Republican presidential nomination in 1964 if he wins re-election to state office this year, recently spoke doctrine that is partially grounded in history but sounds strange today from a state chief executive. Said the governor:

"It is the proper and historic role of the state, in our federal system, to be a leader and an innovator. The role of the state is not negative—as a simple counterweight to federal power. It is positive—to provide leadership inventive and imaginative enough to stir others to follow."

Rockefeller announced this doctrine in his annual message to the legislature laying down his program.

He used it to justify requests for a boost in the state minimum wage from $1 to $1.25; for higher workmen's compensation benefits; for expanded medical care for the aged; for a more active anti-discrimination program; for experiments with narcotics cures; and for a state atomic development authority.

He said he would later send special messages dealing with the protection of migrant farm labor, agricultural research, mental hygiene.

It was certainly the belief of some of the writers of the Constitution that the separate states would serve as "laboratories" for political experiments, so that an idea proved good in one state might spread elsewhere. And it is better for Rockefeller to urge that New York try some pioneering than for him to complain negatively about federal power. Still, it is just as well not to push the ancient doctrine too far.

MR. ROCKEFELLER'S OWN PROPOSAL for a state $1.25 minimum wage follows the federal law lifting the level to that minimum in two steps. He conceded in his message—so he hasn't changed his mind since the GOP convention of 1960 when he forced then Vice Pres. Nixon to the famous Fifth Avenue Compact—that state health contributions to the aged poor are no substitute for a federal program financed through the social security system.

His proposals to the legislature, though more progressive and civilized than those of governors in less fortunate states, fall far short of meeting the serious issues that afflict New York's millions of urban residents.

There was not a word on legislative reapportionment, so that the 7 million in New York City will have an equity of representation in Albany with the cattle herds of the upstate dairy farmers.

He has raised state school aid levels—but not so much that New York City feels it is fairly treated and not so much that vast amounts of federal aid are unneeded. He said nothing significant in his message on housing and he could say nothing significant about urban renewal, which requires revenue resources beyond even such a wealthy state as New York.

THE INCREASING COHESIVENESS of the nation, continental though it is in scope, narrows the range for creative activities in the "laboratories" of state government. There can be work in mental hygiene, safety regulations, criminal law and the upgrading of police and fire protection. But in others, the national power must be asserted.

The country's unemployment compensation system falls far short of its 1936 objective—to supply at least one-half the wages of a worker losing a job through no fault of his own. The pressure on each state "laboratory" is to hold down the benefits it allows to be offered, for the simple fear of losing industry to other states with even lower levels.

Workmen's compensation systems, controlled wholly by the states, are also far below levels of benefits originally planned—again because the legislatures are subject to business pressure.

Besides, there is the matter of the financing of welfare programs. State tax systems, even in New York, are regressive by federal standards; the poorer people pay the bill. The graduated federal income tax is still the most equitable system we have invented.

JOBS FOR THE JOBLESS is a must issue before the second session of the 87th Congress, both Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, left, and Minority Leader Everett Dirksen asserted in the opening 1962 program of Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

How to Buy:

Group Health Insurance Buying May Stop Rising Medical Costs

By Sidney Margolius

THERE SEEMS NO WAY to stop those soaring medical and hospital bills, or at least the available ways aren't being fully used. The latest price index shows that costs of medical care again jumped over 3 percent this past year compared to less than 1 percent for overall living costs. In all, medical costs now are up 62 percent since the 1947-49 base period, compared to 28 percent for the general cost of living.

As a result of the hardships caused by orbiting medical charges, unions and other community groups are driving for more comprehensive health insurance, with an increasing number setting up their own health-care facilities.

Another trend is for small groups to team up to buy health insurance. This way they get the advantage of lower brokerage fees and reduced retentions (for insurance-company overhead and profit). For example, the Foundation on Employe Health, in its report on Problems and Solutions of Health And Welfare Programs, says that for a group of 100, an insurer typically retains 30.6 cents of the premium dollar; for a group of 1,000, 11.8 cents; but for a group of 10,000, only 5.5 cents.

Some insurance counselors advise that groups should get competitive bids from at least six companies and as often as every year. Of course, the group must calculate whether the new acquisition won't outweigh any savings.

If competitive bids are so important to a group, it's equally vital that your family compare offerings from several companies if you buy insurance individually. The only economical way to buy is in a group. But many families still buy individual policies, often to supplement group insurance.

It's more important to look for broad basic benefits than high "maximums." One policy may offer benefits "up to $20,000," another a maximum of $10,000. The higher maximum is not necessarily preferable. What's more vital is how much is allowed for specific care, and what proportion of a more-typical sickness bill will be covered.

Especially compare these specific benefits:

Hospital Care: Note how much is provided for hospital bed and board. Some plans may allow only up to $10 a day, in comparison to typical charges of about $21, for a semi-private room. Others may provide full payment.

Also compare the allowance for "ancillary" costs—hospital extras such as drugs, dressings, X-rays, operating room, lab tests and so on. These now often come to as much as room and board. In comparing various plans, you may find that one pays "extras" only to $100; another up to $200; a third, without limit.

Doctors' Allowances: Some policies give high allowances for relatively rare operations but only low amounts for common ones, reports Agnes Brewster, Social Security Administration medical economist. Compare the allowances for the more common operations like appendectomies.

Also observe if doctors' services are provided for in the hospital only or also in office and home, and whether diagnostic services outside the hospital are covered—a valuable provision.

Compare the "Deductible": With insurance companies now promoting "major medical" policies, it's vital to compare how much of the bill you would have to pay before the insurance pays. Also note whether the deductible applies to each family member, or preferably, the whole family, and whether to each illness, or preferably, to "each benefit period," and how long the "benefit period" is.

Income Limitations: Some plans stipulate that only families under a specified income limit have their doctor bills paid in full. Union insurance directors advise that you observe whether the limit is high enough so you won't have to pay additional fees.

Dependents: Note whether your family gets the same benefits as the breadwinner, which is the current trend; until what ages your children are covered, and the amount of maternity benefit and waiting period.

Conversion: More attention is being given to provisions for converting to individual coverage when leaving a job. Many people lose their coverage when they need it most—when income is reduced.

Policy Restrictions: Especially in buying individual policies, make sure that:

- The policy is guaranteed renewable and non-cancellable, not only for the term of the policy but for your lifetime.
- That the policy won't carry any "elimination endorsement" excluding coverage for existing conditions or illnesses for which you had recent attention.
- That the "period of contestability," during which the insurer can contest a claim, is not more than two years from date of issue.
- That "disability" is not defined as confinement to your home.

FDA INSPECTORS and chemists are the scientific sleuths who enforce the federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act to assure American consumers of the quality and integrity of food items.

Standards Explained:

New FDA Pamphlet Protects Food Buyers

FOOD SHOPPERS INTERESTED in laws that protect their health and pocketbooks can get useful information from a new pamphlet, "What Consumers Should Know about Food Standards," issued by the Food & Drug Administration.

FDA standards regulations stand back of the quality and integrity of hundreds of major food items in the American diet. They specify what ingredients and processes may be used, and the information which must be given on the label. Development of the standards is a cooperative activity on the part of government, industry and consumers. Factual information from these sources is the basis of the standards.

Whenever "such action will promote honesty and fair dealing in the interest of consumers," says the federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act, FDA is authorized to set standards of quality, identity and fill of container for any food, except most fresh and dried fruits and vegetables which are exempted.

"For example," the pamphlet states, "the standard of identity for fruit preserves and jellies requires not less than 45 parts by weight of fruit or fruit juice to each 55 parts of total sweetening ingredients . . . At the public hearings, which preceeded the writing of this standard, cookbooks 200 years old, as well as current ones, were introduced in evidence to show that pure jam is a product made from approximately equal parts by weight of fruit and sugar."

The 12-page pamphlet is illustrated with photographs showing some of the scientific tests FDA makes to check samples of food products against the standards. The pamphlet also lists the foods for which standards have been established.

"What Consumers Should Know about Food Standards" is for sale by the Superintendent of Documents, U. S. Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C., for 20 cents a copy.

From Soup to Nonsense:

And How Many Years Before Dames Stop Asking Questions?

ARITHMETIC PROBLEMS for the post-Christmas season:

1. How many days, weeks, months or years will it take three children to write 23 thank-you notes?

2. If you have gained eight pounds in two weeks, how long will it take you to lose them?

3. If your 6-year-old son receives an electric train for Christmas, how long will he have to wait before Daddy lets him play with it?

4. If you have a bank balance of $103.98, how can you write seven checks totaling $189.63?

5. If you were gifted with a black lace slip, a beaded evening bag, a sequinned net apron and two pairs of cuff links, and if you return them to the store for credit, how much more will you have to pay to get the electric blender you'd hoped somebody would give you for Christmas?

6. If it takes half an hour to decorate a Christmas tree, how long will it take to dispose of the Christmas tree?

7. If three children received an average of 7⅓ toys each, how long will it be before the children start moping around, complaining that they haven't anything to do?

8. If the Christmas office party took place two days before Christmas, how much time must elapse before the whole thing blows over and people are speaking to each other again?

9. If you received a beautiful two-volume boxed set of Emerson's Essays for Christmas, how long will it take you to read them?

10. If your 10-year-old gets a shock-resistant, waterproof, dustproof, anti-magnetic wristwatch with an unbreakable mainspring, how long will it take him to lose it?

11. If Santa Claus delivered an adorable six-weeks-old puppy, (a) how long will it take to train the puppy? and (b) how much will it cost to have the wall-to-wall carpeting cleaned?

12. If you spend New Year's Eve operating on the eat-drink-and-be-merry principle, how many aspirin will it take you to get through New Year's Day?

THIS DEVICE tests cream style corn to determine whether it is too "soupy." If a given quantity of the sample spreads too far when dumped on the graduated circular plate, it is rejected.

Hundreds Made Jobless:

Newspaper Foldings Prompt U.S. Inquiry

Los Angeles—The death of two major newspapers here has prompted an inquiry by Attorney Gen. Robert F. Kennedy and by Chairman Emanuel Celler of the House Judiciary Committee.

Urgent calls for the inquiries were made by AFL-CIO groups here following separate announcements that the Norman Chandler interests were shutting down their afternoon Mirror at the same time the Hearst Corp. would close the morning Los Angeles Examiner.

Hundreds of newspaper workers were thrown out of work, although a few were absorbed by Hearst's afternoon Herald and by Chandler's morning Times. The Newspaper Guild and other unions have set up employment offices to help ousted employes find jobs in the steadily diminishing newspaper industry.

Government inquiries, it was understood here, are designed to determine whether there was any collusion between the Chandlers and the Hearsts in a "deal" which leaves this metropolitan area of nearly 7 million people with only one major morning newspaper and one afternoon newspaper.

The Mirror was born Oct. 11, 1948. A non-union paper, as is the Times, the Mirror nevertheless was regarded as a liberal Republican newspaper with a willingness generally to give a fair presentation of labor and political news. The Examiner had somewhat the same reputation. It more frequently supported Democratic political candidates and it was solidly organized in every department.

Born of Union Bid

It not only carried the union label but was actually born at the request of union labor.

The strange story started at the end of the last century when the four dailies then in existence tried to force a wage cut on unionized printers. The printers won their prolonged strike against all but the Times, then owned by Harrison Gray Otis.

Thus began the open conflict between the Times and organized labor, with Otis and his anti-labor attitude affecting the entire history of trade unionism here from then until today.

Shortly after the strike, Typographical Union Pres. S. B. Donnelly declared that the battle against the Times could not succeed "In the absence of a sure enough competitor for that sheet."

Arthur Hay, local ITU representative, and James Lynch, Donnelly's successor as president, began a vigorous campaign to persuade William Randolph Hearst to open a morning newspaper here. A series of resolutions were sent to Hearst by central labor bodies and the Printers Union. The campaign succeeded.

The first issue of Hearst's Examiner came out Dec. 12, 1903, with its employes—all union members—joining 10,000 brothers and sisters in a torchlight parade celebrating the birth of a rival to the Times. It was, at that moment, the greatest local parade ever held in Los Angeles.

Hearst pledged a fair shake to working men and women. While the promises were not always faithfully kept by this newspaper magnate, the Examiner provided competition to the Times for 59 years.

Union leaders here said the struggle to organize the Times will continue.

The publication has a daily circulation of more than 500,000 and a Sunday circulation of 1 million. The Examiner had a 381,000 daily and a 693,000 Sunday circulation.

Union officials and others were mildly cheered by promises from the Times that it will present the news fairly and without bias.

There was general agreement with Celler's statement that the end of the two metropolitan dailies is "an ominous sign" of the increase in the "most dangerous trend in this country today: The curtailment of the media of news communication."

O. William Blaier Dies, Carpenters' Official

O. William Blaier, international vice president of the Carpenters and for 10 years director of the union's Washington office, died in his apartment here after suffering a heart attack. He was 64.

A member of the Carpenters for more than 40 years, he formerly was in charge of the union's operations in Philadelphia. Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Marie Blaier, and two daughters, Mrs. Eleanor Rosanio of Philadelphia and Mrs. William Strassheim of Meadowbrook, Pa.

Clothing Workers Offer Essay Prize

Philipsburg, Pa.—An essay contest designed to spread knowledge of the labor movement is being sponsored in three area high schools by Local 674 of the Clothing Workers here.

Called the Julia Maietta Essay Contest in tribute to the ACWA's central Pennsylvania representative, the venture was launched at a meeting in Philipsburg-Osceola High School addressed by Editor Elwood Keppley of the Pennsylvania AFL-CIO News, Harrisburg.

The local is offering one prize of $50 and two of $25 each to the seniors who submit the best papers. Schools involved are in Moshannon Valley, West Branch, and Philipsburg. Joseph G. Rayback of Pennsylvania State University heads the board of judges.

MORE THAN 250 SPOKESMEN of universities and colleges, labor unions and other groups joined in the first AFL-CIO-sponsored conference on Equal Opportunity for Higher Education, meeting in Washington early this month. Meeting heard Pres. John A. Hannah of Michigan State University, U.S. Commissioner of Education Sterling McMurrin, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and others. Conference was planned by Lawrence Rogin, director of federation's Dept. of Education.

Massive Action Urged to Assure Equal Access to Higher Schools

Trade unionists and educators agree that equal opportunity for higher education does not yet exist and that massive efforts are needed by the government, private citizens, labor and educators to improve the situation.

That was the conclusion to be drawn from the AFL-CIO-sponsored conference on Equal Opportunity in Higher Education held Jan. 4 and 5 in Washington.

Lawrence Rogin, director of the federation's Dept. of Education, summed up at the closing session:

"We are all in agreement that the goal of equal opportunity for higher education is a long way off. It is, therefore, up to each of us as trade unionists, educators, members of fraternal organizations and citizens of a great nation to use whatever influence we can bring to bear to correct a situation that we agree is deplorable."

About 250 educators and union leaders attended the conference—far in excess of the number originally anticipated.

Pres. John A. Hannah, of Michigan State University, chairman of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, noted that the date of the conference was chosen to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the Morrill Act that founded land-grant colleges designed to spread opportunity.

"But," Hannah said, "threats to the land-grant philosophy are posed by those who say that this country is too poor—or has too many other uses for its money—to continue to give generous support to worthy young men and women seeking an opportunity to acquire higher education."

He quoted a study conducted by the Chase National Bank:

"The record shows that the growth in gross national product resulting from education has been sufficient to cover much of the cost of our school system despite the rapid rise in enrollment and expenditures. Thus, year-to-year as well as over time, a large part of the expenditure on education is self-financed."

Hannah pointed out that educators have been contending this same thing for years without quotable facts to back them up.

"Perhaps," he said, "the economists will succeed now where we have failed in persuading business and industry that investment in education is a sound investment."

Louis T. Benezet, president of Colorado College, said that "what is commonly called the private liberal arts college needs a broader range of young Americans than it is getting."

"We are becoming distressingly homogenized," he said. "The liberal arts college needs more students from among people who now consider this kind of college not only financially impossible but personally and socially unsuited to them.

"Students educate each other more than professors educate them. . . . Colleges need bright youngsters from the city streets and the farms as well as from the suburbs."

Russell I. Thackrey, executive secretary-treasurer of the American Association of Land Grant Colleges, said he held it as "an article of educational faith, of faith in this country," that we ought to provide equality of opportunity. But he cited figures on an approaching "crisis" during the next 10 years. College enrollment in 1960 was 3.6 million and if the trend of past years continues it will be 6.9 million in 1970.

"To accommodate this increase," he said, "will require substantial additional expenditures."

Even if funds were available, Thackrey said, there are other factors that tend to keep otherwise qualified applicants out of college. His list included family income, occupation of parents, race, sex and admission policies that rely rigidly on test scores or class standing.

Other speakers and discussion groups further documented the problem and explored possible solutions.

"Higher education is needed if we are to make progress, if we are to be victorious in the great international struggle over which ideology will rule the world," said Pres. John M. Stalnaker, of the National Merit Scholarship Corp. He also took note of the increasing number of students seeking college educations.

"The amount of money for scholarships is probably not increasing as rapidly as college costs or enrollment," he added.

Sterling McMurrin, U.S. Commissioner of Education, discussing the government's responsibility in the college field, said flatly that it should provide "means and motivation" for each person to want the highest education of which he is capable and then make available facilities in which he can get it.

Earlier, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany had declared to the conference:

"The labor movement is unalterably committed to a massive assault on inequality of educational opportunity. We as a people need once and for all to establish it as a matter of public policy that an individual's ability must be the only ceiling on educational opportunity."

DEBBIE SUE BROWN, 1962 poster girl for the March of Dimes campaign, gets a smile and a donation from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to mark the annual drive among union members for aid to sufferers from polio, birth defects and arthritis. Meany is co-chairman of the drive's labor division along with union presidents G. E. Leighty, David J. McDonald, John J. Grogan, William Pollock, Howard Coughlin and Lee Minton.

ILO Body Slates 12-Week Course

Geneva—A 12-week course on The Labor Force and Its Employment will be given by the new Intl. Institute for Labor Studies, an arm of the Intl. Labor Organization, from Sept. 17 to Dec. 7.

About 30 participants with some experience in labor problems will be chosen from among ILO member states. Problems to be studied include wages, worker organizations, relations between workers and management, workers' participation in management, social security, welfare, rural labor problems, and labor problems of economic growth and development planning.

The course will be organized by Hilary A. Marquand, institute director. The general council of the British Trades Union Congress has announced it will finance a scholarship.

Schedule for '62:

Labor Calendar Of Conventions

Herewith is a list of conventions scheduled this year by AFL-CIO national and international union affiliates and by state central bodies. Changes and additions will be reported:

DATE	ORGANIZATION	PLACE
Jan. 11-13	Oklahoma	Tulsa, Okla.
Mar. (date not set)	American Radio Association	San Francisco, Calif.
Apr. 2-5	Louisiana	Baton Rouge, La.
Apr. 9-13	Canadian Labor Congress	Vancouver, Canada

Officials Refute Charges:

Perlis Challenges Magazine On Welfare 'Chiseling' Facts

New York—National Dir. Leo A. Perlis of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities has questioned the accuracy of a recent magazine article detailing charges that welfare rolls are dominated by chiselers and raising a question of "scandal."

Perlis laid down his challenge on the basis of replies to queries he had made of welfare officials in the same areas used by the magazine writer, Fletcher Knebel, to "substantiate" his allegations.

Perlis charged the article, which appeared in Look Magazine's Nov. 7 issue, was one of several that have appeared recently blowing up the importance of chiseling "out of all proportion."

Welfare Commissioner James R. Dumpson of New York City characterized the article as "a concoction of truths and half-truths, misinterpretations and an obvious attempt to confuse the readers about the nature of public welfare in the United States."

One of the magazine's charges was that "a crackdown on reliefers who spurned jobs removed 708 persons from Cook County (Ill.) relief rolls in the month of July."

Found Own Jobs

Dir. Raymond M. Hilliard of the County Dept. of Public Aid, in reply to an inquiry from Perlis, said the "inference that the removal of these persons represents 'a crackdown on reliefers who spurn jobs' does not square with the facts. . . . Our studies indicate that practically all the 708 persons who . . . were . . . removed from the general assistance rolls . . . had shown enough initiative to find their own jobs."

Knebel wrote that a New Jersey legislative committee which "launched an investigation" of the relief program "found one family with 23 children—15 of them illegitimate—drawing $969 a month in welfare aid." A woman with 14 illegitimate children "had received $61,525 during her 18 years on the Newark relief rolls," he added.

Commissioner John W. Tramburg of the New Jersey Dept. of Institutions & Agencies wrote Perlis that "there has been no ADC (aid to dependent children) case receiving a payment of $969 a month, although one newspaper account indicated that this might be the total of assistance received by several families related by blood or marriage." He charged the instances were "selected and not typical of the case load in New Jersey."

In Denver, the Look article said, "in one two-month period, 26 percent of relief checks were cashed in bars." Dir. Charline J. Birkins of the Denver Dept. of Welfare found nothing shocking in this. She explained:

"Most of the bars and cafes are located in areas where we have a concentration of recipients. These bars and cafes do not charge to cash checks and many recipients purchased meal tickets. Colorado law requires that all bars must serve food. Most of the bars and cafes where these checks were cashed serve cheap counter-type meals."

Chief Charles B. Rovin of the Branch of Welfare, Bureau of Indian Affairs, knocked down Knebel's assertion that "in North Dakota, one 16-member Indian family cost the government $11,648 in welfare payments in a single year."

School Costs Included

"The family in question received $4,167 in the form of assistance payments from the bureau in a particular year," he said. "The balance represented $6,765 for school costs on the basis of an approximate average school cost of $615 per year for each of 11 children, and $725 expended by the federal government for medical care.

"The federal government does provide for the education of Indian children on reservations, but this should not be considered a welfare payment any more than the cost of public education for non-Indian children is considered welfare."

The magazine article lumped social security in with welfare and declared that "a large number of people drew doubled social security benefits by fraudulently using two names and account numbers."

"We know of only two such cases in the history of the program," said Social Security Commissioner W. L. Mitchell. "One of these persons is in jail, the other died before prosecution was completed. Safeguards built into bureau procedures eliminate any possibility of the Look statement being correct."

Perlis pointed out that nearly 5 million people are jobless, that unemployment compensation "does not last forever," and that "many who do not want to die of starvation or disease or the elements want food and clothing and shelter and medical care."

"And so the people through their government and with their tax monies," he said, "have instituted a program of public assistance. The people do this for many reasons — some practical and selfish, others humanitarian and idealistic. There are those who say it is our social responsibility to help our fellow-men who have not won the race. Others keep on insisting—as they have for thousands of years—that we are our brother's keeper.

"The unemployed are not alone in seeking our aid and comfort. There are the migrant workers and those who work for little and must support large families. A sparkling ball in one of our better hotels during the social season will not help them much. Nor will a few pennies and dollars to the Christmas charity drive of our newspaper. After all, what they really need is hard money and not soft pity."

Auto Union Appeal Wins Jobless Pay

Detroit—Workers laid off at one plant because of shortages caused by a strike at another plant of the same company are entitled to jobless pay for the time they lost, the Michigan State Employment Security Appeals Board has ruled.

Applying a policy set by the Michigan Supreme Court in a 1959 case, the board voted to grant unemployment insurance payments to 52 members of the Auto Workers who were laid off here in 1958.

The 52 workers in GM's Cadillac division lost some eight days of work each when management put them on layoff, saying a parts shortage had been caused by a strike of another UAW local against GM's Fleetwood Body Division here. The non-striking UAW local presented claims for the laid-off workers on the ground they were not on strike and should not be penalized.

GM says it will appeal the ruling to the courts.

Also upheld were claims by Steelworkers locals at plants of the Great Lakes Steel Corp. and Copco Steel & Engineering Co. The claims involved the 1959 steel strikes in which a striker took a temporary job and was laid off from the temporary job. The board said such workers are entitled to jobless pay from credits accrued at the struck company.

The court decision which led to the latest board rulings grew out of a strike at a Ford plant in Canton, O. When the UAW struck there, Ford laid off more than 10,000 workers in its Michigan plants because of what management said were parts shortages. Those workers were entitled to jobless insurance payments, the court ruled.

Plumbers Hit Company Tactics, Ask New Vote

The Plumbers & Pipe Fitters have asked the National Labor Relations Board to set aside a representation election covering employes and recent employes in the Daniel Construction Co. in four southern states.

Balloting took place in two parts—at 26 job sites last November for workers currently employed on Daniel construction projects, and by mail for recent employes held by the NLRB to have a "continuing interest" in the company's working conditions.

The union charged improprieties both in the site voting, which resulted in a 520-to-174 vote against the union, and in the mail balloting where the 651 votes cast have not been tabulated pending action on the challenge to the election.

In petitions filed with the NLRB, which is currently investigating the conduct of the election, the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters charged that:

- Company foremen illegally voted and electioneered at the job-site balloting.
- Company officials threatened workers known to be sympathetic to the union and fired one union supporter shortly before the election.
- Pay raises were given at some locations to influence the election.
- The procedures set up for mail balloting and the manner in which the mail balloting was conducted resulted in "errors, confusion and mistakes which were so prejudicial to the union that the entire mail balloting must be considered null and void and to have disenfranchised substantial numbers of eligible voters."

The union also charged that management statements in campaign literature that the company would challenge the decision in the courts if the union won the election "interfered with the employes' freedom of choice by inferring the futility of voting for the union."

In directing the two-stage representation election, the NLRB had rejected the company claim that only current employes should be permitted to vote. The board said the "peculiarly intermittent" nature of the construction industry gave a "continuing interest" to persons who had worked for Daniel for at least 45 days during the past two years.

Italian Money, Brains Revive Old Firm

Underwood Workers Get Jobs, Pay Hikes

cidence. The name of Underwood was synonymous with typewriters more than a half-century ago when Camillo Olivetti, an electrical engineer who had toured the United States and taught at Leland Stanford University, returned to Italy to found that nation's first typewriter factory.

The men who run Olivetti—and now Underwood—are not sentimentalists, however. They don't sink millions of dollars into an enterprise because a company patriarch is reputed to have gazed in admiration at a red brick factory in Hartford. And they don't produce—certainly not for export—typewriters which they could manufacture markedly cheaper or more efficiently in Italy.

'Great Mistake'

Any American manufacturer who moves to Europe to take advantage of presumably lower wage rates "is making a great mistake," Pizzoni-Ardemani emphasized.

There are many and valid reasons, he said, for American firms to set up plants in Europe and for European firms to establish manufacturing operations in the United States—but wage rates are not among them, he declared.

Labor costs is the "last element" to be considered in going into another country. Any temporary advantage that might exist, he said, is "only transitory."

Mass production, Pizzoni-Ardemani emphasized, is the key to Olivetti's operations, and the company has found production costs in the United States and Italy "almost equal."

He pointed out that there is no United States tariff on typewriters, so that Olivetti's decision to expand and modernize the Hartford plant for large-scale standard and electric typewriter production was not based on any desire to produce in a protected U.S. market. It was reached on the basis of production efficiency.

He quoted the Olivetti formula expressed recently by Galassi in an interview with the IAM newspaper, The Machinist.

Business 'Axiom' Refuted

Galassi, after declaring firmly that "it is not true that higher wages in the United States are pricing American products out of the world market," said his company expected to "make a little on each typewriter and sell a lot."

"We won't price our typewriters to make a profit when we only operate at 50 percent of capacity," he said.

One of the first actions of the new top management was to negotiate a wage increase with IAM Dist. 26 to compensate for a period of no raises under the old management. As Pizzoni-Ardemani explained it:

It would have been "absolutely useless" for the company to embark on such a major enterprise "unless we knew we could count on the cooperation of labor." It would have been "folly" he said, to seek to improve production "in an atmosphere of antagonism."

Insistence on fair labor standards has proved sound business policy, he said, despite temporary problems such as the time when a number of Italian manufacturers attempted to boycott the company's products because the firm paid the same wages at a new factory in depressed, low-wage southern Italy that it paid to its workers in the North. This, a segment of the business community insisted, was setting a bad and dangerous precedent. Olivetti nevertheless maintained the policy.

Joe Cronin, who as manager of IAM Dist. 26 has negotiated with both the old and new management of Underwood, pointed out that Olivetti management at Hartford "has increased employment approximately 30 percent at a time when most companies were laying off." He added:

"If it hadn't been for the purchase of the old Underwood firm by the new management, many of our union members would now be on the breadlines and Hartford would have become a depressed area."

Mrs. Ellickson Heads Staff of Women's Unit

Mrs. Katherine P. Ellickson, for six years assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, has been named executive secretary of the new President's Commission on the Status of Women.

Announcement of Mrs. Ellickson's appointment was made by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg. Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt is chairman of the commission, with Prof. Richard A. Lester of Princeton University as vice chairman. The executive vice chairman is Assistant Sec. of Labor Esther Peterson.

Mrs. Roosevelt told a press conference held jointly with Goldberg that the function of the commission would be to deal broadly with differences in the legal treatment of women in the field of political, civil and property rights; with state laws protecting women workers; with the effects of federal social security and tax laws on earnings of women; with employment practices of the federal government and federal contractors.

Mrs. Ellickson has had long experience in labor and government groups in social security and research fields. She was secretary of the Social Security Committee of the former CIO, served on advisory committees to the government on public assistance and employment security, and worked for the Social Security Board, the National Labor Relations Board and the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

KATHERINE ELLICKSON Named to President's Commission

A graduate of Vassar College, Mrs. Ellickson also studied economics at Columbia University. She is a member of the Newspaper Guild and was long a member of the Teachers.

She is married to John Chester Ellickson, an economist at the Dept. of Agriculture. They have a daughter, Margaret, at Brown University and a son, Robert, at Oberlin College.

UPP Board Names Pair To Top Posts

Albany, N. Y.—The Papermakers & Paperworkers' executive board has named Al E. Brown as union secretary-treasurer and Robert Bargeron as general vice president, and chose Miami Beach for the next UPP convention beginning Sept. 9, 1963.

Brown succeeds Joseph Addy of Troy, union members for more than 50 years and secretary-treasurer for 23 years. Board members gave Addy a watch at a testimonial dinner here marking his retirement.

Brown formerly was regional director for the union in Portland, Ore., and last August was named UPP general vice president. As director he helped establish a West Coast uniform agreement covering 30,000 workers in 29 plants, and was active in safety activities.

Bargeron headed the UPP health and welfare department and is an expert on union pension and insurance programs, UPP Pres. Paul L. Phillips said.

Libyan Court Frees Jailed Union Chief

Tripoli, Libya—A court of appeals has reversed the conviction of Gen. Sec. Salem Shita of the Libyan General Federation of Trade Unions and ordered his immediate release.

Shita and several other union leaders were arrested in September on charges growing out of a series of strikes by LGFTU affiliates to enforce wage increases approved by a bipartisan commission. The others were provisionally released two weeks later, but Shita was held in jail until he was tried in November and sentenced to 4.5 months in jail.

The Intl. Confederation of Free Unions protested to the King and the government at the time of the arrests and filed charges of violation of union rights with the Intl. Labor Organization. An ICFTU mission was denied entry into Libya, as were union delegations from Tunisia, Morocco and Algeria. The ICFTU engaged a British lawyer, Elwyn Jones, Q.C., to defend Shita, but he was permitted to attend the trial only as an observer.

CLC Urges Stronger Protection for Jobless

Ottawa, Ont.—A 10-point program for strengthening this country's unemployment insurance program as part of a comprehensive social security system was proposed to a Committee of Inquiry in a 23,000-word presentation by the Canadian Labor Congress.

"You have the right if not the obligation," the CLC said, "to recommend the necessary steps be taken whereby social security in Canada will become more comprehensive and otherwise more satisfactory as a means of protecting the people of this country against the hazards of illness, old age, unemployment and other contingencies which arise in an industrial society like our own and which require collective action if effective solutions are to be found."

The Committee of Inquiry was named by Prime Minister Diefenbaker and will report to him.

The CLC brief strongly opposed taxes based on employer experience ratings, under which the rate falls for employers with fewer benefit claims. The record in the U.S., it said, showed that this system did not stabilize employment as claimed, but rather caused employers to resist the payment of benefits because each additional claim was likely to result in an increased rate.

With experience rating, the CLC asserted, it has not been possible in the U.S. to build up funds in good times to meet the needs of bad times.

The CLC proposed:

- Revision of the present system of financing claims by paying seasonal benefits out of consolidated revenue and lifting the payment by the government to equal contributions by employers and employes.
- Increasing benefits to not less than two-thirds of previous earnings.
- Liberalization of eligibility for benefits.
- Maintenance of the present risk pool and avoidance of experience rating.
- Extension of coverage, especially to non-profit hospitals, charitable institutions and municipal governments.
- Avoidance of special regulations for married women and pensioners, but more effective inspection and other administrative procedures.
- Strengthening the role of the Unemployment Insurance Advisory Committee and the National Employment Committee.
- Strengthening the National Employment Service.
- Improving administration of the act.
- Recognition of unemployment insurance as only one phase of social security and of Canada's need for a complete, comprehensive and adequate social security system.

"Unemployment insurance cannot be dealt with in isolation," the CLC observed. "Unless there is an aggressive, imaginative and well-planned employment policy, unemployment insurance benefits, however desirable, will not stop the corrosion of human beings if they see no hope of re-employment ahead of them."

The CLC also suggested the committee consider extension of benefits for workers with more than one dependent, and added benefits to the long-term unemployed.

IBEW Gift Radios Aid Youth Guidance Center

Los Angeles—On behalf of the 11,000 members of Local 11, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Pres. Charles Walker and Business Mgr. Webb Green presented eight radios to the Federal Pre-Release Guidance Center, a national pilot product here for the rehabilitation of youthful offenders.

Local 11 has a youth service program begun several years ago by former Business Mgr. George O'Brien, now U.S. marshal here, to help boys who get into trouble for minor offenses. O'Brien said the pre-release center was initiated by U.S. Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy.

Backed By Senate Conservatives:

Hickenlooper Wins GOP Policy Contest

Senate Republicans kept their party's image firmly to the right of center by electing Iowa's conservative Sen. Bourke Hickenlooper to succeed the late Sen. Styles Bridges (N. H.) as chairman of the influential Senate GOP Policy Committee.

Hickenlooper defeated Sen. Leverett Saltonstall (Mass.), 21-14, in a secret ballot vote taken a few hours before the opening of the second session of Congress. Although Saltonstall's voting record has been only slightly less conservative than Hickenlooper's, he had the backing of the party's liberal wing.

Earlier, House Democrats followed precedent and unanimously chose their long-time majority leader, Rep. John W. McCormack (Mass.), to succeed the late Speaker Sam Rayburn. Every speaker in the last 50 years was first majority or minority leader of his party in the House. McCormack, who now becomes second in line of succession to the presidency—after Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson—was elected majority leader in 1940, when Rayburn became speaker. He has served in the House since 1929.

Rep. Carl B. Albert, (Okla.), assistant leader under McCormack, was elected to the leadership. The way had been cleared for his unanimous election when Rep. Richard Bolling (Mo.), who had been backed by many House liberals, conceded he did not have the votes to win and withdrew from the race. McCormack and Albert named Rep. Hale Boggs (La.) to the appointive post of party whip or assistant leader.

McCormack was formally elected speaker over Republican Leader Charles A. Halleck (Ind.) in a straight party-line vote.

The Republican choice of Hickenlooper over Saltonstall assured continued conservative domination of the Policy Committee, which functions as a research and information body for GOP senators, issues staff studies on various issues, and has played an important part in setting the GOP "party line." Under Bridges, it reflected a right-wing viewpoint which on occasion has drawn protests from GOP moderates.

Voted with Conservatives

Saltonstall, who voted with the conservatives to elect Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.) as GOP leader in 1959 over liberal-backed Sen. John Sherman Cooper (Ky.), had originally been expected to have clear sailing for the Policy Committee chairmanship. He has been chairman of the Senate's Republican caucus.

Despite Saltonstall's conservative domestic record, his views on foreign policy were rated "too internationalist for an election year" by a number of influential midwestern Republicans.

Another factor may have been Saltonstall's personally cordial and cooperative relationship with Kennedy when both served in the Senate from the same state. This, some Republicans apparently believed, might dull the GOP's political knife in an election year.

As the House went through the formality of organization and the Senate reassembled for a ceremonial 19-minute session before adjourning in a memorial tribute to Bridges, battle lines were shaping up over the Administration's legislative program, including trade liberalization and health care for the aged under social security.

A key man in both bills is Rep. Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.), chairman of the House Ways & Means Committee. While Mills is regarded as not unfriendly to Administration attempts to expand world trade, he refused to support the social security health care approach in 1959 and, despite intensive White House wooing, has given no public encouragement to hopes for bringing a medical care bill out of committee.

McCormack, Albert, and Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) predicted congressional support for the major part of the Administration's program despite tough, close battles over controversial issues. They saw approval of a medical care bill if—and they conceded it was a big "if"—it was reported out by the House Ways & Means Committee.

On the GOP side, Dirksen, Halleck and Rep. William E. Miller (N. Y.), Republican national chairman, served notice that the majority of Republicans in Congress will join conservative Democrats in opposing the social security health bill.

Miller said there will be no party position as such on the President's proposals for liberalizing trade and tariffs. Party lines are divided on this issue.

The first major Kennedy program slated for consideration in the session, Democratic leaders said, is tax revision.

Slated for immediate Senate debate is the so-called "Du Pont bill," a measure aimed at providing tax relief to individual Du Pont Co. stockholders receiving General Motors stock as the result of a Supreme Court ruling last year that Du Pont must divest itself of its 63 million shares of GM stock within 10 years.

The bill has been passed by the House and an attempt was made to speed it through the Senate shortly before first-session adjournment. A threatened filibuster by Sen. Albert Gore (D-Tenn.), Sen. Paul Douglas (D-Ill.) and others forced it to be set aside.

Gore's office told the AFL-CIO News that the senator was "still opposed" to the bill and planned to fight it.

Jobs, Health Care, World Trade Stressed in Kennedy Message

employment insurance system, with high federal standards, and added two new proposals:

- Presidential authority on a stand-by basis to slash income tax rates and boost purchasing power for limited periods, subject to a congressional veto.
- Presidential authority to step up federal public works expenditures and federal grants for local public works, subject to a "triggering" point of a "given rise in unemployment."

Congress Divided

He laid down his comprehensive program of domestic and foreign policy to a Congress narrowly divided along lines of social philosophy, in which the conservative House coalition of Republicans and southern Democrats may often assert control.

He offered the program to a Congress from which the towering figure of the late Speaker Sam Rayburn was missing, and in which the impulses of an election year may provoke prolonged controversy and very close rollcall votes on key sections of the Administration program.

In the domestic field, the President again threw his weight behind a program of health care for the aged through the social security system.

He told Congress that he would ask a new "massive attack" on adult illiteracy, through a broad-scale program to improve educational quality and to provide federal loans for college facilities and federally financed student scholarships.

On federal aid to public schools, the President told Congress that "we cannot afford to wait another year" and that he saw "no reason to weaken or withdraw" the Senate-passed bill for grants for school construction and teachers' salaries that was blocked in 1961 in the House Rules Committee.

Balanced Budget Seen

Citing the relatively stable price levels of the first year of his Administration, Kennedy promised a balanced budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1963, but warned that revenues would have to be increased by tax reforms to end "unwarranted preferences" to corporation stockholders and to compel withholding taxes on dividends and interest comparable to the withholdings now imposed on salary and wage income.

In addition, he asked for a new public welfare program, designed to rehabilitate those on public assistance, and a pay reform program to give federal employes income scales "more comparable to those of private industry."

He renewed requests for a Cabinet-level Dept. of Urban Affairs and Housing; said strong executive action in the civil rights field should be supported by legislation to end "iniquitous local devices" such as literacy tests or poll taxes that deny the right to vote; promised a new farm program; and pledged new bills in the food and drug field "to protect consumers from the careless and the unscrupulous."

Firing the opening gun in what promises to be one of the fiercest legislative battles of the session, the President said that expiration of the three-decades-old reciprocal trade program this year gave an opportunity for a "bold new instrument of American trade policy" to forge a trading partnership across the Atlantic "with vast resources for freedom."

The European Common Market, he warned, will become a powerful trading area "behind a single external tariff similar to ours with an economy which nearly equals our own."

If we move decisively to slash tariffs mutually with the Common Market, while offering "tested forms of assistance" to American business firms and workers forced to bear the immediate burden of increased imports, the President said, we will "enlarge the prosperity of free men everywhere."

The alternative, he declared, is to see ourselves economically "cut off from our major allies," and he gave a picture of what he considered the inevitable results:

"Industries will move their plants and jobs and capital inside the walls of the Common Market. Our farm surpluses will pile up. Our balance of payments position will worsen. And millions of American workers—whose jobs depend on exports or imports or an expanding economy—will see their interests sacrificed."

Reviewing events of the past year in global affairs and the perils that remain, Kennedy declared that the basic goal of the United States remains "a peaceful world community of free and independent states—free to choose their own future and their own system, so long as it does not threaten the freedom of others."

He cited difficulties in the Congo, in Southeast Asia and in Berlin, but said the united strength of the Atlantic Community "has flourished under severe tests."

Berlin Threat Remains

The threat to Berlin remains and no one can predict the course of future negotiations, Kennedy declared. But "we are sparing no honorable effort to find a peaceful and mutually acceptable solution," and we are "prepared to talk, when appropriate, and to fight, if necessary," for the freedom of "that brave city."

Asking $3 billion in new long-term funds for the Alliance for Progress with Latin America, the President termed it a program that will speed the economic, educational and social progress of the Latin republics and "a prospect of great promise."

Our economic aid to other nations, he said, is feeding the hungry and assisting underdeveloped new countries to reach their own standards of economic progress.

"These programs help people; and by helping people, they help feedom," he told Congress.

Events around the earth, he declared, "teach us never to write off nations as lost to the Communist camp." For as the new and weaker states assert their independence, this declaration of freedom in itself "is a bar to the Communists' 'grand design'—it is the basis for our own."

to the armed forces; that because of the recession more elderly persons tend to leave the work force; that women who ordinarily work are not seeking jobs because of job scarcity; and that there might be a greater degree of unemployment in agriculture than the figures indicate, with farm workers staying on the farm instead of applying for jobless benefits or seeking work in the city.

The monthly job report showed that the number of persons unemployed 15 weeks or longer was up seasonally to 1.2 million, 100,000 above November, with 660,000 persons jobless for 27 weeks or more.

Total employment dropped by 900,000 over the month to 66.5 million, with nearly all the decline in agriculture.

Non-farm employment remained unchanged from November, although a small increase usually occurs in December.

The report showed also that 2.3 million non-farm workers were employed part-time in December, a drop of 150,000 from the preceding month.

For the unemployment rate to have dropped in December it would have been necessary for joblessness to have remained unchanged or to have decreased. The seasonal rise of 100,000—the normal pattern—kept the rate from increasing further.

For most of 1961, the unemployment rate hovered around the 7 percent mark, dropping to 6.1 percent in November.

Queried on the outlook for the next few months, Goldberg was optimistic, declaring that all of the indications are that "we will have an improvement in our employment and consequently in our unemployment situation."

Kennedy Order Guarantees U.S. Workers' Union Rights

Committee Agrees On Automation

By John M. Barry

A broad program to cushion the unemployment caused by automation won the general agreement of the President's Committee on Labor-Management Policy in its first report, but AFL-CIO leaders in the group said the recommendations fell short in failing to stress the urgency of a shorter workweek if other measures fail.

The 21 public, labor and management members of the committee, established by Pres. Kennedy last February, were unanimous on these fundamental points:

- "Automation and technological progress are essential to the general welfare, the economic strength and the defense of the nation."
- "This progress can and must be achieved without the sacrifice of human values."
- "Achievement of technological progress without sacrifice of human values requires a combination of private and governmental action, consonant with the principles of a free society."

The committee urged "serious consideration" of its 11 recommendations, which cited, among other things, the need for a faster rate of economic growth, improved education and retraining programs for workers, and adequate unemployment compensation under federal minimum standards.

The single point which drew exceptions from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and the five AFL-

HISTORIC EXECUTIVE ORDERS establishing a system of official recognition of unions representing federal employes and new procedures for disposing of employe appeals are signed by Pres. Kennedy. At the President's left is Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg, who headed the task force which recommended the action. Leaders of AFL-CIO federal employe unions present included Pres. William C. Doherty of the Letter Carriers, second from left; Pres. James A. Campbell of the Government Employes, far right, and Pres. E. C. Hallbeck of the Post Office Clerks, behind Goldberg and partially obscured.

New Policy Establishes Legal Base

Pres. Kennedy has issued an executive order creating a new national policy that guarantees federal employes the right to join unions and bargain collectively with the government. The President expressed confidence that the action "will result in improved relations between management and employes in the federal service."

Andrew J. Biemiller, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation, described the order as "a major breakthrough in assuring and implementing the rights of self-organization, recognition and collective negotiation for federal employes."

Another order, issued simultaneously, sets up new procedures for the disposition of employe appeals within a federal department or agency.

Both orders are based on the recommendations of a presidential task force headed by Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg, who hailed them as "a landmark" in relationships between the government and its employes.

Famous Anniversary

In signing the orders at a White House ceremony, Kennedy noted that they followed by one day the 79th anniversary of the Civil Service Act.

"These orders," said the President, "define and provide a legal base for the rights of federal employes and employe organizations to participate in improving personnel policies and working conditions not specifically fixed by Congress."

He added that "the public interest remains the dominant consid-

'Heavily Influenced' by Crisis:

$92.5 Billion Federal Budget Sent Congress by Kennedy

A $92.5 billion budget, "heavily influenced" by the continuing world crisis, has been sent to Congress by Pres. Kennedy with the expectation that the "brisk recovery" from last year's recession "will continue" and produce a "modest surplus" of $500 million.

The President recommended an increase of $3.4 billion in expenditures for the 12 months starting July 1, 1962, stressing that "more than three-quarters of the increase is accounted for by national security and space activities and the bulk of the remainder by fixed interest charges."

In contrast to a $2.7 billion increase for security and international affairs and a $400 million increase in interest on the national debt, the President requested only $1 million more for domestic civil functions. He explained in his budget message that within the $25.4 billion recommended for these functions—including veterans' benefits—"there are important shifts in direction and emphasis."

The President expects expenditures for agricultural programs, the postal deficit and temporary unemployment compensation to drop and to allow increases in education, health, housing and natural resource development.

He estimates that continued recovery from the recession will produce an increase in the gross national product from $521 billion in calendar year 1961 to $570 billion at the end of 1962, resulting in a $10.5 billion increase in corporate profits and nearly $11 billion in tax revenues from all sources.

A 2 percent per quarter growth rate during the fiscal year will bring the unemployment rate to 4 percent by June 30, 1963, the President said. The present rate is 6.1 percent. He noted also "we do not expect another economic recession during the period covered by this budget."

Evaluating the economic situation, the message declared that "the economy is moving strongly forward with employment and incomes rising."

"The prospects are favorable for further rises . . ." Kennedy said.

"To plan a deficit under such circumstances would increase the risk of inflationary pressures, damaging alike to our domestic economy and to our international balance of payments. On the other hand we are still far short of full capacity use of plant and manpower. To plan a larger surplus would risk choking off economic recovery and contributing to a premature downturn."

Using the yardstick of the cost of past wars, the present national defense posture and steps to prevent future conflicts, the expenditures for these purposes amount to nearly 80 percent of the budget.

New Farm Program Due

New defense expenditures include additional Minuteman missiles and Polaris submarines, a $700 million fall-out shelter program to provide space for 50 million persons and strengthening of conventional armed forces.

Proposals for foreign assistance include a special long-term authorization for $3 billion of aid to the Alliance for Progress in Latin America within the next four years.

The President told Congress he will send a special message containing a new farm program that

IBEW Wins Cut in Hours, 56c Increase

New York—The Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Local 3, cracked a solid wall of employer opposition by winning a two-year contract calling for a shorter workweek and wage increases of 56 cents an hour for 3,000 construction workers.

A five-day strike of the local's 9,000 members in the construction division led to an agreement with the Greater City Electrical Contractors Association providing a five-hour day, plus an hour of overtime and an offer by Local 3 to extend the same terms to other employers of Local 3 members, on strike since Jan. 11.

Road Builders Ordered To End Intimidation

By Eugene A. Kelly

The National Labor Relations Board has found Florida's biggest roadbuilding firm—Cone Brothers Contracting Co.—guilty of acts constituting "naked intimidation" and "conduct of the most flagrant type" against employes who went on strike in 1960.

A three-member panel voted unanimously to affirm the findings of Trial Examiner George A. Downing that Cone supervisors had committed unfair labor practices by arming non-strikers with guns, threatening to run down strikers with cars or shoot them "like a covey of birds" and other unlawful acts including a threat to blacklist workers who refused to cross an Operating Engineers picket line in Tampa, Fla.

The decision was signed by NLRB Members Philip Ray Rodgers, John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown. The upholding of union charges was noteworthy for the participation of Rodgers, who frequently votes on the dissenting side in cases involving majority decisions.

Third Order Since '55

The board order—third of the kind since 1955—directs Cone Brothers to cease and desist from these acts:

NLRB Tells 'Runaway' To Bargain

New York—It was an unfair labor practice for Pres. Robert Wasserman of the Royal Optical Mfg. Co., Inc., to move his eyeglass frame plant from a loft building on W. 22d St. to Passaic, N. J., without notice to the union representing his employes, the National Labor Relations Board has concluded.

The move was made on the weekend of Dec. 3, 1960, two weeks after an unaffiliated local union had been certified by the State Labor Relations Board as bargaining agent for company workers.

Despite the election, Wasserman stalled off union efforts to negotiate a contract and moved the plant without giving the local a chance to represent the employes, NLRB Examiner Lee Best found. The board upheld his recommendation that the runaway firm be directed to take these steps:

- Stop interfering with the union or refusing to bargain collectively.
- Upon request, start bargaining with the local and, if an understanding is reached, put it in writing.
- Upon application, offer immediate and full reinstatement to four former employes, dismissing if necessary any persons hired to replace them; make them whole for any pay loss, and bargain in good faith on any wages lost since the plant was moved.

The board agreed with the trial examiner that the move was made not solely to avoid bargaining but also for "valid economic reasons." Four of the five employes who quit when the company refused to pay their travel expenses were unfair labor practice strikers and are entitled to reinstatement on application, the board decided.

Washington AFL-CIO Elects Joseph Davis

Seattle—Joseph Davis of Olympia, a member of the Office Workers and a graduate of the University of Washington, has been elected president of the Washington State AFL-CIO in a month-long referendum vote.

Davis received 23,953 of the 44,604 votes cast, defeating three rivals. He succeeds Evan Weston, who for 15 years was president of the former State AFL and of the merged AFL-CIO and who was not a candidate for re-election.

NLRB Eases Policy Barring Situs Pickets

Common situs picketing is legal under certain conditions, the National Labor Relations Board has decided in revising the Washington Coca-Cola rule which the board had followed for eight years.

By a 3-2 vote the NLRB dismissed a secondary boycott charge involving Local 861 of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and Plauche Electric, Inc., of Lake Charles, La.

The company's top official, Vance Plauche, former IBEW member, and the local failed to agree on a new contract when an agreement expired in 1960. The local placed pickets at the site of a contract job when Plauche placed non-union men on a wiring job at U.S. Tire Engineers, Inc. The NLRB general counsel issued a complaint and Trial Examiner John C. Fischer held that an unfair labor practice had been committed by the union because it did not picket Plauche at his office but went to a jobsite.

The board majority reversed the trial examiner, citing U.S. Appeals Court rulings in similar cases. The picketing resulted in no work interruptions and the picket signs stated "no dispute with any other contractor."

In discarding the "rigid rule" that situs picketing always is unlawful, Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and members Gerald A. Brown and John H. Fanning said they would examine each future case on its facts and its merits.

The majority said it was applying the Moore Drydock ruling which held that, in a mixed situs situation, picketing of the premises of a secondary employer is primary if "at the time of the picketing the primary employer is engaged in its normal business" at the site picketed.

Members Boyd Leedom and Philip Ray Rodgers dissented. They charged that the majority was not revising Washington Coca-Cola but reversing it entirely and in effect "licensing unions to enmesh neutral employers."

Get-Out-Vote Program:

14 Area Conferences Scheduled by COPE

The AFL-CIO's Committee on Political Education will sponsor 14 area conferences this spring to launch labor's election-year program to get out the vote, educate workers and their families on legislative issues, and raise funds to help elect liberal candidates for national and state office.

COPE Dir. James L. McDevitt extended a "special invitation" to women to attend the conferences and expressed the hope that male delegates will bring their wives, "who will be most welcome to attend all sessions." Their "many hours of service" in registration drives and political campaigns, he said, are both "appreciated and necessary."

The series of conferences will include workshops on COPE central body operations, including registration and get-out-the-vote campaigns, and sessions on COPE dollar drives, formation and functions of local union political education committees, and legislation. Delegates will represent both unions and central bodies.

McDevitt announced the following schedule:

Mar. 11-12, at Miami, for delegates from Florida and Georgia.

Mar. 15-16, at New Orleans, for Arkansas, Louisiana and Mississippi.

Mar. 21-22, at Dallas, for New Mexico and Texas.

Mar. 28-29, at New York City, for Connecticut, New Jersey and New York.

Mar. 31-Apr. 1, at Providence, for Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Vermont.

Apr. 3-4, at Detroit, for Indiana, Michigan and Ohio.

Apr. 7-8, at Chicago, for Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Apr. 10-11, at Louisville, for Alabama, Kentucky, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee and West Virginia.

May 28-29, at Kansas City, Mo., for Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma.

June 1-2, at Omaha, for Nebraska, North Dakota and South Dakota.

June 5-6, at Cheyenne, for Colorado, Montana, Utah and Wyoming.

June 9-10, at Spokane, for Alaska, Idaho, Oregon and Washington.

June 13-14, at Los Angeles, for Arizona, California, Hawaii and Nevada.

Each conference will be headed by McDevitt. He will be assisted by members of the COPE headquarters staff and the women's activities director of the region.

AFL-CIO Donates $1,000 to Peruvians

In response to a plea for help from the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT), the AFL-CIO has sent a contribution of $1,000 for the relief of victims of the recent avalanche in Peru.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany expressed the sorrow of U.S. workers at the tragedy, which cost thousands of lives and wiped out whole villages, in a cablegram to Sec. Gen. Arturo Sabroso Montoya of the Confederation of Labor of Peru.

tinued, building contractors began to put into effect what the unions called a lockout of other construction workers, with a statement that it would be "unsafe" to continue working with temporary power lines maintained by Local 3 members.

Hundreds of union members worked at building projects to provide power to hoists, lights and other essential services despite the strike. At headquarters, a 110-man committee headed by John J. Fenley, Local 3 executive board member, was on call for emergency services. Service was also maintained for street lights and traffic signals.

The enforced shutdown brought a charge, filed with the National Labor Relations Board by the Building & Construction Trades Council, that the employers' decision to stop work constituted "coercion, intimidation, and interference" with orderly collective bargaining.

Council Pres. Peter J. Brennan said the shutdown was "unfair and illegal" and would result, if it continued, in suits for damages or refusals by affected unions to return to work without a negotiated settlement.

Negotiate 3 Months

A 10-man Local 3 negotiating committee headed by George Frick reached agreement with the Greater City contractors' group to cap three months of bargaining. The terms, approved in a midnight meeting of the union's wage and policy committee, include these major improvements:

- A five-hour day, plus one hour of overtime at the time and a half rate—a reduction of one hour a day working time.
- Straight time pay rates of $4.96 an hour, up from $4.40.

The agreement becomes effective next July 1 and will expire June 30, 1964. It includes a provision that Local 3 will add about 1,000 apprentices to the number already scheduled over the two-year term.

The Greater City Electrical Contractors Association represents about 125 of the city's 600 electrical contractors and employs about a third of the local's construction division members.

In negotiations that started Oct. 6, Business Manager Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., Pres. Jeremiah P. Sullivan and other union officers stressed the need for a shorter working day and workweek as a hedge against unemployment resulting from the employers' use of new machines and labor-saving techniques.

Meany Completes New Civil Rights Committee

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has announced the membership of the federation's Standing Committee on Civil Rights under the chairmanship of Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler.

Meany's appointment of Schnitzler to head the committee and his proposal to revamp the membership were approved by the federation's Executive Council at its post-convention meeting in December.

The convention, a few days earlier, had adopted a broad civil rights resolution which strengthened the machinery for enforcement of the AFL-CIO's anti-discrimination policy.

The resolution gave the standing committee the authority to initiate complaints on its own motion whenever it finds prima facie evidence that discrimination is being practiced. It also stressed the desirability of obtaining voluntary compliance with AFL-CIO policy from the affiliates involved, with unresolved complaints to be referred to the Executive Council for action.

Members of the committee, in addition to Schnitzler, are: Pres. Ralph Bellamy of Actors' Equity, Pres. Eugene E. Frazier of the Transport Service Employes, Pres. George M. Harrison of the Railway Clerks, Pres. Albert J. Hayes of the Machinists, Pres. Ralph Helstein of the Packinghouse Workers, Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers, Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey of the Auto Workers.

Also, Pres. Lee W. Minton of the Glass Bottle Blowers, Pres. John J. Murphy of the Bricklayers, Vice Pres. Louis Simon of the Clothing Workers, Pres. James A. Suffridge of the Retail Clerks, Pres. David Sullivan of the Building Service Employes, Pres. Richard F. Walsh of the Theatrical Stage Employes, Vice Pres. Milton P. Webster of the Sleeping Car Porters and Vice Pres. Charles S. Zimmerman of the Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers.

Shelter Program Seen As Federal Obligation

New York—The AFL-CIO position on fall-out shelters is to back a "strong federal civil defense program," Dir. Leo Perlis of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities has advised CSA representatives throughout the country.

It is the responsibility of the federal government, he said, to "plan and prepare in peacetime to save life and property in case of war," with the preparations including "plans for fall-out shelters based upon the best available scientific advice."

The federal government also should "sponsor the construction of community, farm, school, plant and hospital fall-out shelters stocked with food, water and drugs, wherever and whenever the federal government thinks they are necessary," Perlis said.

He recalled the civil defense resolution passed by the recent AFL-CIO convention and said critics of shelter programs should realize that "fall-out shelters no more cause war than life insurance causes death." There is no need for hysteria, he maintained, but added that there must be preparation.

Home shelters, Perlis maintained, should not be an individual responsibility.

PRR and NYC Hit:

Rail Unions Attack Proposed Merger

Railroad unions have denounced a proposed merger of the Pennsylvania Railroad and the New York Central as "catastrophic," and have urged Congress and the Interstate Commerce Commission to block the consolidation of the nation's two biggest railroad systems.

Both the Railway Labor Executives' Association—the federation of rail brotherhoods which speaks for the bulk of the nation's railroad workers—and the Transport Workers, which represents groups of workers on the Pennsylvania, served notice they will fight the move.

The RLEA described the merger plan agreed to by directors of the two railroads as "the most catastrophic proposal in its potential effect upon the future welfare of the nation and the railroad industry itself which has ever been placed before the public."

The brotherhood chiefs said such a merger would leave the East with only one major railroad system, creating a "vast railroad monopoly" which would make it impossible for smaller lines to stay in business.

Noting that New York Central Pres. Alfred E. Perlman had declared last June in a speech in Washington, D. C., that he didn't think it was in the "public interest" for the two largest railroads to become one system, the RLEA said he "clearly was right" in his earlier appraisal.

The Transport Workers threatened to strike, if necessary, to block any merger "which fails to provide ironclad protection of the job security and retirement rights of each and every employe on the seniority rosters of both railroads."

The TWU called a merger proposal, which would involve an exchange of stock of the two lines, "a fraud to fool the people into believing that they will receive better service from a combination of railroads which separately practice a 'public-be-damned' policy."

Stockholders' meetings—May 8 for the Pennsylvania, and May 23 for the New York Central—must approve the merger agreement. If approval is voted, it will then be up to the ICC to authorize, reject or set conditions for the merger.

Rail unions have warned that the nation's transportation system is facing a grave crisis as a result of the increasing trend toward merger. Fourteen major unification proposals are now awaiting ICC approval and four mergers have been approved in recent years.

Rail brotherhoods have asked Congress to enact legislation holding up further mergers until a thorough study of the nation's transportation needs can be worked out.

The effect of pending merger proposals, the RLEA has warned, would be to starve out smaller "feeder" lines, further curtailing railroad service and reducing the already-depressed employment.

Legislative Meet to Hear Johnson

Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson has been announced as chief speaker at the AFL-CIO Economic & Legislative Conference scheduled to open Monday, Jan. 22, at the Shoreham Hotel in Washington.

Johnson's address to the opening session of the conference was to follow a keynote speech by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany. Some 500 delegates from national and international unions and state and city central bodies are expected to attend.

Following the opening session, the delegates will move into separate meetings dealing with major legislative areas. Four will be held Monday afternoon and four Tuesday morning. Six regional meetings are scheduled for Tuesday afternoon. Key members of Congress will address each session.

The delegates will spend Wednesday on Capitol Hill in discussion with their senators and representatives and will report back to the conference on these meetings Thursday morning.

Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg will speak at a luncheon Thursday concluding the conference.

toward pickets and threatening to shoot strikers.

- Arming supervisors, employes and guards for passage through the picket line set up by Operating Engineers Local 925.
- Directing employes to run over strikers.
- Characterizing as "quits" employes who refuse to carry, or to work with employes who carry, weapons.
- Threatening to handle strikers "like shooting at a covey of birds."

Other actions also were prohibited — threatening to blackmail or blacklist all over Florida supporters of the union; questioning employes about union meetings and activities; informing employes that strikers might as well "leave the picket line and the state."

The board order in addition directed the big roadbuilding firm to stop threatening that it will "starve out" the strikers, threatening to discharge and arrest employes because of their union activities, threatening to go out of business rather than "go union" and promising benefits to employes for "going along" with the company.

A similar order was directed against a Cone Brothers subsidiary, Tampa Sand & Material Co., which was told to reinstate three drivers fired on May 26, 1960, and to reinstate all members of Local 79 of the unaffiliated Teamsters who went on strike the following day in protest against the firings.

Posting of Notices Required

The decision dismissed a complaint against another Cone subsidiary, Florida Prestressed Concrete Co., Inc., but the company was directed to post notices of the findings against the other two companies.

The three companies are "family" corporations, the examiner reported. They were organized during the lifetime of J. L. Cone, Sr., and at his death in 1957 control descended to three sons who own all the stock in Cone Brothers and the controlling interest—more than 51 percent—in Tampa Sand and in Prestressed.

Cone Brothers is engaged chiefly in road, bridge and sewer constructing in Florida. Tampa Sand deals in sand, shell and crushed stone, and manufactures and sells concrete blocks and ready-mixed concrete. Prestressed manufactures and sells concrete products to Cone Brothers and other contractors.

The examiner said the three companies employ 1,250 persons in their closely affiliated businesses, and maintain one central office at 309 Caesar St., Tampa. He gave this summary of the union campaign:

Campaigns Outlined

The Operating Engineers began in February 1960 to organize Cone employes other than those in the maintenance shop, for whom it had been negotiating with Cone Brothers for several months as collective bargaining representative. Later the campaign was extended to Prestressed.

Later that month the Teamsters began an organizing campaign at Tampa Sand. The Engineers struck Cone Brothers and Prestressed on May 24, and the Teamsters struck Tampa Sand on May 27. Charges were filed against the three companies individually and jointly because of conduct by 31 company supervisors.

The latest NLRB decision involving Cone Brothers is the third in recent years. In 1955 the board found it guilty of refusing to bargain with the Stone Workers for a group of employes. In 1959 the NLRB ordered the reinstatement of a worker fired during an earlier Operating Engineers' organizing campaign.

The Cone firm was barred in 1960 from bidding on Florida state road contracts when a legislative investigating committee uncovered a scandal involving cash payoffs to state road inspectors. After the ban was lifted, the Operating Engineers asked the U. S. Bureau of Public Roads to bar any federal highway payments on contracts awarded the company.

CLC Group Studies Dispute on Loggers

Ottawa, Ont.—A special committee of vice presidents has been named by Pres. Claude Jodoin of the Canadian Labor Congress to investigate a dispute between two CLC affiliates, the Woodworkers and the Carpenters, over the right to bargain for 15,000 Newfoundland loggers.

The IWA has charged the Carpenters with raiding. Jodoin said evidence given the CLC executive council by the two unions was at direct variance in several instances.

The committee is composed of CLC Vice President Frank Hall, Railway Clerks, chairman; George Burt, Auto Workers; William Jenoves, Bricklayers, and William Mahoney, Steelworkers.

"The committee has wide terms of reference," Jodoin said. "It has become obvious that only a detailed study can clarify the situation. It is quite possible that the committee will decide to visit Newfoundland to make an on-the-spot enquiry and to give the loggers themselves an opportunity to be heard.

"When the investigation has been completed a full report will be made to our executive council. We have asked the committee to let us have a report prior to our convention, which will be held in Vancouver in April."

Yale-Towne Mediation Set, Rally Delayed

Philadelphia—Labor plans for a mass rally at the gates of the strike-bound Yale & Towne Manufacturing Co. plant here have been postponed while a citizens' committee attempts to mediate the dispute at the request of Mayor Richardson Dilworth (D) and Gov. David Lawrence (D).

When the mayor and the governor stepped into the dispute, now in its 21st week, management agreed to stop hiring strikebreakers and both sides accepted the proposal to mediate the strike of 1,200 members of Machinists Lodge 1717.

The Philadelphia AFL-CIO first set January 15 as the date of an augmented picket line at the struck lockmaking plant, but agreed to a truce until January 29, when the mediators are due to report—Pres. Gaylord P. Harnwell, University of Pennsylvania; Alfred J. Nesbitt, manufacturer; and Robert E. Worden, industrial consultant.

The company started two weeks ago, the union said, to recruit strikebreakers. Since then there have been these developments:

- Rep. William J. Green, Jr. (D-Pa.), asked Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg to intervene.
- Chairman Adam Clayton Powell (D-N.Y.) of the House Labor Committee sent two investigators here at Green's request to investigate company activities. The House committee will take no action until after the mayor's group reports Jan. 29, a spokesman said.

The strike started Aug. 31 after lodge members voted, 936 to 4, to reject demands of new Yale & Towne management that would have stripped seniority protection from longtime employes, the union said.

NLRB Gives Free Rider Permanent Brass Ring

Miami Beach—Free riders in the Hotel Fontainebleau bargaining unit of Local 255, Hotel & Restaurant Employes, will continue to get a free ride by courtesy of the Taft-Hartley Act and the Florida "right-to-work" law.

The National Labor Relations Board, acting on a charge by one Salvatore B. Buckley, has approved a settlement by stipulation under which the hotel must:

- Provide employes who are represented by Local 255, but who have declined to join and pay dues, the same life insurance, accident, health and hospitalization benefits it provides union members under its contract.
- Make whole non-member employes in the bargaining unit for any medical and hospitalization expenses they may have incurred since Mar. 31, 1961.
- In the event any such employe has died since that date, pay to his estate the death benefit to which he would have been entitled.

The hotel and the union reached an agreement last winter providing insurance coverage for the union's members. After an unfair labor practice charge was filed by Buckley, who wanted benefits despite non-membership in the union, a settlement stipulation was entered into. The NLRB issued its order, pointing out that it was pursuant to the T-H Act.

Buckley cannot be required to join the union and pay dues for benefits because Florida law forbids a union-shop contract.

Joblessness and the Budget

THE ECONOMIC BASIS of the Kennedy Administration's budget for fiscal 1963 is a high level of business activity that will boost profits by $10.5 billion and tax revenues by $10.9 billion.

The budget is predicated also on the expectancy of an 8 percent rate of economic growth in the 12 months from July 1, 1962, to June 30, 1963. This growth rate, says the budget message, should drop the rate of unemployment to 4 percent.

A 4 percent unemployment rate—first projected by Administration economists by the end of 1962—is not a full employment rate and will mean continuing joblessness for millions of American workers.

The Administration has put together an anti-recession program geared to the onset of the next recession and is proceeding on the basis that the 1960-61 setback has been overcome in large degree.

The present unemployment rate of 6.1 percent is proof enough that the country has not completely recovered from the recession. A federal budget that is not designed quickly to eradicate this high level of unemployment is open to challenge as to whether it can promote real and meaningful economic growth.

GE's Big By-Product

THE JUSTICE DEPT., after more than 20 years of anti-trust prosecution of General Electric, has finally run short on patience and asked a federal court for a blanket injunction "in the public interest" against future anti-trust violations by GE.

The department says GE has been involved in 39 anti-trust actions, 36 since 1941, with a record of 29 convictions, seven consent decrees and three adverse findings by the Federal Trade Commission.

In its petition to the court, the Justice Dept. said that GE's "persistent and frequent involvement in anti-trust violations and the scope, nature and breadth of its continued willful conspiratorial activities in the heavy electrical equipment industry" demonstrate the need for a blanket restraining order.

Progress, as the company claims, may be its most important product, but a major by-product appears to be a high-handed contempt for the free market system and the consumer.

Oklahoma Battleground

THE LATEST BATTLE in the war against so-called "right-to-work" laws is shaping up in Oklahoma, where the forces seeking to weaken and destroy unions and collective bargaining are financing a major effort to secure a constitutional amendment barring union security clauses.

The ultra-rightwingers, with the support of the Republican Party in the state, have mounted a petition campaign to put the "right-to-work" issue on the ballot in referendum form.

Behind this latest attack on union security is the emergence of the radical right and its identification with all anti-labor and anti-union causes. Oklahoma has been selected as a prime target for a union-crippling campaign because it houses many of the groups which are willing and eager to sow discord between labor and capital at a time when national unity is sorely needed.

The Oklahoma "right-to-work" drive is a major testing ground for the radical right, a new round in its total war on the labor movement.

The Monster's Human Side:

Federal Responsibility for Jobs Stressed in Study of Automation

DR. WALTER BUCKINGHAM, director of the School of Industrial Management at Georgia Institute of Technology (Georgia Tech), is considered one of the nation's foremost authorities on automation.

His knowledge of the subject has won the respect of Congress and he is rated as an important consultant to the House-Senate Economic Committee.

A new study by Buckingham (Harper & Brothers, New York, $4.50), entitled Automation: Its Impact on Business and People, has just been released. In its pages the author deals with the human impact of this science which too frequently is looked upon in the light of cold, stark statistics, almost cruelly devoid of the human element.

Automation is a terribly complex subject. It may mean very little to a worker until the huge monsters, the computers, the "electronic brains," the mammoths with the automatic feedbacks, are suddenly brought into the plant or office and he finds himself displaced.

Buckingham feels that sufficient attention is not being paid to the social consequences of automation and that too many people are buying the "myth" that science creates as many or more jobs than it destroys.

In an effort to grasp the full significance of automation, he notes that "there has been more technological knowledge gained in the last 50 years than in all previous history and the growth is accelerating." Here are some examples of what automation has meant in some industries:

- In Ford's Cleveland plant 48 men, with automation, make an engine block in 20 minutes. It used to take 400 men twice as long.
- In a Chicago plant, 1,000 radios a day are now assembled by two men where 200 were required before automation.
- London's transit system, the world's largest, with over 10,000 buses and 900 trains, has its entire railroad operation programmed on punched tape.
- In the Soviet Union, a fully automated aluminum truck piston plant has no direct workers.
- Even letters to Evangelist Billy Graham are answered with the use of automatic devices.

Buckingham notes that both employers and unions have worked hard to find positions for displaced workers and while they have been partially successful, he says this "does not prove that all of the conditions exist that would insure a continuation of this expansion in the future, although we can hope that they will."

"Automation is still in its infancy and has proceeded in a fairly slow and orderly manner so far," he says. "Fortunately, automation takes time—months, even years—to put in, so adjustments may be easier.

"But after 1960 the effects of the baby boom that began with World War II will hit the labor force. Unless the workweek is reduced or labor mobility is increased, unemployment could become serious in some basic industries."

THUS HE FINDS himself in agreement with the AFL-CIO which, at its recent convention, called for a shorter workweek at no reduction in pay.

He observes that automation has limitations in some industries but that "nearly any continuous process can be automatically controlled whereas a non-continuous process can never be automated."

He says that most major factories can be either partially or fully automated and most large scale office work is susceptible to automation. On the other hand, "no significant automation" will be found in the building and construction trades, some mining, personal services, retailing, and industries with vast space requirement such as forestry and agriculture.

"Automation seems limited, even potentially, to process manufacturing and clerical work," he points out. "Still, this critical sector of the economy represents half of the value of all production and over a fourth of all employment."

Significantly, Buckingham notes that the industries open to heavy automation represent 85 percent of the union workers in the country, thus placing an imperative challenge on organized labor to organize other segments of our economy.

What are the answers for the economy as a whole?

Buckingham says that "since automation creates new jobs as it destroys old ones, the rate of automation is a critical factor." He says that labor and management must join together to ease the hardship of transition.

"It is the responsibility of the government to guarantee full, steady employment and conditions conducive to economic expansion," he adds.

In other words, without a vast increase in economic growth, automation could mean a rising level of unemployment and misery and hardship for millions. (PAI)

Morgan Says:

Kennedy's Popularity Raises Off-Year Democratic Hopes

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m. EST.)

SOME DEMOCRATIC STRATEGISTS, reckless dreamers that they are, are flirting with an extravagant but seductive hope which, if they could somehow manage to make it come true, would provoke a hideous nightmare for the Republicans, including on Sunday.

Actually the hope is a double one. In order of rashness and brashness, aspiration number one, hardly breathed yet even in smoke-filled rooms, is to defy the political rule that in non-presidential election years the party which holds the White House loses seats in Congress.

Morgan

Aspiration number two is to translate Pres. Kennedy's controversial program into a stunning legislative victory. This is normal partisan ambition in any year but what makes it unusual this year is the ploy involved and how this objective is hooked to the congressional elections in November.

The vital instrument in this gamesmanship is the President's prestige and popularity. The Gallup Poll keeps reporting that they are high—higher, in fact, than Pres. Eisenhower ever enjoyed except for the deceptive halcyon interval after the 1955 Geneva summit conference when his popularity was rated at 79 percent. At last measure, Kennedy's was 78.

Popularity is mighty perishable as any political realist well knows but there are ingredients in the JFK standing that may make it a little more durable. His squeak victory for the presidency was so narrow that most of his congressional colleagues in both Houses led him widely on the tickets in their home districts. Inevitably this caused many in the Democratic majorities on Capitol Hill to adopt the attitude that "he needs me more than I need him."

But things have changed. Kennedy is now broadly popular in his own right. The saying goes that popularity doesn't rub off on other political figures and this may be largely true but there is something a little different about the presidential brand, especially in an election year. The fact is that back home the office-holder doesn't like to appear to be opposing that man in the White House when the latter seems to enjoy strong public approval. (This was the hypnotic fix that the Eisenhower magic held on the Democrats for so long.)

Whatever the reasons for John F. Kennedy's current high standing with the country, the party hierarchy has decided, with the lead coming from the White House itself, to try to make use of it. Though it won't emerge with any fanfare, the heart of the strategy is being shaped with the Democratic Senate and House campaign committees roughly as follows: As funds are assigned to various Democrats for their campaigns it will be noted, gracefully but pointedly, that they are dispensed with the blessings and good wishes of the President himself, who, as probably nobody will need to be reminded, is turning in a smashing job as a fund-raiser at Democratic dinners.

The expectancy of reciprocity implicit in this exercise is vivid and it will become more vivid as crucial votes in Congress approach. The White House, the Democratic National Committee and the party leadership in both houses of Congress are coordinating their campaign efforts, including distributions of funds, more closely than either party appears to have done in many, many years.

ONLY ONCE IN THIS CENTURY—in 1934, midway in Franklin D. Roosevelt's first term—has the party in power gained rather than lost seats in off-year elections. Kennedy's popularity will have to be positively magnetic, his legislative program of almost irresistible allure if such a phenomenon is to be repeated in 1962. And yet this is precisely the kind of a challenge that holds fascination for the Kennedy strategists who, after all, did the impossible in 1960 by electing the first Roman Catholic president in history—and the youngest elected president to boot.

The Senate is a problem but not crucial. Of the eight or nine critical races there are almost as many incumbent Republicans in danger of losing seats to aggressive Democrats as there are incumbent Democrats jeopardized by determined Republicans.

The key, of course, is the House. Some weeks ago the Republicans were talking enthusiastically about the possibility of actually picking up all 44 seats necessary for them to seize control of the House. This still must be rated as a possibility but not as a fat one.

If the President's popularity holds, if the country shows increasing signs of giving him what it withheld at first but gave so liberally to Dwight D. Eisenhower—namely, its trust—if the Administration is able to get an attractive legislative bundle through Congress, the Republicans will be increasingly in trouble.

Perhaps it was anxiety over these ifs which was reflected in Oklahoma City at a soul-searching strategy meeting of the Republican National Committee. But, of course, they are very big ifs and should make the Democrats anxious, too—or at least not complacent.

Washington Reports:

Major Legislative Battles Seen On Kennedy Program in House

MAJOR LEGISLATIVE battles in the House were forecast by the contrasting attitudes expressed by the new speaker, John W. McCormack (D-Mass.), and Minority Leader Charles Halleck (R-Ind.) on the legislative program proposed by Pres. Kennedy in his State of the Union message.

Interviewed on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on 500 radio stations, McCormack said he was confident that most of the President's recommendations will pass.

"I am satisfied that the outstanding record of achievements last year will be duplicated this year," the Speaker said. "Last year the President had 34 of his major recommendations enacted."

"Many of the [present Kennedy] proposals are highly controversial," Halleck retorted. "My guess is that many of them simply will not come to enactment in this session of Congress."

McCormack said the most important measures will be international trade, establishment of a new urban affairs and housing cabinet post, an increase in postal rates, aid to education, strengthened national defense, farm legislation and medical care for the aged.

Taxation will be the Ways & Means Committee's first consideration, he said.

"I AM SATISFIED," he declared, "that any tax bill that might be reported out of committee will pass . . . The Youth Employment Opportunities Act will also be reported out of committee and pass."

On the same program, Halleck asserted: "About school classroom shortages, the country has been picking up real good. I think the real concern of the people will be—apart from the fact that you get involved in all kinds of problems about extending aid to private parochial schools as well as public schools—the real concern is that actual control of the schools would shift from the states and local communities to Washington."

Halleck said he expected that loans to help students pay college costs might be approved.

McCormack said Kennedy has shown the kind of "firm and strong leadership in national defense and foreign affairs that the Communists clearly understand."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE meeting in Oklahoma City, according to all the reports, reflected unhappiness among the party's professional leaders about a number of things:

- The steady rise in Pres. Kennedy's personal popularity as revealed in public opinion polls.
- A basic suspicion that Rep. Bob Wilson of California, chairman of the GOP's Congressional Campaign Committee, is talking through his hat when he speaks hopefully of sweeping Democrats out of control of the House next November. This would require a net Republican gain of 44 seats, and few state leaders claim prospects are good for spectacular gains in their own areas.
- A continued split on policy attitudes between midwestern and Mountain State conservatives and more liberally oriented northeastern leaders.
- The lack of observable outstanding candidates for the presidential nomination in 1964.

The Republican Party is much like the Democratic Party in its internal divisions and in the shift of power that occurs once every four years when a presidential nominee must be chosen.

In Congress, where the Republican record is inevitably written, the party's leadership is almost wholly controlled by conservatives. This leaves the party committed to opposition to federal school aid, broad housing and urban renewal programs, milk for school kids, health care for the aged through social security, water conservation and public power, and a number of other highly popular issues. It leaves the party suspected also of latent isolationism.

At presidential nominating conventions, the big eastern and northern states take over control and insist, each time, on the nomination of some candidate who can be merchandised as modern, at least middle of the road in philosophy, and internationalist. But then the candidate has to try to explain away the GOP voting record in Congress, and nobody but Eisenhower has been able to do it.

RAY BLISS, the Ohio GOP national committeeman who is vastly respected in the party for carrying his state for former Vice Pres. Nixon despite a general industrial-state landslide toward Kennedy, presented a story of a "pitiful" lack of effort by Republicans in the nation's huge cities.

In 38 cities with a population totaling 35 million, said Bliss, the GOP in 1960 had only 43 full-time paid staff workers, barely more than one per city. In two-thirds of all major cities, the Republicans lacked manpower to get at least one worker into each precinct even on election day.

Sen. Gordon Allott of Colorado expressed the belief that Republicans could effectively woo the votes of city workers by reminding them of Democratic "duplicity" on civil rights and economic issues, tax increases and inflation. But Bliss complained of the ward-and-precinct level manpower available to candidates endorsed by labor, most of them Democratic.

A RECENT NEW YORK SPEECH by New Jersey's Republican Sen. Clifford P. Case may give the GOP more insight into its basic troubles than most of the words spoken in Oklahoma City.

He correctly pointed out that this country's two-party system has worked effectively, "with great multiplicity of conflicting interests and a people diverse in racial, religious and cultural backgrounds," because both parties are amalgams and "one can succeed the other without disruption or drastic revision of our national course."

"Congress is not going to repeal, for example, the Social Security Act nor abolish the income tax. Nor is there really any doubt that the Federal Reserve System as well as federal assistance in housing and urban renewal is here to stay."

At the National Committee meeting, Sen. Goldwater of Arizona complained that Nixon lost because the party wasn't "Republican enough." It had "failed to present to this nation a solid political organization committed to an easily definable political philosophy." Such as revealed in Goldwater's own conservative voting record?

HOUSE SPEAKER John W. McCormack (left) was optimistic about enactment of Pres. Kennedy's State of the Union legislative recommendations, but Minority Leader Charles Halleck warned that battles were ahead, as the two leaders were interviewed on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

HERE IS THE NEW SCHOOL of the German Federation of Labor, at Bad Kreuznach, where union officials and members are being trained in time studies, job evaluation, work classifications and similar techniques so as to qualify to protect union workers against abuses in wage-incentive plans. The director, Hans Pornschlegel, last year was a teacher at the AFL-CIO's industrial engineering institutes in the U.S.

10 Electrical Firms Indicted in Price-Fix

The Justice Dept. has stepped up its drive against price-fixing in the electrical equipment industry with an indictment of 10 electrical parts suppliers on criminal anti-trust charges and a request for a sweeping court order forbidding the General Electric Co. from violating anti-trust laws in any field in which it does business.

A federal grand jury in Dayton, O., handed down an indictment charging a price-fixing conspiracy which began in 1955 and continued into 1961. If the charges are substantiated, it would appear the firms were undeterred by the indictment and sentencing of the industry's biggest companies in a mass anti-trust trial at Philadelphia.

Ten Firms Named

One of the 10 firms indicted at Dayton—the Allen-Bradley Co.—was also a defendant in the earlier case. Also indicted at Dayton were the Aerovox Corp., Indiana General Corp., Stackpole Carbon Co., Intl. Resistance Co., Electric Mfg. Co., Texas Instruments, Inc., Clarostat Mfg. Co., Dale Products, Inc., Daystrom, Inc., and nine individual officials of seven of the firms. They were charged with illegally fixing prices for soft ferrite cores, used in the manufacture of television sets, and deposited carbon and metal film resistors, used in the computer industry.

In federal district court in Philadelphia, meanwhile, U.S. Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy asked a blanket injunction against future anti-trust violations by GE as necessary "in the public interest."

He said GE's "persistent and frequent involvement in anti-trust violations and the scope, nature and breadth of its long-continued willful conspiratorial activities in the heavy electrical equipment industry" demonstrate the need for a blanket restraining order.

The Justice Dept. said GE has been involved in 39 anti-trust actions, more than any other company, and 36 have occurred since 1941. The results show 29 convictions, seven consent decrees and three adverse findings by the Federal Trade Commission.

Public 'Entitled' to Ban

In view of this record, the department said, the public is "entitled" to a broad injunction against GE "without waiting for it to engage in additional conspiracies."

A GE statement accused the Justice Dept. of "raking over" cases which were "long since a closed chapter." GE said the government is seeking "to prevent the company from doing what it has no intention of doing."

Therefore, said GE, "we can see no alternative to vigorously defending the company against these new demands."

In a related development, GE and Westinghouse dropped their fight against subpoenas issued by the Senate Anti-Trust subcommittee, headed by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) and turned over price records requested by the subcommittee.

The top officers of GE and Westinghouse—Ralph Cordiner and Mark Cresap, respectively—were named in the subpoenas and could have faced contempt of Congress charges if the records had not been produced.

Master Urges Contempt Finding For Firm that Spied on Union

Chicago—The Olson Rug Co., mail order and retail rug firm here, should be found guilty of contempt of federal court for refusing to bargain with the Textile Workers Union of America, a court hearing officer has recommended.

Nathan M. Cohen, appointed by the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals as special master to hear the facts, has filed a report with the court that the company committed civil contempt when it halted bargaining in 1959 and hired detectives to spy on the union.

The court is expected to act soon on Cohen's finding that:

- A month before the court issued an order in 1958 that the company must bargain with the TWUA, the firm "planted" a detective who was elected to serve on the shop committee.
- After the court order was issued, the company added four more undercover men to its espionage staff.

TWUA won a representation election at the plant in 1957 after a bitter campaign, but management refused to recognize the union or deal with it.

The National Labor Relations Board found the company guilty of unfair practices and ordered it to engage in collective bargaining. When the company failed to respond affirmatively, the board obtained a compliance order from the appellate court on Dec. 9, 1958.

Months of meetings failed to produce an agreement on contract terms and Olson Rug broke off bargaining on Nov. 13, 1959, claiming it had a "good faith doubt" that TWUA still represented a majority of its employes. The special master has rejected this claim and recommended that the company be found in civil contempt of the court order.

Last April the company was charged by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg with failing to file reports required by the Landrum-Griffin Act of its dealings with the Illinois State Detective Agency, Chicago.

Goldberg asked the U.S. District Court of the District of Columbia, in the first such action against an employer under L-G, to compel Olson Rug and the detective agency to file detailed information on their activities in spying on TWUA.

Late last year the company was sold to another firm which has contracts with TWUA for plants in Philadelphia and Bristol, Pa.—the Stephen-Leedom Carpet Co. Manager Earl T. McGrew of the union's Chicago Joint Board has asked the new owner to recognize the union and reach agreement on a contract the employes have been waiting for since 1957. The company has agreed to meet with union spokesmen.

ILO Director Withdraws Resignation

Geneva — Dir. Gen. David A. Morse of the Intl. Labor Organization has withdrawn the resignation he tendered in November to take effect later this year.

Morse had told the ILO Governing Body that he intended to "resume the duties and responsibilities of normal citizenship" of the United States after years of service abroad. Pleas by Governing Body members that he reconsider the situation created by his decision led him to withdraw the resignation, he said.

"In particular I have had to take into account," he said, "the important effort being made to improve the international situation and the essential role which international organizations such as the ILO are called upon to play in this specially critical period in world affairs."

Morse was first elected director-general for a 10-year term on June 12, 1948. He was re-elected for a term of five years on May 31, 1957, or 15 months before the end of his first term.

'Pop' Woolls Dies; Long with AFL-CIO

Seymour B. (Pop) Woolls, who was head of the mail room when he retired last year after 52 years of service with the former AFL and the AFL-CIO, died in his sleep at his home in Washington. He was 68.

A member of Office Workers Local 2, he was widely known for his activity in the Knights of Columbus. Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Margaret L. Woolls; five daughters, four sons, two sisters and a brother.

Religion-Labor Group Chartered

Louisville—The Religion & Labor Council of Greater Louisville has been chartered as an affiliate of the Religion & Labor Council of America. Charles C. Webber, AFL-CIO religious relations representative, presented the charter at a dinner meeting here to the Rev. Henry Beach and Floyd Rector, council cochairmen.

Beach is pastor of the Ninth and O Streets Baptist Church. Rector is a member of the Machinists and past president of the Louisville AFL-CIO.

The local council is one of a number established by the national council under a grant issued by the William Green Memorial Fund in tribute to the late president of the former AFL.

Federal Workers Guaranteed Right To Organize, Bargain Collectively

eration" and that the orders had "retained and strengthened" management responsibilities in government.

Present at the ceremony were cabinet officials, congressional leaders and the heads of a number of unions composed of federal personnel, including the growing AFL-CIO affiliates.

In praising the President's action, Biemiller said that it did not do everything the AFL-CIO believes necessary to a satisfactory program of federal employe-management relations. He urged, for example, that the Administration seek prompt enactment of legislation to permit voluntary payroll deduction of union dues for federal employes, as the President's task force recommended.

"As time goes on," Biemiller said, "experience will demonstrate, we believe, the need for tightening up the procedures, principles and safeguards contained in the executive order. It is of the utmost importance that the federal government should no longer be laggard in the field of labor-management relations."

In summary, the executive order on employe organizations:

- Asserts the right of federal employes to form and join unions and protects their exercise of that right.
- Provides for exclusive recognition of unions representing the majority of employes in a unit and for formal or informal recognition of unions less extensively organized.
- Permits the negotiation of agreements between government agencies and exclusively recognized unions, including provisions for advisory arbitration of grievances.
- Provides for the use of the National Panel of Arbitrators maintained by the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service to settle disputes over exclusive recognition and to conduct representation elections.
- Calls on the Civil Service Commission and the Labor Dept. jointly to prepare proposed standards of conduct for employe organizations and of fair labor practices in federal service.
- Sets up a cabinet-level temporary committee on the Implementation of the Federal-Employe-Management Relations Program, with Goldberg as chairman, to advise the President on problems arising out of the executive order.
- Extends to non-veterans the same rights to appeal adverse decisions to the Civil Service Commission that veterans now enjoy.
- Exempts from the order any government unit performing intelligence, investigative or security functions, such as the Federal Bureau of Investigation.
- Denies recognition to any employe organization that asserts the right to strike against the federal government, advocates the overthrow of the constitutional form of government in the United States, or discriminates in its membership conditions because of race, color, creed or national origin.

Production Loss Cited At Job Safety Parley

New York—Job-connected injuries and deaths cause the loss of twice as many days of production as strikes, Pres. Harold C. Hanover of the New York State AFL-CIO told a governor's conference here on occupational safety.

The basic causes of this loss, which Hanover said cost the state's economy $1.5 billion a year, are loopholes in safety laws and codes, lack of enough inspectors to enforce the existing laws, and insufficient union-management safety agreements, the head of the 2 million-member state federation said.

The extent of the loss, he told the conference, is "reason enough why the legislators at Albany should pay far more attention to this subject" than they have in the past.

Hanover cited lost wages, the cost of compensation and other insurance, lost production, replacing or retraining workers and damage to machinery and goods as factors in the economic loss.

He said five area safety conferences conducted by the state AFL-CIO led to the conclusion that the basic approaches to industrial safety must include the spelling out of safety provisions in collective bargaining contracts, education and training of workers and managements, and law revision, including safety code amendments.

State Convention Acts:

Oklahoma AFL-CIO Opens Drive to Rout 'Work' Forces

Tulsa, Okla.—More than 500 delegates to the AFL-CIO state convention here launched a major campaign to turn back so-called "right-to-work" forces that are seeking to place a "work" proposal on the ballot for a referendum this year.

The delegates, representing 126 local unions from throughout the state, met during the same period the Republican National Committee also met in the state. They gathered with the knowledge that the state GOP executive committee, acting on the mandate of a party convention, had voted to support the "work" proposal and to assist its backers in circulating petitions for the referendum.

All-Out Campaign

Resolutions approved by the convention pledged labor to an all-out battle against the "work" drive, which was launched by local anti-labor groups and out-of-state professionals after they failed to persuade the state legislature to approve the proposal.

The convention paid tribute at a testimonial dinner to state federation Pres. Roy Tillman and Vice Pres. E. R. Burns for what it termed "outstanding accomplishments" in battling the "work" advocates in the legislative session and pledged that labor would muster all its resources to score a second victory if the compulsory open-shop proposal is placed upon the ballot.

Tillman was re-elected, as were Executive Vice Pres. Len Yarborough and Executive Sec.-Treas. J. J. Caldwell.

Also emphasizing the central nature of the "work" issue was a speech by AFL-CIO Associate Gen. Counsel Thomas E. Harris, who analyzed the system in terms of what he called its intrinsically "anti-union" nature.

Sen. A. S. Mike Monroney (D), who is seeking re-election in November, told the convention that Oklahoma's workers had an excellent record for stability and productivity, and that he "knew of no case where the lack of a 'work' law had been responsible for loss of any large-scale industry considering a plant" in the state.

Anti-Union Backers

The proposal's backers include executives of the Oklahoma City newspapers that broke the Typographical Union in their plant and such out-of-state businessmen as executives of the non-union Lone Star Steel Co. of Texas. The group is charging that the state is losing industry because it has no anti-union legislation.

The convention also approved resolutions calling for stepped up political activity in this election year and the enlargement of activities of COPE's Women's Division among local unions and city central bodies.

Other resolutions urged an improvement in unemployment compensation and workmen's compensation systems and an urgent effort to improve labor's public relations programs. The delegates also approved a resolution endorsing the "principle" of a shorter workweek because of the high level of chronic long-term unemployment.

Among convention speakers was Esther Peterson, assistant secretary of labor and director of the Labor Dept.'s Women's Bureau. Mrs. Peterson was made a Cherokee Indian "princess" by a delegation of tribal representatives attending the convention.

THE CHAIRMAN of the Democratic National Committee, John M. Bailey, has challenged Republican top officials to repudiate Oklahoma GOP leaders who are backing a referendum for a so-called "right-to-work" law in the state. Bailey (left) issued his statement after conferring with Joseph A. Beirne, chairman of the AFL-CIO Executive Council's subcommittee on "work" laws.

'Work' Backers Seen Out 'to Destroy Unions'

Tulsa, Okla.—AFL-CIO Associate Gen. Counsel Thomas E. Harris charged here that sponsors of a so-called "right-to-work" constitutional amendment in Oklahoma are out "to destroy unions and collective bargaining" as part of a "total war" on the labor movement.

It's not just a "minor skirmish," he warned the Oklahoma State AFL-CIO convention.

"You must win it," he said.

Harris told the delegates that it is "surely not a coincidence" that employers who are behind the "work" campaign are those who are "unwilling to deal with unions at all."

He noted that employers "who recognize unions, and who expect to keep on recognizing them, show little interest in 'right-to-work' agitation."

The AFL-CIO attorney said the choice of Oklahoma as the next major battleground for "right-to-work" was made by "the professional war mongers of the class war," by people who, in order "to collect money and make a living for themselves," are willing and in fact eager to "sow discord between capital and labor at a time when national unity was never more needed."

The "concern" supporters of "work" laws avow for the freedom of workers, Harris said, is "barefaced hypocrisy."

"Did you ever hear of anyone who believed in keeping wages down who believed in unions?" he asked. "Unions exist to fight for high wages.

'Believers' in Weak Unions

"Did you ever hear of anyone who believed in unions, but in weak unions? People who believe in unions at all want strong unions."

Granting that many people who vote for "right-to-work" laws are "sincere and decent," Harris probed into their reasons for supporting such laws. He said:

"I think that one main reason is that they are nostalgic for a simpler form of society, where people are not so dependent on each other, and on government, as they are these days. Many people look back to an earlier day when, supposedly at least, farmers owned their own small farms and marketed their own crops, and a shoemaker made shoes and sold them to his neighbors.

"Some of the people who cherish this atavistic vision of the good life are probably themselves farmers who vote for government acreage controls, receive federal payments, and market their crops through farm cooperatives, which enjoy special exemption from the anti-trust laws."

Harris noted that "whether fortunately or unfortunately" their concept of society does not cover "the realities of life in an industrial society in 20th Century America."

Industrialization, he observed, "will continue at an increasing pace, and huge corporations will grow huger."

Alternatives Spelled Out

The alternatives, he said, "are between giving the managers of these great enterprises the right unilaterally to decide what they will pay, who they will lay off, whether they will grant pensions, etc., and according a voice in these decisions to workers acting together in a union."

"Surely," he emphasized, "the latter alternative is the more democratic, and the one which preserves to workers the greatest degree of individual freedom."

Harris pointed out it is often "very difficult to prove" that an employer is discriminating against union members or former union members in his hiring policies. In the absence of a union security provision, he noted, an employer can take advantage of turnover to transform "a union majority into an anti-union majority."

He noted, too, that "any worker who refuses to join the union weakens it, and diminishes the likelihood that his fellow workers will be able to win better wages and working conditions."

It is not "philosophically consistent," he declared, to advocate a "right-to-work" law and at the same time claim to believe in collective bargaining.

Translator Joins CLC Public Relations Staff

Ottawa, Ont. — Appointment of Laurent Chateauneuf of East Templeton, Que., a parliamentary translator in the federal government service, as assistant public relations director of the Canadian Labor Congress has been announced by CLC Pres. Claude Jodoin.

Chateauneuf formerly was a sports writer on the French language newspaper Le Soleil in Quebec City. He came to Ottawa in 1951 to work for Le Droit and later became a government translator.

Bailey Challenges GOP To Take 'Work' Stand

Democratic National Committee Chairman John M. Bailey has challenged the Republican Party to tell the American people whether it is for or against so-called "right-to-work" laws.

Bailey noted that the Oklahoma GOP organization is helping to circulate petitions calling for a state constitutional amendment prohibiting union shop agreements. In other states, he said, Republicans also are "allying themselves with extremists of the far right" in support of "right-to-work."

The Democratic chairman declared that "everyone who has studied the issue" knows that "work" laws are "designed to cripple unions and stack the cards in favor of anti-union employers whenever the two sit down at the bargaining table."

The effect of laws banning the union shop, he said, is "to throttle free and fair collective bargaining."

Pointing out that the Democratic Party "is specifically pledged" to oppose "right-to-work" laws, Bailey called on GOP national leaders to issue an "unequivocal statement" of their position.

Confers With Beirne

Bailey issued his challenge after conferring with AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, chairman of the federation's Executive Council subcommittee on "right-to-work" laws.

The Democratic national chairman predicted that if Republicans "continue to ally themselves with a program to take away job security and push wages down," they will be "punished for it at the polls in 1962 just as they were in 1958." He referred to the landslide defeat of GOP candidates linked with "right-to-work" drives in the 1958 congressional and gubernatorial elections.

Calling on the GOP's national leaders to "repudiate" Republicans associated with "right-to-work" drives, Bailey said the GOP leadership "owes it to the public to clear the air on this issue."

Randolph Calls for Ban on Trainee Bias

Federal legislation to assure equal opportunity in employment is needed to help Negro workers "break through the institutionalized racial barriers in apprenticeship training courses," Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Sleeping Car Porters declared in testimony before a special House Labor subcommittee.

Exclusion from apprenticeship training programs, Randolph said, has meant that the great majority of Negro workers are trapped in the "no-man's land of the unskilled."

"They constitute the hard core of joblessness," he observed, "which means that these workers remain unemployed during depressions, recessions, booms, inflation and deflation; during cyclical, seasonal, residual, technological, ethnical and economic maladjustments of the economy."

He said that while the Labor Dept.'s employment figures for last March showed the overall jobless rate to be about 7 percent, the rate of unemployment among Negro workers was about 20 percent.

"The basic reason for this," Randolph declared, "in addition to the causal economic factors at the back of unemployment generally, is the fact that Negro workers are the first fired and the last hired.

"Thus, Negroes will constitute an alarmingly larger section of the chronically unemployed or a part of the structured unemployment of our economy unless the Equality of Opportunity bill proposed by your committee is enacted into law."

The number of skilled Negro workers is diminishing, he said, not only because of obstacles to apprenticeship training but also because Negroes have been losing ground, particularly in the South, in crafts and trades in which they traditionally have had high representation.

Because most Negro workers are unskilled, he noted, they are among the first to be hit by job displacement caused by "the phenomenal pace of the automation revolution."

Randolph, who is a vice president of the AFL-CIO, lauded the strong civil rights resolution adopted by the federation at its convention in December.

He said, however, the AFL-CIO could not by itself wipe out such discrimination, but could do a more effective job if the proposed legislation were enacted.

Jobless Better 6% For 15th Month

The Labor Dept. has reported that with the jobless rate at 6.1 percent for December, unemployment has exceeded 6 percent of the labor force for 15 straight months. During the 1958-59 recession, the rate topped 6 percent for only 12 consecutive months, but it hit a high of 7.5 percent while the 1961 rate reached its maximum at 6.9 percent.

A government spokesman described as a "milestone" the fact that in 1961 the 7 million workers in durable goods industries averaged over $100 a week for the first time. The total of 16 million factory workers, including soft goods workers, averaged $95.99 a week in December, bolstered by 2.8 hours of overtime.

Advisers See Automation Cushions Vital

Labor Says Report Fails on Workweek

CIO vice presidents on the committee said, in part:

"In the light of our current responsibilities to meet world conditions, and in view of our unmet needs at home, we consider the development of programs directed at the achievement of full employment as being more significant at the present time than the consideration of a general reduction in the hours of work. A reduction in the basic work period has, however, historically been one means of sharing the fruits of technological progress, and there may well develop in the future the necessity and the desirability of shortening the work period, either through collective bargaining or by law or by both methods."

Demurrers Filed

A more pressing need for a shorter workweek was expressed in the demurring statements filed by Meany and AFL-CIO Vice Presidents David Dubinsky, George M. Harrison, Joseph D. Keenan, David J. McDonald and Walter P. Reuther.

Agreeing that maximum output and full employment deserve priority, the federation officials declared, however, that if joblessness is not "reduced substantially" in the near future, "we will have to resort to a general shortening of the work period through collective bargaining and by law."

Another statement by McDonald, Reuther and Keenan asserted that "only the fact of full employment — not a statement of its desirability—can properly serve as the premise for the statement that the necessity for shortening the work period will only develop 'in the future'."

Other recommendations included, in summary:

- Adoption of government and private policies "which will promote a high rate of economic growth and fuller utilization of resources" as "the best device" for reducing unemployment.
- Cooperation of government and private groups to bring about a "general upgrading" in the quality of education, reduce school dropout rates, improve vocational and technical education to meet present and future job needs, and provide financial support for deserving and needy students.
- Acceptance by management of its responsibility in lessening the impact of technological change by giving notice of impending changes well in advance, cooperating with unions on the problems involved, and timing the changes to cushion expected unemployment.
- Cooperation of employers and unions in the retraining of workers on the job, plus government subsistence payments for displaced workers engaged in retraining.
- Liberalized unemployment compensation under federal minimum standards which would permit and encourage retraining of displaced workers; additional compensation for displaced wokers paid by employers through severance pay, supplemental unemployment benefits, and "similar measures"; special attention, including early retirement provisions, for workers displaced from their jobs at advanced ages.
- Financial aid from government and employers to cover the cost of transferring displaced workers to areas of available employment, with adaptation of seniority provisions and other union rules to facilitate the mobility of workers.
- Improvement of public employment services for the effective placement and relocation of workers.
- "Vigorous and unremitting efforts" by government, employers, unions and the workers themselves to wipe out discrimination in employment based on race, creed, age or sex.
- Construction of needed public development projects, and maintenance of stand-by public works projects on a "ready-to-go basis" when pockets of unemployment develop or the manpower situation warrants their use.
- Appropriate tax reductions to stimulate the economy when "an intolerable manpower surplus" develops.

Dissenting from the overall report were Arthur F. Burns, president of the National Bureau of Economic Research, a public member, and Henry Ford II, board chairman of the Ford Motor Co., a management member.

Burns said that while parts of the report were "highly constructive," he found no evidence to support the view that automation was a major cause of unemployment. Ford said he endorsed many of the report's recommendations designed to relieve technological displacement, but argued that the committee should have stressed the "focal" point of finding ways to keep "wages and other costs from causing either unemployment or inflation."

In submitting the report to the President, Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg, chairman of the committee, and Sec. of Commerce Luther H. Hodges, vice chairman, said the experience of the group had "demonstrated that your objective of bringing together top leaders of labor, management and the public to arrive at a fuller understanding on vital policy issues can be achieved."

They added that the committee would soon submit further recommendations on such topics as industrial peace, economic growth, wage-price policy and world competition.

Others on Committee

Other members of the committee are:

From labor, Pres. Thomas Kennedy of the Mine Workers.

From management, Elliott V. Bell, chairman of the executive committee of McGraw-Hill Publishing Co.; Joseph L. Block, board chairman of the Inland Steel Co.; John M. Franklin, board chairman of the United States Lines Co.; J. Spencer Love, president of Burlington Industries, Inc.; Richard S. Reynolds, Jr., president of the Reynolds Metals Co., and Thomas J. Watson, Jr., president of the Intl. Business Machines Corp.

From the public, Atty. David L. Cole; Clark Kerr, president of the University of California; Ralph E. McGill, publisher of the Atlanta Constitution, and George W. Taylor, professor of labor relations at the Wharton School of Finance, University of Pennsylvania.

Executive Office of the President • Bureau of the Budget

Budget of $92.5 Billion Proposed by Kennedy

will reduce spending in this area by about $500 million. In the natural resources area, an additional $200 million is recommended to start construction on 43 new water resources projects with an estimated total federal cost of $600 million.

The President said his proposal to increase postal rates would cut $592 million from the commerce and transportation allotment.

In the health, labor and welfare area, he said, the budget will increase funds for health research and strengthen the programs of the Public Health Service, vocational rehabilitation, the Food & Drug Administration and aid for medical education.

The budget includes funds also for retraining programs and youth training plans as well as increased funds for the U.S. Employment Service.

Expenditures for education programs have been increased $327 million, the President said, and $64 million is earmarked for higher compensation rates to severely disabled veterans.

The anticipated budget receipts of $93 billion are tied in part to the President's proposed tax program, including the tax credit for investment plan and proposals to impose a withholding system on dividend and interest income.

Also involved are his proposals for plugging capital gains loopholes, repealing the deductible dividend provision, limiting business deductions for gifts and entertainment and revising tax treatment of foreign income.

Tax Proposals

The President recommended extension of the present 52 percent tax rate on corporate income and certain excise levies, but urged repeal of the present 10 percent tax "as it applies to passenger transportation other than by air." He said he would propose instead new user charges of 5 percent on airline tickets and air freight waybills and a 2-cent per gallon tax on aviation fuel.

The President urged in addition "prompt enactment" of a temporary increase in the public debt limit to $308 billion from the present limit of $298 billion. Seasonal requirements and expenditures will raise the debt to $305 billion during 1962, he said.

Kennedy restated his proposals for meeting future recessions, including authority to the President to reduce income tax rates and initiate public works. He renewed a request that Congress overhaul the unemployment compensation system.

Under the heading of "efficiency and economy in the public service" he told Congress he would propose new salary schedules for federal workers to take effect Jan. 1, 1963, in three annual stages.

Farm Labor Union Rights Win Support

The President's Committee on Migratory Labor has announced support "in principle" of legislation to grant farm workers the legal right to organize and coverage under the federal wage-hour law and jobless pay programs. The committee staff was directed to prepare specific proposals.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, chairman of the committee, reported the group's first meeting under the Kennedy Administration had produced a unified governmental policy and a 14-point action program.

Largest Extension

Administration support of collective bargaining rights for farm workers would mean extension of the principle to the largest group of exempted workers since the Wagner Act of 1935 guaranteed bargaining rights to industrial workers. Pres. Truman's Commission on Migratory Labor in 1951 recommended extension of bargaining rights to agriculture, but experts could recall no instance of endorsement by any administration.

Goldberg, at a press conference on the committee's program, said he hoped the Administration's specific proposal on bargaining rights would be ready for the current session of Congress.

Pres. Kennedy, in a letter released by Goldberg, said he felt the committee's policy and program would bring better conditions for migrants.

Kennedy specifically expressed hope that five Senate-passed bills on migrant-worker problems would be approved by the House this session. These bills would: require registration of crew leaders and labor contractors; extend the child labor law; provide matching grants-in-aid to states for education; extend public health services through federal grants; create a National Advisory Council on Migratory Labor to advise the President and Congress.

The committee statement said the purpose of the first meeting of the cabinet-level group was to establish a unified policy.

Goldberg said the family-type farm would be excluded from such regulatory legislation as minimum wages.

The committee's 14-point program called for: passage of the five pending migrant bills; passage of a Farm Labor Stabilization Act; minimum wage coverage; matching grants-in-aid to states for day-care centers; aid for farm workers' housing; the right to bargain collectively; unemployment insurance; a lessened reliance on imported Mexican nationals; extension to migrant families of benefits under the rural and area redevelopment programs; 1961 Housing Act benefits for agriculture; expanded school lunch and milk programs for migrant families; stricter enforcement of federal laws covering migrants; improved laws and enforcement at the state level, especially on workmen's compensation.

African Unions Form New Center

Dakar, Senegal—A new African Trade Union Confederation, members of which are free to join or not to join any worldwide labor body, has been formed here at a meeting of representatives of the labor movements of 20 African nations and eight territories.

The delegates selected as president Gen. Sec. Ahmed Tlili of the General Union of Tunisian Workers, a member of the executive board of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. David Soumah of the Senegal Trade Union Federation was named administrative secretary.

Tlili issued the call to the conference, which went to all African trade union movements. Not represented by delegates were Ghana, Guinea, the United Arab Republic, Mali and Morocco. These nations formed the All-African Trade Union Federation as a meeting last May in Casablanca and have required members to abandon any affiliation with a non-African international labor body.

Also active in setting up the meeting here were union leaders from Tunisia, Senegal and Kenya. Senegal was chosen as the locale because its trade union movement is not affiliated with a non-African international body.

However, most of the organizations represented are affiliated either to the ICFTU or to the Intl. Federation of Christian Trade Unions.

Meany Warns Joblessness Still Nation's Major Issue

500 DELEGATES to Economic & Legislative Conference hear AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany give keynote address calling for a greater "sense of urgency" by the Administration in dealing with continued recession-level unemployment.

'Sense of Urgency' Asked for America

By David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared that the labor movement has a "solemn duty" to remind the President and Congress that the recession is not "over and done with" and that the "No. 1 issue" is still getting America back to work.

Meany told the AFL-CIO Economic & Legislative Conference that the "great lack" in the Administration and in the country is a "sense of urgency" toward the "basic problem of jobs."

Warning that the unemployment crisis is even more severe than the job statistics show, he said the standby anti-recession measures asked by Pres. Kennedy—public works projects and withholding tax cuts—are needed "not for the next recession, but for this one."

He outlined labor's legislative goals in eight fields and asked the 500 delegates from international unions and state and city central bodies to "carry the word" to congressmen and senators from their areas.

"You are the voice from back home," Meany told them. "And I hope you are heard loud and clear when you make your rounds."

The conference was scheduled to wind up at a luncheon session with AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller giving a summary of delegate reports and with addresses by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg and AFL-CIO Vice Pres. George M. Harrison.

Asks Labor's Help

Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, addressing the opening session, said the Administration has succeeded in getting the country "on the move" in its first year in office, but "we have not gone far enough."

He said the President's proposals to deal with unemployment and recessions are aimed at breaking the "vicious cycle that confronts the workingman." The Adminis-

Missile Site Crews Win Honors

Describing their achievements as "a great voluntary effort," Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg presented certificates of merit to 22 union, management and government representatives for their help in bringing in two Atlas missile complexes weeks ahead of schedule.

The citations were presented at a ceremony in Washington to members of local missile site labor relations committees at Forbes Air Force Base, Topeka, Kan., and Warren AFB, Cheyenne, Wyo.

The Atlas intercontinental ballistic missile complexes were made operational five weeks before the target date at Warren and three weeks early at Forbes.

Goldberg said one purpose of the awards was to call public attention to the dedication of workers on the sites.

"The public," he said, "seems

AMA Plan For Aged Hit As 'Unsound'

By John M. Barry

The American Medical Association-Blue Shield proposal to insure elderly persons against surgical and medical costs for $3 a month is a "fundamentally unsound and impractical" attempt to forestall government action, an AFL-CIO official has declared.

Nelson H. Cruikshank, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, said the AMA and Blue Cross "have come up with not a program but a press release."

Pointing out that no program has yet been worked out, "much less endorsed by the 69 Blue Shield plans that would be underwriting it," Cruikshank described the announcement as "the latest in a series of proposed solutions to a problem that the AMA has long insisted does not exist."

He said, however, that the AFL-CIO welcomed "the AMA's recognition at last that something must be done" to help the aged finance their health and medical care needs. He called on the doctors' group to make a "constructive contribution" by offering a program of medical care coverage for the aged as a supplement to the hospital care benefits that would be available under the Anderson-King bill now before Congress.

Because the Anderson-King bill would finance the hospital care insurance through the social security system, the AMA has attacked it as a step toward "socialized medicine."

The AMA plan, only the bare bones of which have been announced, would cover the full cost

Before House Subcommittee:

Meany Renews Plea For FEP with Teeth

"The time is overdue," declared AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, for Congress to enact an enforceable Fair Employment Practices Act.

Meany urged a House Special Subcommittee on Labor to write a law with teeth to end discrimination in employment and upgrading—whether controlled by employers or unions—and in apprenticeship programs of every kind.

Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.), whose subcommittee held hearings in Chicago last year, announced his group approved a proposed bill by a 6 to 1 vote. He said the full House Labor Committee headed by Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-N. Y.) is planning to begin drafting a revised bill in a matter of days.

Meany said that while discrimination is practiced against Jews, Catholics and the foreign-born, "our worst problem in the field of discrimination involves employment opportunities for Negroes," and it is one of the least well-measured and publicized.

This applies not just in Louisiana or Georgia or Mississippi, he said, but in Illinois and Oregon and New York—three states with FEP laws. "To be completely frank," he added, "the best state FEP laws apply where they are least needed," and many "are more impressive in wording than in results," and federal action is essential.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg testified for the Administration and "strongly endorsed" the principle of equal job opportunity.

Others expressing strong support and quick passage of FEP legislation included Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.; Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.; Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers; Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and La-

Kennedy Keys Wage-Price Policy To Nation's Increasing Productivity

Pres. Kennedy has called on organized labor to accept increasing productivity as "a guide to wage objectives" and asked management to practice "equivalent restraint" in price decisions to help the nation achieve an average annual growth of 4.5 percent in the decade of the Sixties.

The President told Congress in his first annual economic report that the nation "must rely on the good sense and public spirit of our business and labor leaders to hold the line on the price level in 1962."

There is no indication that the demands for goods and services in 1962 "will strain the economy's capacity to produce" and create an inflationary situation, the President said, but the interplay of price and wage decisions "could set off a movement toward a higher price level," he declared.

The President's Council of Economic Advisers in a supporting analysis noted that productivity is a guide rather than a rule in appraising wage and price behavior, and that wages and prices should be responsive to other changes as well.

The council said that productivity "appears to have risen more rapidly since the end of the second World War than before," and that "it would be wholly inappropriate for wage behavior in the 1960s to be governed by events long in the past."

The council spelled out generally these guideposts for non-inflationary wage and price behavior:

- The rate of increase in wage rates—including fringe benefits—in each industry should be equal to the trend rate of overall productivity increase.
- If an industry's rate of productivity increase exceeds the overall rate, a price reduction would be called for; if its productivity increase is below the overall rate, it would mean a price increase.

Wage rate increases would exceed the general guide rate in an industry which could not attract sufficient labor or in an industry where wages are exceptionally low compared to rates earned elsewhere.

- Wage rate increases would fall

Highlights of Legislative Parley Speeches

More than a score of congressmen and senators addressed the AFL-CIO Economic & Legislative Conference. Here are some of the things they and other speakers said:

Joblessness

Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.)—"There is no need to wait for unemployment to rise again" before pumping federal funds into needed public works projects as an anti-recession measure. Joblessness "is already too high." Unless there is a "substantial improvement" in employment, "the burden of proof will be on the Kennedy Administration to show that the public works program is not needed now."

Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N. J.)—"Central to any improvement of unemployment benefits and broader coverage is the establishment of minimum federal standards. In the competition for industrial plants among the states, unemployment benefits and taxes may be kept low as an inducement to new enterprises.

"All too often, the unemployment insurance program becomes part of a package, which may also include a state 'right-to-work' law, to attract industry from out of the state. The result is to penalize states which try to provide adequate standards."

Rep. Elmer J. Holland (D-Pa.)—"Automation is a major cause of unemployment" and must be met by programs including a shorter workweek, liberalized unemployment compensation, early retirement and retraining. The manpower retraining bill was blocked in the House Rules Committee last year because it didn't get "even one Republican vote."

Health Care for the Aged

Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N. Mex.)—Referring to the American Medical Association and Blue Shield "substitute" plan for private insurance, instead of social security health care, for the aged: "I hope that organized labor will meet that challenge head-on and will insist: not that new bottles be found for old medicines, not that new cures be advanced by the well-financed propaganda machine of the AMA, but that Congress decide once and for all whether working people can be permitted to take care of their old age health needs as a matter of right."

Rep. Cecil R. King (D-Calif.)—"I haven't had half a dozen letters from younger working men objecting to pre-payment of medical and hospital costs under social security."

Liberalized Foreign Trade

Rep. Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.)—"There is no question about our having to develop a plan to take advantage of the opportunity the European Common Market offers to us." But the House Ways & Means Committee, which he heads, will insist on knowing the specifics of the Administration's proposed trade and tariff program. "There must be convincing, positive answers" for those of us "who will have responsibility for pushing the program through Congress."

Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N. Y.)—"It is not only the goal of a liberal trade policy on which we must agree, but also the best means of making it work. Congress must set the direction of U.S. trade policy. Congressional control can be achieved through legislative language indicating clearly the specific directions in which the President should move."

Labor Legislation

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-N. Y.)—

"I have given the Equal Employment Opportunities bill top priority on my committee's legislative calendar. Join with us, back us with your resources and make equal employment opportunities the law of the land."

"If the 'Spirit of Miami' endures," and labor "will speak with one voice," then "Davis-Bacon amendments, improvements in the eight-hour day law, occupational safety measures will be considered within the [House Education & Labor] committee. I will not consider legislation that labor is divided over."

Sen. Pat McNamara (D-Mich.)—"These subjects . . . have been and will continue to be opposed by the national spokesmen of business. Your resolutions, your testimony before our committees, your editorials, are only the beginning. It is back home that your real work is—both within and without the unions you represent here."

Civil Rights

Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N. Y.)—"In many ways, through executive action, the Administration has rendered yeoman service to the cause of civil rights—in education, travel, employment and voting.

"The Administration cannot unduly tarry at any of these plateaus. The advance must be incessant and constant. There is a legislative program as outlined in the Democratic platform, which was espoused by the President, which must be carried out."

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.)—"Will this Administration support further civil rights steps? Speaking for the Administration, and I do, the answer is 'yes.' When the committee chairmen ask for the Administration's position on civil rights bills, you will find that the Democratic platform pledges will be supported."

Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.)—"There is no excuse for footdragging" on civil rights because of fear of losing congressional support to the Administration on other issues. "Those people who will be against a trade bill will be against it regardless."

Aid to Education

Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.)—"A college education for every young man and woman who desires it and who is prepared for it should be an immediate goal. It is time for America to move forward in education."

Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.), who was out of the country attending the foreign ministers' conference of the Organization of American States, said in a message that "the only ones who really benefit" from the controversy over grants to private as well as public schools "are the Russians." He added:

"By keeping the needed help from public schools, we Americans are making the Communists relatively stronger because we are not developing as we should the brain power of our children."

Rep. Cleveland M. Bailey (D-W. Va.)—"With all of this strength in back of federal aid to education, it is just incredible that reasonable men could not get together to enact a bill. Something was wrong—very wrong—when the opposition was able to divide and conquer us . . . I am proposing an emergency, three-year program. I believe firmly the effort must be made."

Consumer Protection

Sen. Este Kefauver (D-Tenn.)—"Drug prices are so high primarily because more than a score of the nation's top drug manufacturing companies maintain a virtual monopoly. They get this monopoly power from an intricate system of patents and cross-licensing agreements. We have got to change the patent laws as they apply to drugs if we are ever to get drug prices down. That's what my bill is designed to do."

Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.)—Demonstrating the need for his "truth-in-interest" bill requiring buyers to be told total finance charges and the annual interest rate on the upaid balance, he said an investigation of automobile credit costs in the District of Columbia area showed interest "as high as 102 percent and averaging 30 percent."

Sen. Albert Gore (D-Tenn.)—Speaking on the need to close tax loopholes, "the people must look for justice to the Senate. Tell me which way the big corporations are active and I'll tell you how the House Ways & Means Committee will act."

Stanley Ruttenberg, AFL-CIO research director—"Today, with much of our existing productive capacity still idle for lack of orders, further tax benefits for business should be given the lowest priority. The kind of investment stimulus American business most needs is the durable stimulus of rising family spendable income."

Bottle Blowers Warn Of Strike Danger

The Glass Bottle Blowers have served notice on employers that the "deliberate anti-labor moves" of one of the major producers of glass containers could "shatter" a 77-year record of industrial peace.

GBBA Pres. Lee W. Minton told a news conference in Washington that one of the oldest firms in the industry, Ball Brothers Co., is closing its glass plant at Muncie, Ind., to switch production to "the only non-union plant in the industry."

Minton said the company also has withdrawn from the labor division of the Glass Container Manufacturers Institute, which has negotiated nationwide contracts with the GBBA since 1885—"without a strike."

The union will seek a restraining order in federal court at Chicago in an effort to block the plant closing and will also ask the National Labor Relations Board to throw out a representation election which resulted in a "no union" vote at the new Ball Brothers plant at Mundelein, Ill.

Minton showed newsmen a copy of a letter to employes signed by the plant manager at Mundelein which quoted a union contract provision giving laid-off workers the right to transfer to other Ball Brothers plants. The letter suggested that if the workers voted for a union, "Isn't it likely a push will be made to give Mundelein jobs to terminated Muncie workers?"

The election in the production and maintenance unit produced 66 no union votes, 35 for the Glass & Ceramic Workers and 23 for the Glass Bottle Blowers, with four challenged ballots. In an eight-member mold-makers unit, the Flint Glass Workers received four votes, with three challenged ballots and one no union vote.

Closing of the Muncie plant, Minton said, is scheduled for the end of February. The existing industrywide contract expires Mar. 1 and GBBA locals at Ball Brothers plants at El Monte, Calif.; Okmulgee, Okla., and Asheville, N. C., have voted a "no contract, no work" policy as of that date, Minton announced.

He said that if the Ball Brothers attitude is a "straw in the wind," indicating a "hardening" of the glass container industry's approach to unions, the result could be a nationwide GBBA strike.

Scholarship Tests To Be Held in March

Qualifying tests for AFL-CIO college scholarships will be held Mar. 6 (or, in some high schools, Mar. 10) under the supervision of the National Merit Scholarship Corp., which administers the AFL-CIO program.

To qualify for consideration, high school students in their junior year must take the National Merit Scholarship examinations this year. Those who qualify take a further test their senior year. Parents with children who are high school juniors should instruct them to check with school authorities immediately, the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education advised.

The federation each year finances six college scholarships, three of which go to children of AFL-CIO union members.

RCIA Local Union Officer Given Degree

Goldberg Recognizes AFGE in Labor Dept.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg hailed the government's new policy of recognizing and bargaining with federal employe unions as "but a beginning" to a new era in the civil service.

"In the years to come," he said, "the voice of organizations of federal employes will increasingly be heard in the councils of our government."

Goldberg spoke at the American Federation of Government Employes banquet marking the 79th anniversary of the Civil Service Act. He announced that he has already extended formal recognition to the AFGE lodge at the Labor Dept., to which more than one-third of the department's employes belong.

The lodge has announced that it soon hopes to petition for exclusive bargaining rights by representing more than 50 percent of the employes. This would give it the right to negotiate a written contract, and the obligation to represent all employes in grievance procedures.

Goldberg noted that in contrast to the government's public policy of encouraging workers in private industry to organize and bargain collectively, the government's attitude in dealing with its own employes has been "sporadic" and "from time to time one of ill-disguised hostility."

The fact that "the nation's largest employer has recognized the organizations of its employes" has made the week one that "will live in the history of the federal service," he declared.

He told the AFGE that as their union grows and achieves exclusive bargaining rights, they will have to face up to possible "conflicts of interest" which might arise when supervisory officials serve as union officers.

"I do not believe this problem can be avoided," Goldberg emphasized. "In the era from which we are emerging, when most government unions had at best a consultative relationship with government management, there was no obstacle to managers holding office in a union.

"In the future, however, when union officials will be negotiating written agreements on personnel matters of the first importance with responsible management officials, it is simply contrary to the public interest for the union to be on both sides of the bargaining table."

Jobs Still No. 1 U. S. Issue, Meany Says

'Sense of Urgency' Asked in Conference

tration "does not agree," he said, with the view that when the worker has a job "there is no need to do anything for him" and its corollary that "when he is out of a job, it is too late to do anything for him."

The Vice President asked labor's help also in building support for a new trade program geared to the changes brought about by the European Common Market and for a program of federal aid to education.

Recession Not Over

Meany told the delegates that the recession is not over, no matter how much production rises, "when 4 million Americans can't find jobs, when other millions are working only part-time, and when almost a million more who want to work don't even bother to look for the chance."

He said the fact that many people "became so discouraged at the shortage of job opportunities" that they dropped out of the labor market may have made the unemployment statistics "look a little better."

"But it didn't help the unemployment problem at all," he asserted.

Meany made public an analysis by AFL-CIO economists of the employment comeback following low points of the past four recessions. He said:

"The 1949-50 recovery saw unemployment drop by 30.6 percent in nine months. In 1954-55, the jobless shrank by 26.1 percent; in 1958-59, by 20 percent."

During the comparable nine-month span in 1961, he emphasized, unemployment was cut only 7.3 percent.

"We've got the higher production," Meany said. "We've boosted the rate of economic growth. But we have barely touched the basic problem of jobs."

He told the delegates they were in Washington to serve as a "people's lobby," and charged them to "speak before the tribunals of government in the name of those people who cannot adequately speak for themselves."

Other Priorities

In addition to action on jobs, Meany said, labor's legislative priorities include:

- Health benefits for the aged through social security. "Next to full employment," Meany said, this is labor's "No. 1 project." He called for passage of the Anderson-King bill, and not "some milk and water substitute."
- International trade. The United States "can't stand aloof" from the growing movement among free nations to stimulate trade "that is mutually beneficial," he said.

Meany reiterated his pledge of "100 percent support" to the President on this issue, noted that America's favorable balance of trade—the excess of U.S. exports over imports—has increased from $1 billion in 1959 to $5.5 billion last year, and added:

"Does this sound as though we were pricing ourselves out of the world market? Obviously we can and do compete successfully—and without sacrificing American wage standards."

- Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin. "At the very least," Meany said, "Congress should look into these contradictions of the established principle that it is in the best interest of the United States that workers should be free to organize and bargain collectively."
- Federal taxes. He called for "elimination of special privileges . . . so all citizens pay their full share under the law."
- Federal aid to education. It seems "ridiculous," Meany said, that we can't spend $1.5 billion a year for adequate schools and colleges when our national income is "several hundred times as great." He added:

"We agree with Pres. Kennedy that his bills were good bills; he still wants them and we still support them."

- Civil rights. We need "at the very least" a federal fair employment practices law. We are "confident," Meany said, that "men now living will see the day when the evil of discrimination has been finally extirpated from American society."
- Consumer protection. Labor supports measures aimed at "all forms of deceptions, price-rigging and outright cheating that now bilk consumers of their hard-earned dollars."

In addition, Meany told the conference, labor is concerned with supporting the United Nations against attacks by "extremists from both sides." Declaring that the UN remains "the best hope of a divided world for rule by law instead of by force," he added:

"We in the AFL-CIO support the United Nations, and we will do everything in our power to strengthen its influence."

At the conference session dealing with unemployment legislation, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther, the chairman, declared that collective bargaining can make a contribution to relieving joblessness through such programs as supplementary unemployment benefits and early retirement, but unions "can't create jobs."

He said labor's demand for a shorter workweek has been "dictated by technological and productivity gains" which have reduced job opportunities.

Chairing other legislative sessions were AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, civil rights; Vice Pres. William Calvin, labor legislation; Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, taxation; Vice Pres. Peter T. Schoemann, education; Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan, social security; Vice Pres. Al J. Hayes, international trade, and Vice Pres. William C. Doherty, consumers legislation. Presiding at the final report session was Vice Pres. George M. Harrison.

VICE PRES. LYNDON B. JOHNSON is welcomed to the Economic & Legislative Conference by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany. Johnson told the delegates the Administration has gotten the country "on the move in its first year in office, but "we have not gone far enough."

Kennedy Asks Congress For Trade Law Changes

Pres. Kennedy has called on Congress to enact a sweeping revision of U.S. trade policy to increase exports, with built-in adjustment provisions to aid workers, farmers and businessmen who suffer damage from a resulting increase in imports.

The heart of the President's message was his request for a Trade Expansion Act of 1962 giving him authority to negotiate mulilateral tariff reductions and to eliminate gradually all tariffs on certain products traded with European Common Market countries.

The trade proposal, certain to bring a long battle, followed by one day a direct political challenge by the President to the House Republican leadership on his proposal to create a new Dept. of Urban Affairs.

Noting that a conservative coalition in the House Rules Committee had killed a bill to establish the department by legislative action, Kennedy served notice he would create it by executive order under his reorganization powers and name Robert C. Weaver, now head of the housing agency, as its first secretary.

Readjustment Allowances

In the trade message, Kennedy outlined trade adjustment provisions to provide workers who lose their jobs or suffer under-employment as as a result of increased imports what he termed readjustment allowances of up to 65 percent of their average pay for as long as 52 weeks (65 weeks for workers over 60), less any unemployment insurance benefits available to them.

They would also be given assistance in developing higher skills and financial aid in relocating to other areas if necessary to find suitable jobs.

Businessmen and farmers adversely affected would be given tax benefits, loans or loan guarantees to encourage modernization and diversification, plus technical information, advice and consultation in planning their approach to the problem.

Such adjustment protections were strongly urged in a resolution by the recent AFL-CIO convention in Miami Beach and by federation Pres. George Meany in urging world trade expansion at an earlier conference sponsored by the Machinists.

'New Initiative Needed'

Kennedy, in his trade message, declared that the 28-year-old Reciprocal Trade Agreements Program is no longer adequate and that "a new American trade initiative is needed to meet the challenges and opportunities of a rapidly changing world economy."

He cited particularly the growth of the European Common Market—"an economy which may soon nearly equal our own, protected by a single external tariff similar to our own."

He noted that some 30 percent of U.S. exports now goes to present and prospective member countries of the Common Market. Increased trade with these and other countries, he said, would help the nation expand its economy, prevent inflation, correct the adverse balance of payments, promote the strength and unity of the West and aid the developing nations of the world.

Gain Predicted

On the whole, he said, American workers, farmers and businessmen would gain rather than lose from expanded trade.

"Several hundred times as many workers owe their jobs directly or indirectly to exports as are in the small group—estimated to be less than one-half of 1 percent of all workers—who might be adversely affected by a sharp increase in imports," the President observed.

The House Rules Committee killed the bill for an urban affairs department by a 9-to-6 vote denying it clearance to the floor. All five Republican members and four southern Democrats formed the majority.

Kennedy promptly announced his upcoming executive order and announced his selection of Weaver as the secretary. Weaver, a Negro, would become the first American of his race to serve in the Cabinet.

Kennedy said at a news conference he was "somewhat astonished" by Republican leadership opposition to the bill. His reorganization order creating the department will not be subject to Rules Committee veto and can be overturned only by majority vote of the full House or Senate on a rollcall vote.

The effect will be to force northern and large-city Republican members, as well as southern Democrats, to go on record on the issue.

Organizing Plan Outlined By IUD Board

The executive board of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. has approved the broad outlines of an expanded organizing drive, keyed to the cooperation and manpower of IUD affiliates.

Final action on the details of the program is expected to be taken by the IUD executive committee, which will meet during the AFL-CIO Executive Council session at Miami Beach, Feb. 19, an IUD spokesman said.

The program, he said, envisages creation of major projects in a limited number of areas with concentrations of unorganized workers in the jurisdiction of IUD unions.

The IUD said its program is intended to supplement AFL-CIO organizational activity, due to be stepped up as a result of action at the recent federation convention. IUD Pres. Walter P. Reuther is chairman of the AFL-CIO Committee on Organization.

The IUD board also:

- Heard a report from Reuther on the progress of internal disputes through the new AFL-CIO disputes machinery.
- Heard a report on efforts to work out with the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. a common approach to situs picketing legislation.
- Authorized the executive committee to set up machinery for chartering state and local industrial union bodies, but declared "there will be no broadside chartering."
- Outlined a program of legislative committees in some 40 swing congressional districts to stimulate membership interest in issues now before Congress.
- Approved financial and organization support to a projected AFL-CIO voter registration drive.

NLRB Wins $1.65 Million In Back Pay

The 28 regional offices of the National Labor Relations Board collected back pay of $1.65 million last year for illegally fired workers —up 95 percent over 1959 collections and 31 percent higher than the 1960 total, NLRB General Counsel Stuart Rothman has announced.

In addition to back pay, 2,349 employes illegally discharged were offered reinstatement, and 1,591 accepted; 31 formal back pay proceedings were initiated—more than in the three preceding years combined. Back pay ranged from $11 to $8,000 a person. Reporting on the law and its enforcement, Rothman said:

"It would be better to prevent violations . . . but if an employe is entitled to these remedies because of unlawful discharge, vigorous enforcement of the statute requires as speedy reimbursement and reinstatement as possible."

Meany and Reuther Aid Hunger Fight

United Nations, N. Y.—Harry A. Bullis, former president and chairman of the board of General Mills, Inc., has been elected president of the American Freedom from Hunger Foundation.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers are among the foundation's trustees.

Officers were elected at the first meeting of the foundation, formed to direct American participation in a five-year campaign of the UN Food & Agriculture Organization to promote better food production, distribution and nutrition within developing nations.

The foundation has announced it will cooperate closely with the U.S. government's Food for Peace Program, whose director, former Rep. George McGovern (D-S. D.), also is a foundation trustee.

Townsend in Kenya To Aid ITF Affiliates

London—Walter Townsend of the Railway Clerks, in the United States, is now in Kenya helping unions affiliated with the Intl. Transportworkers Federation in organizing and administration.

Townsend went to Kenya after several months in ITF headquarters here studying the work of the international trade secretariats. He will spend three months in Africa and will visit Tanganyika, Uganda and possibly Rhodesia as well as Kenya.

Gildea Links 'Moonshining' To Tax Rate

Sec.-Treas. Arthur P. Gildea of the Brewery Workers has charged that "oppressive taxation" of liquor and beer has made "moonshining" a "menacing big business" and threatened an industry which gives employment to more than 1 million workers.

Gildea spoke at a luncheon of the National Coordinating Committee of the Beverage Industry, a joint union-management group founded in 1950.

From 1933—the year of repeal—through 1960, the beverage industry has paid $72.6 billion in federal, state and local taxes, Gildea noted. But he warned that "excessive tax rates" have brought a "sharp decline" in sales of legal alcoholic beverages and a drop in tax revenues.

"In our union alone," he noted, "brewing and distilling operations have shown a decline of 20 percent in employment."

Taxes Affect Volume

He said the dollar volume of illegal "moonshine" liquor has been rising "in direct proportion to the climb of alcohol tax rates."

The "Snuffy Smith contraptions deep in the hills," Gildea declared have been replaced by "large complex organizations in major cities," some involving capital investments as high as $50,000.

He urged a reduction in federal excise taxes to prewar levels to "bust the bouncing bootleg boom" and keep out "mobsters and hoodlums."

IBEW Peace Pact Doubles Apprentices

New York—Details of the settlement reached with 600 electrical contractors by Local 3, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, provide that in exchange for a shorter workweek the union has agreed to train 1,000 more apprentices for work in the greater city's $1.25 billion-a-year construction industry.

Building projects went forward again after an eight-day strike by 9,000 members of Local 3 produced agreements providing a basic 25-hour workweek, five hours overtime a week at time and a half when the supply of men is short, and a straight-time wage rate of $4.96 an hour effective July 1. The daily hour of overtime is waived during the slack season.

The earlier contract provided a wage rate of $4.40 an hour for a 30-hour week, plus a mandatory five hours at time and a half.

The union's objective, Business Manager Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., said, was to point the way to a shorter work day and week as a hedge against unemployment resulting from employers' increasing use of new machines and labor-saving techniques.

The employers agreed to the cut in hours provided the union would increase the number of apprentices from 1,000 to 2,000.

The strike started Jan. 11 after three months of negotiations had failed to produce an agreement. Local 3 members continued to supply power to building projects so other trades could continue working, but some employers shut down their projects and "locked out" the workers for one day.

On demand of the Building & Construction Trades Council, some 100,000 workers were paid a total of $3 million for lost time before returning to work.

'Mild' Recovery May Not Last, CLC Told

Ottawa, Ont.—A "mild" economic recovery is under way in Canada, according to economists of the Canadian Labor Congress, but their forecast still stands of peak winter unemployment of 600,000 to 650,000.

A CLC survey indicated that the country began to come out of the recession last August, some 18 months after the economic decline got under way.

Unemployment hit postwar peaks in every month from July 1960 to July 1961, the study showed. But in August it dropped below the figures for August 1960 and August 1958. The trend continued through November, which also showed fewer out of work than in the 1960 and 1958 comparable months.

But not all the signs are good, the labor economists noted. They pointed out unemployment at 6.1 percent of the labor force in November is still high; that employment has risen only 1.4 percent over 1960 though productivity is up 5.2 percent and that the national Unemployment Insurance Fund, which dropped from $319 million to $142 million in a year, "is on the road to bankruptcy."

They also purport to see signs that recovery in the United States may not be going as strong as it was a few months ago.

"There is nothing in any of the figures now available," the CLC staff said, "which appears to make it necessary to cut down on our previous estimates of peak winter unemployment as likely to reach 600,000 to 650,000."

Canada's labor force, like that in the U.S., is slowing down in its growth, the economists reported. It increased by 199,000 between April and November 1960, but by only 64,000 between April and November 1961.

In the U.S., Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has said that failure of the work force to grow at a normal pace can be partly attributed to the lack of jobs known to be available to certain groups, including women, older people and marginal farm workers.

The Canadian researchers estimated about 20,000 of the 135,000 decline in the growth rate in this country could be attributed to a falling off of immigration, but this still leaves 115,000 unaccounted for. Most of the drop came in women workers. Growth has been almost normal in the male labor force, where unemployment has been highest. The report added:

"On the face of it, this suggests that something like this number may have dropped out of the labor force through despair of getting work. Closer analysis casts some doubt on this. . . .

"It is possible that there may be some concealed unemployment, but the indications are that it is not very large."

very well-informed about the difficulties that have arisen at some of these bases, but is not equally informed about the great dedication, ability and effort that has gone into their construction."

The secretary congratulated workers at the sites for their cooperation with the President's Missile Sites Labor Commission and the local committees established to avoid and prevent work stoppages by seeking voluntary solutions to labor-management disputes.

He read a letter of appreciation from Pres. Kennedy which noted that since establishment of the commission, 217,000 man-days had been worked at Forbes without a single man-day lost to labor disputes, and that at Warren only 23 man-days had been lost out of 322,300.

"This is heartening information for the American people," the President's letter said. "They can also feel secure in the knowledge that today, as the result of cooperation between labor, management and government, every missile site construction project is expected to be completed on time or ahead of schedule."

Goldberg observed that the work record at other missile bases was "very good" and that stoppages had been reduced to an "infinitesimal" proportion of total man-days worked since establishment of the President's Missile Sites Commission.

Other speakers included Joseph S. Imirie, assistant secretary of the Air Force; Maj. Gen. William Thurman of the Air Force, and Robert H. Moore, deputy director of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service.

Union representatives cited as members of the Forbes AFB committee were Roy Gooden, Operating Engineers Local 101; Thomas P. Guinn, Iron Workers Local 10; M. C. Roberts, business manager of Plumbers & Pipe Fitters Local 763; Intl. Rep. Glen Sears, Operating Engineers; Paul Knox, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 304; Intl. Rep. George Eichorn, Machinists.

Receiving certificates as labor members of the Warren AFB committee were John K. Shaw and Roy Stewart, IAM Grand Lodge representatives; Guy van Portfliet, Northeastern Colorado Building Trades Council; Fay E. Tomkin, business representative of Plumbers & Pipe Fitters Local 192, and Carl B. Mitchell, business representative of Painters Local 571.

'Defunct' Local Wasn't, NLRB Says in Ruling

Hebron, N. D.—A contract clause recognizing a union as the bargaining agency only of its members was "inartfully drawn" but nevertheless covered all employes of the Hebron Brick Co. in the bargaining unit of the Brick & Clay Workers, the National Labor Relations Board has ruled.

The board in a 3-1 decision reversed the finding of an NLRB regional director that the contract was not a bar to an election asked by the unaffiliated Teamsters and dismissed the election petition.

The Teamsters filed an election petition last May 16 for a unit of all plant employes in spite of the existence of a contract between the campany and Brick & Clay Local 901. The NLRB's regional director held a hearing June 1 and decided the contract would not bar a new election because (1) the contract was a "members only" agreement and (2) Local 901 was "defunct."

An NLRB majority of Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown made a finding that:

- The intent and practice of the contracting parties was to put all plant production and maintenance employes under the contract, regardless of union membership.
- Certain local members attempted to disaffiliate from the union because of dissatisfaction with contract terms but the local continued to get service from an international union representative and therefore it was not "defunct."

NLRB member Philip Ray Rodgers dissented, saying he agreed with the regional director.

URW at Mansfield Wins 7.5-Cent Raise

Mansfield, O.—Members of Local 17, Rubber Workers, have agreed to a wage increase of 7.5 cents an hour and revisions of work standards in the contract with Mansfield Tire & Rubber Co. Union and management said in a joint statement that the work standards revisions will be effective May 3 and are for "increased efficiency and productivity."

Mason Named To Legislative Post by BCTD

Walter J. Mason, since 1947 a legislative representative in Washington for the former AFL and the AFL-CIO, has been named legislative director and assistant to the president of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.

A former secretary and president of what is now Local 900 of the Boiler Makers in Barberton, O., he served two years as president of the Barberton Central Labor Union and for six years as clerk of the Barberton city council.

During World War II he was AFL member of the Akron War Manpower Commission and a panel member on the 5th Regional War Labor Board. When the War Labor Board was terminated, he moved to Washington as a member of the National Wage Stabilization Board, on which he served until he joined the former AFL staff.

Since 1948 he has been a member of the executive committee of the President's Committee on Employment of the Physically Handicapped.

Modern Africa's Workers Reject Reds

'Solidarity Forever' Ends First Meeting

By Arnold Beichman

Dakar, Senegal—When the labor history of modern Africa is written, Jan. 14, 1962, will be a date with a chapter all its own. For it was on that day that 84 delegates from African trade unions, meeting in the capital city of this one-time French colony, did what a year ago seemed impossible.

Representing 41 national labor centers in 30 independent states and dependent territories, these African delegates created the African Trade Union Confederation (ATUC) comprising 22 affiliates of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, 12 affiliates of the Intl. Federation of Christian Trade Unions and seven independent of any affiliation.

By doing so, they defied the government-dominated labor organizations of Ghana, Guinea, Mali and the United Arab Republic and the government-threatened Moroccan center. These in May 1961 fabricated a rump All-African Trade Union Federation (AATUF) at Casablanca. Despite numerous objections, the Ghana-led group at that time rammed through a resolution demanding that African unions withdraw from ICFTU within 10 months—or else, said John K. Tettegah, Ghana Trades Union Congress labor secretary and cabinet member, it would be "total war" against violators of the edict.

African labor leaders, particularly from Tunisia, Kenya, Nigeria and Senegal, were neither amused nor cowed by Tettegah's threat. Instead they issued a continentwide appeal for a pan-African labor conference to which they invited all bona fide trade union groups as well as the AATUF members in a bid for what was called "African unity."

The conference ran from Jan. 9 to Jan. 14. Despite age-old cultural, historical, ideological and political differences, it ended not only on a note of unity but on one of music as well. For as the final vote for the new officers was taken, to be followed by adjournment, a strapping delegate, Lawrence Sawyer of the Liberia center, grabbed the microphone and roared:

"Everybody sing 'Solidarity Forever.' Come on, everybody!"

And so to the tune of "John Brown's Body", the delegates (many of them French-speaking who neither knew the words nor music) chanted their victory song with its rousing last line: "For the union makes us strong."

Establishment of ATUC paralleled in one way the establishment in 1949 of the ICFTU. It was the unyielding Communist attempt to control the World Federation of Trade Unions which led to secession by free trade unions from that united front to form the ICFTU. It was the Soviet-supported AATUF line against ICFTU and the Christian unions which made possible ATUC. Without, however, the strong feeling for pan-Africanism as the initial inspiration, ATUC would still be some way off.

From a political standpoint, the congress was a triumph for the free world. This is not to say that ATUC intends to become an appendage to western political or military alliances. It means that African free trade unionism has no intention of withdrawing into neo-isolationism and anti-foreignism, but that it intends to maintain its relationship with the free trade unions in other parts of the world.

All Dictatorship Hit

It became apparent during the six-day conference that the delegates intended ATUC to be genuinely neutral and uncommitted, but not onesidedly so as was the case of the ill-fated Belgrade conference in September. While condemning colonialism, repudiating capitalism and imperialism, ATUC specifically singled out and rejected "communism and other dictatorships" for Africa.

A key speech of Lawrence L. Borha, secretary of the Trades Union Congress of Nigeria, was punctuated by applause, particularly when he said:

"Is it not more honorable to affirm Africa's brotherhood with the ICFTU and the IFCTU who can hold up their heads as proud and brave men, free to differ with their governments or with those who are chattels and slaves of dictators? These men who call themselves neutralists and condemn only one side are not neutralists but tools in the service of an ideological machine which feeds them not bread and butter, not social justice, but empty slogans.

"If we are to be honest and avoid hypocrisy, let us acknowledge the simple truth of the modern world—there are no neutral men when the choice is between liberty and servitude. Dictatorship robs men of dignity and it destroys the institutions such as trade unionism—which protect man's dignity.

"Even here in Africa we have seen what bitter suffering dictatorship has caused workers. We have seen and sorrowed at how dictatorship has turned trade unions in certain countries in Africa into fawning prostitutes."

Alphonse Kithima, general secretary of the Confederation of Free Trade Unions of Congo (Leopoldville) received as warm an ovation as Borha when he said:

"A new imperialist wave is preparing to fall on Africa. This new imperialism speaks of freedom and the brotherhood of nations, but behind it lies the workers massacred in the streets of East Berlin for demanding bread and justice; the Korean peasants dead in the fields over which a ruthless war of conquest has just passed; the workmen and students of Budapest, crushed by foreign tanks for having dared to proclaim their country's right to independence and the government of its choice.

Free Labor Backing Hailed

"The AATUF leadership regards it as undesirable for the young African trade unions to get to know that other unionism which keeps itself free from all governmental pressure and which has made it possible for workers even in certain western countries with a heavy record of imperialism to support us, the colonized, as against their own governments, the colonizers."

If there was an underlying theme it was a dedicated effort to find some common, genuine basis for the slogan, "African unity," the merest mention of which is guaranteed to evoke as many cheers and as much applause as an oratorical citation of the Declaration of Independence at a 4th of July picnic. It was a desire by Africans to find something distinctive in themselves without necessarily separating themselves from the rest of the world.

Thus, the ATUC constitution repudiates capitalism in favor of socialism or, as it is known here, Afro-Socialism. Yet to find out what is meant by "Afro-Socialism" is not easy. It is easy, however, to learn what it is not.

It is not Marxist because it is not based on the doctrine of class struggle. As Pres. Leopold Sedar-Senghor of Senegal said to this reporter: "There is no class struggle in Africa because there is only one class in Africa—the poor." It does not look upon Moscow as an example of socialism. Nor does it look upon total nationalization as essentail to achieve "Afro-socialism."

If it means anything, it means that trade unions ought to be an integral consultative body in national planning; that government should control, in some degree, national resources and key industries; that while capital is wanted, as one delegate put it, capitalism is not. Yet it was agreed by most delegates that the enemy was not capitalism as such, but its evil embodiment—colonialism.

The realistic approach was seen in the realization that it was insufficient to sloganeer either about "Afro-socialism" or "neo-colonialism"—a reference to the danger that even after independence, the onetime colonialists stay on or return to run things all over again. The emphasis was on the need to train Africans themselves to take over the operation of a new country.

Creation of some kind of institute in Africa was called for by the congress to provide for technical training, on all levels, of cadres which could return to their newly-independent lands and move in on the railroad yards, the powerplants, the finance ministries, the universities, the newspapers, the public works departments — and make them hum. The assumption was fundamental—such training ought to be a major effort of African trade unionism and without such education, rising wage levels and better working conditions would be a long time coming.

Huge Job Ahead

The ATUC has a huge job ahead. Despite the climax of its six-day meeting, the exultant uproar and football-stadium cheering, most of the delegates went home aware that the next few years would make clear whether African free trade unionism had a future as a democratic institution or whether it was doomed to become a transmission belt for a continent of would-be dictators or strongmen.

If resolutions mean anything—and sometimes they do—the unions comprising ATUC are in the market for help, not patronage.

Free trade unionism in the rest of the world, to which the ATUC is firmly allied, also has its contribution to make, politically, economically and socially. From North Africa to Johannesburg and from Dakar to Dar-es-Salaam there are young men, some dedicated, some merely careerist, who have found in trade unionism a mode of socio-political expression which they recognize knows no territorial boundaries in and outside Africa.

They now await some reply to the program they undertook in the city of Dakar on Jan. 14, 1962.

FREE LABOR MOVEMENTS of most African countries formed the African Trade Union Confederation at a meeting in Dakar, Senegal, a view of which is shown above. Most of its affiliates also belong to either the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions or the Intl. Federation of Christian Trade Unions.

Tunis Labor Center Hailed in 16th Year

Pres. George Meany has sent the fraternal greetings of the AFL-CIO to the General Union of Tunisian Workers on the 16th anniversary of its founding and hailed it as "a most vital force for the democratic rights, national freedom and social justice for the Tunisian people."

In a cable to Gen. Sec. Ahmed Tiili, he recalled "with real pride" American labor's close cooperation with the late Farhat Hached, first general secretary of the UGTT who was murdered, asserting Hached's "devotion to democracy and hostility to all dictatorships have inspired workers everywhere."

"I convey to you best wishes for your continued success," Meany said. "I am confident that our relations with UGTT, which began during the first and most difficult days of the Tunisian people's struggle for national independence, will grow ever firmer and more fruitful in behalf of our common ideals and aims of human well-being, democracy, and just and peaceful relations among all nations."

Cuban Labor Loses Gains of Generation

The benefits Cuban workers had gained during a generation of struggle were wiped out at the convention of the Castro-controlled Cuban Confederation of Labor (CTC) in Havana last November, according to reports from inside the island to the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers.

AFL-CIO Inter-American Rep. Serafino Romualdi said ORIT was advised that the benefits the workers gave up under the guise of "voluntary action" were spelled out either in pre-Castro labor contracts, in the Cuban Constitution or in the Labor Code.

Benefits yielded included:

- Thirty days of paid vacation provided for in the 1960 Constitution.
- Nine days paid sick leave (legislation).
- A half-day of extra pay per week gained when the workweek was cut from 48 to 44 hours with no reduction in pay.
- The Christmas bonus, in most cases 15 days' pay but ranging as high as 90 days' pay.
- Summer vacation of a half-day a week during the four hottest months.
- Four national holidays, spelled out in the 1940 Constitution.
- Four additional optional holidays.
- A cut in yearly income of sugar workers of 45 percent, made up of abandonment of production bonuses and of overtime.

Reports to ORIT, Romualdi added, said also that the convention voted to continue "voluntary" taxes for retirement, maternity compensation, the industrialization program, agrarian reform and the purchase of arms and airplanes. They total 17 percent of wages.

Thomas Allen Dies; Elevator Union Head

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Thomas Allen, president of the Elevator Constructors since 1959, died in Miami Beach, Fla., Jan. 24 at the age of 76.

A telegram of condolence from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler paid tribute to Allen's "distinguished life as a trade-union leader" and declared:

"His dedication to the principles that represent the highest ideals of the labor movement will be remembered by all trade unionists."

Allen had served as first vice president of the union for 18 years before becoming president. He had been business representative of Local 6 in Pittsburgh for 31 years.

The President's Economics

PRES. KENNEDY'S first annual economic report is a refreshing change from the tone and approach of reports in the past eight years. The President gives full and unequivocating support to the Employment Act of 1946 and both his message and the Council of Economic Advisers' analysis are framed in terms of the act.

In his report to Congress and the nation, the President called the act a "declaration of national purpose" and a "recognition of federal responsibility" that "has few parallels in the nation's history." In passing the act, he noted, "Congress registered the consensus of the American people that this nation will not countenance the suffering, frustration and injustice of unemployment, or let the vast potential of the world's leading economy run to waste in idle manpower, silent machinery and empty plants."

It is because of this strong support for the keystones of "maximum employment, production and purchasing power" that the economic projections of the President and his advisers are somewhat disappointing.

The Administration projects a gross national product—the total value of all goods and services produced—of $600 billion by mid-1963, based on the current "brisk" recovery continuing to pick up momentum.

But while the GNP moves to a new all-time record the best that the Administration can hold out in terms of unemployment is a drop to a 4 percent rate.

Furthermore, the President's plans for stand-by authority on public works and taxes are specifically designed to cope with a future recession rather than the present state of high unemployment.

For the year 1962, the best forecast of the President's economic advisers is a drop from the present 6.1 percent jobless rate to about 5 percent. A number of prominent economists doubt that the rate will drop that far by December 1962.

This falls short of the maximum employment and production set out in the Employment Act of 1946. The President's report recognizes this but argues that given the complex problem of balance of payments and other factors present in the current economic situation this is the best that can be accomplished at this time.

The Administration's economic position and arguments command respectful attention, but an economic program that accepts less than maximum employment and maximum utilization of the nation's productive capability does not fully measure up to the goals of national policy.

Opportunity and Challenge

IN THE ANNALS of government workers and their organizations, the President's executive order on union recognition will rank in significance with the Lloyd-LaFollette Act of 1912.

The 1912 act said government employes couldn't be fired or demoted if they organized to seek improvements in wages, hours or working conditions. But there was nothing which required agency and department heads to bargain with—or even consult—unions representing their employes.

The more enlightened of government management officials did welcome and consult with unions. But it was a policy which might shift from day to day, from enlightened cooperation by one official to thinly veiled hostility by his successor.

As unions in the civil service develop strength, collective bargaining will rightfully become the foundation of the federal government's labor policy.

U.S. Food 'Crisis' Seen Warning On Production Boom in Industry

IN A NATION where there are people who are hungry and others who exist on deficient diets, and in a world in which millions of people are starving, the United States is faced with a crisis of abundance of food.

Ironically, this "crisis" has reached such a point that Sec. of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman recently called a conference on "Food & People." Some 400 delegates who produce, process and sell farm products attended, including representatives from organized labor.

"Perhaps at no time in the history of man has any nation faced so unique a challenge," Freeman told the conference, "for at no time in history has any people had to contend with the crisis of abundance. It is a challenge which two thirds of the people of the world would gladly accept since they still must contend daily with the crisis of scarcity."

This crisis of abundance has been with us for some time, but in recent years has grown to a point of severity.

"In terms of the statistics of the agricultural economy," Freeman declared, "the source of this abundance is not hard to describe. It is basically the product of a vast revolution in agricultural productivity brought on by the impact of science and technology."

The secretary pointed out that productivity per man-hour on the farm has increased 6.2 percent annually in the last 10 years. So, today, one man-hour of work in agriculture produces double what it did in 1950. Farm output in the last decade has gone up 2.5 percent per year at a time when the national population has risen only 1.7 percent.

"The United States will continue to accumulate substantial supplies of food and fiber unless a thoroughly coordinated program to balance supply with effective commercial and concessional demand is developed," he said.

THIS TECHNOLOGICAL "explosion" in the agricultural segment of our economy, in the opinion of many authorities, provides serious warning signals for industry now in the early stages of sweeping automation which is fundamentally changing the nature of our industrial labor force, producing vastly more with fewer workers.

Freeman is constantly stressing the point that the abundance in agriculture should be a source of health to the national economy rather than a crisis. Also, in a world with so many starving peoples, food becomes power and the ability to "produce it in huge quantities is huge power."

It would be a simple answer to say that we have too much and others have too little, so put the two problems together and you have a solution. But it isn't that easy. Here are some problems:

- Many areas of the world lack adequate transportation, storage and distribution facilities to use food that could be made available.
- Traditional eating habits cause many people to be reluctant to use the food we grow in the United States in greatest abundance.
- The disruption of traditional commercial relationships in many areas would cause economic dislocation and even more hunger—and possibly revolution.

This is not to say that nothing is being done about this rising surplus. Much has been done in the past and Freeman, Food for Peace Director George McGovern and others have plans to do a great deal more.

Since the mid-1950's this country has distributed over $9 billion worth of food and fiber to people living throughout the world. In 1961 alone the U.S. invested approximately $4 billion in "Food for Peace."

McGovern told the Conference on Food & People that "although progress is being made, there is a need for more consideration by U.S. loan agencies and foreign assistance planners of the possibilities of using food to supplement dollar aid. No United States official should give final clearance to a foreign loan until he is convinced that the possibility of using food as a substitute or supplement for aid dollars has been fully evaluated."

Agricultural exports rose to an all-time record in excess of $5 billion in 1961.

In 11 countries, U.S.-donated food is being used as an instrument in economic development—for the partial payment of wages on public works projects. Negotiations are under way for similar projects in 25 other countries.

In 1960, some 54 million people were fed with U.S. foodstuffs donated to private voluntary agencies and this number was increased by 10 million during 1961.

On the domestic front, Americans generally have been eating more and better food.

Almost 1.7 million pounds of food were made available in 1961 to 23 million school children, needy families, persons in institutions and those living in areas where natural disaster has struck.

Food stamp plan pilot programs have been established in eight areas with about 140,000 needy persons participating. On the average, recipients are paying $63 for every $100 worth of coupons received.

An all-time record of nearly 14 million children are eating nutritionally balanced school lunches.

Morgan Says:

Virginia Feels We Should Join World Despite Its Warts, etc.

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m. EST.)

ON THE FLOOR of the House one day, Rep. James B. Utt, a Republican from Southern California, delivered a doleful speech. He started out by reminding his colleagues that on the first day of this session he had introduced a bill to "rescind and revoke membership of the United States in the United Nations and the specialized agencies thereof. . . ."

Morgan

It didn't take him long to make his reasons plain. As he surveyed the brooding, beclouded horizons of the globe he liked nothing of what he saw and he blamed it all, in effect, on the UN as the root of all evil. "The power, the honor, and the prestige of America have fallen from their high point in 1945 to an absolute zero today," intoned the Hon. Mr. Utt as if he were reading the republic's epitaph. Indeed it is a wonder that he even bothered to deliver his funeral oration because he clearly believes that the United States has already been dealt a mortal blow by entangling alliances with and through the UN. "This conversion of our limited republic to an unlimited democracy," he declared abruptly, "is a death blow to our nation."

Rep. Utt's version of history and his vision of the present danger, bizarre as they are, cannot be carelessly brushed aside. His logic is opaque but his feelings are clearly genuine and they are shared by a frustrated but vocal minority of citizens who will do their utmost to block congressional authorization of the $100 million subscription Pres. Kennedy wants for the UN bond issue to keep that organization a going concern.

This school, or perhaps it should be called a kindergarten, of thought is also behind the charge that the Pentagon has been "muzzling" patriotic anti-Communist sentiments of the military brass, a charge brought under official public scrutiny as a Senate subcommittee opened hearings on the subject. The reasoning of Rep. Utt and his friends is overwhelmingly simple. If something happens in the world we do not like we either ignore it as if it didn't exist or we run up the flag, roll the drums and rush out and change it. Our objective: total indifference or total victory; in other words we play to win or we don't play.

In the good old days before Korea this is the way we played or at least this is the way we told ourselves we played. But this handy though outdated and dangerously oversimplified formula is being replaced by the realization that we may not necessarily win them all, that our will may now be opposed by forces of equal strength. It is this painful change which understandably infuriates generals, admirals and amateur civilian dabblers in the risky game of international politics—especially when they are told that partly due to the existence of a gadget known as a nuclear warhead, their own neatly-packaged solutions are not adequate.

There are sincere citizens who cry that anything short of "total victory" is appeasement, surrender. Admittedly there is a danger of being so benumbed by the threat of nuclear war that our foreign policy becomes impotent but, taking the wagonload of fragile complexities into consideration, neither our allies nor our adversaries are reacting as if we were impotent.

Perhaps what we are in the process of surrendering is a narrowly nationalistic point of view. Even while Rep. Utt was addressing Congress last week the town of Redding, Conn., was in something of a turmoil over an editorial in the Joel Berlow High School paper attacking patriotism as "stupid." This was enough to mobilize almost instant protest from the American Legion, concern by the chairman of the school board and criticism from the Republican town committee. Indeed there was a public meeting on the issue.

THE EDITORIAL, entitled A Higher Loyalty, was written by the 17-year-old editor, Virginia Olsen. Her theme was that patriotism, in a narrow sense, had outlived its usefulness and needed to be replaced by a "loyalty to the world."

Principal Roy B. Briggs says he and the faculty feel the school paper should be a forum for opinion, where students have a right to say what they please and then, if necessary, answer to the consequences.

Judging by the short-term consequences of bitter protest, Virginia may be a little before her time and she may have expressed her hopes with the callow impatience of incautious youth. But the consequences in the long run will be far more disastrous if we do not realize that we do owe a loyalty to the human race. This does not mean disloyalty to our own country or its foundation principles. It means a recognition of the fact that we are a part, a large and influential part, of an international neighborhood but not one in which what we say always goes.

Rep. Utt seems tired, discouraged and irritated with the times and would like, in effect, to have us resign from the world. Virginia wants us to join it, risks, warts and all. With or without a Santa Claus, Virginia, I'm with you. Where else is there to go?

Washington Reports:

Urgency of Foreign Trade Bill Stressed by Rival Senate Whips

SENATE MAJORITY WHIP Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) and Minority Whip Thomas H. Kuchel (R-Calif.) share a belief that the foreign trade bill is one of the most urgent pieces of legislation to come before the current session of Congress and both of them predict its passage.

Interviewed on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on 500 radio stations, Humphrey said:

"The only way I see to get our share of world markets—which means jobs, which means production—is to have a liberalized trade program. If we fail to get the program the President has asked for, there will be a flight of capital from the United States to the western European market. That would mean more plants built there, hiring European workers, taking jobs away from American workers, and taking our capital, too."

Kuchel stressed the need of trade legislation this year and said the U.S. needs to expand its trade in the Pacific as well as across the Atlantic. The Republican leader also lamented current criticism of the United Nations.

"The UN has served a great and noble purpose," he declared. "It would be a grave threat to peace if people in this country prodded the government into pushing the UN over an abyss."

Humphrey said the Senate will take up his pending Youth Opportunities bill in the near future, and that it would work on an overall tax bill "about the middle of February."

"The Administration is presenting a tax measure that would close certain loopholes," the Senator declared.

Kuchel, saying he did not expect Congress to give the President stand-by authority to lower taxes on his own initiative, added:

"I do want to say that if the President were to recommend changes in the tax structure, lowering the income tax rate, for instance, I feel sure a bipartisan majority—perhaps everyone in the Congress—would approve it.'

The California senator said he doubted that the President had gone as far as he should in civil rights recommendations.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

PRES. KENNEDY FACED SQUARELY two hotly controversial issues in his Jan. 24 news conference—the question of clearance of political statements by officers of the armed forces and the defeat in the House Rules Committee of his proposed new Dept. of Urban Affairs. He made it clear that he had no intention of submitting to the defeat and no intention of allowing right-wing conservatives to destroy the system under which civilian guidance on political matters is given the military.

Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina thinks it is "censorship," unjustified and unwarranted, for an officer to be told to eliminate some phrase from a public speech or magazine article. He has defended resigned Maj. Gen. Edwin Walker, who was disciplined and transferred when he was revealed as having sought to indoctrinate troops with right-wing dogma casting doubt on the integrity of political figures of long service, including former Presidents and Chief Justice Warren.

To Thurmond, many convictions with which the overwhelming majority of Americans disagree nevertheless seem to be articles of faith. Obviously this is true of Walker also. The doctrine is being examined in the hearings conducted by Sen. John Stennis of Mississippi.

The point is that other Americans feel just as strongly the opposite of Thurmond. They favor federal expansion of activities, federal investment in schools, health and education, equal treatment of citizens of all races, and they have strong convictions about the way in which American democracy should defend itself against both the Soviet Union and internal communism. The fact they feel this way creates political issues between themselves on one hand, and Thurmond and Walker on the other.

The President pointed out that he had submitted his own State of the Union address to the State Dept. and Defense Dept. for comments and guidance on language and tone by the experts.

When a high officer speaks publicly, he is viewed as a spokesman of the government, Mr. Kennedy emphasized, and declared plainly that there must be "coordination of speeches which interpret government policy, so that the United States speaks with force and strength."

He reminded the public that the government is large, that it deals with problems "that are extremely important and sensitive," involving our relations around the world. Review of and comments on statements of officers by responsible civilian superiors and authorized deputies, Kennedy indicated, "is the way we can coordinate and make effective expressions of our views."

A high officer who denies the right of civilian superiors to coordinate his public statements and political indoctrinations, to suggest changes in phrase in delicate areas, exposes a lack of political sensitivity. He also exposes a curious reluctance to accept the supremacy of the civilian authority. If he wants to be in politics, the way for him to do it is to resign and run for office.

ON THE URBAN AFFAIRS ISSUE, the President threw down a direct challenge to the Republican leadership by announcing he would not allow defeat by the House Rules Committee to kill the department.

He would create it by executive order, he declared, under his reorganization powers, and would name Housing Administrator Robert C. Weaver, a Negro, as the first secretary. He spoke sardonically of recent Republican declarations that they wanted to step up their appeal to residents in the big cities.

Four southern Democrats voted in the Rules Committee against the department; six Democrats voted in favor of it. All five Republican members voted to kill it.

Under reorganization procedures, a resolution to veto a department established by executive action must go to the floor. A roll-call vote against it and against Mr. Weaver may be no embarrassment to southern Democrats. It may be very painful for northern and urban-district Republicans—who recently have been jibing at the Administration for lack of legislative proposals on civil rights.

How to Buy:

February Furniture Sales Offer Major Opportunity to Shoppers

By Sidney Margolius

FURNITURE AND RUGS are the big shopping opportunity in February. Reductions of 10-20 percent are available on most furnishings, including those of well-known designers and manufacturers which are price-maintained, by one device or another, most of the rest of the year.

Other home sales this month include china, glassware, housewares and curtains.

In food, beef, pork and lamb are still relatively reasonable, but turkeys, broilers and eggs are the outstanding buys this month. Canned salmon is especially abundant this winter, marketing services report. Fresh produce is scarce and costly, and value-wise families will look for values in canned vegetables. Canned corn is in heavy supply and an especially good buy this year. Winter is also the season for citrus fruits—in heavier supply this year than last.

Some furniture manufacturers seem to be trying to set back furniture styles instead of advancing them.

In shopping the furniture sales this month, you'll find stores offering some massive, over-elaborate styles. Some look like the fancy "moderne" furniture that first came out a generation ago. This bulky furniture means extra cost and housekeeping work.

Truly modern furniture, or "contemporary" as it is sometimes called, is compact in size and light in weight. But it is architecturally designed so that a smaller chair is as comfortable as a bulky one. Contemporary furniture also has simple, clean unadorned lines. Danish-inspired furniture is a good example.

In upholstered furniture, the costlier chairs and sofas are usually made with deep spiral coils. Less-expensive but still satisfactory pieces are made with crimped, zigzag steel webbing. The zigzag construction does not have quite the deep-seating comfort of coil springs. But it is moderate in price, durable and enables lighter-weight, more compact styles.

Quality of coilspring construction varies considerably. Some upholstered pieces have as many as 12 springs to a seat section, others as few as six. Both the number of springs and the number of coils each spring has affect buoyancy.

In better-grade coilspring construction, the springs also are hand-tied to keep them from shifting.

GENUINE LATEX FOAM cushioning is costlier than the synthetic urethane and considered preferable for shape retention and durability. Urethane, however, is satisfactory if it has sufficient "density." Observe the comparative resilience of filling when you sit on chairs or sofas, or compress a cushion in your hand, and heft it to see if it is very lightweight urethane or the more dense grades.

The best, but also costliest type of foam construction is latex wrapped in a layer of Dacron for a combination of softness (the Dacron) and support (the latex). Some all-foam cushions achieve this combination of softness and buoyancy by a surface layer of soft foam laminated to a core of load-bearing buoyant foam.

Such laminates, as well as the Dacron-foam combination, also enable neater tailoring of the covering material.

In buying plastic-covered chairs, which are increasing in popularity, you need to be especially careful of the quality of the plastic. Some chairs have only thin, lightweight plastic which wears through quickly and tends to tear easily. One leading manufacturer recently even charged in Home Furnishings Daily that the industry is selling "phony value" in some chairs of this type. He said some mass retailers are representing chairs worth only $49 as $99 chairs. These have 21-ounce plastic coverings which will last only a few years, compared to the 32-ounce plastic which would last perhaps 15 years.

In bedroom and other "case-goods" furniture, there's at least one worthwhile trend—to "bunching" pieces. These are chests, vanities, dressers, etc., with trim, squared-off lines so they can be bunched side by side for more storage room in less space.

Television-set manufacturers have become concerned over current public reaction against the quality of TV shows—what has become known in the industry as the "boob-tube" image. The effect of the loss of interest in TV programs is that set manufacturers are keeping their prices down, and in fact are offering some excellent values. Several manufacturers recently introduced 19-inch portables listing at $140. Thus with discounts these are available around $115-$120.

Cynicism Growing:

Marketplace Needs ConsumerStandards

The following is excerpted from an address by Mrs. Helen Ewing Nelson, consumer counsel to the governor of California, at a recent conference sponsored by the attorney general of Michigan.

PERHAPS ONE OF THE MOST AMAZING things, considering what they must endure, is the confidence and trust consumers have maintained in the current disorder of our marketplace.

Cynicism and disillusionment as well as outright distrust are undoubtedly prevalent and growing. Yet it is not possible to point the finger at any one group or any one condition and say, "This is to blame."

Perhaps we have all been at fault.

We have come so far so fast in our race toward technological perfection it is understandable that we were unable to pace all economic and political developments at the same speed.

Now we are finding the time and the determination to stop to take a lifetime view of ourselves in our role as consumers. It is high time we try to prove ourselves, singly and collectively, to be as effective as consumers as we have proved to be as producers.

A bigger-than-ever paycheck is of no benefit to us if, as consumers, we get less-and-less living value out of it.

I do not believe that when we stop and think about it, we are going to advocate a system of every-day buying where the buyer gives up beforehand any effort to function rationally.

I do not believe employers want their wage dollars spent by a consumer dazzled by a flashlight waving in front of her eyes.

I don't believe any of us want the average family buying more than 12,000 pounds of meat over the next 20 years in any way except with an awareness of the responsibility, some thought and knowledge expended on the task—and some dependable standards to guide their efforts.

I don't think as a society we want to be party to this family's buying 8,000 pounds of potatoes—or even 800 pounds—without being able to tell whether the price is 80 cents or $1 a pound.

I do not believe we will be party to this shoddy waste of both money and human pride when a bit of honest information and some generally enforced standards of fair play could make it all unnecessary.

How to preserve or redefine the buyer's traditional rights and the buyer's responsibilities and increase his skills?

These are the questions before the house. They are ours to answer.

Insomniacs Offered Shortcuts On How Not to Get Back to Sleep

By Jane Goodsell

ARE YOU AN INSOMNIAC? If so, don't look to me for advice on how to get back to sleep. I don't know any easy shortcuts to sweet slumber. I can, however, give you the negative side of the picture. I can tell you exactly how not to get back to sleep.

Here is a list of sleep-murdering thoughts that I strongly advise you not to think about as you lie at 4 a. m., plucking at the coverlet and staring, wide-eyed, at the ceiling:

- Where in the world did I put the Christmas card list last year?
- I wonder what the teacher meant when she said that Junior reacts negatively to group orientation?
- Could that numb feeling in my left foot be anything serious?
- What's the name of the postmaster general?
- Why did I ever agree to be the chairman of the church bazaar, and why didn't I tell Mrs. Twitchell off when she accused me of spending too much money for decorations?
- What time is it?
- Did I remember to draw the fire screen before I came upstairs?
- Is there enough money in the bank to cover that check I made out to the rug cleaner?
- What did I serve for dinner the last time we had the Twombleys? Veal scaloppini? Roast beef? Chicken tetrazzini?
- I wonder if there's anything good to eat in the refrigerator?
- Do I hear somebody prowling downstairs?
- I wonder if there really are such things as vampires?
- What do I want for my birthday this year?
- What was today's radiation level?
- Now that I've shortened all my hems, will longer skirts come back in style?
- What is my husband mumbling in his sleep? I thought I heard him mutter "Dolores." I don't know anybody named Dolores.
- I forgot to put the split peas to soak before I went to bed. Should I get up and do it now?
- How much fire insurance do we have?
- Who wrote "Tiger, tiger, burning bright"?
- Now what time is it?

Keep Up With Congress

The AFL-CIO public service program that features each week senators and congressmen of both parties discussing the issues before Congress.

Union Tells NLRB:

Workers Need Jobs, Not 'Piece of Paper'

The Allied Industrial Workers have told the National Labor Relations Board that the union wants jobs and compensation, not an "ineffectual . . . piece of paper," for 1,800 employes thrown out of work when the Peerless Woolen Mills plant at Rossville, Ga., was shut down.

The union has charged that the giant Burlington Industries textile chain closed the plant and moved the machinery to other Burlington mills because the workers had voted for union representation.

A proposed settlement of the unfair labor practice charges, tentatively agreed to by the NLRB regional director and the company, would require Burlington to bargain with the AIW "if and when" it resumes operations at Rossville, and to "cease and desist" from unfair practices such as "threatening employes that the Rossville plant would be closed as a consequence of their union membership."

AIW Attorney David L. Uelmen notified the NLRB that the proposed settlement is "entirely unsatisfactory" to the union. He said the suggested remedy was a "farce" since the plant has already been closed and there is no provision for "undoing" the damages or compensating employes for the "substantial loss" they have suffered as a result of the plant closing.

The union statement pointed out that all the employes would receive under the proposed settlement "is a copy of the notice that states that the employer will not engage in further violations of the law in Rossville, Ga. This piece of paper is being sent to employes in a ghost town, and involves an employer who will never return unless ordered to do so by the NLRB."

The union called on the labor board to "vigorously prosecute" the case against Burlington and to issue an order aimed at:

- Effectively preventing future violations by the company at any of its plants.
- Restoring production to the Rossville plant.
- Compensating employes for the loss of wages they have already suffered by the shift of production from the Rossville plant.

The settlement was proposed by the NLRB regional office after a federal judge had refused the labor board's request for an injunction to halt the closing of the plant until after the NLRB had held hearings and acted on the unfair labor practice charges. The settlement would be in lieu of formal hearings.

NLRB Regional Director Walter Phillips in Atlanta told the AFL-CIO News that he has not yet decided whether to submit the proposed settlement to the labor board for approval or whether to go ahead with formal hearings before a trial examiner in view of the union's objections to the settlement.

The labor board would have to approve any settlement agreement submitted by the regional director.

300 WASHINGTON-BASED PILOTS, members of the AFL-CIO Air Line Pilots, demonstrate at Washington National Airport in support of fellow unionists engaged in a 19-month-long strike against Southern Airways. More than 5,000 ALPA members took part in the demonstrations carried out simultaneously at 23 major air terminals across the country. Leading the Washington group are Captains Floyd Stickney of American, John Boyd of Southern and Tom Latta of American.

NLRB Again Limits Situs Picketing Rule

A California plumbers' local did not launch an illegal secondary boycott when it notified a contractor that it intended to picket one of his subcontractors, a non-union firm, for informational purposes, the National Labor Relations Board has decided in a situs picketing case.

A panel of three NLRB members, in the third of a series of split decisions, voted 2-1 to dismiss an illegal boycott complaint issued under the Taft-Hartley Act against Local 471, Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, of Fortuna, Calif.

The majority—Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and member John H. Fanning—decided, contrary to the charges, that there was no evidence that a union notice of intent to picket a subcontractor on the Fortuna Union High School job was a threat designed to cause the general contractor to cease doing business with the subcontractor, Wyckoff Plumbing.

Furthermore, McCulloch and Fanning said, it was lawful for the union to picket the school, as it did Nov. 2, 1960, instead of Wyckoff Plumbing's place of business two miles away. Member Boyd Leedom dissented, as he had in two other cases involving building construction and a site used by two or more groups of workers.

In the Fortuna case Local 471 made several attempts to organize Wyckoff's employes and to gain recognition, finally notified the general contractor it intended to picket a job Wyckoff was working on and then placed pickets at the site with signs reading: AFL-CIO Picket; Wyckoff Plumbing Unfair to Organized Labor; Plumbers & Pipe Fitters Local 471.

When the picketing commenced, employes of the primary contractor quit work, but returned after 10 minutes when the general contractor ordered Wyckoff's employes off the job. A week later Wyckoff's employes returned to work but the picketing was not resumed.

The rule laid down in the Fortuna case, as in the recent Plauche Electric case, was that picketing of a location other than the employer's own offices is legal if it follows the standards laid down in "Moore Dry Dock."

These standards provide that the picketing be at the situs of the dispute; that the picket signs state clearly the dispute is with one employer, and that picketing occurred only while employes of the employer with whom the union is at odds be on the job and engaged in the normal business of their employer.

Building Trades Rates Up 15 Cents

Hourly pay rates of union building trades workers in major cities rose an average of 15 cents during the year ended last July 1, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics has reported.

The advance was 1 cent more than in the previous year and brought the combined average hourly rate for journeymen, helpers and laborers to $3.83 an hour in cities of 100,000 or more population, according to the 55th annual BLS survey of the building trades.

Nine-tenths of the workers covered in the survey received hourly pay increases during the year, the report said.

Eugene Zack Named Aide With ARA

Eugene C. Zack, a former assistant editor of the AFL-CIO News, has been named special assistant for public affairs for the Area Redevelopment Administration, ARA Administrator William L. Batt, Jr., has announced.

For the past six months, Zack has served as a special consultant on public information with ARA.

EUGENE C. ZACK
Named to Area Redevelopment Administration post.

Zack joined the staff of the AFL-CIO in 1957 and served in New York City as public relations director for AFL-CIO Community Service Activities for a year before transferring to the staff of the AFL-CIO News in Washington.

A member of the Newspaper Guild since 1945, he served in 1960 and 1961 as secretary of the Washington local.

Zack was formerly a reporter on the Springfield, Mass., Daily News and was editor of the weekly Springfield Star. He has also operated a public relations agency and served as a sales executive with the General Electric Co.

Railroad Mediators Set Feb. 10 Deadline

Judge Simon H. Rifkind, chairman of the Presidential Railroad Commission, has announced that the 15-member tripartite group has agreed to extend its activities until Feb. 10 so as to continue efforts to mediate the work rules dispute between the railroads and the operating unions.

Under the Executive Order establishing the commission, its life can be further extended until Mar. 1 if necessary, Rifkind said.

Pilots Tell Passengers Southern Lockout Story

Some 5,000 members of the Air Line Pilots took the story of the union's dispute with Southern Airways to the public a few days before a President's commission was to open public hearings on the 19-month-long strike.

The uniformed pilots, representing all 47 domestic and international airlines, visited 23 major air terminals in 19 states, distributed literature and discussed the strike with passengers.

Heading the government's investigation of the strike is Prof. Nathan P. Feinsinger, who was appointed by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg to inquire into government policy in connection with the dispute.

ALPA Pres. C. N. Sayen described the inquiry as "a constructive effort to resolve the dispute."

The union has filed vigorous exceptions to the preliminary findings of a Civil Aeronautics Board hearing examiner, who rejected the ALPA's charges that Southern had not bargained in good faith and thus had violated both the Railway Labor Act and the Federal Aviation Act. The full CAB must act on the exceptions.

In another development, the ALPA and its units across the country proceeded with plans to reopen contracts under provisions of the rail labor act so as to negotiate clauses permitting them to respect the picket lines of their fellow unionists at Southern.

The proposed change is now being sought from 31 carriers. If they refuse to accede to the request, ALPA said, the union would be free to strike over the issue.

The result, either way, would be to halt the operations of other scheduled airlines in the area now served by Southern, the union said.

The ALPA strike against Southern, involving 138 pilots, began June 5, 1960, after more than a year of negotiations and exhaustion of all procedures under the RLA.

Within six weeks, wages and other issues were resolved with the help of federal mediators. The company, however, insisted that on their return to work, the pilots forfeit their grievance rights and lose their accumulated seniority to strikebreakers it had employed.

This, the ALPA charged, amounted to a lockout, and the dispute continued.

Wagner Hailed for City's New $1.50 Pay Floor

New York—Officers of the City Central Labor Council, AFL-CIO, have praised Mayor Robert F. Wagner (D) for his "social vision" in sponsoring the nation's first municipal ordinance requiring employers doing business with the city to pay their workers $1.50 an hour or more.

Council Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., and Sec. Morris Iushewitz said the mayor's action in signing the new law was a "pioneering step" in the history of New York labor, insuring that goods and services purchased by the city "will not come from sweatshops" but from firms paying decent wage minimums and for products produced under decent conditions.

The council officers noted that opponents of the bill were "the same people who prophesied doom" when the first federal minimum wage bill was enacted.

The new city statute was called for by the mayor in his last campaign for re-election and previously had been approved by the city council and the board of estimate. Its aim, Wagner said, is to bring up pay rates below the $1.50 level, serving as a standard for bidders on city contracts and establishing an official city policy.

At a hearing in City Hall, the new wage minimum was opposed by spokesmen for the Building Trades Association, General Contractors Association, the New York Congress, the Real Estate Board and the laundry industry.

City officials estimated about 60,000 workers will be affected.

ALL THE PAPERS normally necessary to obtain accommodations at a Hilton hotel—a confirmed reservation and the hotel chain's own Carte Blanche credit card—couldn't get a room at the Shamrock-Hilton in Houston for Assistant Labor Sec. George L-P Weaver, a Negro. The hotel denied receiving any reservation, but Weaver said he saw his name on a card in the reservations book.

Lily-White Houston Hotel Bars Assistant Sec. of Labor Weaver

Houston, Tex.—When George L-P Weaver left Houston recently, he had among his mementoes a miniature key to the city. As assistant secretary of labor, Weaver was a distinguished visitor and it is the custom of Mayor Lewis Cutrer to present symbolic keys to such personages.

But the day Weaver arrived in Houston he couldn't get a room in one of the city's better hotels. That, too, is a matter of local custom, said a hotel official.

For Assistant Secretary Weaver is a Negro.

He was turned away by the Shamrock-Hilton, he said, even though he had written confirmation of his room reservation and a Hilton hotel chain credit card, known as "Carte Blanche."

Weaver said both the desk clerk and the assistant manager of the Shamrock denied having received any reservation for him and told him no accommodations were available without one.

The Labor Dept. official said, however, that while discussing the situation with the desk clerk he saw a card bearing his name protruding from the hotel reservations book.

'Open and Shut'

"It was an open and shut case of discrimination," Weaver declared. Before joining the Labor Dept. early in the Kennedy Administration, Weaver had been assistant to Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. He has a long record of service to the government and the labor movement.

He came to Houston to address the annual dinner meeting of the Negro Chamber of Commerce here and was accompanied from the airport to the Shamrock by Vernon Chambers, publicity director for the organization. He spent the night at Chambers' home.

Edgar N. Drake, executive assistant manager of the Shamrock, said later that a "clerical error or late mail" may have been the reason Weaver could not obtain a room.

"Hilton Hotels Corp. policy throughout the world is to welcome any and all guests with or without reservations when accomodations are available except where local custom prohibits such policy," Drake said. He added:

"Local customs have not indicated any hotel admits Negroes."

After leaving the Shamrock, Weaver attended a reception at the Rice Hotel for former Sec. of the Navy John B. Connally, now a candidate for governor.

"I was treated with great courtesy there, and people were friendly," he said.

The Shamrock incident was the first time he had encountered anything of the sort in years of dealing with the Hilton chain, Weaver said. He noted that he had encountered no trouble in staying at the Statler-Hilton in Dallas.

In fact, he observed, the Hilton hotel chain was one of the first to break the color barrier in the mid-1940s.

"More Negroes probably have Hilton credit cards than with any other chain," he said.

The reservation, he said, had been handled by a unit of the Labor Dept. which takes care of such details.

No Trouble Anticipated

"I came not expecting any difficulty whatsoever," he continued. "I do most of my traveling abroad, and many courtesies are extended to me as an official of the government . . . It is very ironical. It hits you like a blow in the pit of the stomach that this can happen to you at home."

Weaver discarded his original plan to address the Chamber of Commerce dinner meeting on the broad subject of international relations, and commented instead on his experience at the Shamrock.

"I have very deep emotions that make it difficult, if not impossible, to read from this manuscript tonight," he told the gathering.

Americans, he said, must realize that such an incident is not just a local affair.

"Now we are on trial," he declared. "The slightest incident at home is news throughout the world and moves very rapidly. What happens here in Houston at 4 p.m. is news in the major cities of the world within the hour, and you'd be surprised in how much detail this news is followed."

Noting that the United States had been attacked in United Nations debates many times over racial discrimination incidents, he called on the American people to "try to understand the issues" so that they will be able to "react positively and in the tradition that made our country great."

AFGE Hunt for Job Bias Wins Promotions for 3

A local unit of the American Federation of Government Employes has put the government's anti-discrimination machinery for the civil service to test—and found that it works.

AFGE Lodge 41, which represents employes of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare in Washington, started last fall by making a civil rights inventory—searching out possible areas of racial discrimination in the agency rather than waiting for complaints to come to the union. They were assured in advance of the cooperation of HEW Assistant Sec. James M. Quigley,

The first three cases the union brought to the attention of department officials and the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity involved three Negro workers who, despite highly favorable recommendations from their immediate superiors, had been repeatedly passed over for promotion. As a result, all three have been ordered promoted—in one case a two-grade jump.

Lodge 41 Pres. John Wydro said two union committees—the grievance committee, headed by Dana Doten, and the civil rights committee, under Warren Morse, worked in close cooperation on the cases.

In a move to put AFGE lodges in the Washington area in the forefront of anti-discrimination efforts, the AFGE's District of Columbia Dept. devoted its annual institute Jan. 13 to a discussion of discrimination and means to combat it. Speakers included Quigley, U.S. Civil Service Commission Chairman John W. Macy and Dr. Otto Klineberg, head of Columbia University's Dept. of Social Psychology.

Union, School Set 4-Year Course:

Boiler Union Agrees On Apprentice Pact

Kansas City, Kans.—The Boiler Makers have launched a major effort to upgrade apprentice boilermakers in the building and metal trades by requiring all apprentices to enroll for correspondence school instruction.

By arrangement with the Intl. Correspondence Schools of Scranton, Pa., and the National Joint Apprenticeship Board for the Boiler Makers Construction Industry, 2,500 apprentices will take a 600-hour 4-year course tailored to uniform national standards recently established by the 81-year-old union.

The Boiler Makers, looking forward to a 50 percent jump in construction activity in the Sixties, concluded that ordinary classroom instruction could not be used by construction workers who must be highly mobile because their jobs move from place to place, Intl. Pres. William A. Calvin said.

Under the contract, every worker who registers as a construction boilermaker apprentice must successfully complete a 49-unit course, including mathematics, mechanics, welding, rigging, and pressure vessel blueprint reading, whose text has been developed by the school to meet a specific union need.

The apprenticeship board will administer the program through apprenticeship committees covering six areas of the U.S., with A. A. Blevins appointed by the union as coordinator. An educational trust fund, financed by employer contributions of 1 cent per man-hour, has been set up to defray the cost.

Union contracts have been rewritten to cover the home-study training program in 40 states. Others will be revised as they expire.

The correspondence school said the agreement with the Boiler Makers is its first with an international union. It has cooperative training agreements with two local or area groups—the Iron Workers Joint Apprenticeship Committee in El Paso, Tex., and the Desert Area Electrical Joint Apprenticeship Committee of Cathedral City, Calif.

Labor Budget Requests Boosted by $13 Million

Pres. Kennedy has asked Congress for an increase of $13 million in funds to operate federal labor agencies in fiscal 1963, about $11 million of which would go to the Labor Dept.

Offsetting the rise is an anticipated drop of $16 million in the cost of unemployment compensation for veterans and federal employes, based on expectations of continued improvement in the nation's economy.

The President's budget message asks $20.3 million for the National Labor Relations Board, with most of the $1.1 million increase requested for additional hearings and investigations. The board expects its volume of unfair practice cases to go up 12 percent and representation cases to increase by 9 percent.

Highlights of the Labor Dept. budget requests:

- $900,000 for the previously-announced new Office of Automation & Manpower with a staff of 55, which will study the effects of technological change on the work force, carry out a public education program and set up a clearing house on manpower development, and promote programs for training and placement of workers. Seymour Wolfbein has been named head of the office.
- $15.3 million for the Bureau of Labor Statistics, representing an increase of $2.8 million to expand and extend fact-gathering services, including the pricing of additional items in more types of stores for the consumer price index, statistics on the changing structure of the work force and unemployment and on the mobility of workers, estimates of the number of new workers needed each year in various occupations, and comparisons of unit labor costs in foreign countries.
- $12.9 million for the Bureau of Employment Security, up $2.4 million from fiscal 1962, nearly all of the increase to go into improving public employment and unemployment insurance services. (This item also reflects an $800,000 cutback in funds spent in connection with temporary extension of unemployment compensation.)
- $15 million for departmental activities under the Area Redevelopment Act, an increase of $1.2 million from the previous year, most of which is scheduled for occupational training.
- $17.8 million for the Wage-Hour Division, embodying an increase of $581,000 to cover minimum wage reviews in Puerto Rico, six wage determinations anticipated under the Walsh-Healey Act, and studies required by Congress of the new federal minimum wage rates.

Should Congress adopt pending legislation on manpower development and training and on youth employment opportunities, $60 million will be needed in each area in fiscal 1963, according to the President's budget message.

Pacts Yielded Raises in 1961 To 5.7 Million

About 5.7 million of 7.75 million workers covered by "major" union agreements received wage increases in 1961 averaging 7 to 8 cents an hour, the Labor Dept. has reported.

Raises for 3.4 million workers were negotiated in 1961, to go into effect during the year. Increases for 2.3 million were deferred raises negotiated in other years. About 250,000 workers were employed where 1961 settlements called for no change, and fewer than 20,000 suffered wage cuts, the department said in a year-end report by its Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Of the other 1.8 million workers covered in the study, rates of pay were not a bargainable issue or negotiations had not been completed by year's end—railroad workers, coal miners, some employes of apparel and electrical equipment firms.

Not included in the study, the BLS said, were contract settlements in construction, the service trades, finance and government, settlements involving fewer than 1,000 workers, or those in non-union establishments. BLS did not estimate the value of changes in supplementary benefits, or changes due to become effective in later years.

Wage increases effective in 1961 ranged from less than 5 cents an hour to 15 cents and over, or from 1 to 17 percent.

Ruttenberg on Budget:

Kennedy 'Overly Optimistic' In Gauging Economy Growth

AFL-CIO Research Director Stanley Ruttenberg has expressed doubt that Pres. Kennedy will achieve a balanced federal budget in fiscal 1963 "even though the President has so said" in his budget message to Congress.

Appearing on Labor News Conference, AFL-CIO public affairs program broadcast weekly by the Mutual network, Ruttenberg said he thought Kennedy was "overly optimistic" in anticipating federal revenues of $93 billion—against proposed expenditures of some $92.5 billion—between mid-1962 and mid-1963.

An 8 percent rate of economic growth over the year, on which Kennedy's revenue estimate is predicated, is "more than can be really anticipated with the existing levels of programs," Ruttenberg commented.

"I hope it happens," he said. "I hope it does, really, but I can't see it, and I do not think the programs that are being advocated in advance by the Administration now are sufficient to give us this kind of an economic recovery."

Ruttenberg said the President's expectation of a 2 percent growth rate in each quarter of the fiscal year may well be fulfilled in the first two quarters of 1962. He predicted, however, that unless Congress enacts "certain positive programs . . . which now do not seem to be in the cards," the economy would run into a "slackening off" in the growth pace, possibly to 1.5 or 1 percent per quarter.

"One of the most serious problems," said the federation economist, "is that the budget may very well—on a cash basis—come into balance when unemployment is still too high."

More U.S. Spending Urged

To avert this, he called for a higher level of federal spending and enactment now—without waiting for the next recession—of the authority the President seeks to increase public works.

In response to questions from Richard Mooney of the New York Times and Hobart Rowen, business trends editor of Newsweek, Ruttenberg expressed the AFL-CIO's support of the President's appeal for authority to cut personal income taxes when a recession threatens.

"One of our big problems in the past," he said, "has been that almost everybody— even the conservative economists—were for tax cuts once we got into a recession, but we never quite got them in a recession period because it took too long to get Congress to act."

If the President could order reduction of individual withholding taxes when economic signs point to a downturn, Ruttenberg said, "this would have a very dramatic effect on the economy."

Such a tax cut, he observed, would be "the first and wisest" weapon to use against a recession, but should be backed up by a federal expenditures program if the tax cut alone proves insufficient to reverse the decline.

He told his interviewers that the AFL-CIO regards as unnecessary the Administration's proposal for an 8 percent across-the-board investment tax credit for business. "Almost 90 percent" of the country's corporations, he said, are failing to invest the funds currently available to them for that purpose.

Plant Capacity Unused

Ruttenberg noted that some 15 percent of the nation's industrial plant capacity is currently lying idle, and that this is true of about 20 percent of the steel industry's capacity.

"I can't see how an investment incentive will enable that industry, or will force that industry, to further modernize its equipment when it has so much capacity lying idle," he declared.

As an alternative to the across-the-board tax credit, Ruttenberg said, the AFL-CIO has urged the Treasury Dept. to revise its Bulletin F provisions, which determine the useful life of new industrial equipment for depreciation purposes.

By so doing, he said, the government could "highlight and direct" investment incentive to industries in need of improved efficiency. This device already has been used with respect to the textile industry, and the government plans to apply it in the machine and machine tool industries, he noted.

"These are the areas where our competitive position at home and abroad needs to be improved," he commented, "and where I think the approach through the existing regulations is a better approach than the investment credit that the [House Ways & Means] committee has been considering this past year."

Kennedy Keys Wage Policy to Productivity

short in an industry which could not provide jobs for its entire labor force or where the range of wages is high compared to similar jobs.

The CEA said that while productivity has risen at an annual average rate of 2.4 percent since 1909, it has increased at a rate of 3 percent since World War II and 2.6 percent since 1954. The report implied that the 3 percent rate should govern current situations.

On the problem of unemployment, the President restated the Administration's goal of a 4 percent rate by mid-1963, with the council projecting a drop to about 5 percent by the end of 1962 from the present rate of 6.1 percent.

The council said that man-hour productivity in 1961 achieved an "exceptional gain, probably above 6 percent in the three quarters of expansion" and as a result a 7.5 percent increase in total production was achieved with a very small increase in employment.

"It is primarily because latent productivity was exploited so effectively," the council said, "that unemployment remained high."

It added that an increasing rate of productivity may raise the economy's output above the current trends early in 1963.

Program Details Given

The council declared that it could find no support for the view that structural unemployment is a rising proportion of the labor force, but that improving the structure of the labor market is of "high importance." It said that vocational training and retraining, improved information on job opportunities, relocation of displaced workers, elimination of discriminatory hiring practices, and assistance to depressed areas could benefit the nation.

In the absence of such policies, the council added, "many of our citizens, become in a real sense, victims of progress; they are condemned to prolonged periods of unemployment."

But even with these policies there is no substitute for an adequate level of demand, the council maintained.

In his message, Kennedy restated the basic outlines of economic policy given in his previous State of the Union and budget messages, but supplied more details.

The recovery from the 1960-61 recession, the President said, has carried the economy only part of the way to its maximum potential. The goals, he said, in terms of the Employment Act of 1946, are a 4.5 percent economic growth rate in this decade as opposed to a postwar rate of 3.5 percent, with a projection to $825 billion by 1970. The gross national product goal was set at an annual rate of $600 billion by mid-1963, resulting in a 4 percent unemployment rate.

The President detailed earlier requests for standby authority to order a temporary cut in personal income tax rates, recommending power to order a reduction of up to 5 percent in all tax rates for up to six months. The cut would take effect in 30 days unless Congress vetoed it by a majority vote of each house.

Work Program Sought

He asked also for authority to put into effect a $2 billion public works program if unemployment rates rise in three out of four months or four out of six months, and the unemployment rate is 1 percentage point higher than four or six months earlier.

The President called again, also, for permanent strengthening of the unemployment compensation program by a 13-week extension to long-term unemployed, adding 3 million workers to coverage and raising benefits.

He proposed also increasing the wage base on which the unemployment insurance tax is paid from $3,000 to $4,800 annually.

AFL-CIO Aide In Advisory Post

Anne G. Draper, since 1957 a research assistant in the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, has been appointed to the Second Citizens Advisory Committee of the Food & Drug Administration by H-E-W Sec. Abraham Ribicoff.

Miss Draper, whose field includes responsibility for consumer problems, takes the place of AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Nelson Cruikshank, who was forced to resign because of other commitments. She formerly served as an economist with the Social Security Administration, Office of Price Administration and National War Labor Board.

The advisory committee to which she was appointed is headed by Dr. George Y. Harvey, lecturer in political science and consultant in community development at the University of Missouri. It is studying consumer protections the FDA might take in the fields of foods, drugs, therapeutic devices, cosmetics and household chemical products.

DONATIONS of $1,947 in cash and checks for the ICFTU Intl. Solidarity Fund are presented to Pres. Arne Geijer, left, of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, by Carroll M. Hutton, education director of the Auto Workers. The money was contributed by students at UAW summer schools and delegates to the UAW Free World Affairs Institute in New York City.

Union Membership Moves Up in Britain

London — Trade union membership in the United Kingdom reversed a two-year downward trend in 1960 and increased by 203,000 to 9.8 million, according to the annual review of the Ministry of Labor Gazette.

The increase was 2.1 percent compared with decreases of one-half of 1 percent in 1959 and 1.9 percent in 1958. The Gazette listed 650 unions, the same as at the end of 1959; however, three unions went out of existence during the year and three new ones were formed.

Easing Sought In Qualifying For Idle Aid

Austin—Labor members of the Texas Employment Commission's advisory council have recommended that the commission work "to reduce the high percentage of disqualifications" of jobless workers seeking unemployment compensation.

Texas AFL-CIO Pres. H. S. "Hank" Brown and four other council members also urged that the commission step up the pace of its worker education program; adopt a policy of not litigating contested disqualifications to appellate courts when lower courts rule against the TEC; reinterpret the new unemployment compensation law to allow qualified jobless workers to be paid the maximum allowable under the law.

Last year the commission disqualified 155,000 of the 337,000 applications for unemployment compensation. Brown has criticized the qualification policies.

Other labor members of the advisory commission are Vice Pres. N. E. Coward of the Texas AFL-CIO, Houston; Pres. Ivan Hollier of Local 4-23, Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers, Port Arthur; L. V. McCarthy, business agent, Local 351, Operating Engineers, Borger; and Pres. Charles Sanders, Local 870, Auto Workers, Mesquite.

Last Minute Pact Ends Strike Threat

Detroit—A last-minute contract settlement averted a scheduled walkout here at three plants of the Huck Manufacturing Co., national manufacturer of self-locking rivets, by Auto Workers Local 212. Gains matched those in recent auto negotiations, UAW Regional Co-Director Ken Morris said.

UAW Schools Give $1,947 To ICFTU

Detroit — Contributions totaling $1,947 have been given to the Intl. Solidarity Fund of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions by the Auto Workers.

UAW Education Dir. Carroll M. Hutton said the money, given by delegates to UAW summer schools and a conference at United Nations headquarters last month, has been presented to ICFTU Pres. Arne Geijer for organizing and educational purposes.

Geijer was a principal speaker at the UAW Free World Affairs Institute attended by 178 delegates from 77 local unions in Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Texas, Tennessee, Virginia, Georgia and the province of Ontario, Canada.

Others at the UN conference were Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, U.S. Ambassador to the UN Adlai Stevenson, UN Undersec. for Special Political Affairs Ralph Bunche, and UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey. Conference coordinators were UAW Intl. Affairs Dir. Victor G. Reuther and Hutton.

Runaway Ship Runs Afoul of Safety Laws

New York—The charge that ships operated by "runaway" flag companies fail to meet U.S. safety standards was emphasized recently when the cruise liner Acapulco was denied the right to pick up passengers in New York, according to Chairman Joseph N. Curran of the AFL-CIO Maritime Committee.

The ship formerly was operated as the SS Nassau by the Incres Steamship Co., a "runaway" firm flying the Liberian flag. Since Liberia had adopted the Safety of Life at Sea Convention of 1948, the ship was allowed to pick up cruise passengers in New York.

Late last year it was sold to Mexican interests and the registration was changed. At that time Mexico had not signed the sea safety convention and the ship thus was required to meet U.S. safety standards. Built in 1923, the vessel was found to have too much wood in it to be classified as fireproof in this country and it was denied clearance.

Since then Mexico has signed the convention and the Acapulco will again be allowed to take on passengers at U.S. ports, Curran said.

Meany Renews Plea for Strong FEPC

'Enforceable' Statute Urged on Congress

bor Sec. Herbert Hill of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The time is overdue to establish a policy—by the enactment of an enforceable statute—dealing with discrimination in employment for the United States as a whole, Meany declared.

An effective federal law would ban discrimination against job applicants because of race, creed, color, national origin or age; it would ban it within an employer's workforce after hiring; and it would carry "meaningful penalties for willful violators," he said.

Big Employers Stay Mum on FEPC Bill

Mum's the word among employers on fair employment practices legislation.

Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.), whose House Labor subcommittee has concluded hearings on a federal anti-discrimination law, lashed major employers and employer groups for offering no testimony, "for or against."

A few small employers from the Chicago and Los Angeles areas appeared, he said, but his group "deliberately made every effort" to get big employer testimony; the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and National Association of Manufacturers declined.

"This would seem to be a measure of their sense of civic responsibility," he added.

Ban on Bias in Hiring Urged

Action is needed to end discrimination at the hiring gate, he declared, because "the employers do the hiring; they choose the work force."

Because employers control decisions on hiring, work assignments, promotions and so on, Meany said, "I do not hesitate to say that overwhelming instances of employment discrimination in this country are caused by the hiring and other personnel policies of employers."

"Having said this," he continued, "let me also say again, as I have said in many other places, that discrimination does exist in the trade union movement."

Meany said trade union members reflect the attitudes of their communities, of their parents, of their political leaders, of their newspapers.

While organized labor has made progress in this area, he added, "we have said repeatedly that to finish the job, we need the help of the United States government. When the rank-and-file membership of a local union obstinately exercises its right to be wrong, there is very little we in the leadership can do about it, unaided."

The AFL-CIO, Meany said, has "only one ultimate weapon—expulsion of a national or international union. That's all we can do."

In the cases where unions had been expelled from the AFL-CIO on charges of domination by corrupt influences, he said, expulsion was the only way to convince the membership of a situation of which they may have been ignorant and which they would have tended to disbelieve from a normally hostile press.

But where discrimination may be resisted by a union's leadership and practiced by "wrong-headed" members, it often is maintained by unimpeachably democratic processes, Meany said.

'Misguided Members'

"Would we be better off," asked Meany, "to cast out these misguided members and remove them from the influence of the mainstream of the labor movement, meanwhile expelling in the same action the national leaders who deplore and fight discrimination?

"I think not. I think we can do more toward educating them if they're in the federation, with their own leaders getting broad AFL-CIO support toward the same end.

"So equal opportunity as a matter of federal law will help us."

Meany pointed out there are "a few places in a few trades or occupations, where the union itself exercises a major voice in employment." Relatively few of these local unions in turn follow a pattern of discrimination, he said, adding it "is our hope that the law you draft will apply to this problem as well."

A union which discriminates, Meany said, stands in violation of the AFL-CIO Constitution and the principles of the labor movement. He said he hopes the proposed bill will have the range of the AFL-CIO Constitution "and we hope you will make sure the law will also apply to apprenticeship programs of every kind. . . ."

AN EXPRESSION OF APPRECIATION to the AFL-CIO for sponsoring an unprecedented labor-college conference on "Equal Opportunity for Higher Education" is presented to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany by John T. Caldwell, right, chancellor of North Carolina State College and president of the Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges. The scroll expressed thanks for "this excellent conference, a major event in the centennial year observance" of the Land-Grant Act. It was signed by Pres. Richard A. Harvill, University of Arizona, chairman of the centennial committee.

AFL-CIO Aide Raps AMA's Plan for Aged

of medical and surgical services at a uniform premium of $3 a month for persons 65 and over if their annual income does not exceed limits of $2,500 for individuals or $4,000 for married couples. Patients with higher incomes would have to pay any doctors' bills in excess of a schedule presumably to be fixed under the plan.

Cruikshank charged that the AMA proposal calls for the aged to share their high health risks "only with each other" and would require them to pay their premiums after they are retired when their income is "drastically reduced."

He noted that the average income of persons over 65 is less than $1,000 a year. The monthly $3 premium for the proposed Blue Shield plan plus $10 to $12 a month for the recently-proposed Blue Cross hospital plan for the aged would amount to nearly a fifth of this average income, he observed.

The only workable answer, he declared, is "a program providing a near universal spreading of the risk and enabling people to contribute during their working lifetime toward paid-up coverage in retirement."

He said such arrangements form the basis for the Kennedy Administration's social security approach to health benefits for the aged, as embodied in the Anderson-King bill.

Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N. M.), co-sponsor of the bill with Rep. Cecil R. King (D-Calif.), also called attention to the high cost of premiums posed by the two plans.

Charges an 'Indignity'

Addressing the AFL-CIO's Economic & Legislative Conference, he referred to the income test proposed by AMA and Blue Shield as "the supreme indignity" and charged it had been put in "to weed out a large share of the claims."

"It represents the hope," Anderson said, "that a man who thinks he needs only modest hospital care would prefer to pay for it himself rather than go through the humiliating experience of parading his bank accounts, his social security checks, his pension plans, and any interest he may get from 'E' bonds and other savings, before he can phone the doctor or enter the door of a hospital."

Health, Education & Welfare Sec. Abraham A. Ribicoff, noting that the Blue Shield plan covers only doctors' bills, said the AMA announcement had not changed the Administration's determination to push for hospital care coverage under the social security system.

Unlike the AMA and Blue Shield, the American Hospital Association and Blue Cross have acknowledged the need for government aid in providing health care for the aged. The hospital care plan they recently outlined takes this need into account, even if the government aid is provided through the social security mechanism.

"It took courage for these groups to oppose the AMA leadership, since many of them have AMA leadership on their boards," commented Aime J. Forand, former Democratic representative from Rhode Island and author of the Forand bill, a forerunner of the Anderson-King measure.

"The only financially responsible method of paying for . . . medical care is through a national insurance program," continued Forand, who heads the 400,000-member National Council of Senior Citizens.

J. Spencer Love Of Textiles Dies

Palm Beach, Fla.—J. Spencer Love, head of the nation's largest textile chain, died here recently.

He was chairman of the board and president of Burlington Industries, Inc., which closed its Peerless Woolen Mill at Rossville, Ga., after employes there voted last August for union representation by the Allied Industrial Workers.

Love was a member of the President's Committee on Labor-Management Policy.

Roth of AFT Heads Labor In Colorado

Denver—Herrick S. Roth, member of the Teachers and former Democratic state senator, has been elected president of the Colorado AFL-CIO to fill out the unexpired term of former Pres. George A. Cavender.

Roth was named by the state federation executive board to the vacancy created when Pres. Kennedy appointed Cavender as postmaster of Denver. The term expires in June, when state officers will be chosen for two-year terms at the fourth biennial state federation convention.

At his election Roth was a member of Teachers Local 858 here, executive secretary of the Colorado Federation of Teachers, and director of organization for the Colorado Union of Public Employes.

Lawrence C. Farnan, business manager of Local 68, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, was nominated for president along with Roth but moved that Roth's election be made unanimous and pledged his support, State Sec.-Treas. A. Toffoli reported.

Cavender took the oath of office as postmaster Jan. 5. He helped organize the Denver AFT local in 1945, served three terms as president of the Colorado Federation of Labor and at the time of his new appointment was serving his third term as state AFL-CIO head.

Shea Named to Quito Labor Post

James F. Shea, formerly an economics research assistant with the AFL and later with the AFL-CIO, has been transferred from the Foreign Service Reserve to the State Dept.'s regular Foreign Service and is now studying Spanish at the Foreign Service Institute in Washington prior to taking over an assignment as labor attache at the U.S. Embassy in Quito, Educador.

Shea, originally from New London, Conn., is a member and former local officer of the Meat Cutters and put himself through Georgetown University by working at the trade. He joined the State Dept. staff in 1956, was assistant labor attache at the embassy in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, from 1957 to 1959, and until recently was labor officer at the U.S. consulate-general in Sao Paulo, Brazil.

Screen Actors Charge Pair with 'Con' Game

Los Angeles—The Screen Actors Guild has filed a felony complaint against two men who collected $215 apiece for "initiation fees and dues" from actors who were told they had been selected for roles in a television series. SCA said it was a "bunco game" because the TV series was fictitious. Extradition warrants have been issued by the office of Gov. Edmund G. Brown. Bail has been set at $10,000 each for men giving the names of Jack Montgomery and William Stockton.

Appeals Court Backs NLRB on Kohler

4.7 Million Unemployed, Jobless Rate Dips Under 6%

Union to Seek Back Pay:

Decision Vindicates Unfair Labor Ruling

By Gervase N. Love

The U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia has upheld by a 2 to 1 vote the National Labor Relations Board's finding that the Kohler Co. was guilty of unfair labor practices during its eight-year dispute with the Auto Workers.

In addition, the court majority set aside the board's finding that 77 union members discharged during the strike were not entitled to reinstatement and sent it back for reconsideration.

The decision was handed down by Judges David L. Bazelon and Henry W. Edgerton. Lyman Conger, counsel, vice president and bargaining committee chairman for the Kohler, Wis., plumbing wares manufacturing firm, said an appeal will be made to the U.S. Supreme Court. However, UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey said union lawyers have predicted the high court will refuse to consider an appeal. The company has 90 days in which to file.

More than 2,700 members of UAW Local 833 went on strike April 5, 1954, when months of bargaining failed to produce a company offer that would not render the union impotent. It ended Sept. 1, 1960, after the NLRB handed down its decision that the strike was economic in April and May of 1954, but became an unfair labor practice strike on June 1, when the company granted strikebreaking employes a 3 cents an hour wage increase but made no such offer to the strikers.

The 77 strikers affected by the appellate court ruling were among 89 discharged early in the walkout on allegations of illegal picketing and included the original local officers. NLRB Trial Examiner George Downing had found that

U.S. Orders Reports on Job Bias

The President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity has ordered government contractors and subcontractors employing 15.5 million workers to file annual reports to show compliance with anti-discrimination in employment and demonstrate that they are "making progress" in correcting past discriminatory practices.

Some 38,000 firms, operating 50,000 manufacturing plants, have been directed to submit annual "manpower profiles," beginning Mar. 31, showing the number of Negroes and other minority-group workers on their payrolls and the type of jobs in which they are employed.

The President's committee will use the data to check up on compliance with the non-discrimination clause contained in every government contract. Under an Executive Order signed by Pres. Kennedy last March, the standard pledge not to discriminate was strengthened by a requirement that contractors take "affirmative action" to ensure equal

Showdown Looms:

Urban Dept. Fight Pushed by Kennedy

By David L. Perlman

Pres. Kennedy has asked Congress to recognize that the United States has "passed from a rural to an urban way of life" and that the nation needs a new Cabinet department to meet the "complex problems" of city dwellers and give them "an adequate voice in the highest councils of government."

The President set the stage for a showdown battle with the Republican-southern Democratic coalition by proposing a Dept. of Urban Affairs & Housing as a reorganization plan—which goes into effect automatically after 60 days unless disapproved by either house of Congress.

Kennedy acted less than a week after Administration-sponsored, labor-backed legislation creating the department had been killed by a 9-6 vote in the House Rules Committee. All five Republicans on the committee and four southern Democrats voted to block the bill.

Southern opposition was linked to the President's declared intent to name Housing & Home Finance Dir. Robert C. Weaver, a Negro, to head the new department.

Republicans, on the political spot in attempting to reconcile their announced drive to win over city

Depressed Areas Edge Up to 61

By John M. Barry

The nation's unemployment total climbed to 4.7 million in January, up nearly 600,000 from the previous month, but the seasonally adjusted rate dipped below the 6 percent level for the first time in 16 months.

The rate of joblessness was 5.8 percent, against 6 percent in December.

The Labor Dept.'s summary report showed that the civilian labor force—the base for computing the jobless rate—actually had declined by 116,000 in the 12 months since January 1961.

Last month, when the December-to-December comparison of the labor force showed virtually no change instead of an anticipated rise of 1 million, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg told a press conference that lack of job opportunities may have driven many persons from the job market who ordinarily would be counted as seeking work.

And there was little encouragement in a companion report on depressed areas issued by the department. The number of major areas with joblessness of 6 percent or more rose to 61, up one from December. Fourteen of the 61 had unemployment of 9 percent or more, against 12 the previous month.

Recovery Hailed

Nevertheless, Goldberg told the Joint House-Senate Economics Committee that the January decline in the adjusted jobless rate confirmed the Administration's view that "we are in the midst of a vigorous economic recovery, with production and employment reaching new highs."

He said that the Administration was not happy with the 5.8 percent rate but noted the jobless total for the month was 700,000 below the figure for January 1961.

He noted, too, that total employment had hit an all-time January high of 65.1 million despite a drop of 1.4 million jobs from December.

Goldberg cautioned the committee that long-term unemployment "still poses a very serious problem." He called attention to the lack of substantial improvement over the year in the number of persons out of work 15 weeks or longer—now about 1.25 million—despite the decline in overall unemployment and the increase in the number of jobs during the period.

This, he said, "underscored" Pres.

'Real Work' at Home Needed to Win Congress on Labor-Backed Bills

Major labor-backed legislation can be enacted in this session of Congress, but it will require "real work" in the home districts of members of the House and Senate, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller has declared.

Biemiller told 500 delegates to the AFL-CIO Economic & Legislative Conference that their calls on congressmen and senators here had a "favorable" impact, but "the real work starts when you get home."

The closing session of the four-day conference also heard:

- AFL-CIO Vice Pres. George M. Harrison warn against "indefensible, drastic and dangerous proposals" to place unions under the anti-trust laws.
- Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg list 15 "major goals" of the Administration, many of which paralleled the AFL-CIO program, and predicted they could be achieved "given proper support and help."

Biemiller reminded the delegates that Congress, especially the House, is narrowly divided on many issues. Reports from delegates on their visits to Capitol Hill confirmed the AFL-CIO's own analysis, he said, that hard work throughout the ses-

Perlis Urges United Funds To Back Arts

New York—A study of community support for the arts through the country's 2,200 united funds, community chests and welfare councils has been proposed by Leo Perlis, national director of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities.

In a letter to Executive Dir. Lyman S. Ford of the United Community Funds & Councils of America, Perlis suggested that the community welfare bodies give impetus to Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg's appeal for local backing for the arts by determining the extent of current voluntary financial support available and in exploring the possibility of partly financing arts programs through the organizations' annual campaigns for funds.

Perlis pointed out that "some activity in this direction" is carried on in several communities and that "one or two" have established cultural funds.

"In the labor movement itself there has been a growing interest in recent years in the arts," he continued. "From symphony concerts sponsored by the Steelworkers to art exhibits organized by (New York) Local 22 of the Ladies' Garment Workers Union, the promotion of the lively arts, both amateur and professional, has always played a part in the life of the trade union movement."

Because of automation and the shorter workweek, Perlis said, people "will have more leisure time on their hands," and they are becoming increasingly concerned with the arts.

"The arts can help to bring some purpose and completion to our lives," Perlis wrote.

"This, of course, is all to the good—because our society will benefit from a broadening of the base of public support for the arts and culture generally."

CITATION AWARDED AFL-CIO for contributions of organized labor to united fund and community campaigns was accepted on behalf of Pres. George Meany by Leo Perlis (left) director of Community Service Activities. Presentation is being made by John S. Hayes, a vice chairman of United Community Campaigns. Labor's share of the record total of $500 million raised last year was $166 million.

Ban on City Employe Unions Killed in Court

Sioux Falls, S. D.—The South Dakota Supreme Court has declared unconstitutional a Sioux Falls city ordinance prohibiting union membership by employes of the city's fire, police or health departments.

The unanimous ruling was a victory for the Fire Fighters and the State, County & Municipal Employes. The two unions charged that the 1960 ordinance violated both federal and state constitutional rights of city employes and was the equivalent of the "yellow dog" contracts which private employers once forced workers to sign as binding pledges that they would not join a union.

Ironically the Supreme Court based its decision in large part on the so-called "right-to-work" provision of the state constitution, despite the claim of anti-labor city officials that the phrase "right-to-work" was in effect merely window dressing for a law aimed at unions.

The Sioux Falls city commissioners argued that the sponsors of "right-to-work" obviously did not have the "slightest interest" in protecting the right of public employes to join unions. The city officials said the "right-to-work" sponsors were solely concerned with curbing the "power" of unions, and "to assert otherwise is to dream up a figment of economic life that has never been present or discussed in the legislature of the state of South Dakota."

Rejecting this argument, the court said the constitutional language "must be applied as it reads."

Both unions hailed the decision. The State, County & Municipal Employes noted that the "right-to-work" law had "backfired on its supporters." Fire Fighters Pres. William D. Buck said the decision was in line with court rulings in other states upholding the right of city employes to organize and was "in keeping with the recent executive order of Pres. Kennedy which gave union recognition to federal employes."

New Officials Win Control Of Ousted B&C

Cleveland—The faction-torn unaffiliated Bakery & Confectionery Workers Union at a convention here elected a slate of new officers pledged to clean up the union and also voted unanimously to seek merger with the AFL-CIO American Bakery & Confectionery Workers.

The B&C was one of the unions expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of corrupt domination.

The 365 delegates rejected, by a more than 2-to-1 margin, a recommendation by the outgoing administration for affiliation with the expelled and unaffiliated Teamsters. Teamster Pres. James R. Hoffa in an opening day address to the convention invited affiliation with his union and indicated he might charter individual locals if the B&C declined to join in a bloc.

Max Kralstein of New York, a leader of the Local Union Reunification Committee and an anti-administration member of the outgoing executive board, defeated Harvey Friedman of Cleveland for the presidency. Outgoing Pres. James Landriscina, who succeeded James G. Cross when the latter resigned under fire last April, did not seek reelection.

In a clean sweep for the anti-administration group, Henry Bartosh defeated incumbent Sec.-Treas. L. P. Crawford, and candidates of the Local Union Reunification Committee won all 14 vice presidencies.

In a move initiated by the new officers, the convention cut the salary of the president from $30,000 annually to $20,000, reduced the secretary-treasurer from $22,500 to $17,500, and limited the powers of the president by making his actions subject to approval by the executive board.

The delegates also directed the officers to seek a no-raid pact with the ABC as a preliminary to reaffiliation.

Rail Mergers Seen 'Suicidal' By Harrison

Chicago—Railroads rushing into mergers are taking their industry "hell-bent down the road to government ownership," Pres. George M. Harrison of the Railway Clerks declared here.

Railroads, he charged, have found that "there is profit in industrial suicide." The penalty, he added, is paid by the public in loss of service and by the workers in loss of jobs.

Harrison spoke at the joint installation of local officers in the Chicago area, attended by 1,500 members of the Railway Clerks. He emphasized that "mergers breed mergers" and said the consolidation trend has been stepped up because railroads fearful of being isolated by mergers of competitors have rushed to seek consolidations of their own.

"Yesterday's radicals," said Harrison, "used to say that capitalism would hang itself with a rope of its own making providing there's profit in it. Today's railroads are about to prove the truth of that prediction—at least so far as the railroad industry is concerned."

Declaring that railroad services must be preserved "until Congress can reframe our national transport policy to promote a stronger railroad network," Harrison added:

"Industry has gone crazy. It got such power during the Eisenhower Administration that it whetted its appetite for more. If industry keeps milking profits, our system cannot survive another half-century."

Jack Whelan Named New England Auditor

Jack Whelan, staff member of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Accounting, has been appointed an auditor for the federation, serving directly affiliated local unions in the New England area.

Whelan has served in headquarters accounting positions for the past 20 years, with the AFL-CIO and with the former AFL.

December Dip Helped:

1961 Increase in CPI Smallest Since 1955

Aided by a slight dip in December, the Consumer Price Index last year recorded its smallest rise from one year-end to the next since 1955, the Labor Dept. has reported.

The increase for the year was one-half of 1 percent, or the equivalent of 5 cents out of $10, according to the department's Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The December price decline—one-tenth of 1 percent—coupled with a new high in average factory take-home pay, brought the average buying power of employed factory workers to a record level, 7 percent above that of December 1960, the BLS reported.

Commenting on the December reports, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg said "this significant and encouraging trend bids well for a continued and growing soundness of our national economy."

Robert J. Myers, deputy commissioner of labor statistics, said at a news briefing that prices might rise slightly in January and February, but that for 1962 as a whole "the outlook is for a considerable degree of stability with modest price changes." He predicted the CPI would rise another 1 to 2 percent at the most during the year.

BLS said the slight December decline in prices was caused largely by lower average prices for new and used cars, gasoline and clothing. The index registered 128.2 for the month, using 1947-49 prices as a base of 100. This meant that a "market-basket" of goods and services costing $10 in the 1947-49 period cost $12.82 in December.

The 1961 CPI average was 127.8, or 1 percent above the 1960 average. With the exception of 1959, this too was the smallest annual increase since 1955, BLS said.

Most of the December-to-December rise of one-half of 1 percent occurred between June and July, the bureau reported. It attributed the bulk of the increase to higher costs for services, particularly medical care, and for durable goods, chiefly used cars. These, BLS said, more than offset declines for such nondurables as food and gasoline.

About 230,000 employes of local and long-distance trucking firms are scheduled to receive 1-cent-an-hour pay increases based on semi-annual or annual reviews of the CPI. On the other hand, some 31,000 workers, mostly in the aircraft industry, will get pay cuts of 1 cent an hour, based on a quarterly review, government figures show.

A companion report issued by BLS pegged the net spendable earnings—or "after-tax" pay—of factory production workers in December at an average of $85.17 a week for a worker with three dependents and $77.52 for a worker with no dependents.

The figures were up only slightly from November but were about $5.80 higher than in December 1960, when the average factory workweek was 1.8 hours shorter and hourly earnings were 8 cents lower, the report noted.

BLS said almost two-thirds of the increase in earnings was reflected in higher purchasing power as a result of the "relatively modest" rise in prices over the year.

Vice Pres. Calvin Dies, Headed Boilermakers

Kansas City, Kan.—William A. Calvin, a vice president of the AFL-CIO and president of the Boilermakers, died at his home near here on Jan. 27. He was stricken with a heart attack a few hours after his return from the AFL-CIO Economic & Legislative Conference in Washington, D. C., where he had presided at a session on labor legislation.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler in a telegram to Boilermakers Sec.-Treas. H. E. Patton praised

WILLIAM A. CALVIN

Calvin as one of the nation's "most respected trade union leaders."

They also wired "heartfelt sympathy" to Calvin's widow, declaring that "the gains that he won for the members of his union stand as a great monument to his memory."

Calvin was born in New Brunswick, Canada, on Feb. 5, 1898, the son of a boilermaker. He joined the union in 1915 at Baltimore. He served in the Canadian Army and was wounded five times during World War I, then returned to his trade on the Seaboard Air Line Railroad at Jacksonville, Fla., and became a naturalized American citizen.

He was elected vice president of the Boilermakers in 1930 after having served as general chairman and district president of the union on the Seaboard. From 1933 to 1940, he was secretary-treasurer of the Metal Trades Dept. of the former AFL.

He served on a number of government boards and in 1951-52 was a labor specialist with the Intl. Production Authority.

In 1953 he was named assistant to Boilermakers Pres. Charles J. MacGowan, and the following year was chosen by the union's executive board to succeed MacGowan on the latter's retirement. He was unanimously elected president at the Boilermakers' 1957 convention and re-elected in 1961.

In February, 1961, Calvin was elected as AFL-CIO vice president, filling the Executive Council vacancy caused by the death of MacGowan.

Calvin had served on a number of international assignments for the State Dept. in South America and India, and as an AFL-CIO fraternal delegate to the Indian National Trade Union Congress conference in 1959. He was also a director of the Fund for Peaceful Atomic Development, a nonprofit group set up to aid the atoms-for-peace program.

Auto Workers 'Vindicated':

Appeals Court Backs NLRB Kohler Ruling

only 12 were discharged for cause, the board itself making the number 77. When the NLRB ordered reinstatement of the additional strikers and the firing of the strikebreakers who had replaced them, it was estimated 1,700 were still technically on strike.

The appeals court quickly dismissed the company's petition for review of the unfair labor practices issue.

"Kohler seeks review of the board's adverse determinations," the majority said. "We think that they are amply supported by the record considered as a whole and that Kohler's attack must fail. Since we adopt the board's analysis of the evidence on these matters, further discussion would serve no useful purpose."

On the discharges, the court said the record "indicates that the board disregarded the Thayer doctrine" of 1954, which is ruling in such matters.

The court held this doctrine means that "where an employer who has committed unfair labor practices discharges employes for unprotected acts of misconduct, the board must consider both the seriousness of the employer's unlawful acts and the seriousness of the employe's misconduct in determining whether reinstatement would effectuate the policies of the act."

The court noted that both the UAW and the board's general counsel took exceptions to Downing's refusal to follow the Thayer doctrine, but that the NLRB decision "refers neither to the doctrine nor to the considerations it requires."

"To hold that employe 'misconduct' automatically precludes compulsory reinstatement ignores two considerations which we think important," the court said.

"First, the employer's antecedent unfair labor practices may have been so blatant that they provoked employes to resort to unprotected action.

"Second, reinstatement is the only sanction which prevents an employer from benefiting from his unfair labor practices through discharge which may weaken or destroy a union."

Chief Judge William K. Miller dissented, saying the union was guilty of "unconscionable conduct" and describing the "feeble efforts of Kohler to protect itself against open warfare" as "trivia."

Mazey declared the Court of Appeals decision "completely vindicates the UAW's position."

"It means that our position has been upheld," he said. "It means another vindication for the Kohler workers in their long struggle for economic justice.

"I hope the decision has a sobering effect on the company. I hope it will now change its tactics and obey the order of the court. I hope it will reinstate all the former strikers and pay them the back pay they are entitled to. I hope it will return to the bargaining table for good faith collective bargaining.

"In the meantime, we are taking immediate steps through the compliance division of the NLRB to see to it that the company obeys the court order."

Mazey said that though the company thus far has chosen to "disobey the law, the government and the courts," it cannot disregard Supreme Court policy and the fact that the longer it delays a final settlement, "the more it is going to cost."

"It already owes its workers millions of dollars in back pay," he added.

"We have waited a long time for final vindication, but justice delayed is better than no justice at all."

Kohler Head Sued By Kin in Stock Deal

Milwaukee—Former Gov. Walter J. Kohler (R-Wis.) has sued his half-uncle, Walter J. Kohler, head of the Sheboygan area plumbing wares firm bearing the family name, to collect $214,156 plus interest. He claims he was chiseled out of this sum in a Kohler Co. stock deal in 1953.

The former governor said Walter Kohler, the company and the firm's accountants, Ernst & Ernst of Cleveland, did not give him an accurate picture of the firm's financial condition and that he was induced to sell for $115 a share by "misrepresentations, half-truths and omissions" in stock he claims was worth at least $10 more per share.

Judge Kenneth P. Grubb of U.S. District Court has taken the case under advisement.

CLUB-CARRYING POLICE and sheriff's deputies mass around the entrance of the Jamestown Sterling Corp. in Jamestown, N. Y., and crowd striking workers to one side so that strikebreakers may enter. The 180 employes, members of the Furniture Workers, have been on strike for a first contract since Oct. 2. Members of 114 local unions in the area have set up a committee to aid them.

4 Issues Bar Studebaker Strike Pact

South Bend—Zero weather returned to the Auto Worker picket lines here during the fifth week of the strike against the Studebaker-Packard Corp. as negotiators kept trying to end the deadlock over terms of a new contract.

Four issues are keeping the plants idle and 6,500 workers on the picket line—the annual improvement factor, union recognition at S-P's new defense plant, fatigue relief time for paint sprayers, and a cut in washup time asked by management.

An aide to UAW Regional Dir. Raymond H. Berndt said three other issues have been settled by agreement of the negotiators. Management dropped its demand for a change in the vacation pay formula, and the question of a premium for work on the night shift and seven-day work also was disposed of.

Studebaker-Packard is the only auto maker which has failed to come to terms with its workers. The UAW extended its contract past the Nov. 30 expiration date and tried hard, in a series of some 85 meetings, to arrive at an agreement tailored to the needs of the workers and the financial problems of the company, according to Pres. Woodrow Frick of UAW Local 5.

When no agreement was reached, management terminated the contract as of midnight Dec. 30 and the union set up picket lines at midnight Jan. 2.

114 Locals Aid Pickets Harassed by Police

Jamestown, N. Y.—Members of 114 local unions in this area have formed a Strike Aid Steering Committee to rally community support for 180 members of the Furniture Workers, on strike since Oct. 2 for a first contract at the Jamestown Sterling Corp.

The committee voted at a meeting late last month to increase financial assistance to the strikers, to protest "continuing police interference" with peaceful picketing, and to step up efforts to inform the community of the reasons for the dispute and the denial of the strikers' rights.

As the walkout neared the beginning of its fifth month, organized labor rallied almost 400 members of other unions on the picket line of Furniture Workers Local 45 to call public attention to the refusal of Jamestown Sterling management to give its workers a first contract after they had voted for union representation.

General meetings have been held and leaflets distributed to protest the use of mounted sheriff's deputies and as many as 70 foot patrolmen to move away union picket lines and help strikebreakers enter the plant.

Local clergymen and other community leaders have urged that the plant be closed until negotiations have been resumed. UFWA Pres. Morris Pizer called on Gov. Nelson Rockefeller (R) to use his good offices to bring about a settlement. Similar appeals by the New York State AFL-CIO and the Jamestown Central Labor Committee were made after state mediators reported no progress in their efforts to end the long dispute.

Members of furniture unions in Chicago and San Francisco stationed informational pickets in front of the American Furniture Mart and the San Francisco Furniture Market to protest the display of Jamestown Sterling products for sale to retailers.

The UFWA organized the plant last year, winning a secret-ballot National Labor Relations Board election, but negotiations were stalled for many months while the company filed four legal appeals against certification. The union won each appeal. Members finally struck last Oct. 2 after management repeatedly refused to make acceptable counterproposals to the Local 45 bargaining committee, saying it would meet the committee only for "two hours, once a week," while operations continued. The motion to strike was approved unanimously at a local membership meeting.

A company appeal for an injunction against picketing was rejected by the New York State Supreme Court but Chautauqua County Sheriff Charles McCloskey, Jr., ordered his deputies to limit the picket line to 30 persons at any one time, the UFWA said. Meanwhile the firm has sought to operate with strikebreakers, escorted by police through the picket line.

Yale-Towne Accepts Terms To End Strike

Philadelphia—The five-month strike of the Machinists against the Yale & Towne Manufacturing Co. has been settled and strikers have started back to work under an agreement substantially similar to terms proposed Jan. 3 by the head of the U.S. Mediation Service and rejected by management.

Terms of the final settlement were drawn up by a three-man citizens' committee named by Mayor Richardson Dilworth (D) and Gov. David J. Lawrence (D). They were approved by the strikers in a close vote—431 to 423—and will be up for final ratification at a meeting of IAM Lodge 1717 on Feb. 11.

As the first returning strikers walked into the plant they passed strikebreakers on the way out. The settlement included a provision that the company shall discharge the 350 "scabs" within four weeks except for those who can prove "demonstrably superior ability" to a returning employe.

Since the average union member is a skilled employe with nearly 15 years seniority, there is little likelihood that any strikebreaker will remain, the union said. Any such case is subject to arbitration. Other terms of the agreement are:

- Pay increases of six cents an hour each year for three years, retroactive to last Sept. 1.
- Improvements in pensions and paid vacation language.
- Changes closer to the original union position on temporary layoffs, eligibility for holiday pay, activities of stewards and committeemen, and on incentive pay.

The strike started Aug. 31, when union members voted 936-4 to safeguard job security provisions built into the contract over many years. New company management wanted to eliminate or change 35 of 37 contract provisions, some of them in effect for 17 years.

Royal York Strikers Vote Down Settlement Costing One Job in 10

Toronto, Ont.—The embattled Royal York Hotel strikers have voted overwhelmingly to continue their nine-month walkout rather than accept a settlement which would mean that one in every 10 strikers would not return to work.

They voted 341-15 to reject a proposal of Ontario Labor Minister William K. Warrender that 90 percent of the remaining 485 strikers be recalled to work over an 11-month period.

Thirty percent would be offered jobs within two months, another 30 percent within five months, and the final 30 percent by the end of the year.

But the labor minister admitted that the hotel would never recall the other 10 percent and would give no reason for the dismissals. The hotel also would decide who would return and when, and the Hotel & Club Employes Union would not be told the names of the ill-fated 10 percent until at least a month after the end of the strike.

"We do not propose to trade in bodies with the Royal York Hotel," said Strike Leader Archie Johnstone. "It is either every striker back to work or none back. That is the way our people voted."

Of the 1,188 employes who struck the 1600-room hotel last April, 518 are back at work and 116 have quit or retired.

Warrender, bitter after the union rejected his widely-heralded settlement offer, immediately threw his weight behind the latest Royal York attempt to destroy the effectiveness of the union picket line.

He said he would no longer respect the picket lines as the hotel demanded public bodies, including the city of Toronto, "forthwith" stop encouraging the union by honoring its picket lines.

The hotel and Warrender maintained the union was unreasonable and stubborn in expecting every striker to return to work.

The strikers have been reinforced by the Toronto Newspaper Guild and the Toronto Typographical Union for picket line demonstrations against a charity dinner featuring sports celebrities.

The unions announced they would put members on the picket line after sports writers refused to remove the $25 a plate dinner from the hotel.

Sports celebrities Gene (Big Daddy) Lipscombe of the Pittsburgh Steelers, U.S. woman athlete of the year Wilma Rudolph Ward, and former boxing champion Carmen Basilio refused to attend the dinner because of the strike.

Comedians Johnny Wayne and Frank Shuster refused to go to the dinner because "we just don't cross picket lines period."

AFL-CIO Delegates Reminded:

'Real Work' at Home Needed On Bills Backed by Labor

sion was needed in the states and districts.

"I still think we can win," he declared.

He described as a "major breakthrough" reports from delegates indicating unexpected interest among some conservative congressmen in health care for the aged through social security.

The health care proposal was one of eight key issues the conference spotlighted.

Topping the list was the problem of continued high unemployment, and the need for both legislative and administrative action keyed to the conference theme of "Get America Back to Work."

In other areas, delegates pressed for AFL-CIO programs for liberalized trade policies with aid for workers and firms adversely affected, full-scale federal aid to education, congressional hearings on liberalization of the Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin laws, closing of tax loopholes, civil rights legislation including a fair employment law and abolishment of literacy tests for voting, and strengthened consumer protection laws.

Harrison in a closing session speech charged that a bill by Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark.) to apply anti-trust laws to unions in the transportation field would "erase hard-won victories of labor" and turn the clock back.

Noting that McClellan has contended that such a law is necessary to deal with alleged threats of the unaffiliated Teamsters to tie up the nation's transportation system, Harrison declared:

"We have already seen through the enactment of the Landrum-Griffin Act how the isolated excesses of a few in labor's ranks can be exploited and result in the passage of punitive labor legislation.

"The existing climate is such as to warn us against indifference to this renewed effort. The stakes are high and we can expect the avowed enemies of organized labor to spare no effort to secure passage of a law which would put us in a straitjacket."

Goldberg listed the manpower training bill, federal unemployment compensation standards and youth training legislation as among the "achievable goals" of the Kennedy Administration.

He voiced optimism regarding social security health care and said comprehensive federal aid to education is "by no means a hopeless task." He backed Administration goals on tax and trade legislation, a stand-by public works program and establishment of a Dept. of Urban Affairs.

"Bob Weaver (Housing Administrator Robert C. Weaver) would make a great Cabinet member," Goldberg commented in noting that Pres. Kennedy has said he would name Weaver as first head of the department.

Goldberg in addition, urged enactment of Senate-passed bills to protect migrant farm workers, passage of strengthening amendments to the Welfare & Pension Fund Disclosure Act and "long-overdue" legislation to bring federal employe pay up to comparable levels of private industry.

Dignity, Rehabilitation, Kennedy Welfare Goals

Pres. Kennedy has asked Congress to enact a new welfare program aimed at restoring dignity and independence to the needy, keep families together and help train jobless in needed skills.

He called for an end to "scorn and suspicion" of people on relief rolls and said assistance to the 7.25 million Americans receiving public welfare aid must be more than a "relief check."

The special message followed on the heels of a new Administration farm plan which the President said was essential to achieve "a balance between production and demand."

It combines strict acreage controls with a new land-retirement system aimed at converting 50 million or more acres of marginal cropland to grass, forests and recreation areas. Coupled with it is a proposal for an expanded "rural renewal" program aimed at ending poverty in agricultural areas.

The President's welfare message called for:

- Making permanent the temporary aid for needy children of the unemployed and increasing federal assistance for the aged, blind and disabled.
- Increasing the federal share of assistance payments to both needy parents when they live with the child in an effort to help keep families together.
- Federal aid to help states set up facilities for day care of children of needy working mothers.
- Federal aid to help states maintain community work and training projects to help the unemployed "retain their work skills or learn new ones" and give the community manpower on public works.

He also asked amendment of the Social Security Act to provide a small assistance hike to states which drop "all residence requirements in any of their federally-aided programs."

The message proposed added federal aid to states for training additional welfare personnel and an increase in the federal share of the cost of rehabilitation and social services.

Kennedy emphasized that community work and training projects "must be an opportunity for the individual on welfare, not a penalty."

Ford, UAW Reach New Canadian Pact

Toronto, Ont.—The Auto Workers and the Ford Motor Co. of Canada, six hours after a strike deadline, reached agreement on a three-year contract improving wages and welfare benefits for 7,200 workers in plants in Toronto, Windsor and Oakland, Ont.

The union members ratified the agreement on the 20th anniversary of their first contract with the company in Windsor.

The new pact calls for annual wage increases of 6 cents an hour or 2.5 percent, whichever is greater, in accordance with the pattern set in previously-reached auto contracts including General Motors of Canada.

The Ford settlement also contains higher pensions, improvements in supplementary unemployment benefits and company-paid insurance programs. The company will continue to pay the full cost of medical and hospital care for employes.

In addition, there were special wage increases of 5 and 10 cents an hour for about 200 skilled tradesmen, and special supplementary allowances for workers on long layoffs who exhaust their unemployment insurance.

Conference Spotlights Key Legislative Goals

The AFL-CIO Economic & Legislative Conference spotlighted eight key areas in which legislation—and in some cases presidential action—is needed to strengthen America's economy and meet the urgent needs of its people.

Here, in capsule form, is the program for which the 500 conference delegates lobbied on Capitol Hill and pledged to continue to work for during the crucial months ahead:

UNEMPLOYMENT—Persistent high unemployment in the face of rising production will not drop to anything like tolerable levels, labor economists are convinced, unless government action is taken to stimulate the economy and help workers adjust to drastic, job-changing technological developments.

Labor's remedy combines meeting social needs in public works, housing, education and defense with the pump-priming valve of increased federal expenditures in these fields.

The public works program which Pres. Kennedy has endorsed as a standby anti-recession weapon is "needed now" according to both the AFL-CIO and the bill's sponsor, Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.). Other needed legislation includes the Senate-passed Manpower Training bill, blocked last year in the House Rules Committee; permanent federal standards for unemployment insurance, pending in the House Ways & Means Committee, and a Youth Conservation Corps.

In his keynote address, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany pinpointed another need: A greater "sense of urgency" on the part of the President and Congress on the need to get America back to work.

HEALTH CARE FOR THE AGED UNDER SOCIAL SECURITY—Despite virulent attacks by the American Medical Association and its allies, there is growing evidence both of the need for a social security health care program and of the popularity of the labor and Administration-backed Anderson-King bill.

The immediate obstacle is the conservative House Ways & Means Committee. The need is for mounting public demand to force the bill to the floor—where members of Congress can stand up and be counted.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE—The Administration's new trade and tariff program combines authority to the President to negotiate broad mutual tariff cuts with the flourishing European economic community, along with assistance to U.S. workers and companies adversely affected by imports.

As a nation which has consistently exported more than it has imported, the United States is faced with a choice between trade retrenchment—with a depressing effect on American industries which sell abroad—and trade expansion. The AFL-CIO strongly supports the key elements of the President's trade program.

LABOR LEGISLATION—As the first step toward urgently-needed revision of Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin, the AFL-CIO has urged appropriate House and Senate committees to hold full-scale hearings this year. This would lay the groundwork for repeal of restrictive anti-labor provisions of the law.

FEDERAL TAXES—Labor has recommended closing glaring loopholes in present laws, including unjustified tax benefits for American companies overseas, preferential treatment of dividend income, flagrant abuses of tax-exempt expense accounts and other special privileges which make a mockery of the principle of taxation based on ability to pay. The Administration's tax reform bill, now in the House Ways & Means Committee, would make a number of desirable reforms. But it also includes what the AFL-CIO has termed an "unwarranted" investment tax credit proposal which would amount to a subsidy for business.

As an anti-recession measure, the AFL-CIO strongly supports authority for the President to cut withholding taxes temporarily to stimulate consumer purchasing power and choke off an economic downturn.

AID TO EDUCATION—Declaring that the need for federal aid to education is "greater than ever," the AFL-CIO has called for congressional enactment of a comprehensive program including grants to states on the basis of need for school construction and teachers' salaries, federal college scholarships and loans and grants to colleges for construction of academic facilities.

CIVIL RIGHTS—"There is insistent and urgent need for the enactment of new civil rights legislation now," conference delegates were reminded in a fact sheet prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights.

Labor strongly backs the pending proposal to abolish literacy tests as a voting requirement. Labor also has called for an enforceable fair employment law, stronger powers for the government to speed school desegregation and protect voting rights, abolition of the poll tax, and amendment of Senate rules to curb filibusters.

CONSUMER PROTECTION—Major labor-backed bills include the "truth-in-lending" measure sponsored by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) and 21 others, and the drug industry anti-trust bill introduced by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) after extensive investigation into monopolistic practices.

The AFL-CIO also has endorsed legislation to establish a Dept. of Consumers.

Labor Mobilizes for Legislative Drive

NEW TRADE PROGRAM, one of eight key issues taken up at the conference, is discussed by Sen. Jacob J. Javits (R-N. Y.). Seated are AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Al J. Hayes, who chaired the session, and AFL-CIO Research Dir. Stanley Ruttenberg.

AFL-CIO NEWS CAMERAMAN caught this conference between AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, left, and AFL-CIO Vice Pres. George M. Harrison. Harrison spoke at windup session; Schnitzler chaired session on civil rights.

IDAHO SEN. FRANK CHURCH (D), left, discusses legislative issues with Sec.-Treas. Harold Schneider of the Grain Millers (standing); Pres. Darrell Dorman, of the Idaho State AFL-CIO, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller and L. F. Anderson, a vice president of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

LABOR SEC. Arthur J. Goldberg, speaker at conference luncheon, makes a point in conversation with AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther, right. Reuther was chairman of session on unemployment, keyed to conference theme: "Get America Back to Work."

DELEGATE Paul Shafto, president of Wyoming State AFL-CIO, speaks from floor.

J. B. MINICKS, a delegate from Iowa, is another floor speaker at conference panel session.

PENNSYLVANIA GROUP meets with Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D). Standing are: Clark, Harold Davis, Musicians; Frank Stern and LeRoy Clayton, both from Lehigh County Central Labor Council; John A. Feigel, Allegheny Central Labor Council, and Art McDowell, Upholsterers. Seated: George Bucher, Upholsterers, and Russell Ward, Transport Workers.

The Decisive Letters

TO PERHAPS a greater extent than in other congressional election years, the record of the second session of the 87th Congress may be shaped by the word from "back home."

In the closely divided House of Representatives—closely divided between liberals and the conservative coalition—the daily mail sacks may spell the difference between an aye and a nay vote.

In this election year, congressmen are measuring closely the sentiment in their districts for health care for the aged, aid to education, steps to ease unemployment. Both parties are searching for the key to political success in November, and one of the keys is voter sentiment as disclosed by letters and visits to congressmen and senators.

The Republican Party, eager to win control of the House in the fall balloting, is divided between those party leaders who seek a return to an outmoded conservatism and those who believe liberal policies will attract the voters in November.

The Democratic Party, with the exception of the southern conservatives who are allied with the GOP conservatives in a bid for a revival on the right, generally supports the Kennedy Administration program and its liberal position on health care for the aged, aid to education and other measures of overriding importance to trade unionists. This group is placing its wager on a continuing liberal trend in American political life.

In this situation, the word from "back home" can play a decisive role. There are numbers of sincerely motivated congressmen and senators who are undecided on the major issues and who are anxious to cast their votes in line with the prevailing sentiment in their districts or states.

Letters, at times wires or phone calls, and visits either in Washington or back in the district or state will bring the voter sentiment to the attention of these legislators and may play a key role in producing the vital vote that means the difference between a live law and a dead bill.

Labor's legislative goals in eight major areas can be achieved or brought nearer to achievement if the letters from trade unionists—their families, relatives and friends—begin piling up on congressional desks.

The pen is a mighty weapon; put to work it can help produce the margin of victory for liberal legislation in 1962.

A Curious Silence

ORGANIZED LABOR, the favorite "villain" of the noisy reactionaries, stepped out of Sen. John L. McClellan's type casting last week and there was a curious silence.

Over in the Labor Dept., Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg presented certificates of merit to 22 union, management and government representatives for bringing in two Atlas missile complexes weeks ahead of schedule.

It probably was newsworthy in Topeka, Kan., and Cheyenne, Wyo., the sites of the missile installations, but it barely penetrated the rest of the nation's press, radio and television which normally comes alive with headlines at the slightest intimation of a labor dispute anywhere.

Goldberg summed it up when he said:

"The public seems very well-informed about the difficulties that have arisen at some of these bases, but is not equally informed about the great dedication, ability and effort that have gone into their construction."

Workers 'the Real Africa':

African Trade Unionists Warn Of Dangers of One-Party States

By Arnold Beichman

Lagos, Nigeria—The African Trade Union Confederation (ATUC), representing the continent's free labor organizations, knocked lustily on the door of the Nigerian Parliament Building where 21 independent African states met late in January and asked to be heard by the assembled African statesmen.

The answer was no, so Ahmed Tlili, president of the month-old Pan-African organization and head of the Tunisian Federation of Labor, convened a conference of the world press covering the intergovernment sessions to protest the exclusion and declared:

"The governments represent official Africa. The trade unions represent the real Africa."

Workers's Plea Rejected

The ATUC organizing convention in Dakar, Senegal, earlier in January appointed a three-man delegation to go to Lagos to present "the workers' point of view in African problems." A letter asking a hearing was sent to Nigeria Gov. Gen. Nnamdi Azikiwe, conference president, but the request was turned down.

Tlili thereupon made public at his press conference the speech he planned to deliver before the African chiefs of state. The contents of the speech were about as diplomatic as a picket line.

Tlili criticized the independent African states for barring the Algerian provisional government from attending as an equal the Lagos "summit" conference. This action led to a boycott of the Lagos deliberations by Tunisia, Libya, Sudan and five Casablanca states—Ghana, Guinea, Mali, Morocco and Egypt.

Said Tlili, who is also a vice president of the Tunisian National Assembly and an executive Board member of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions:

"It is stupid if not traitorous to settle the issues in Africa on the basis of what is convenient for the colonialist or imperialist powers, whether in the East or in the West."

Probably the most significant points made in the ATUC declaration dealt with anti-democratic tendencies in some African countries and the growth of one-party dictatorships.

"We in the trade union movement are becoming increasingly uneasy," said Tlili, "over the feeling in certain African countries that democracy is considered an obstacle to progress. On the contrary, free speech, freedom of the press, freedom of association, freedom to form and join unions and political parties and freedom to bargain collectively are necessary, if not indispensable, to all progress. We regard the desire to suppress these freedoms as an admission of fear and incompetence.

"We must emphasize strongly that a free trade union movement, representing millions of African workers for so long exploited and oppressed by colonialism, is indispensable for the preservation of democracy and economic social progress.

"Yet today we notice unhappily that in certain African countries, there is a tendency to emphasize capital formation and investment to the disadvantage of the workers. This policy will lead to situations where workers would be as much exploited by an independent regime as they were under colonial domination.

"We know well, governments and trade unions alike, that African development will not be accomplished without long and painful sacrifices. If these sacrifices are imposed by compulsion, it will lead to an enslavement which will only retard African growth."

These words are a sign of trouble ahead. Paradoxically, the era of anti-colonial agitation was a "honeymoon" because African nationalists in a European dependency worked together in the common aim to overthrow the colonial regime. Today with 28 independent African states the honeymoon is over, and the normal problems of Africa's postponed industrial revolution presage a serious conflict between workers and the new governments.

Union Freedom Varies

In some countries like Ghana, Guinea, Mali and Egypt, unions are tightly controlled by the government. And in others like Morocco and Libya, their freedom is circumscribed.

The head of the Libyan labor federation was jailed from September to December and charged with fomenting "public disorder" in other countries. In Sudan, unions exist in name only. In a few African countries such as Tunisia, Nigeria, Senegal, Congo Brazzaville, Congo Leopoldville and Tanganyika, perhaps others, trade unions are allowed to function in relative freedom.

Whether the voice of African labor will be heard in future African government meetings or not, it is obvious that the continent can no more be immunized from the vexations and torments of the industrial revolution than were the western countries.

Morgan Says:

Junior Type GOPs at Harvard Work Out on Party Leadership

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

SEN. GOLDWATER and a number of other Republicans have been pointing with pride recently to the American college and university campus as a wellspring of conservatism.

But they can hardy view with anything less than shrill alarm the brand of conservatism bubbling up in the intellectual artesian wells of Harvard. Republican students at Pres. Kennedy's alma mater publish what they call a journal of political thought entitled Advance. The latest issue, labeled in red letters Revise and Dissent, is just out. If this is a fair sample of what young conservatives are thinking in Cambridge, GOP National Chairman William Miller should be experimenting with methods of thought control and the party leadership should be calling on Robert Kennedy to demand that the journal and its budding journalists be placed on the attorney general's list of subversive groups.

Morgan

In its special issue devoted to a study in depth of the Republicans on Capitol Hill, Advance has almost nothing good to report. It complains, with some embarrassingly convincing argument, that the dominant characteristic of the men dominating the party in Congress is obstructionism. It maintains that the essential divisions among Republicans in both House and Senate are not "liberal" versus "conservative" but "between those who want to do something constructive and those who want to do nothing at all."

Unmistakably, the editors of Advance would like nothing better than to see the Republican congressional leadership retreat to the vanishing point. On the House side the magazine, on the basis of a large number of interviews with GOP members of Congress, maintains that "Republicans of all views feel they are being less led [by Minority Leader Charles Halleck] than presided over; that the only attempt at hammering anything out comes not in policy but in the strategy of obstruction. When there is a Republican 'success', it is in defeating a Democratic bill, usually with Dixiecrat help; seldom does the House GOP accomplish the sort of substantive victories it did even a few years ago."

As for the Senate, the young Republican publication maintains that "more Republican talent is being wasted or misdirected (there) than anywhere else in government." It demanded the ouster of Barry Goldwater from the chairmanship of the Republican Senate campaign committee.

"The party," said Advance, "cannot afford to indulge any longer, in such a crucial office, Sen. Goldwater's eccentric ideas about the desirability of certain Democrats and the undesirability of certain voters."

In an editorial, Advance declared that "mere obstructionism is a disclaimer of responsibility, not an assumption of it . . . The Republican leadership looks too much like the baseball team whose strategy was to 'wear out the opposition (by) running them around all those bases.' "

IN A SURPRISINGLY balanced look at the political scene, Advance points up the dismal record of Republicans in congressional elections over the past quarter of a century. Since 1930 there have been only two Republican Congresses out of 16. The magazine urges Republicans to take a look at the British Tories—"the Conservatives who win." The Tory consensus, says an article, "is favorable to the use of government for the benefit of society" whereas Republican conservatism is not conservatism at all but old guard recalcitrance.

You have to win to play, is the advice of the Harvard Republican upstarts to their elders and they even have some ideas how this should be done: more attention and research by GOP campaign committees of House and Senate in the areas of civil rights, labor and urban problems; a vigorous drive to increase the staffing of congressional committees with Republicans.

Another recommendation is creation of an "advisory council" of leading Republicans, including former members of the Eisenhower Administration, to work with the national committee in formulating and publicizing GOP policy. (This might conceivably have avoided the embarrassing intraparty to-do over the extremist emphasis that Chairman Miller wanted to place on a GOP reply to the President's State of the Union message.)

Lest the Democrats gain a sense of false security from this youthful but uncallow critique let them heed this appraisal by Advance:

"The real choice is between anticipating the future, or acquiring a stake in the fading institutions of the past. The Democrats are currently stuck [in Congress] with the stultified men and unjust mores of the declining era of southern parochialism. They are making unconvincing attempts to escape the consequences."

Indeed if the Young Democrats of Yale or California or the University of Podunk wanted to borrow a leaf from the book of these impertinent Harvard Republicans, they could give their own elders similar fits and we might all be better for it.

Washington Reports:

Health Care Bill Passage Seen Depending on Public Pressure

WHETHER OR NOT the Anderson-King "medicare" bill passes Congress this year depends upon the number of people who contact their senators and congressmen, Rep. Cecil King (D-Calif.), co-author of the proposed legislation, and Rep. Seymour Halpern (R-N.Y.), who has a companion bill, declared on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on 500 radio stations.

"The secret of the success of most propositions that are controversial in the Senate or the House is that citizens are aroused to the point of writing their representatives to state their views," King said.

"Congress is very close to the people," Halpern asserted. "This is particularly true of the House, and if every member of that body were to hear from his constituents, from the folks back home—who, I believe, overwhelmingly want this program—then the bill has a very good chance. The people who want the legislation can't sit back and take its passage for granted."

King called the AMA-Blue Shield proposal for health insurance for the aged at $3 a month "pressure" to combat the Administration's plan for health insurance.

King said the AMA-Blue Shield plan might supplement the Anderson-King bill, but "certainly is no substitute."

HALPERN CALLED the AMA-Blue Shield plan "far from adequate."

"It doesn't cover hospitalization as it should," he said. "The cost would be more [than under the Anderson-King bill] and it doesn't provide what's needed. I think it is merely an attempt to cloud and camouflage the true issue."

The Anderson-King bill would provide through social security for "up to 90 days of in-patient hospital service, up to 180 days of skilled nursing home services after transfer from a hospital, outpatient hospital diagnostic services, and some health services."

Halpern's proposal "follows the same philosophy," as he described it, "but it goes a step further to take care of the forgotten 4 million people who are not covered by social security."

Both congressmen said that the Kerr-Mills bill, passed by Congress last year, is inadequate and "spotty," with some states not having adopted it. Halpern criticized "the vicious means test [in the bill] to qualify for its provisions."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE RISING STAR in the Republican heavens is George W. Romney, president of American Motors, who is expected within a few days to announce his candidacy for the Republican nomination for governor of Michigan. The minds of politicians being what they are, Romney is also being touted for the GOP presidential nomination before he has made the grade in his bid for governor.

The Detroit Free Press gave an extraordinary amount of space to Romney one Sunday in January, with a lead story on Page One and a full page inside the editorial section. The presentation was based on an exhaustive two-hour-and-20-minute interview by a team of Free Press editors and reporters, and the results were broken down into separate stories involving the motor executive's viewpoints on economics, politics, the state of the nation, the state of Michigan, and Romney's revelations—a kind of "See why, this-is-how-I-do-it" yarn—on his three-step process in reaching decisions.

The New York Herald Tribune's top political reporter, Earl Mazo, also had a long interview with Romney, equally impressive in the space and play given in the paper.

To those with long-enough memories, the process seems curiously reminiscent of the publicity buildup given more than 20 years ago to Wendell L. Willkie, the public utilities executive who was a total amateur in politics but nevertheless captured the Republican presidential nomination in 1940 from the late Sen. Robert A. Taft. He was beaten by Franklin D. Roosevelt, and in 1944 he was vengefully repudiated by the GOP professionals when he tried for a second nomination.

THE ROMNEY BOOMLET arises substantially, one surmises, from his nerve and skill in the business world in bucking the Big Three automobile manufacturers and forcing the present trend toward so-called "compact" cars with his Rambler.

Romney also appears to have made a considerable impression on Republicans by his performance in the current sessions of Michigan's constitutional convention. The GOP elected more members of this convention than Democrats did, and Romney is the vice president.

Democrats charge that the convention sessions are being manipulated by the GOP to spotlight Romney to advantage. The Herald Tribune's Mazo considers Romney's performance to be "dazzling," revealing his "amazing" knack for "turning obstacles into assets."

So far as Michigan is concerned, the Republicans obviously are desperately hunting for a candidate for governor who they think has a chance to win. They writhed through six straight elections unable to defeat G. Mennen Williams, and then suffered the indignity of losing once more to Williams' Democratic successor, incumbent Gov. John B. Swainson. They are urgently in need of new faces—the kind of "attractive, young" candidates the Democrats elected by the dozens during the Eisenhower years.

As for Romney and the presidency, the boomlet reflects partly the realization in the GOP business and public relations world that the party is in short supply of potential candidates. This may be related to the obvious popularity of a Democrat named John F. Kennedy.

Gov. Rockefeller's marital troubles reduce his appeal to some who would normally support him, and the party's hard-core conservatives detest him. Former Vice Pres. Nixon faces a hard, and perhaps losing, battle for governor of California. Arizona's Sen. Barry Goldwater, talking about his conservatism and his conscience, has never had a chance to get the backing of the financial powers who control Republican presidential conventions.

Romney is a new face. He is, says Mazo, "one of those exceedingly rare individuals who suddenly crops up as 'natural' for elective office," and he is said to have the encouragement if not the backing of both Nixon and former Pres. Eisenhower.

How to Buy:

Employer Can Make Garnishee Unnecessarily Cruel to Worker

By Sidney Margolius

ONE OF THE CRUELEST situations workers get into is that some employers compel them to pay garnishees even if the debts involved may have been the result of fraud. Employers need to recognize that many garnishees actually are not justified, and that some creditors use employer dislike of garnishees as a weapon of fraud.

A woman worker for one of the country's biggest hotels recently was visited by a canvasser from a local credit store. The salesman showed her a set of stainless steel tableware at a price of $65. He told her she didn't have to decide immediately, but after delivery could take a few days and decide whether to keep it.

When the tableware arrived the woman signed a "receipt" for it. But on closer inspection, it did not seem to be the same quality the salesman had shown her. She wrote the seller to take back the set.

The only answer from the seller was a demand for payment. She refused to pay and the seller promptly got a garnishee. The "receipt" she had signed turned out to be an installment contract.

The worker went to the Legal Aid Society. Its lawyers were willing to fight the garnishee. However, the following week the worker was called in by her employer's personnel office. She was told that a garnishee for $120, including finance charges and legal costs, had been filed, and that the hotel would not tolerate garnishees.

To keep her job she had to settle with the seller. She settled for $75 for a set of stainless steel which another retailer estimated was worth $15.

As the result of this and similar incidents, both the New York Hotel Trades Council and the Metropolitan Consumer Council have proposed to the state attorney general that he seek legislation which would bar employers from using garnishees as a cause for firing. The attorney general is interested.

The combination of a blank contract and garnishee power can be devastating. But one Chicago credit jeweler tried the blank-contract ruse—now outlawed in some states—on the wrong person. He charged a man $95 for a watch (later estimated to be worth $9), and got his customer to sign a blank contract. The customer turned out to be a city detective, and the jeweler ended up in jail.

New York credit unions also have gone on record as backing the proposal to outlaw firings for garnishees. Louis Bonderefsky, managing director of the New York State Credit Union League, reported that when he was treasurer of a railroad employes credit union, one of his chief problems was keeping garnisheed employes from being suspended from work.

HE FREQUENTLY was successful in this rescue effort when department supervisors would alert him that a worker had been garnisheed. Then the credit union would act to save the man from suspension by certifying that it was taking control, either by providing a loan to pay off the creditors, or by setting up a trustee account.

The trustee account is an interesting and valuable device in which the credit union takes over the employe's pay, calls in the man and his wife, sets up a budget with part of his pay and apportions the balance among the creditors. Bonderefsky said that the credit union often would even seek a reduction of the debt, especially when overpriced watches and jewelry were involved, or even redeem these items if they had been pawned and insist that sellers take them back.

Often Bonderefsky would plainly tell a seller that he had better agree to a settlement or reduced payments, or the debtor would be on the street and the creditor would get nothing.

Garnishees are not only a frequent cause of job loss or suspension, but also a leading cause of the rising number of wage-earner bankruptcies that is alarming legal authorities.

Bankruptcy cases filed in federal courts in 1961 reached an all-time high of almost 147,000, compared to 62,000 just five years ago. The increase last year more than doubled that in any previous year, Commerce Clearing House reports.

There also was an increase of 45 percent in cases involving debt-extension plans for wage-earners. Such debt-extension plans are not bankruptcies, but are court-supervised arrangements for repayment of debts, something like Bonderefsky did with his credit union, but not usually with the same effort also to reduce the amount of debt.

While we're hopefully waiting for Congress to act on the Douglas "truth-in-lending" bill, at least one state is considering such a bill to protect its own people.

The Kentucky State Credit Union is backing a bill to require credit sellers and lenders to state the true annual interest rate, as proposed for the whole country by the Douglas bill.

COLLEGE ENROLLMENT TRENDS 1940–1975

Possible Future:

Vast Unemployment Result of Automation

VAST UNEMPLOYMENT and social unrest which would weaken the very foundations of our democracy may be the end result of automation and widespread use of computers, a Fund for the Republic study warns.

The study, "Cybernation: The Silent Conquest," by Donald Michael, was prepared for the fund's Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions.

The report concluded that despite the efficiency of technical processes which can replace human labor and even do much of the thinking for government and business administrators, cybernation—a high-powered word for automated techniques—may spell the end of our present economic system and the beginning of much greater government involvement in many aspects of American life.

The author, a graduate of the University of Chicago and Harvard, has been associated with Brookings Institution and a number of government agencies such as the Defense Dept. and the National Aeronautics & Space Administration.

The report predicts that cybernation will eliminate immense areas of employment, doing away with entire job categories ranging from factory and farm workers to bank tellers and "middle management" executives.

The resulting mass unemployment, idleness, boredom, social tensions and protracted economic hardship—for which Michael sees no ready solutions—mean that "the government will probably be faced for the indefinite future with the need to support part of the population through public works."

The study goes into some detail on the effect of automation—or cybernation—on employment and unemployment. For example, it points out that there may be lack of employment for "untrained adolescents," 26 million of whom will be seeking work in the Sixties.

"Continued widespread and disproportionate firing of Negroes, if accompanied by ineffectual re-employment methods, may well produce a situation that will increase disenchantment abroad and encourage discontent and violence here," Michael asserts.

The report attacks the assumption that service industries will not be seriously affected by unemployment and that they will be able to absorb retrained factory workers displaced by automation.

Michael cites outstanding examples of employment cutbacks already to be found in such service categories as the telephone and dry-cleaning industries, home maintenance, and elevator operation. Automation may eventually eliminate jobs now performed by bank tellers, statisticians, salesmen and retail clerks.

In sharp contrast to the growth in unemployment and leisure for blue-collar and service workers and middle management executives, "professional" people—such as teachers, doctors, scientists, and engineers—will be "overworked" despite development of teaching machines and computers which can make certain types of medical diagnoses. From Soup to Nuts:

A Simile Is a Figure of Speech That Isn't Always Like Bardot's

By Jane Goodsell

I AM ABOUT TO LAUNCH a crusade to be known as the Anti-Similes That Never Meet Campaign. Anybody in sympathy with my aims is cordially invited to join.

A simile is a figure of speech comparing two things of similar nature. A simile-that-never-meets is a ridiculous comparison of two things that haven't anything to do with each other. Like these:

As warm as toast. Now honestly, have you ever eaten a warm piece of toast? Of course not! Toast is the most difficult food in the world to keep warm. By the time you have transferred it from toaster to plate and spread butter and maybe marmalade on it, it is cool—if not downright cold.

As easy as taking candy from a baby. It is, of course, possible to separate a baby from a piece of candy. But unless you have the temperament of Lucrezia Borgia and the strength of Bull Montana, it isn't easy. It takes strong character to stand by while the baby, purple with rage, beats the air with clenched fists and rends the air with piercing shrieks. I know from experience that the baby is more than likely to have its candy reinstated.

As cute as a bug. Judging from the quantity of Bug-Geta and similar products sold in stores, it seems unlikely that bugs are generally regarded as cute. Any bug that feels snug in a rug is living in a fool's paradise.

As easy as pie. Easy! I can think of few things more difficult and time-consuming to make than good pie. As a matter of fact, it isn't even easy to make bad pie. I have made some terrible pies, and they have taken me all afternoon.

As brown as a berry. Berries come in many different colors, not including brown.

As right as rain. I've heard a lot of discussion about rain lately, most of it unprintable. Nobody took the position that there was anything right about rain. The closest thing to an approving comment was, "Well anyway, it isn't snow."

Cruikshank Charges:

AMA Views Linked To 'Market' Outlook

Boston—Organized medicine is confusing professional medical standards with "the code of the marketplace" in its opposition to such health care proposals as the Anderson-King bill, an AFL-CIO official told the Norfolk District Medical Society here.

By so doing, it runs the risk of "irremediable loss" to the profession, said Nelson Cruikshank, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security.

The American Medical Association and state and local medical societies, Cruikshank declared, are sailing "under the flag of medical ethics while pursuing the course of their economic interests" when they oppose group health plan clinics and health care for the aged under social security.

He charged, too, that the AMA's statements regarding free choice of physicians amount to equating that choice with a marketplace purchase.

"This perverts an ethical principle into an economic shibboleth," Cruikshank declared.

He suggested that the AMA was not expert enough in the economic and social aspects of medical care to be able to tell the people of the country how they should spend their money for medical services, any more than a patient is qualified to tell a doctor how to perform an operation.

"I do not prescribe 'Shoemaker, stick to your last,' but I do suggest that it is questionable wisdom for the shoemaker to try to make his customers buy only the kind of shoes that he likes to make," Cruikshank commented.

Doctors, he said, cannot have it "both ways." He added:

"If you are to enjoy the sanctions and the immunities and indeed the prestige and the trust that have so long been tendered your profession, you must forego the ways and in some respect the rewards of business.

"If you insist on behaving as businessmen, confusing the legitimate claims of your profession with the mores of business practice, the public will inevitably mete out the cruelest punishment within its power: it will take you at your word."

Cruikshank issued a plea for professional and lay cooperation to achieve the highest quality medical care for all who need it and to preserve the integrity of the medical profession.

His audience, members of one of the country's leading medical societies, was composed chiefly of physicians from Boston's wealthier suburbs and from the faculties of Harvard, Tufts and Boston University schools of medicine.

During a question period following his speech, Cruikshank reiterated labor's support of the Anderson-King bill, which would use the social security system to provide hospitalization insurance for persons on the social security retirement rolls, and predicted easy passage in the House if the measure could reach the floor.

He made clear, however, that labor was more interested in making better use of existing facilities for more people than in setting up new programs. In this area, he said, "labor organizations have insisted on the separation of administrative and medical services."

He said, too, that passage of the Anderson-King bill would halt government expansion in the medical field because it would strengthen such private organizations as Blue Cross, whose costs are made high by the greater incidence of sickness among older people.

Asked about the possibility that enactment of the bill might lead to what would amount to a sitdown strike by doctors, he said he couldn't believe "that a doctor will let a mechanism determine whether he will provide services."

IUE Acts to End Flight of Jobs

Union leaders have joined with New Jersey congressmen to check loss of jobs at the Newark, N. J., meter division plant of the Westinghouse Electric Corp., which has been shifting production elsewhere.

Meeting with Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and Rep. Peter J. Rodino (D-N. J.), a plant committee headed by Pres. Marty Veneri of IUE Local 426 agreed to help form a regional committee of labor, government and civic leaders to secure Defense Dept. consideration of the Newark plant for work on government contracts.

Veneri urged the earliest possible action to halt a further reduction in jobs. He said layoffs have cost more than 1,000 jobs since Westinghouse moved its watt-hour meter department to a new plant in Raleigh, N. C.

Federal Contractors Ordered To Report on Job Bias Compliance

employment opportunity, including specific references to the policy in help-wanted advertising and other forms of recruitment.

Comprehensive reports will be required of manufacturing firms with contracts of $50,000 or more which employ 50 or more people. A separate reporting system is being developed for construction contractors and public utilities doing business with the government.

The report forms require companies to list their total number of employes and the number of Negroes in the following categories: managerial, professional, technical, sales, clerical, skilled craftsmen, semi-skilled operators, laborers, service workers, apprentices and trainees.

In areas where such groups form an "identifiable factor" in the labor market, the breakdown will cover Puerto Ricans, Latin Americans, orientals and American Indians. The various categories are also divided by sex.

Although the smallest companies will not be required to file the annual reports, a committee spokesman emphasized that they are still covered by the non-discrimination clause and subject to penalties, including cancellation of contracts, for failure to comply.

Assistant Sec. of Labor Jerry R. Holleman, executive vice president of the President's committee, said the reports will be a means of indicating compliance with the government's policy and "will give us the first opportunity to measure the situation in various industries and areas."

The report form, Holleman told a news conference, will also enable an employer to "take a good look at his employment practices" and provide a measurement of progress.

The first report must be filed by prime contractors by Mar. 31, 1962. Subcontractors will be required to submit reports at such time as a subcontract is awarded or modified after Apr. 1, 1962, and by Mar. 31 in future years.

Holleman said two major government contractors—North American Aviation and the Radio Corp. of America—had agreed to conduct "test runs" of the reporting system, starting Feb. 1.

Negroes Gaining Jobs At Lockheed Plants

Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson has announced "substantial and heartening" progress in employment opportunities for Negroes at Lockheed Aircraft Corp. plants as the result of a "plan for progress" agreed to by the company after complaints of racial discrimination at its Marietta, Ga., operation.

Johnson, who is chairman of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, said a six-month progress report showed that at Lockheed's four plants—in Georgia, California and New Jersey—Negro employment increased 26 percent while overall employment went up 7.5 percent. The number of Negro employes in professional and administrative positions "increased substantially," the report said.

At the Marietta plant, Johnson said, Negro employment rose from 494 to 696, with Negroes in supervisory positions up from 16 to 24; in professional and administrative jobs, from none to six; technicians from none to one; clerical from none to five; skilled craftsmen from four to eight; operatives from 366 to 547.

In addition, the company reported that it had "greatly expanded" recruitment advertising in Negro newspapers and worked closely with state employment services, the Urban League and the NAACP in obtaining qualified applicants.

Childs Honored By Scholarships

Akron, O.—Seven $500 college scholarships have been established by the Rubber Workers in memory of Joseph W. Childs, URW vice president at the time of his death in 1960.

URW Pres. George Burdon said one scholarship will be awarded in each of the union's seven districts, one of which comprises Canada. Eligible will be children or wards of URW members who will have completed high school requirements for college entrance in the fall of 1963.

Candidates in the United States also must be eligible to take National Merit Scholarship qualifying tests, to be administered in March 1962. Canadian applicants will be judged on the basis of scholastic records and other data.

Center in Burma Opened by ICFTU

Brussels—The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and its Asian Regional Organization have opened an information and advisory center in Rangoon, Burma.

Sun Tun Hla, formerly head of the Intl. Dept. of the Trades Union Congress of Burma, is in charge of the office. It will advise the Burmese public and labor movements of developments in the international trade union movement and in the trade secretariats associated with it, and later will help TUCB with educational programs.

Organizing Meet Held in Norfolk

Norfolk, Va.—Three hundred delegates from AFL-CIO unions in the Norfolk-Portsmouth area took part in an all-day conference on organizing Jan. 27 called by the newly-formed Tidewater Organizing Council.

The council, a coordinating group to spur and assist union organizing efforts, was sponsored by the Portsmouth Central Labor Council, the Norfolk Union Labor Council, the 5th Naval District Metal Trades Council and the Norfolk-Portsmouth Building Trades Council. Carl B. Hough, president of the Portsmouth central body, presided.

Speakers included Virginia State AFL-CIO Pres. Harold Boyd; AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Oliver W. Singleton; Pres. James A. Brownlow of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept.; Nicholas Zonarich, organization director of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.; Joseph D. Keenan, AFL-CIO vice president and secretary of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Brendan Sexton, assistant to Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther, and George T. Brown, deputy director of the Labor Dept. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

FORMER PRES. Harry S. Truman gives a genial reception to officers of the Insurance Workers during the union spokesmen's recent visit to the Truman Library, Independence, Mo. At left is IWIU Sec.-Treas. William A. Gillen and at right, Vice Pres. Robert J. Nicholson.

DEEP IN STUDY during a residential institute at Michigan State University is John A White, Jr., of the Operating Engineers. Three more such institutes will be sponsored this summer by the National Institute of Labor Education for union staff members and part-time officials with leadership potential.

NILE Program Offers 3 Residential Institutes

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Peter T. Schoemann, chairman of the Federation's Committee on Education, has urged affiliated unions and central bodies to take advantage of three residential study institutes to be sponsored this summer by the National Institute of Labor Education.

The 10-week institutes, embodying a new approach to labor education, will be held from June 18 to Aug. 24 at Cornell University, the University of Michigan and the University of California at Berkeley. They will carry forward a program begun by NILE last year when some 50 representatives of 21 international unions and one central body took part in the first institute series.

New Insights Given

"There was general agreement that the intensive study helped them to understand today's union problems and gave them new insights into solutions," said Schoemann, who is president of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, in a letter to heads of other AFL-CIO affiliates.

In urging member unions to sponsor participants for this year's institutes, he cited NILE's role in developing experimental programs in labor education and furthering educational activities of benefit to trade unions. He noted, too, that the AFL-CIO is working closely with NILE and the three universities in the study program. Nine of the 13 members of the institute advisory committee are representatives of the federation or its affiliates, including AFL-CIO Education Dir. Lawrence Rogin.

The courses are intended primarily for union staff members, although part-time officers with sufficiently broad backgrounds may also be accepted. Among last year's participants, a number of whom subsequently were advanced to new positions or assignments, were 22 international representatives and 12 full-time local officers.

The two-year experimental program is designed, according to NILE, to demonstrate what can be accomplished in educating union officials in fields broader than the traditional "bread-and-butter" subjects.

Participating unionists spend 10 weeks in an academic atmosphere, removed from their jobs and families (wives, or husbands, and children are discouraged, but not forbidden).

Instruction by Experts

Faculty members are drawn from the universities' labor relations schools to conduct intensive courses in such subjects as the central economic problems of the times, American government and politics, man and society, and the American labor movement. Special seminars are held on specific union problems, such as automation, white-collar organizing, labor law, civil rights, education and international trade.

Participants must be sponsored by their local or international unions or by some other union body, such as a state, city or district labor council. Those who apply are expected to return to responsible positions in the labor movement.

There are no academic requirements for enrollment, although considerable reading and some writing are necessary during the course.

The NILE selection committee will choose a maximum of 20 students for each of the three institutes. Tuition is free, and NILE will provide $4 a day to cover about half the cost of room and board. The remaining amount must be supplied either by the participant or his union.

Application forms, which must be filed by Mar. 31, may be obtained from Joseph Mire, executive director of NILE, at Room 310, 1730 K St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

ILO Publishes 21st Year Book

Geneva — Real wages in the United States increased only 1.6 percent between 1959 and 1960, according to the 1961 edition of the Year Book of Labor Statistics just published by the Intl. Labor Organization.

Data on wage increases are among many statistical tables providing a wide range of information from different nations. They show that worker purchasing power increased by 9.5 percent in Germany, 3.5 percent in France, 5 percent in Japan and 1.1 percent in Hungary.

The 1961 Year Book, the 21st in the series, has 50 more pages than its predecessor and for the first time includes data from some of the new African nations.

Labor News Conference:

Bargaining, Legislation Seen Aiding Shorter Workweek

Both collective bargaining and legislation have parts to play in future reductions of the workweek, an AFL-CIO economist declared as he urged Congress to consider the federation's proposal for a "flexible workweek with the national standard tied to levels of unemployment."

Seymour Brandwein of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Reasearch said not enough attention has yet been given to the idea proposed in an AFL-CIO convention resolution for reducing the standard workweek during times of high unemployment and reversing the process when joblessness declines.

Appearing on Labor News Conference, AFL-CIO public affairs program broadcast weekly by the Mutual network, Brandwein said that "as a practical matter" it will take some time to persuade Congress to enact another major revision in the Fair Labor Standards Act following last year's improvement extending coverage and increasing the minimum wage.

Bargaining Comes First

"I would expect that before legislation is adopted some substantial precedence will have to be worked out in collective bargaining," he said in response to questions from Joseph Gambatese, associate editor of Nation's Business, and John Herling, labor columnist for the National Newspaper Syndicate.

Already, Brandwein noted, one out of every six persons holding full-time jobs is on a standard workweek of less than 40 hours.

He said "moonlighting" or dual-job holding among these workers had been "vastly overrated as a serious problem" and cited Labor Dept. findings that second jobs typically involve less than 12 hours a week of self-employment, part-time farm work or other activities of a sort that would not provide employment opportunities for others.

Labor's interest in a shorter work week, Brandwein emphasized, lies in the need for improving job security and fighting unemployment, "particularly where you have rapid advances in technology and the threat of displacing workers."

"Cutting hours," he said, "is an alternative to cutting men. Secondly, by cutting hours while maintaining weekly pay, we help maintain a consumer market and in the process build up more employment opportunities."

He said the recent reduction of the New York City electricians' workweek from 30 to 25 hours could not be regarded as a pattern, but was a specific, isolated situation that offers "a rather interesting social laboratory for an examination of how rather extreme hours reduction may work well down the road to the future."

The issue now, the federation economist continued, "is whether we reduce from a 40-hour standard to a 35 or a 32-hour" standard. Bargaining history, he said, so far has indicated "no congealing of membership preference" as to what form that reduction should take, such as fewer hours per day, fewer days per week or extended vacations.

Given a choice today, Brandwein observed, most workers probably would prefer more pay to shorter hours, but if preservation of job opportunities depended on the choice, "it is quite clear in my mind that the overwhelming preference would be to take steps that would promote employment security."

The AFL-CIO, he said, regards the shorter workweek as but one means of tackling the unemployment problem and has emphasized a broad range of economic policies to control joblessness.

"However," he added, "we can't fly in the face of the evidence before us that other measures are not doing the job. Pressures are mounting to lead to even higher unemployment totals, and so we are unhappy about this tool being kept in reserve too long."

ILPA Offers Guide To Press Relations

A 28-page press relations guide, designed to help union officers and staff, has been published by the Intl. Labor Press Association. Chapters cover practical fundamentals of effective relationships with newspapers and broadcasters, under the traditional news-story elements of "who, what, when, where, why and how."

Copies of the pamphlet are available at 10 cents each, regardless of quantity, from the ILPA office, 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

CofC Lobbyists Cool To Kennedy Program

The Kennedy Administration took its legislative program to the nation's businessmen, as represented by 1,000 delegates to a two-day public affairs conference sponsored in Washington by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

But except for some support of the President's trade expansion program, the delegates were generally cool to Kennedy's ideas for bolstering the American economy.

The conference, first of its kind conducted by the Chamber, paralleled in both subject matter and timing the AFL-CIO's Economic & Legislative Conference. The conclusions, however, were sharply at odds with the AFL-CIO program.

Lawrence F. O'Brien, special assistant to the President, told the representatives of local business associations across the country that trade expansion would be the "most important" issue before Congress this year and offered an opportunity for "the most challenging and historic" legislation since the Marshall Plan.

Arthur H. Motley, former president of the Chamber, said support of free trade was in line with the organization's opposition to what he called "a centrally-planned economy —whether you call it fascism, communism or socialism."

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg called on the business group to support as being in their own interest the Administration's proposals to expand unemployment compensation, enact manpower training and development and youth employment opportunities programs, and amend the Welfare & Pension Fund Reporting & Disclosure Act of 1958.

He warned that if business did not drop its opposition to the Kennedy proposal for governmental authority to monitor pension and welfare funds, it would take only one major scandal to bring about an even stiffer law.

In response to a question, he said the Administration intends to be "fully equal-handed" in its approach to upcoming steel negotiations and would do all in its power to see that "price stability is maintained."

He rejected a charge that the National Labor Relations Board has become pro-union under Kennedy and declared that the country now has "an excellent labor board."

Goldberg said the Chamber's proposal to apply anti-trust regulations to unions is a "propaganda slogan and not reality."

But the proposal was renewed by a subsequent speaker, Charles M. Brooks, labor relations director for Texaco, who called for measures to outlaw industrywide bargaining and thus curb what he called the "terrifying power" of labor.

Maurice A. Kramer, manager of the Chamber's Congressional Action Services, not only condemned the Kennedy plan for a federal Dept. of Urban Affairs, but declared that the problem of governmental "centralism" extended even to the state level. State boards of education, he charged, had not help to improve local school systems but had been a factor in their deterioration.

Court Blocks Rail Strike By TWU

Philadelphia — A U.S. District Court judge has ordered the Transport Workers not to take strike action against the Pennsylvania Railroad because of a proposed merger with the New York Central Lines, but said the union can ask the court for relief at a later date if merger developments produce a "real and substantial threat" of layoffs.

TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill, who had set Feb. 4 as the date of a union walkout unless given written assurance of job protection for TWU members, said it was "significant and unprecedented" that a Pennsylvania court had reserved jurisdiction in an injunction case and preserved the union's right to "relief against layoffs."

The union, Quill said, will continue its "fight for absolute guarantees of job security" until every worker is "assured 52 paychecks a year every year."

The PRR and the NYC announced Jan. 12 that they would combine to form the nation's largest railroad if stockholders and the Interstate Commerce Commission approve. The union and the PRR then filed suit against each other—TWU to halt the merger, the railroad to block a strike.

District Judge Abraham Freedman issued a temporary restraining order forbidding a strike or work slowdown until the union has followed the provisions of the Railway Labor Act for a 90-day "cooling off" period before a strike, and until the ICC has had time to act. Congress, he said, has not given federal courts the right to decide if mergers are proper but has conferred that authority on the ICC.

The NYC has petitioned a New York court for a similar injunction against the union.

To Do Spadework:

Ohio Union Women Moving into Politics

Cleveland—Labor women of Ohio are rarin' to go, politically speaking.

At a standing-room-only meeting here, women from four congressional districts voted emphatically to enlist in the intensive COPE program called for by the Ohio AFL-CIO executive board and to do the spadework needed in preparing for an area rally, scheduled here for Mar. 10 by the Ohio Committee on Political Education.

More than 325 members of labor families turned out on a blustery winter Sunday for a program at which about 125 were expected.

They heard Morris Riger, state COPE director, call for their help in an expanded program aimed at getting more information into the hands of labor voters, more volunteer workers at the precinct level and more results on legislative issues.

The Ohio AFL-CIO executive board has called for a program, Riger said, with these objectives:

- Division of the state into COPE districts with full-time directors wherever possible.
- Development of training programs on political techniques.
- Wider use of information media to inform members of the issues.
- Recruitment of manpower—and womanpower—for work at the precinct level.

Mrs. Jane Adams, director of the state Women's Activities Division, arranged the women's meeting and Mrs. Betty McCrone of the Auto Workers chaired it, with these results:

The women set up four groups representing the congressional districts in Cuyahoga County, with the groups serving as basic units of the Cleveland AFL-CIO COPE.

In preparation for the Mar. 10 COPE meeting, they agreed to get more volunteers for the job of processing union membership lists, assembling lists of members by ward and precinct, checking the names of registered voters and preparing mailing lists for COPE use.

Speakers included Mrs. Esther Murray, eastern director of the national WAD office in Washington, D. C.; Pres. Patrick J. O'Malley, Cleveland AFL-CIO; Mrs. McCrone and Riger.

Riger said similar WAD meetings will be held in Dayton, Cincinnati and Columbus. The COPE meeting schedule is as follows:

Cincinnati—Feb. 17 at 10 a. m., Metropole Hotel, for residents of the 1st, 2nd and 6th congressional districts.

Dayton—Feb. 18 at 2 p. m., Utility Workers Hall, 2307 Embury Rd., for members in the 3rd and 7th districts.

Columbus—Feb. 24 at 10:30 a. m., Nationwide Inn, 4101 West Broad St., 12th and 17th districts.

Marietta—Feb. 25 at 2 p. m., IBEW Hall, 311 Second St., 10th and 15th districts.

Youngstown—Mar. 3 at 10:30 a. m., Mural Ballroom, 225 W. Boardman St., 11th, 18th and 19th districts.

Akron—Mar. 4 at 2 p. m., URW Local 5 Hall, 708 S. Main St., 14th and 16th districts.

Cleveland—Mar. 10 at 10:30 a. m., Hotel Statler-Hilton, 13th, 20th, 21st, 22nd and 23rd congressional districts.

All the meetings will be pointed at sessions called by AFL-CIO COPE for Apr. 3 and 4 in Detroit for delegates from Ohio, Indiana and Michigan, and the state AFL-CIO convention in May in Cleveland.

LABOR WOMEN and some of their men ignored winter storm warnings to crowd a hotel meeting-room in Cleveland for the first of a series of area meetings called by the Ohio AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education and its Women's Activities Division. Pictured here are some of the delegates from four Ohio congressional districts. Similar meetings will be held soon in other parts of the state to organize labor support for COPE-endorsed candidates and causes.

Shoe Union Sues In Plant Closing

St. Louis—The United Shoe Workers have filed suit for $375,000 damages against the Easton Boot & Shoe Co. on behalf of nearly 350 workers who lost their jobs when the owners closed the plant here the day before last Labor Day.

Local 7 has asked the St. Louis Circuit Court to award damages of $1,000 to each severed employe; payment of accrued vacation and holiday pay under a contract due to expire Dec. 31, 1962; rehiring rights for each worker with full seniority, and a payment to Local 7 of $25,000 in compensatory damages for loss of dues and other rights under the contract.

The suit was filed when union and company failed to reach agreement on damages. The plant was closed and the work transferred to another plant.

Steelworkers Win Vote At Big Cincinnati Plant

Cincinnati—The Steelworkers have scored a major organizing victory here, winning bargaining rights for nearly 1,200 American Standard Co. workers who had been represented for nearly 20 years by an unffiliated union. The firm makes heating and plumbing equipment.

The workers gave the USWA a nearly 3-to-1 majority in a National Labor Relations Board election. The tally was 637 for the Steelworkers to 273 for the Independent Union of American Standard Employes, the unaffiliated unit which had turned back the USWA in two previous NLRB elections in the past six years. Actual employment in the bargaining unit is higher than the vote would indicate, since additional workers were hired or recalled after the voting lists were drawn up.

Al Whitehouse, director of USWA Dist. 25, said the vote was the first to be held since the union launched a major organizing drive last year in 14 Cincinnati area plants with more than 30,000 employes. All are plants which have either no union or unaffiliated unions.

Whitehouse said American Standard had given "strong backing" to the unaffiliated union but "problems created by increasing automation and technological improvement" brought the workers to a realization that they needed a strong, nationwide union. He said the USWA represents workers at nine other American Standard plants and other AFL-CIO international unions also hold bargaining rights.

The USWA was the only AFL-CIO affiliate on the ballot in the main production and maintenance unit. The Molders competed unsuccessfully for a smaller unit and the Pattern Makers won all eight votes in balloting involving a unit of their craft.

In the entire plant, only three "no union" votes were cast. Twenty-seven ballots were challenged but the challenges did not affect the results.

'Hate' Groups Backing R-T-W, Says Mrs. FDR

Oklahoma City—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt has written an Oklahoma City housewife that a proposed "right-to-work" constitutional amendment in Oklahoma is "a pitfall of radical extremism" and "a backward step that should be rejected."

Mrs. Ima B. Finley, who wrote the former First Lady for her views on outlawing union shop agreements, was told in reply:

"The 'right-to-work' law is now being advocated by many of the radical right 'hate' groups that are seeking to divide our country and set class against class. Such extremists as the John Birch Society, We the People, and like radical groups have seized upon the so-called 'right-to-work' issue as another divisive force and are actively supporting enactment of this law in Oklahoma.

"Actually, the so-called 'right-to-work' law does not guarantee a job to anyone. Its real purpose is to prevent the organization of workers into unions of their choice and to weaken unions which already exist."

Clergymen Quoted

In another attack on "right-to-work" sponsors, the National Council for Industrial Peace has blasted a U.S. Chamber of Commerce publication containing statements of several individual clergymen who seek to ban union shop agreements.

John M. Redding, director of the council, noted that the individual views expressed in the CofC circular are those of "dissidents" who "disagree with the central theme of thought by church leaders across the country." He added:

"The main stream of church thought in the United States on the subject of so-called 'right-to-work' laws takes the moderate position that the force of law should not intrude on the labor-management collective bargaining process."

Redding noted that the National Council of Churches General Board, the United Presbyterian Church in the USA, the Methodist Church Board of Social & Economic Relations, the Congregational Church, the Rabbinical Council of America, the American Jewish Congress and the Catholic Committee of the South have all taken stands opposed to "right-to-work" laws.

Bailey Flays GOPon'Work' At IAM Meet

Chairman John M. Bailey of the Democratic National Committee has again challenged national Republican Party leaders to take a clear-cut stand in opposition to so-called "right-to-work" legislation.

Bailey spoke at a Machinists' political session also addressed by five Republican senators who declared their opposition to "work" laws in their own states—Jacob Javits, New York; Clifford P. Case, New Jersey; Thruston B. Morton, Kentucky; Hugh Scott, Pennsylvania, and Thomas Kuchel, California.

Bailey, however, said before a planning committee meeting of the Machinists Non-Partisan Political League that renewed GOP activity on behalf of the "unjust, unfair and misnamed 'right-to-work' laws in Oklahoma, Michigan and other states" leads him to suspect that those running the national GOP machinery "don't want strong organized labor in collective bargaining, or anywhere else, for that matter."

Invited by the Machinist, the union's official publication, to comment on Bailey's remarks, National GOP Chairman William Miller has not yet done so. The National Right-to-Work Committee, Inc., commented that Bailey should "verify" his charges or apologize.

Bailey also told the committee that medical care for the aged, financed through social security, will be enacted at this session of Congress if it comes to a vote, but if it does not, "I am not going to give up and neither is Pres. Kennedy."

Purcell, Roberts Win Texas Races for House

Texas voters have sent two new Democratic representatives to Congress to fill vacancies caused by the resignation of Rep. Frank Ikard (D) and the death of Speaker Sam Rayburn.

Graham B. Purcell, a 42-year-old district judge, will represent north Texas' 13th Dist. He defeated conservative Republican Joe Meissner, 23,871 to 14,087, in a special election for Ikard's seat. Purcell is pledged to the Kennedy program except, he says, for federal school aid and health care for the aged under Social Security.

Rayburn Successor Named

State Sen. Ray Roberts, a former aide to the late Speaker Rayburn, won a run-off election against labor-backed R. C. Slagle, Jr., an attorney, for Rayburn's seat.

Roberts polled 16,151 votes to 13,474 for Slagle. Slagle closed the gap of the primary held last December, when Roberts finished first, in a six-way race.

In those counties in the district where the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education was able to put its programs into operation, the vote for Slagle was substantially increased dwellers with their opposition to an urban affairs department, angrily charged Kennedy with trying to embarrass them by "injecting" the race issue "to force Republicans to abandon principles for votes in the next election."

President Sets Stage for Showdown With Conservatives in Congress

Opposed by Halleck

The charge was made by House GOP Leader Charles A. Halleck, who said Republicans opposed creation of the new department because it would "bring 75 million Americans under direct federal supervision."

Retorting to the charge that he had injected the race issue by confirming—in answer to a reporter's question—his intention to appoint Weaver to the Cabinet post, Kennedy noted it was "well known" on Capitol Hill that Weaver would be in line for the post and "the American people might as well know it."

In other developments:

● The House passed, 319-79, a five-year, $1.5 billion program of federal grants and loans for the construction of college classrooms, laboratories and other academic facilities. Dropped from the bill as the price of getting it through the Rules Committee, which blocked it last year, was a provision for college scholarships.

However, a Senate bill, scheduled for quick action, includes federal scholarship grants. If the Senate approves its committee's bill, both versions would be before a House-Senate conference committee.

● An Administration bill, to end what Kennedy has termed the "insidious" use of literacy tests for voters to deny the ballot to Negroes and other minority groups, became a bipartisan civil rights measure as Senate GOP Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.) joined Democratic Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) in co-sponsoring it.

The measure would require states to consider completion of a sixth grade education as evidence of literacy for voting in congressional and presidential elections.

In addition to preventing the use of literacy tests as a subterfuge to disenfranchise Negroes in the South, the bill would also make it easier for Puerto Ricans in New York and other states to vote. It makes six grades of education at a Spanish-speaking school in the United States—including Puerto Rico—evidence of literacy.

The bill was referred to the Senate Judiciary Committee headed by Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss.), an outspoken foe of civil rights legislation. However, Mansfield served notice that if the committee does not report out a bill within "60 to 90 days" he will bring the measure before the Senate as an amendment to an unrelated bill.

Mansfield gave this assurance after Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N. Y.) appealed a ruling of Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson that the bill be referred to the Judiciary Committee rather than the Rules Committee. Javits' appeal, backed by 13 Democrats and 12 Republicans, was rejected 61-25.

● The Senate passed and sent to the President a controversial bill to give tax relief to Du Pont stockholders who may receive a special dividend of General Motors stock as the result of a court anti-trust order that the company divest itself of its heavy holdings of a company with which it has extensive business dealings.

Sen. Albert Gore (D-Tenn.) and Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) led the fight against the bill, which passed the House last year. Gore's motion to recommit the bill, based on the argument that Congress should not act in a manner which might influence the pending decision of a federal judge in the case, was defeated 67-25.

● The House passed by voice vote a bill raising postal rates to produce $691.3 million in new revenue in the next fiscal year. As sent to the Senate, the bill raises first-class postage from 4 cents to 5 cents, increases the piece rate for subscription newspapers and magazines in two steps—although exempting non-profit publications—and boosts rates for third class bulk mailing, again exempting non-profit organizations.

Included in the bill was a provision, criticized by Kennedy at his press conference, prohibiting the Post Office Dept. from handling mail determined by the Attorney General to be Communist political propaganda.

Senate Post Office & Civil Service Committee Chairman Olin D. Johnston (D-S.C.) announced that hearings on pay raises for postal employes will precede committee consideration of the rate bill.

● The Senate Finance Committee rejected 9-7 a motion by Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.M.) to hold public hearings on health care for the aged through social security no later than Apr. 1, whether or not the House has sent over a bill by then. Anderson is sponsor of the Administration bill in the Senate.

Anderson has served notice that he will offer his bill as an amendment to another House-passed measure if the committee fails to act.

Orderly Growth Urged

In his reorganization message, Kennedy warned Congress: "We will neglect our cities at our own peril, for in neglecting them we neglect the nation."

He spoke of the need for "orderly expansion" of urban areas, "not explosion and sprawl."

The scourge of blight must be overcome, and the central core areas of our cities, with all their great richness of economic and cultural wealth, must be restored to lasting vitality, the President said.

Kennedy emphasized the need for housing "to serve better all income groups in our population and to move ever closer to the goal of a decent home in a suitable living environment for every American family."

The plan he submitted would bring into the new department the existing programs of the Housing & Home Finance Agency, with the Federal Housing Administration and the Federal National Mortgage Association continuing as divisions within the department. Urban renewal activities and community facilities operations now under the Commerce Dept. would also be assigned to the department.

Democratic leaders indicated they would seek the first test vote in the Senate. In line with this strategy, Sen. Gale McGee (D-Wyo.), who supports the measure, introduced a formal motion of disapproval which meant that a floor vote could be forced after 10 days have elapsed. A resolution of disapproval was also filed in the House by Rep. George Meader (R-Mich.) who opposes the bill.

A FAIR EMPLOYMENT practices law with teeth to end discrimination in hiring, on the job and in apprenticeship programs was urged by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany before House Labor subcommittee headed by Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.), at left.

Medical Education Aid Called for by AFL-CIO

The nation's pressing shortage of doctors and other health personnel is likely to get worse unless Congress enacts a program of federal aid for medical education, an AFL-CIO official told the House Commerce Committee.

Andrew J. Biemiller, the federation's legislative director, recalled in testimony supporting the Hill-Harris bill that the AFL-CIO convention had described the training of more doctors as "among the most pressing of America's health needs."

He said the legislation sponsored by Lister Hill (D-Ala.) and Rep. Oren Harris (D-Ark.) incorporates what the AFL-CIO regards as the federal government's responsibility "to provide grants to medical and dental schools to assist these schools in financing of planning, construction, expansion, restoration, and cost of education, and for scholarships to qualified medical and dental students in need of financial assistance."

Biemiller said there has been "a striking expansion" in the demand for medical services in recent years as a result of the rapid growth of health insurance prepayment plans, the shift in population from rural to urban areas, and the rise through greater life expectancy in the number of persons in upper age groups where the greatest need for medical services exists.

"These trends," he said, "can be expected to continue at an accelerated pace in the future."

Against this increasing demand, he testified, the supply of physicians is increasing at a rate that falls short even of maintaining the existing doctor-patient ratio.

"More people, demanding more services per person, pressing upon a worsening shortage of physicians, can only increase the price of medical services, erode the value of health insurance plans and raise a higher cost barrier between the public and the best that modern medical science has to offer," Biemiller asserted.

But the present limited capacity of the nation's medical schools is inadequate to bring about any substantial increase in the supply of doctors, he pointed out, declaring:

"Existing schools must be expanded and new schools must be built. Both can be done without injury to the quality of education."

Federal financial aid for this purpose, he said, is "the only realistic and practical answer" in the light of the inability of existing sources of financial support to meet the costs.

Turning to the decline during recent years in the number of students applying for admission to medical schools, Biemiller said the reasons were manifold.

"But certainly it is clear that with an average cost of $11,600 for four years of medical training, there is a vast reservoir of talented young people who cannot consider the possibility of entering the medical profession for purely economic reasons," he added.

4.7 Million Idle, Rate Dips Under 6%

Kennedy's recommendation for such legislation as the manpower development and retraining bill.

Included in the long-term jobless are 672,000 workers unemployed for more than half a year, about 31,00 more than in January 1961.

"Goldberg said that if the current level of unemployment were to persist, a total of 5.5 million new jobs would be needed in 1962 to reduce the jobless rate to "even a 4 percent level" and at the same time provide full-time work for persons joining the labor force, those in jobs affected by automation and technological change, and those now working part-time involuntarily.

Non-Farm Jobs Decline

The January jobs total included 2.1 million non-farm workers on part-time because of economic reasons, 150,000 fewer than in December and nearly 1 million below the figure for January 1961.

The Labor Dept.'s report attributed the December to January drop in the job total to "the usual post-Christmas decline." A department spokesman added, however, that because of cold weather and the slack retail season, joblessness normally rises by about 750,000 over the month, instead of the 600,000 recorded this time.

The drop in jobs, the department said, occurred entirely in non-farm employment. Agricultural employment, at "unusually low levels" in previous months, showed no further decline. The number of non-farm jobs in January—60.6 million—also was at a record for the month, 800,000 higher than a year ago.

Declines of 800,000 over the month in both the total labor force and the civilian labor force were seasonal, the report said.

In releasing the job figures, the department noted that it had revised its seasonal adjustments of labor force components on the basis of more recent data. It said the 5.8 percent rate of joblessness in January reflected this revision. The December 1961 rate, originally announced at 6.1 percent, was revised to 6 percent, and the rate for January a year ago was set at 6.7 percent.

Emphasizing the importance of training and retraining as a "major pathway" to improving employment, Goldberg also released the first report of the Labor Dept's experience under the Area Redevelopment Act, which became law last year. The report listed 29 training and retraining programs as having been approved, covering some 4,200 trainees in nine states.

"Already in the pipelines," Goldberg said, "are enough training proposals to use up all the available funds for the current fiscal year."

"Even more important," he added, "is the fact that 50 percent of the trainees now in these approved programs had been unemployed for half a year or more; one-third of them, in fact, had been jobless for a full year or more. A substantial proportion are the older workers.

Hard Core Idle Helped

"Our experience so far indicates that this kind of program can make a significant impact on the hard core jobless situation which the new unemployment figures show still continues to be a major problem."

The Labor Dept's report on major labor areas predicted improvement in the first quarter of the year. It noted that the 61 areas with substantial unemployment represent a decline of 40 from the all-time high of 101 reached last spring.

Movement over the month included the addition of the New Brunswick-Perth Amboy, N. J., area to the substantial unemployment list. Fall River and New Bedford, Mass., both shifted from Group D—6 to 8.9 percent unemployment—to Group E—9 to 11.9 percent. Shifting in the opposite direction was the Wilkes-Barre-Hazelton, Pa., area, which went from group F—12 percent or more jobless—to Group E.

The report showed a net decline of two in the number of smaller areas on the substantial unemployment list, making the total 199, of which 101 are classified as having "substantial and persistent" joblessness.

Fifteen "very small" areas were added to the list of those with substantial and persistent unemployment bringing the total to 340, but the department said this does not necessarily reflect a worsening of employment conditions in these areas. Additions to the list of very small areas, it noted, are based in part on the extent to which these areas are called to its attention for special surveys.

Kennedy Economic Goals Called 'Short of Job Need'

Tripartite Economic Parley Set

By John M. Barry

A White House National Economic Conference bringing together leading representatives of labor, management and the public to exchange views and seek "the broadest possible understanding" has been approved by Pres. Kennedy.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg said the conference had been recommended by the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy, which he heads, following recent discussions with the President.

He said that while specific arrangements still must be worked out, the conference probably would be held in Washington before the middle of the year and would involve from 100 to 200 spokesmen for unions, business and industry, and the public, including government officials.

The plan for an interchange of ideas among government policy-making officials and leaders in the private sector of the economy was set forth in a letter to the President from his labor-management advisory group.

Such a forum, the advisory group said, would increase understanding of the impact and interplay of public and private decision-making in economic matters.

The conference would not attempt to reach agreement on specific issues or to adopt recommendation on government policy, Goldberg emphasized. He described it, instead, as "a communications and education project."

Discussion Areas Listed

Topics for discussion, the secretary said, would include many of the matters being considered by the President's committee, such as automation, the U.S. balance of payments, collective bargaining and industrial peace, economic growth and wage-price policies.

The advisory committee, Goldberg observed, has found the exchange of views among its 21 members to be beneficial and feels that a broader exchange through the planned conference "would be even more beneficial."

The conference, he said, would not be "just a sounding-board" and would be held without reference to the 1962 collective bargaining scene. On the other hand, he added, the committee does not anticipate "a general, theoretical economic conference" but hopes for practical discussion of matters affecting the nation's economic strength.

UAW Settles With Studebaker-Packard

The Auto Workers and the Studebaker-Packard Corp. have reached agreement on a settlement of the 38-day strike by 6,725 UAW members at the firm's South Bend, Ind., plant. The pact followed 10 hours of steady bargaining in Washington by UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Sherwood Egbert, president of the company.

Terms of the settlement were withheld pending its submission for ratification by the UAW local. A meeting for that purpose was scheduled for the weekend. Issues in the dispute included holiday pay, overtime pay, work schedules and wash-up time.

Egbert and Reuther said they hoped workers could return by Monday.

POINTING TO A CHART showing the slowness of the pickup in jobs from the recession, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther testifies before the Joint Economic Committee on a program designed to spur employment.

Message Praised As Policy Advance

The AFL-CIO praised Pres. Kennedy's economic report as a "long step forward" in establishing a national economic policy but said it does not go "sufficiently far" to achieve the ends the Administration is seeking.

Federation Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther, chairman of the AFL-CIO's Economic Policy Committee, specifically called for action now on three anti-recession measures proposed by the Administration on a stand-by basis and took exception to the White House view that wage increases should be limited to the extent of productivity increases.

In a detailed 64-page statement presented to the Joint Economic Committee holding hearings on the President's economic report, Reuther called for Congress to set up studies of a "flexible workweek" and the "methods of democratic planning for maximum economic progress" and to establish a technological clearing house to gather information as the basis for future planning.

The AFL-CIO vice president spelled out a 20-point program involving legislation in the social and economic areas so that the nation can realize "its full potential."

He termed the Administration's programs a "vigorous and imaginative advance in leadership" but added that "even those programs fail to comprehend the full magnitude of the problems we face or the full dimensions of our potentialities."

Goals Called 'Limited'

The Administration's short-run goals for 1963 Reuther termed "limited," with the maximum employment objective representing an unemployment rate that is "too high although it is much better than our actual record of recent years." The maximum production objective is

Trust Fund Disclosure Bills Pass

The House and Senate have passed separate bills aimed at safeguarding $60 billion held in trust for more than 80 million beneficiaries of employe health and pension funds by putting "teeth" into the 1958 Welfare & Pension Plan Disclosure Act.

The almost identical bills give the secretary of labor investigative and enforcement powers to uncover abuses in plans, whether they are administered by employers, by unions or jointly.

Stiff criminal penalties—up to five years in prison and $10,000 in fines—are set for fund administrators found guilty of false statements, offering or soliciting bribes or kickbacks, or embezzlement.

The enforcement powers added to the existing law would bring it close to the original AFL-CIO-backed bill, sponsored by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) and passed by the Senate in 1958. That bill, cleared by the Senate unanimously, was drastically watered down by the House.

Strengthening amendments to the 1958 law, proposed by the Kennedy Administration last year and strong-

Loan Substitute Beaten:

Senate Votes Aid to Students, Colleges

By David L. Perlman

The Senate has voted 69-17 for a five-year program of federal aid to colleges including scholarships for more than 200,000 talented, needy students. The action followed House approval of a scaled-down college aid measure lacking any provision for scholarships.

There were major differences between the two bills that observers believed might cause substantial difficulty in efforts to reconcile them. The possibility existed that coalitionists in the House might try to block a House-Senate conference committee to work out an agreed-upon final measure.

Senate action came as Pres. Kennedy in a special message renewed his request for grants for public school classroom construction and teachers' salaries. He also urged funds for teacher training assistance, scholarships for medical and dental students in addition to the general college aid, help to states in educating children of migrant workers, and matching grants for construction of educational television stations.

In other action:

- The House Government Operations Committee opened hearings on Kennedy's reorganization plan to create a new Dept. of Urban Affairs & Housing, with Cabinet status, and the President launched a vigorous campaign to get the plan past Congress.
- Both the House and the Senate passed pension and welfare fund disclosure bills strongly supported by labor. Slight differences were expected to be reconciled in conference.
- The House Rules Committee, by an 8 to 7 vote, reported out the Administration's labor-backed bill to establish a manpower development and retraining program. The

Auto Workers, Machinists Renew Aircraft-Missile Bargaining Pact

The Auto Workers and the Machinists have announced that they will again join in a solid bargaining front in negotiations with major employers of 500,000 workers in the aircraft and missile industry. In simultaneous press releases, IAM Pres. A. J. Hayes and UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther said that a single collective bargaining program for 1962 will be formulated at an IAM-UAW Joint Conference on the Aircraft, Missile & Related Electronics Industry Feb. 19-21 in Washington, D. C. The first such conference was held in 1959 in Kansas City.

For years previously, the two union heads said, the industry had had "a good deal of success" in playing one union off against the other to the disadvantage of members of both. "That practice came to an abrupt end" as the result of the original jointly formulated union program, Reuther and Hayes said.

The joint bargaining goal this year will center on job security, and income security for the workers, they declared.

A "double standard" now exists, they charged, under which employers are guaranteed against losses arising from changed defense needs but workers suffer frequent layoffs and job losses.

Accredited delegates from both unions will hammer out in the Washington meeting a program based on these major objectives:

- Improvements in insurance, severance pay, layoff benefits, wage policies and union security.
- The challenge of organizing the unorganized workers in the rapidly expanding technical, engineering, and office worker groups.

Reuther and Hayes said present arrangements are "completely inadequate" to protect the worker or to "protect America from the dissipation of the skills, training and experience" possessed by industry employes.

"It is our hope in 1962 to begin to remedy this intolerable double standard which protects the industrys' producers," they said, "but leaves the worker and his family completely at the mercy of unpredictable . . . forces at work in our defense effort."

The IAM and UAW have had a mutual assistance pact since 1953.

Glass Bottle Strike Averted, Talks Continue

Chicago—A potential nationwide strike by the Glass Bottle Blowers against the Ball Brothers Co. was avoided as the firm agreed to rejoin industrywide bargaining sessions now in progress here and be bound by any agreement reached.

The company's withdrawal from the industry bargaining group — termed a "deliberate anti-labor move" by the union—had threatened to shatter a 77-year record of peaceful agreements between the GBBA and the glass container industry. Three locals had voted to strike on Mar. 1, when the existing agreement expired.

A joint union - company announcement said issues in dispute "have been or shortly will be resolved by negotiations."

In addition to cancelling its strike notice, the GBBA also withdrew a suit it had filed in federal court seeking to restrain the company from closing its Muncie, Ind., plant. The joint statement said the company has agreed to hold discussions with the union on the scheduled plant closing.

GBBA Pres. Lee W. Minton said the union will continue to press its complaint to the National Labor Relations Board that Ball Brothers interfered with its employes' freedom of choice in a representation election at a new plant at Mundelein, Ill. The union has asked the NLRB to order a new election at what Minton said is the only non-union glass container plant in the nation.

Potofsky Asks Brotherhood Week Sharing

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky has called on federation members to mark National Brotherhood Week by dedicating themselves to the fight against discrimination "until practice conforms to principle throughout the land."

Potofsky, who is president of the Clothing Workers, is national chairman for labor of the Brotherhood Week observance, which starts Feb. 19. Other chairmen are Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, representing government, and Walter Wheeler, president of Pitney-Bowes, Inc., for industry. The observance is sponsored by the National Conference of Christians & Jews.

Cautioning trade unionists against complacency, Potofsky said that "the ideal of universal brotherhood is a long way from attainment in our country, and even in some parts of our own movement."

"It is our solemn obligation as trade unionists to work constantly toward that ideal, both as workers and as citizens," he continued.

While discrimination based on race, creed or national origin is condemned by most Americans, Potofsky observed, "there are too many who nevertheless perpetuate discrimination in practice."

"The achievement of brotherhood," he declared, "the uprooting of discrimination, depends upon what we do, not what we say."

New Brunswick, N. J. — The Photo Engravers' executive council has voted to contribute $500 to the building fund campaign of the Rutgers Institute of Management & Labor Relations and its labor unit.

Institute Director I. L. H. Kerrison said he expects to achieve the $650,000 campaign goal by the time the building is dedicated later this year. Other labor and management groups have been asked to participate.

CHECKS WORTH $10,000, given to the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation by members and locals of the Street, Electric Railway & Motor Coach Employes, are looked over as Sec.-Treas. O. J. Mischo (left) of the union presents them to AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler.

New York Labor Sets Legislative Priorities

Albany, N. Y.—The New York State AFL-CIO has put improvements in the state's social insurance laws at the top of a "priority list" of labor-backed legislation.

The state federation called for automatic setting of benefits under the unemployment insurance, workmen's compensation and sickness disability programs at two-thirds of average weekly wages of employes covered by the laws.

The priority program called also for additional payments for dependents, extension of unemployment and disability benefits to 39 weeks, extension of unemployment insurance coverage to agricultural workers and employes of non-profit institutions, and liberalized eligibility standards.

Earlier, Legislative Chairman Raymond R. Corbett told 500 delegates to the State AFL-CIO's annual legislative conference that Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller's message to the legislature was notable "not so much by what it contained, but by what was omitted."

Other major legislation sought by labor as "a minimum program which is basic to the well-being of our state" included:

- A $1.50 statewide minimum wage.
- Legislation making recruiting of strikebreakers illegal.
- Coverage of public employes and employes of non-profit organizations under the state labor relations law.
- Repeal of the Condon-Wadlin Act prohibiting strikes by public employes.
- Strengthening of the child labor law.
- Elimination of the means test in providing state medical care for the aged.
- Reapportionment of the legislature to eliminate existing inequalities.

Citizens' Group Urges Hospital Union Rights

New York—A citizens committee of 220 prominent New Yorkers has been formed to seek state legislation bringing workers at non-profit hospitals under New York's labor relations and unemployment insurance laws, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. A. Philip Randolph has announced.

Randolph is serving as a co-chairman of the new Citizens Committee for Equal Rights for Voluntary Hospital Employes, along with the Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick and City Court Justice Emilio Nunez.

Randolph said the committee's goal is "to eliminate the second-class citizenship status" of hospital workers. He added:

"We regard their exclusion from collective bargaining as unjust, unwise and inconsistent with the basic rights afforded all other workers.

"It has contributed to the perpetuation of a situation in which low-paid, minority group workers are compelled to subsidize hospital deficits through substandard, sweatshop wages."

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt is a member of the committee, which includes clergymen from a number of faiths, civic leaders, prominent personalities from the arts and professions, educators and union officials, including AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, president of the Clothing Workers.

Citing the 46-day strike waged by workers at seven hospitals in 1959 and a recent dispute at the Flower & Fifth Ave. Hospital, Randolph declared that strikes for union recognition are "inevitable as long as these workers are denied the elementary right to bargain collectively with their employers through unions of their own choice."

Gildea Assigned To Meany's Staff

James C. Gildea has been named a special representative of the AFL-CIO assigned to the Office of the President, Federation Pres. George Meany announced.

Gildea had served as a member of the two-man fact-finding teams set up under the 1958 Miami Agreement for handling internal disputes. From 1955 to 1958 he was assistant to the secretary-treasurer of the Industrial Union Dept.

His service with the former CIO goes back to 1941 and includes handling of internal disputes for that organization. He was assistant to the secretary-treasurer of the CIO at the time of merger.

Cancer Foundation Grants:

11 AFL-CIO Fellows Given Research Aid

Eleven young medical researchers from seven nations have been awarded AFL-CIO fellowships provided by the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation as part of a worldwide search for the causes and cure of cancer.

They will undertake advanced research and study in medical schools and laboratories of six nations, under the supervision of outstanding specialists in their fields.

The foundation is an affiliate of the American Cancer Society.

The AFL-CIO fellows, so designated in recognition of labor's support of the Eleanor Roosevelt Foundation, were among 22 chosen by the Intl. Union Against Cancer at a recent meeting in Geneva, Switzerland. The organization of cancer specialists from 60 nations is affiliated with the United Nations' World Health Organization.

Prof. W. U. Gardner of the Yale University School of Medicine, who presided at the Geneva meeting, said the fellowships were awarded "primarily to persons whose backgrounds and accomplishments give assurance of continued contribution to the knowledge of the causes and cure of cancer because they have demonstrated a capacity for significant independent investigation of some aspects of cancer."

The program has been aided by the AFL-CIO's $1 million pledge —and more than $700,000 actually contributed—in honor of Mrs. Roosevelt.

The AFL-CIO fellowships were awarded to:

Albert Cattan, 32, France, for research at Churchill Hospital, Oxford, England.

Johan De Man, 37, the Netherlands, for research at Harvard Medical School.

David Erlich, 34, Brazil, for research at Weizmann Institute, Rehovoth, Israel.

Hideo Miyawaki, 32, Japan, for research at Yale University School of Medicine.

Bruce Hobson, 41, England, for research at Uppsala University, Sweden.

Shu-Hsi Hsiao, 42, China (now at Institute for Cancer Research, Philadelphia), for research at McGill University, Montreal, Canada.

Ian MacPherson, 32, Scotland, for research at the Wistar Institute, Philadelphia.

Warren Myers, 42, U.S., for research at University of Cambridge, England.

Nicholas Petrakis, 40, U.S., for research at Embryological Labratory, Rome, Italy.

William Poel, 46, U.S., for research at Weizmann Institute, Israel.

Richmond Prehn, 40, U.S., for research at Weizmann Institute, Israel.

NLRB Clears Union, Hits Hotel for Spying

Monticello, N. Y.—An investigation by the National Labor Relations Board into a union waiter's charge against a Catskills resort hotel has resulted in the dropping of an NLRB complaint against Local 343, Hotel & Restaurant Employes.

On the other hand, NLRB Regional Director Merle D. Vincent, Jr., Buffalo, said that his investigation had "found merit" in union charges of unfair labor practices against the Pines Hotel of South Fallsburg, N. Y.

Vincent ruled that Local 343 in picketing the hotel was not doing so for recognition or organizational purposes and hence was within its rights. He withdrew an NLRB complaint and notice of hearing and dismissed the hotel's unfair practice charge against the union.

The ruling in the union's favor was based in some degree, an NLRB spokesman said, on testimony in U.S. District Court by Larry Slofsky, a former Pines employe. A waiter, Slofsky said he was paid $600 to sabotage union organizing attempts at the hotel and to "spy" on union meetings.

The waiter's story was that hotel management threatened to fire him and "blackball" him at other Catskill resorts when he started to help the union organize Pines employes. As a result of the threats, he acted as an "undercover" man for hotel management, he said, until last Oct. 29, when he "purged" himself in a confession to Sec.-Treas. Philip Kazansky of the union and went on the picket line.

Hotel management, which has denied Slofsky's charges, has until Feb. 13 to decide if it will appeal the dismissal of the complaint. Kazansky has filed a $100,000 damage suit against a hotel guard he says shot at him, and the union charges ask the labor board to order the reinstatement of 18 fired hotel employes.

Feinsinger Sets Probe Of Southern Air Strike

Prof. Nathan P. Feinsinger has opened a federal inquiry into the Air Line Pilots strike against Southern Airways, now in its 20th month.

Feinsinger was appointed last October by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg to inquire into government policy in connection with the dispute and another involving Western Air Lines.

At a pre-hearing conference called to determine the scope of the study, Feinsinger said he planned to investigate all phases of the Southern strike and to do all he could to assist in a settlement. He commented that the results of the inquiry might affect every airline in the country.

Matters to be explored in the public hearings, according to an agenda Feinsinger set forth, include the agreement among certain air carriers to provide mutual aid during labor disputes, questions of public safety when strikebreaking flight personnel are employed, and the issue of continued government subsidies to carriers involved in strikes.

The key remaining issue in the dispute, according to ALPA, is the airline's insistence that the striking pilots must forfeit their grievance rights and lose their accumulated seniority to strikebreakers.

Negotiations Open Feb. 14:

Job Security Goal In Steel Contract

By Eugene A. Kelly

Pittsburgh—The Steelworkers and 11 major steel companies have jointly announced that negotiations will begin Feb. 14 in an effort to reach agreement on a new contract providing increased job security and income security for the industry's workers.

Agreeing to a request by Pres. Kennedy that they start negotiations well in advance of the June 30 contract expiration date, both sides stressed the importance of improved employment security.

USWA Pres. David J. McDonald said he agrees with the President that the nation would "welcome an early settlement," accomplished through free collective bargaining.

For the companies, Conrad Cooper of U.S. Steel said management recognizes that "improved employment security of the steelworkers" is of primary concern in forthcoming negotiations, though there may be disagreement on how to achieve it.

The union made clear its position, in a statement by its wage policy committee, that its chief goal will be the protection of the jobs and incomes of members, many of them just "emerging from the worst recession since the Thirties."

Asserting that steel industry employment in April 1961 was 115,000 below the April 1960 level, and that "tens of thousands of our members have exhausted their unemployment compensation, supplemental unemployment benefits (SUB) and their savings" while many are on short workweeks, the policy committee said:

Jobs Stressed

"The best terms and conditions of employment in the world are of no value to a man who has no employment. Nor do high hourly wages mean high annual incomes if they are paid for only a few hours of work per week or a few weeks of work per year."

The union committee, saying that the recession is over for steel companies but not for the workers, said that "fundamental for 1962 negotiations," is the need of "additional measures of employment and income security for all the workers" it represents.

Objectives include, said the union:

- Improvement and expansion of SUB plans to provide adequate protection for all who are not given the opportunity to work a full week.
- Substantial improvement in seniority systems for the benefit of longer-service workers.
- Preferential hiring rights with "appropriate financial aid" for workers laid off, and training programs to qualify workers for available jobs.
- Limitations on overtime while qualified workers are laid off; limitations on the contracting-out of work and transfer of jobs from a bargaining unit; increases in the number of paid holidays, extended vacations for long-service employes, and other measures such as shorter work periods to increase job opportunities or work protection.

Improved Pensions Asked

The statement on contract objectives also called for improved pensions to encourage voluntary retirement, higher death benefits, and health care protection for retired workers.

Steelworkers have a right to expect, the union said, that their standard of living will also improve through higher wages, fringe benefits and working conditions.

The committee reasserted its belief that "the eventual solution to the problem of unemployment must be a shorter workweek without reduction in pay."

"We cannot sit by without taking substantial steps toward meeting the twin calamities we have been living with: unemployment, and the short workweek with a short pay envelope," said the union.

Pointing out that the grievance procedure of many union contracts has become "hopelessly clogged," the committee called for changes and reiterated some of the objectives spelled out in the 1959 wage policy statement—increased premiums for weekend work, improvement of the entire insurance program, a full union shop and other benefits.

Negotiations will be conducted in two simultaneous sections—representatives of each company will meet separately with union committees on company and local problems while an all-company team meets with a union team to negotiate general settlement terms.

UTW Wins Election Firm Tried to Block

Spartanburg, S. C.—Workers at the P. Garvan Co., a textile by-products plant here, voted 65-9 for the United Textile Workers after the National Labor Relations Board turned down a last-minute company effort to block the election.

Most of the workers are women paid the federal minimum wage of $1.15 an hour. The company charged they had been "intimidated" into supporting the union. An NLRB representative came to Spartanburg for an on-the-spot investigation, took statements from workers and—at 2 a. m. of the day of the election—ordered the balloting to proceed as scheduled.

The successful campaign was part of a cooperative joint organizing experiment in South Carolina, coordinated by the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. It marked the seventh union victory in eight NLRB elections held during the program's first year. The Textile Workers Union of America gave active support to the UTW in the campaign.

IUD Coordinator Joseph Applebaum, charged by the company with having told workers they would lose their jobs if they voted against the union, said dozens of workers came directly from an enthusiastic election-eve union meeting to testify in denial of the company accusation.

If there had been any attempt at "intimidation," Applebaum said, it was on the part of the company, which had held a "captive audience" meeting to urge employes to reject union representation and engaged in "interrogation" of workers.

Tanganyika Becomes 102d ILO Member

Geneva—Tanganyika has become the 102d member of the Intl. Labor Organization following its admission to the United Nations in December.

THESE MEN, and tens of thousands like them, made labor history 25 years ago in the sitdown strike which brought giant General Motors to the bargaining table for the first time. This group, shown at the window of GM's Fisher Body plant No. 1 in Flint, Mich., were among the vanguard of the 113,000 GM strikers who stayed in for the 44 days it took to win union recognition. Flint, an armed battleground a quarter-century ago, now hails the sitdown with a week-long celebration and a proclamation by the mayor.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS LATER, this is what some of the original sitdown strikers at Flint now look like. The copy of the Flint edition of the Detroit Times they are holding up is a quarter-century old, too, and tells the story of the original Auto Workers-General Motors peace pact reached after these men had "sat down" 44 days in the plant. The Times is now defunct.

Veterans of '37 GM Sitdown Strike Now Hailed as Heroes by City of Flint

Flint, Mich.—Bud Simon, 59-year-old General Motors worker, pointed out of Local 598's window to the sprawling Fisher plant across the street.

"Seems just like yesterday we crawled out of a window right down there! And then marched up South Saginaw street like we'd just won World War I all by ourselves."

But it was "just like yesterday" only as "just like yesterday" can be in the mind and memory of a man reaching back to recall a moment that shaped his life.

Actually it was 25 years ago—almost to the day.

And in Flint's spacious IMA auditorium Feb. 4 a good many memories were churned as UAW local unions here gathered to observe the 25th anniversary of the end of the historic "sitdown" strikes in General Motors plants.

Just 25 years before, as nearly 4,000 armed troops patrolled the streets of Flint, it seemed all the power of the world's most powerful corporation would be turned against the sitdowners and the pickets outside the plants.

Fourteen strikers had already been wounded by gunfire. Many others, including women, had weathered tear-gas attacks.

A GM City

This was a city built and at that time owned—lock, stock and barrel—by General Motors. The city fathers were GM's offspring.

Indicative of the great change a quarter century can bring is the city commission's proclamation this year of UAW Week, which contained such phrases as ". . . The sitdown strikes marked one of the greatest advancements in the history of organized labor."

Or these words: "It is fitting that the progress made by the UAW and organized labor, and the benefits accruing to the community thereby, be recognized and publicly acclaimed. . . ."

Going into the sitdown strikes, the UAW had less than 10,000 members.

'Off the Ground'

The UAW came out of the 44-day strike with a nine-paragraph agreement which, in a nutshell, spelled recognition. And the UAW was off the ground.

Union Pres. Walter P. Reuther as main speaker at the celebration this year stressed this point:

"All of our economic gains since '37 are basic and important, but even they do not rank in importance with the one great gain of human dignity—the tremendous change that converted General Motors workers from faceless clock-card numbers to individual human beings.

"And with this assertion of human dignity came the exercise of a fuller measure of their rights as citizens. . . . To me, this is the great achievement."

For 90 minutes previously, a Detroit theatrical company—"Theater of the Stables"—gave a vivid and stirring performance of a play called "Sitdown '37."

UAW Regional Dir. E. S. Patterson said:

"The labor movement seldom looks back. Very rarely are honors passed around and courageous deeds cited.

"The local Elks Club hands out more awards in one week than we do nationally in 10 years. We just couldn't let this occasion pass by like any other day on the calendar."

Danes Give $36,500 To New ILO Institute

Copenhagen—Danish Minister of Labor & Social Studies has announced a gift of $36,500 to the endowment fund of the Intl. Labor Organization's new Intl. Institute for Labor Studies in Geneva, Switzerland.

AN OPEN HEART operation calls for a supply of blood, and that's what this youngster, Alan Abramson of Massapequa, N. Y., had when a congenital heart condition was corrected in 1960. For his father, Alvin, is a member of Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 3, which has a blood bank maintained through voluntary donations to the Red Cross program in New York. Alan, now in normal health, is shown during a Washington visit with AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, vice chairman of the 1962 Red Cross member and funds campaign.

IAM Cleared in Vote Irregularity Charge

The Labor's Dept.'s Bureau of Labor-Management Reports has dropped an investigation of charges by defeated candidates that irregularities occurred in last year's election of international officers by the Machinists.

Commissioner John L. Holcombe of the bureau announced the decision in almost identical letters to IAM Pres. Al J. Hayes and Roy M. Brown of Los Angeles, defeated candidate for general secretary-treasurer and the principal complainant.

Holcombe noted that the complaint, filed under the Landrum-Griffin Act, had failed to specify in detail the local lodges where violations were alleged to have occurred, but that a sample probe of procedures made it clear "that no violation pattern susceptible of national projection existed . . ."

Hayes vigorously protested a statement in the Holcombe letter that scattered violations insufficient to affect the 3-to-1 outcome of the vote "appeared to have occurred" in some local lodges.

Describing the Holcombe statement as "unjustified," Hayes pointed out that violations of the law also were violations of IAM instructions.

"If we are to help our lodges comply with this complicated law and avoid its many booby traps," Hayes said, "we must be informed in just what way and which of our 1700 local lodges are supposed to have been guilty."

The IAM president noted that the counting of ballots and all decisions on protests and challenges made during and following the election were handled by a committee of three tellers, one of whom was named by the defeated candidate, Brown, and another by the sucessful candidate, Elmer E. Walker. These two in turn named a certified public accountant as the third teller, Hayes reported.

"In their tally and in their rulings on protests, the tellers were unanimous on all accounts," he continued. "Brown's teller signed the protest without dissent or qualification.

"The Labor Dept. went out of its way to try to upset that report on the basis of unsubstantiated charges by defeated candidates."

The scattered violations which Holcombe said "appeared to have occurred" in one or more unspecified lodges included:

- "Failure to provide a secret ballot and guarantee to certain members in good standing one vote in some lodges."
- "Failure to properly safeguard, account for and preserve blank ballots in many lodges."
- "Use of union funds to support a candidate in one lodge."
- "Failure to adequately safeguard the voted ballots and preserve blank ballots at national headquarters."

Connecticut Labor Sets Fight on Bias

Hamden, Conn.—A reconstituted Civil Rights Committee of the Connecticut State AFL-CIO met here with officers of the state federation and Donald Slaiman, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights, to plan a year-round program of anti-discrimination activities.

The committee, headed by Henry Silverman, Sheet Metal Workers Local 40 in Hartford, scheduled a statewide civil rights conference Feb. 15 for local union and central body officers.

Taking part in the planning session were Committee Sec. Vincent Cirabella, members Edward Crowley, Matthew Bovino and Anthony Bellonio, and State AFL-CIO Pres. John Driscoll, Sec.-Treas. Joseph Rourke and Education Dir. Ruth Greenberg.

CSA Conference To Open Apr. 29

New York—The 7th annual AFL-CIO Conference on Community Services will be held Apr. 29-May 3 at the Pick-Congress Hotel, Chicago, Community Services Dir. Leo A. Perlis has announced.

The theme of the five-day meeting will be "The Public and Public Assistance" and is based in the belief that "it is essential that we do everything possible to focus the attention of our community on the importance of an adequate public welfare program to meet the immediate needs of people displaced by our competitive society."

Unique Program:

College Entrance Counseling Offered by New York Local

New York—More than 100 members of Hotel & Club Employes Local 6 and their children—and in some cases their children's grandparents—inaugurated a unique counseling program at an open meeting in union headquarters here.

The children wanted to learn about going to college. The parents wanted them to go and were eager to help. The grandparents in all cases wanted them to go in and some cases were able to help.

The mechanics of getting into college and staying there were discussed in depth in the opening periods by representatives of the admissions offices of three widely-differing institutions and by the young winner of one of the union's own scholarships. Then came a flood of questions from the floor—and finally, after the session had ended, a series of personal consultations.

The results were far beyond those anticipated. The educators were as intrigued as the union members and their children, and all expressed a desire to attend future meetings of the same kind. The success was so marked the union has established the college-counseling program as a regular service to members.

The program was chaired by the president of Local 6, Charles J. Martin. The "panel" consisted of Dean Charles C. Cole, Jr., of Lafayette College, who set up and now administers the union's scholarship program (two 4-year grants, one for $4,000 and one for $2,000); Richard Plaut, assistant director of admissions at the Columbia University School of Engineering; Richard D. Rooney, assistant secretary of admissions at Hamilton College; and Audrey Godala, a chemistry major in her senior year at Hunter College and holder of a Local 6 scholarship.

'More Important' Now

Cole, discussing "Why Go to College?" pointed out that because of the nature of our economy, the advance of automation and the sharp drop in the number of unskilled jobs, a college education is more important than at any other time in the country's history.

In the last century, he said, the U.S. became concerned with conservation of natural resources. In this century, he went on, it has turned to concern for the "conservation of human resources."

"Now we are trying to implement this program by conserving intellectual ability," he said.

He stressed that college goes beyond the development of a person's ability and helping attain a higher standard of living.

"Education opens a person's eyes to new horizons and new subjects," he explained. "It helps him to gain an understanding of how to make a life rather than just how to make a living."

Plaut explained the various types of colleges and the range of entrance requirements. In most cases, he said, a student applicant has to offer a consistently good scholastic record, which can be built only through serious study in high school. A student should apply for admission to college in his junior year, he said, adding:

"Write to three or four schools and make application. Vary these applications between those schools you think you have a pretty good chance of getting into, one in the kind of middle range, and then shoot high with one school that has rigid scholastic standards for entry."

Financing Discussed

Aids to financing a college education were outlined by Rooney. He said there are four general areas of financing—the student may work during the summer before entering college; he may get some help from his family, at least in terms of food and clothing; the college can help through scholarships; and the student may participate in the federal scholarship loan program. Students who live in New York State may obtain considerable financial aid, he added.

"A student and his family must plan early," Rooney said. "A good student may and should be able to get through college in a tuition-free school. That same student and his talent may be wasted if he aims at a school where the overall costs run as high as $2,500 or $3,000 a year."

Miss Godala stressed the importance, as did all of the speakers, of studying seriously throughout the four years of high school. She emphasized the increasing personal and intellectual freedom attained during the college years.

The inquiries made during the general questioning period covered every phase of college life.

The educators and union officials reported themselves greatly encouraged by the session. The latter said it may well be the first step in assuring each of the members' children equal opportunity for higher education.

New Wage Standards Seen Boost to Ecomony

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has reported to Congress that the nation's economy has been bolstered and helped by the rise in the federal minimum wage to $1.15 an hour last September, and establishment of a $1 an hour minimum for 3.6 million workers not previously covered.

Opponents of a higher minimum wage had argued that it would force price increases, touch off inflationary wage raises in other areas and "price" large groups of low-paid workers "out of their jobs."

None of this has taken place, Goldberg said in his evaluation to Congress, required by the law, of the impact of the broadened Wage-Hour Act.

He pointed out that both retail and wholesale prices have remained relatively stable since September, while unemployment has gone down. There has been no indication that higher wage industries have been affected, Goldberg noted.

Furthermore, he emphasized, the increased purchasing power of the lowest-paid group in the economy has been a "contributing factor" in the economic upturn.

Goldberg cited estimates that the wage increases resulting from the 1961 wage-hour amendments will add up to $536 million the first year. He said:

"There is no doubt that the uses to which individual wage earner families have put the additional income . . . were immediately beneficial.

"It is clear that the overriding, most significant effect of the 1961 amendments was to increase the hourly earnings of an important part of the lowest paid segment of the employed with dollars which are immediately spent for necessities. These increases thus served to bolster what is universally regarded as living standards inadequate by current United States yardsticks. . . .

"For the most part, in the period since enactment of the amendments, complaints to the department have revolved around the failure to cover hotel, restaurant and laundry workers rather than adverse effects of the amendments."

USWA Stelco Local Wins 21c Package

Hamilton, Ont. — Steelworkers Local 1005 won a 21-cent package in a new three-year contract with the Steel Co. of Canada reached after seven months of bargaining and a culminating 22-hour session with a conciliation board.

The agreement is comparable to one the union negotiated recently with the Algoma Steel Corp. of Sault Ste. Marie and means that two-thirds of Canada's basic steel industry is under contract for the next three years.

It increases wages by 4.5 cents an hour retroactive to Aug. 1, 1961; boosts the stepup between job categories from 6 cents to 6.5 cents—estimated as the equivalent of a 4-cent raise—effective next Aug. 1; and provided for another increases of 5 cents on Aug. 1, 1963.

The retroactive wage increase raised the base rate to $2 an hour and the top plant rate to $3.55.

The current medical insurance coverage will be replaced by May by the Physicians Services, Inc., Blue Plan and will be extended to cover dependents and pensioners and their dependents. Major medical insurance coverage was boosted to $5,000.

Life insurance was increased from $3,500 to $5,000 for workers and from $1,250 to $1,500 for pensioners. Sick leave pay was raised from $35 to $50 weekly.

McSorley Named ULLICO Aide

William J. McSorley, Jr., has been appointed assistant to Pres. Edmund P. Tobin of Union Labor Life Insurance Co. effective Feb. 15, 1962.

A former assistant director of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education, McSorley had served as assistant to the president of the Building & Construction Trades Dept. since July 1960.

Local Union Helps Open College Gates

INTENSE INTEREST in college counseling conference held by Hotel & Club Employes Local 6 of New York is reflected in the faces of father and son. Some 100 members and children attended.

GENERAL QUESTION period as part of the session brought out a wide range of inquiries from parents eager for education for their children and from children just as eager to get the schooling.

AUTHORITATIVE VOICE was that of Audrey Godala (right), holder of the local's four-year scholarship. Here Puerto Rican girls in U.S. only five years learn about importance of fluent English.

INDIVIDUAL ADVICE was given after the main session. Dean Charles C. Cole, Jr. (right), of Lafayette College, one of the speakers, confers here with a prospective collegian and her father.

ALL-IMPORTANT question of how to get financial assistance through scholarships and student loans is explained to a father by Richard D. Rooney (left) of Hamilton College admissions office.

HOPES FOR FUTURE of these parents and youngsters lie in better education, and Local 6 is trying to help them attain their goals. Initial conference was so successful from viewpoints of educators, parents and children that the local decided to make the program permanent.

People vs. the Coalition

UNDER THE HYPOCRITICAL BANNER of "states' rights" and opposition to "big government," the conservative coalition in Congress, abetted by the National Association of Manufacturers and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, is launching a bitter-end attack on Pres. Kennedy's bid to create a Dept. of Urban Affairs & Housing.

While the attack has its roots in part in the political entrapment of the Republicans on the House Rules Committee, who went on record against aiding the cities and their mushrooming suburbs, and the President's intention of naming Robert C. Weaver, a Negro, to head the new cabinet-level department, there are even more basic factors involved.

The nation, as the President pointed out in his message to Congress, has "passed from a rural to an urban way of life," and city dwellers must be given "an adequate voice in the highest councils of government." A Dept. of Urban Affairs & Housing will be merely a start in this direction.

In 1960 only 30.1 percent of the nation's population could be classified as rural; the other 69.9 percent was defined as urban—cities and their suburbs.

However, in the U.S. House the 30 percent of the rural population controlled 58 percent of the seats and the 70 percent urban group only 42 percent.

This rotten-borough system of representation helps insure continuing opposition to programs designed to help the 70 percent of the population with far-reaching problems of housing, education, slum clearance, water pollution, transportation and scores of other complex and difficult areas of modern life that have little or no meaning in the rural areas.

The President's new cabinet department would pull together the scattered agencies responsible for handling many of these complex urban problems and produce effective and efficient administration as well as intelligent recommendations to Congress for programs and solutions.

But the rural-rooted conservatives—only 21 states have 65 percent or more of their population in urban areas—are traditionally opposed to bills to help meet urban woes.

Defeat of this proposal by the narrow conservative coalition and its short-sighted business and industrial allies would constitute a no-confidence vote in America.

Priority Reading

THE PERSISTENCE of high unemployment and its historical significance has been spotlighted by a congressional committee report disclosing that the current jobless crisis has been exceeded only twice before in the Twentieth Century.

A subcommittee of the Joint Economic Committee found that the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment averaged 6.1 percent over a period of the past 50 months, compared to an average 4.2 percent in the 1947-57 period.

Since the turn of the century, there were only two other periods of four years or more during which unemployment both averaged 6 percent or more and continuously equaled or exceeded 5 percent. The first was the years 1908-12; the second the period between 1930 and 1941.

The committee properly terms this current situation the "most perplexing and troublesome domestic problem that confronts the nation." We commend the report as priority reading, especially to those who place continuing emphasis on the nation's recovery from the 1960-61 recession.

Building Mechanics Needed:

Peace Corps Offers Workers Chance to Live Labor Idealism

The following is excerpted from a recent address by James E. Noe, Peace Corps consultant and director of research and education for the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers.

AMERICA'S SKILLED WORKERS are being called on by our government to help meet a very urgent need. There is an important place for building tradesmen in the Peace Corps.

This is a new concept in foreign assistance. It's going to involve thousands of Americans on a personal basis, and many of them will come from the ranks of labor.

In Asia, Africa and Latin America, underdeveloped areas are beginning to come alive. The people there are realizing that the years have passed them by, and they want to become a part of the 20th Century as quickly as possible. The Peace Corps can help them achieve that goal.

The basic job of the Peace Corps is to recruit and train a pool of skilled men and women who will take their skills to these newly-developing countries around the world. They will work with the people there, helping them in their struggle for economic and social development, teaching them the things they need to know to carry on the job.

For periods of two or maybe three years these Peace Corps volunteers will engage in a wide variety of activities for which they are trained. Teach, build roads and schools and factories, do repair work, help in sanitation and health programs, work on farm improvement and community development projects, and many others. An important task of trade union volunteers will be training apprentices in their own specific skills.

Within the first few months after the Peace Corps officially began, some 12,000 had volunteered their services. Already about 750 Americans are actually at work on projects overseas or are in training for going abroad.

Despite all the doubts raised about what kind of talent the Peace Corps could attract, these people are not misfits or ne'er-do-wells. These are trained, highly skilled people—teachers, engineers, technicians of all kinds, skilled building tradesmen.

A 31-year-old journeyman electrician from Chicago is in training to work in Thailand, along with a young painter from Ohio, a welder from Texas, a heavy equipment operator from New York.

A 39-year-old journeyman carpenter from Nebraska and a masonry worker from Indiana are among those training to go to Sierra Leone—a new nation on the west coast of Africa which recently became the 100th member of the United Nations. Another of our electricians volunteered, and was selected, for a Peace Corps project in Colombia.

Volunteers are not paid any salary for their Peace Corps service. When they return home they will receive termination payment of $75 for each month of service. But during the time they're on duty they will receive only enough allowances to cover the cost of clothing, housing, food and incidental expenses. They are expected to live on a standard similar to that of the people with whom they are working, and in most cases this will be decidedly different from living conditions at home.

A volunteer may be living in the midst of poverty and disease. The food may be strange. He may be working in an isolated area with little or no recreational facilities, no TV, no corner drug store. His contact with other Americans may be very limited. In short, he must be prepared for what might be called "cultural shock."

THE PEACE CORPS is a young program and it is attracting young men and women. The typical volunteer is in his 20's. But it is attracting older people, too. A 55-year-old woman who is going to teach in the West Indies. A husband and wife, both in their mid-50's, training for work in the Philippines.

Why do people want to join the Peace Corps, despite its hardships? What motivates them to leave the comfort and security of their homes and jobs and offer their services in an unknown, untested and unpaid program?

A 60-year-old Negro postal worker from Atlanta who took the Peace Corps exams said, "I learned things on a Georgia farm that might help Africans to help themselves."

A 40-year-old Wisconsin nurse, just back from two years on Guam, said, "I don't want to be an Army nurse on the battlefield; I want to be a peace nurse."

A retired Army officer: "A man who has worked so long and hard in war can do even more in peace."

And a young farmer from the Southwest wrote to the Peace Corps, "If you can use my plow it is ready, if you can use me, I am ready, too."

This kind of talk sounds pretty idealistic. But these people going into the Peace Corps are not just dreamers. They are realists, too. They know what they will face, and they don't believe they are going to change the world overnight. But they do feel that here is a chance to use their skills, whatever they might be, in a very worthwhile way.

Morgan Says:

Kennedy's Welfare Proposals Aimed at Saving More People

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

WE AMERICANS really are, I suppose, the most generous people in the world but we don't like to be taken for suckers. We send CARE packages to Greece, clothing to quake victims in Chile, medicines to Malaya and money to the community chest. But let a freeloader turn up on the local relief rolls and our righteous indignation knows no bounds.

Morgan

Now one phony welfare case is one too many but I suggest that we would be less vulnerable to the soft touch if we took a harder look at the causes landing a citizen on the relief rolls in the first place. Charity begins at home, and should, but so do the roots of poverty begin in our home communities and too often, I'm afraid, we grapple with the effects and avoid the causes.

The welfare program which Pres. Kennedy [has] proposed to Congress will cost a lot of money. One over-all price tag reads about $100 million in new money. Many people will complain that this is too much, that the country's annual welfare bill of nearly $4 billion in federal, state and local funds is already too much and that the President's package is just one more solid piece of evidence of how fast the do-good bleeding hearts are pushing us over the hill to the welfare state.

I am neither a social worker nor a fiscal expert and I would be the last to argue that the Administration has hit upon the perfect solution to the welfare problem. But a couple of the Administration's main arguments impress me. One is that the nature of the problem has changed and the other is that in order to save more money—and more than incidentally save more people—in the long run, more money must be spent now but with a different emphasis: on rehabilitation, not just rescue.

"Public welfare," said the President's message, echoing the philosophy of HEW Sec. Ribicoff, ". . . must be more than a salvage operation, picking up the debris from the wreckage of human lives. Its emphasis must be directed increasingly toward prevention and rehabilitation."

This reasoning justified the program's special attention to indigent children and to the need for training additional welfare personnel. One of the warnings raised by a three-day conference of the nation's welfare administrators in Washington was, in effect, that the public must not expect the impossible from this new program in even a reasonable length of time. That is to say that while the whole thrust is to get people off the relief rolls and back into the productive area of the economy, it would be wrong to think that case loads can be reduced quickly when there aren't enough adequately trained staffs to work on them.

But these, in effect, are technical aspects of the problem, best dealt with by experts. What we non-experts need to deal with, I suggest, is our own approach—that is, the public approach—to the welfare problem. We should properly demand a program that is neither sloppy nor run with the severity of orphanages of the 19th century, that is neither saturated with politics nor handled by an IBM machine.

BUT WE WILL come much closer to satisfactory performance, I believe, if we approach the problem of welfare as something that our society has made a problem, not something the unfortunates of the country have invented in a kind of skidroad conspiracy to fleece the rest of us.

Too often, the severest critics of welfare programs are the very citizens who obstruct the measures to clean up the conditions that largely make such programs necessary in the first place. I suspect that such narrow attitudes have been entwined in the roots of the problem which has made Newburgh, N. Y., such a notorious example of the wrong approach. The President himself appeared to have Newburgh's drastic efforts to slash relief rolls in mind when he said in his message that "communities which have—for whatever motives—attempted to save money through ruthless and arbitrary cutbacks in their welfare rolls have found their efforts to little avail. The root problem remained."

In a report on Newburgh where the number of Negroes on relief has been a bloodshot issue, the AFL-CIO's community service director, Leo Perlis, noted that actually 60 percent of all relief recipients there were white. [He] then observed that critics in general "usually fail to add that the large percentage of Negroes on public welfare rolls is often due largely to economic, educational and political discrimination practiced against them by the very whites who shout loudest about the high percentage of Negroes on relief rolls."

There is, admittedly, a danger of destroying individual initiative by too much governmental solicitude. But surely the far greater danger lies in not massively attacking the problems of slums, ill health, unplanned parenthood, inadequate education and racial discrimination—and other aspects of our society—which do not exactly inspire individual initiative on the part of their victims.

Washington Reports:

Kennedy Program Held Key to Expanded U.S. Exports, Jobs

PRESIDENT KENNEDY'S proposed foreign trade program must be enacted to offset the U.S. unfavorable balance of payments, to meet the impact of the European Common Market and to maintain jobs in production of export goods, Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) and Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N. Y.) asserted in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on 500 radio stations.

Douglas pointed out that although the U.S. now has an excess of exports over imports of from $4 to $5 billion, "we have an unfavorable balance of payments of $8 billion in non-commodity transactions such as expenditures for troops abroad, military aid, economic aid, dependents, foreign investments and other items."

"The important thing is that our foreign trade surplus which is now around $4 billion, as Sen. Douglas says, ought to be $6 billion or better," Javits declared. "Then the world would be helping us to carry our world responsibility."

Trade between European nations is increasing because of the Common Market, Douglas said. It has "expanded about 50 percent in the last four years. The gross national product in these [Common Market] countries has increased at about 5 percent, or twice our rate of growth," he said.

With this increase in the European standard of living, Javits commented, "due to the fact that they are eliminating tariff barriers, just as we have none between our states, they'll be able to buy more from us than ever before."

"The Common Market also has political value," Douglas went on. "It is producing such a close integration that the Commies won't be able to play one nation off against another."

JAVITS SAID HE believed the President should have the power, when exercising the escape-clause provision, to protect American industry and workers against increased imports, to phase out the increase "over a period of seven years, so that he would be in a position to make agreements."

Douglas and Javits also agreed in voicing a hope that the President's power to use the threat of a club to increase tariffs might bring about increased cooperation of European nations in foreign aid.

"We've got to insist that our European neighbors buy more from Japan. Up to now, the U.S. and the United Kingdom have been carrying that load in the main," Javits added.

Both said that the foreign trade program should be a bipartisan issue, rather than a partisan one.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

IN THIS CAPITAL, the question of who is playing "cheap politics" depends, naturally, on whose ox is gored. Thus the Republicans on Pres. Kennedy's proposal to set up by executive reorganization a new Dept. of Urban Affairs & Housing, and to name Robert C. Weaver, a Negro, to the Cabinet.

Republican House members promptly accused the President of "injecting a racial issue" by designating Weaver in advance, and others complained that Kennedy was attempting to do by executive action what he had been unable to obtain through legislation. (A bill to create an Urban Affairs Dept. was killed 9-6 in the House Rules Committee by a combination of all five Republican members and four southern Democrats.)

It is necessary to think back only to former Pres. Truman's day to find an exact parallel, with another ox being gored. Truman repeatedly proposed creation of a Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare, and it was well known that if he got it, he would name Oscar R. Ewing as its first secretary and a member of the Cabinet. Ewing was director of the old Federal Security Agency. He was also highly unpopular with the Republican-southern Democratic coalition because he had championed a national health insurance program under the social security system.

The result: Congress pointblank refused to authorize the new department—that is, until Ewing and Truman were both gone and the President's name was Eisenhower.

When Eisenhower took office, he promptly created a Health, Education & Welfare Dept. by executive order and announced that Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby would be its secretary, with Cabinet rank, unless his reorganization plan was vetoed by one of the houses of Congress.

IN THE LATEST CASE, the Rules Committee killed Kennedy's bill for various reasons.

The Republican members voted solidly against it because they reflect the rural power of the GOP, dead set against expansion of federal services to people who live in cities. At least two of the four southern Democrats voted against it because, apparently, they felt they would be politically vulnerable in their home districts to charges they had approved something that would permit elevation of a Negro to Cabinet rank.

Kennedy met the challenge swiftly and boldly. He sent up his executive plan and named Weaver as his choice as secretary unless his plan was killed. As he said, everyone in Congress knew Weaver would get the post, and there was no reason the public shouldn't know it.

It was rather odd to observe New York's Republican Gov. Rockefeller, under the circumstances, denouncing Kennedy for proposing the Urban Affairs Dept. that he himself had recommended previously to Eisenhower—particularly when Rockefeller was the top-ranking administrator, under Mrs. Hobby, of the H-E-W Dept. which Eisenhower created by executive proposal.

TOUCHING ON another Republican matter, this sleuth belatedly looked up the voting records of Sen. Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts and Sen. Bourke Hickenlooper of Iowa, who were rivals for the post of Senate GOP Policy Committee chairman succeeding the late Sen. Bridges.

Saltonstall was the candidate of the eastern liberals, but the midwestern conservatives would have none of him and demanded Hickenlooper instead. Saltonstall was "too internationalist" for an election year, they said.

The Committee on Political Education voting charts show that on issues considered by labor to be key votes, Saltonstall had a longtime record of 6 "right" votes and 36 "wrong." Hickenlooper had four "right" and 38 "wrong." On the single major foreign policy vote of 1959-60, Hickenlooper voted against a slash in economic aid funds and Saltonstall didn't vote. Saltonstall was "too liberal"?

PRESIDENT KENNEDY'S FOREIGN TRADE PROGRAM would mean increased jobs and enable the U.S. to maintain foreign economic and military aid, and it should be treated as a bipartisan issue, Sen Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.), left, and Sen. Paul Douglas (D-Ill.), asserted on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

How to Buy:

Bank Interest Up on Savings, But Credit Unions Still Lead

By Sidney Margolius

INTEREST RATES PAID to savers have risen again as the nation's banks, savings and loan associations and credit unions compete for your deposits.

It pays even small savers to give attention to interest rates paid by various institutions. It's quite common to meet families who shop with the greatest care for family needs but have no idea what interest they get on their savings. One skilled worker we recently met stored his savings in a bank downtown paying 3 percent when the credit union right at his plant was paying a husky 5.

Another matter of concern is the habit of buying government savings bonds on the payroll-deduction plan, accumulating a few, and then cashing them in. This way, the bonds never get a chance to earn any interest.

As a result of the recent rate rise, many banks now pay 3.5 percent plus a bonus of one-half of 1 percent on deposits left in the bank a year or more. This rate puts the banks within closer distance of the savings and loan associations. For some time most savings and loan associations have been paying 4-4.5. Most recently some of the associations—especially those on the West Coast—have edged up to 4.6 percent. Some associations which don't have their deposits insured by a federal agency, but by private insurors, pay as much as 5 percent (but of course need to be evaluated with extra care).

Credit unions still generally are at the top of the list. Most credit unions pay 4 to 5 percent. Many also provide deposit life insurance, which is worth an additional one-half of 1 percent to young families, and even more to middle-aged and older people.

The Treasury Dept. says it has no plans to raise the present 3.75 percent rate on E bonds to meet the increase in bank rates. But E bonds have their own advantages for long-range savings.

In general, this department recommends using savings accounts for short-range funds—those you expect to draw on in less than two years. There is no use buying E bonds for temporary savings, because you merely will be trading cash back and forth with Uncle Sam, and neither of you will gain. E bonds earn no interest at all the first six months, and less than 2 percent the second six. Not until the third year do they earn over 3.

The ideal use of E bonds is for retirement purposes or as a backlog against unemployment. Since you can postpone the tax liability until you actually cash the bonds, this way you probably would avoid any income tax at all on the increase in value, since you would be cashing them at a time of reduced income.

Another advantage of E bonds is that the interest rate is guaranteed for the next seven years and nine months. Conceivably banks and savings associations could cut their rates back to the previous lower levels in a time of recession.

Too, when you approach retirement you can exchange E bonds, both matured and unmatured, for government H bonds and thus defer paying income tax on the E-bond increase in value for 10 years more, or until you cash in the H bonds. Thus, moderate-income retired couples could very likely escape tax liability completely on their original E bond purchases.

GOVERNMENT H BONDS earn the same 3.75 percent as E bonds, but the interest is paid by check every six months instead of accumulating until you cash in the bond. This is a useful arrangement for people who want the interest as a regular income, as in retirement.

Government savings bonds can be bought on the payroll-deduction plan or at a bank and can be cashed in either at a bank or the nearest Federal Reserve office. In case of death, cashing bonds is simpler if you name a co-owner. A beneficiary named on the bond can cash it but must present a death certificate.

If a savings bond is ever lost, stolen or destroyed, write the Bureau of the Public Debt, Division of Loans & Currency, 536 South Clark St., Chicago 5. State the serial number (with prefix and suffix letters), month and year of issue and your name and address. The bureau will send you a form to fill out, and after you return this form, will issue a new bond.

But we don't recommend putting your money in either the higher-rate savings accounts or E bonds while you still owe installment debts or continue to buy on time. There is no point to paying finance charges of 12-22 percent on credit purchases, or interest rates of 8-12 percent on cash loans, while your savings earn just 3.75 to 5 percent.

From Soup to Nonsense:

Don't Think Us Birds Haven't Trouble with People-Watchers

By Jane Goodsell

I THINK NATURE LOVERS are wonderful people, but I do wish that they'd try to keep a little calmer. It's positively dangerous the way they keep scaring people like me out of our wits.

The other day I was driving in the country with a friend when she suddenly grabbed my arm and screamed, "Stop! Stop!" I stopped, barely avoiding a head-on collision.

"What's wrong?" I asked with trembling lips.

"I saw a double-breasted nuthatcher in that field!" she gasped. "I'm sure!"

She couldn't have sounded more excited if Rock Hudson had suddenly materialized in the back seat.

"You mean a bird?" I asked in amazement. "You nearly got us into an accident because you saw a bird?"

But she wasn't listening. With eyes bulging and hand cupped to her ear, she stood beside the car, transfixed.

Ten minutes later she got back into the car.

"It was a double-breasted nuthatcher!" she said exultantly. "I'm sure of it! I distinctly heard it say 'p'chee, p'chee!' Oh, this is one of the most thrilling moments of my life."

I could understand her excitement if that bird had cut loose with "The Stars and Stripes Forever." But what's remarkable about a bird saying, "p'chee," for heaven's sake?

I KEEP RUNNING into this sort of thing, and it's frightfully nerve-wracking. When somebody rushes up to me, gasping, "Come quick! Come quick! See what I found out in the field!" my heart jumps. With pulses pounding, I tear outside expecting to be shown a corpse in the underbrush.

But what does the object of excitement turn out to be? A little purple flower! With the world in the state it is, people are apt to expect the worst. It isn't right to scare them like that.

But star enthusiasts are the worst bunch of all. Now, I don't honestly anticipate an invasion from Mars, but then again, I can't be sure. So when someone grabs my arm, points toward the sky and gasps, "Great Scott! Look!" I nearly jump out of my skin.

That's no way to point out Cassiopeia to me—even if it is is remarkably clear tonight.

Come now, nature lovers, do try to calm down a little, won't you?

Living Dangerously Produces Oddities

TRAFFIC ACCIDENTS on the island of Bjarkoey, Norway, rose sharply in 1961 to an unprecedented rate equal to 5,000 accidents per 10,000 registered vehicles.

The Arctic island has an area of five square miles, a population of 730, one road, one truck, and one station wagon, the island's only taxi. The truck and the taxi collided at a bend in the road.

This is one of the tales in an article "Freak Squeaks of 1961," the National Safety Council's annual roundup of odd and unusual accidents.

Water started a fire in Laramie, Wyo. The water was in a gallon jug in a station wagon, and the sun shining through it ignited a sleeping bag. Heat from the fire caused a gasoline lantern to overflow, adding fuel to the fire.

In Olympia, Wash., a St. Bernard dog leaped playfully from a pickup truck onto a small auto driven by Marvin Morger. Repairs necessary to the dented hood and smashed windshield were estimated at $150.

THE YEAR'S MOST UNUSUAL snack was not enjoyed by a Marietta, Ga., housewife. While eating watermelon, she swallowed a yellowjacket wasp which flew into her mouth. It stung her throat on the way down.

Policemen—and women—had their troubles, too. George R. Mischner was directing traffic in New York City when he stepped backwards into an open manhole. He managed to grab the edge of the hole to keep from falling 15 feet to the bottom. And Police Matron Albina Jenko in Milwaukee, Wis., dislocated her jaw when she yawned at 3:30 one morning.

In Globe, Ariz., Mrs. Lena Berry broke her leg when she slipped and fell while walking down a hill. She was hurrying to a first aid class. In Bangor, Me., a woman described only as being of "generous proportions," got stuck in her bathtub. Two gallant firemen each took an arm and—with eyes averted—tugged until she was free.

Louise and Ruth Murasky are 21-year-old twins in Garfield Heights, O. Not only do they look alike, but they do things together. Both are nurses, and a few days after Louise cut her right leg on a glass lamp shade, Ruth cut her right leg when a bottle exploded.

Sleepwalking, Mrs. Faith Blakemore, 43, of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., apparently decided to cease being a pedestrian. Sound asleep one night, she went to the garage and started the car. The damage was estimated at $450 to the car and $300 to the garage.

NATIONAL HEART FUND TWINS for 1962 are Jacalyn and Jerylin Pelletieri, 5, of Milton, N. J., shown using stethoscopes to check the heart of their mother, Mrs. Salvadore Pelletieri. Restored to health by identical heart operations last fall, the twins symbolize research achievements made possible by the Heart Fund. Their father is a long-time member of Bricklayers Local 12, Passaic, N. J.

Coalition Challenged:

Major Political Warfare Erupts In Campaign for Urban Dept.

A major political battle erupted as the Administration launched an all-out effort to push through Pres. Kennedy's proposed Dept. of Urban Affairs & Housing — including building political fires under liberal Republicans. The drive included a direct attempt to wean enough votes away from the Republican congressional leadership to overcome the powerful GOP-southern Democratic conservative coalition.

Under the Reorganization Act used by Kennedy to set up the new Cabinet-level department, either house of Congress may kill the proposal by a resolution of disapproval within 60 days.

As hearings on the measure got under way, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller told the House Government Operations Committee that labor strongly supports the President's proposal.

"Until now," he said, "there has been no adequate representation of urban communities within the federal government. Farmers are served by the Dept. of Agriculture. Businessmen are served by the Dept. of Commerce. Working people are served by the Dept. of Labor. It is time that city dwellers are represented by a department of their own."

House Democratic Leader Carl Albert (Okla.) appealed directly to the mayors of 2,400 cities and towns actively to support creation of the new department.

In letters to each of the mayors, he said the move was "in keeping with the views of sound and responsible leadership of both political parties . . . and in agreement with part of the Republican Party's own platform of 1960."

The Administration schedule will bring the issue to a rollcall vote first in the Senate. Democratic leaders hope that Senate approval, especially if Republicans and moderate southern Democrats break away from the coalition, will improve the measure's chances in the House.

McClellan Blockade Fails

Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) announced that the Senate will take up the issue on Feb. 19. He rejected an objection of Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark.), who opposes the new department, that this would not give his Government Operations Committee sufficient time to consider the issue. McClellan's committee hearings are scheduled to begin Feb. 13.

Senate Democratic Whip Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.) told newsmen that the Administration expects to have 52 votes—a clear majority — when the showdown comes. He said House Democratic leaders believe that if a "fairly good vote" is obtained in the Senate, it might swing the proposal through the House.

Congressional Democratic leaders, after a White House breakfast with the President, were sharply critical of New York's Republican Gov. Nelson A. Rockfeller for opposing the new department. Rockefeller had assailed Kennedy for injecting an "unrelated race issue" by revealing his intention to name Housing & Home Finance Agency Dir. Robert C. Weaver, a Negro, to the Cabinet post.

Democratic leaders noted that Rockefeller had himself proposed an urban department in 1957.

Mayor Richard C. Lee of New Haven, Conn., representing the U.S. Conference of Mayors, said America's cities were plagued with major problems including education, unemployment, housing and transportation. He declared:

"We need help and we need it at the highest possible level of government—the Cabinet table."

The House committee also heard:

- Chicago Mayor Richard J. Daley declare that a central housing department is essential to "good city planning."
- Indiana Gov. Matthew E. Welsh declared that in many states, including his own, rural-dominated legislatures thwart efforts by cities to solve their problems. Rural legislators, he said, have not dealt "realistically or understandingly" with the problem of growing urban areas.

Also testifying in favor were Delaware Gov. Elbert N. Carvel and Mayors Robert F. Wagner of New York, Peter R. Olgiati of Chattanooga and John Ridley of Smyrna, Tenn., and Rep. John V. Lindsay (R-N. Y.), one of the few GOP members committed to the proposal.

Biemiller told the committee that the "dramatic growth" in the size and complexity of urban problems in recent years requires establishment of an urban affairs department "as a simple matter of governmental efficiency."

Apart from coordinating related activities in a single department, he said, "it is most important that city dwellers be represented by an officer of Cabinet level who has easy access to the President."

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce, testifying in opposition, claimed the proposal would lead to more "federal controls."

Senate Passes Bill For U. S. College Aid

bill had been blocked in the committee last year.

- In a special message to Congress, the President called for prompt enactment of legislation setting up a private corporation to own and operate a global communications satellite system demonstrating "our intention to share the benefits of space for peaceful use."

The key Senate vote on the college aid bill came with a 50-37 defeat of a conservative-backed amendment to substitute student loans for the federal scholarship provision. Sen. Frank J. Lausche (D-O.), who sponsored the amendment, argued that if students were obligated to repay a loan, it would build their character and strengthen their "moral fabric."

The scholarship provision of the bill would permit states to establish commissions to pick the recipients in accordance with "objective" standards, and to determine the amount of the scholarship in each case, up to a maximum of $1,000 a year. The amount of the scholarship would be based on need.

A major difference between House and Senate bills involves proposed federal aid for private schools. The House measure provides grants for construction of academic facilities to public and private colleges alike; the Senate bill authorizes loans to public and private senior colleges, and grants to public junior colleges.

The Senate bill would authorize grants to colleges of $350 for each federal scholar enrolled and states would be reimbursed for administrative expenses.

Other provisions of the Senate-passed bill include:

- Long-term, low-interest federal loans for construction of college classroom buildings, laboratories and libraries, totaling $1.5 billion over a five-year period.
- Matching grants, at the rate of $50 million a year for five years, for construction of academic facilities at public junior colleges—known generally as "community colleges."

In renewing his call for large-scale federal aid to public elementary and secondary schools, Kennedy warned that the nation's educational needs "have grown more critical." He added:

"We cannot afford to lose another year in mounting a national effort to eliminate the shortage of classrooms, to make teachers' salaries competitive, and to lift the quality of instruction."

His three-year proposal for general school aid carried a $2.1 billion price tag—about the same as the five-year college aid and scholarship program. The Administration's school aid bill was blocked in the House Rules Committee last year after it was embroiled in a controversy over assistance to church-supported schools.

Kennedy said at his Feb. 7 news conference that he will do "everything I can" to get Congress to approve his education program this year.

The President also asked for a five-year program to improve the quality of education, including provision for 2,500 "outstanding" teachers a year to receive scholarships for a year of full-time advanced study. The overall price tag was put at $747 million.

Kennedy repeated his recommendation for matching construction grants for medical and dental schools and for "four-year scholarships and cost-of-education grants for one-fourth of the entering students in each medical and dental school in the United States."

He gave his endorsement to legislation establishing a Federal Advisory Council on the Arts, aid for education television, and a five-year federal-state program to meet "the neglected educational needs of America's one million migrant agricultural workers and their families."

Improvement of teacher training in science and mathematics and grants to help wipe out adult illiteracy also were urged by the President.

UAW Names Judge To Review Board

Detroit—The Auto Workers have named Judge George E. Bowles of the Third Judicial Circuit of Michigan to the UAW Public Review Board, succeeding Circuit Judge Wade H. McCree, who resigned to become a U.S. District Court judge.

Judge Bowles formerly was a field examiner for the National Labor Relations Board, disputes director of the Regional War Labor Board, and chairman of the Michigan State Labor Mediation Board. The seven-member review board hears appeals from aggrieved union members charging that their rights have been violated and issues findings and recommendations.

GRADUATION EXERCISES for 48 union safety trainees climaxed the first year of existence for the new AFL-CIO National Safety Training Institute. The students, graduating in two sections, received diplomas from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers. The picture shows Keenan speaking at one graduation, with others at the speakers' table, from the left: Robert Gidel, Bureau of Labor Standards; John D. Connors, executive secretary of the AFL-CIO safety program; and Labor Standards Director Arthur Motley.

Labor Safety Institute Graduates 48 Trainees

The AFL-CIO National Safety Training Institute closed out its first year of safety instruction for union members by graduating 48 trainees and announcing plans for the start of new classes Apr. 2.

The first class, split into two groups for convenience, received diplomas from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers at graduation exercises in Washington, D. C.

The institute included a four-week course with 110 hours of instruction in four fields of safety training—elementary; mechanical and physical; chemical and environmental safety, including radiation; and teacher training in safety.

Instructors were provided largely by the training staff of the Bureau of Labor Standards, and classes were sponsored by the U.S. Labor Dept. and the AFL-CIO Standing Committee on Safety & Occupatoinal Health. Heading the committee are Chairman Richard F. Walsh, president of the Stage Employes, and Executive Sec. John D. Connors, a Meany assistant.

Connors is accepting applications now for the 1962 course.

Enrollment in the institute is limited to trade unionists who are willing to teach other unionists the principles of safety and occupational health. After taking one unit of training each quarter-year, students return to their home cities to develop training programs for general union memberships, Connors said.

No tuition is charged, but unions are expected to pay the cost of transportation, room and board for each student.

Meany emphasized in his remarks to a graduating class that times have changed in regard to safety programs. When he was a business agent of the Plumbers in New York City, the only sure method of getting an obstinate employer to correct safety hazards was to call a walkout, he said. Today it is usually possible to get employers to set up joint labor-management committees to provide safety training.

committee, he said, the President will issue invitations to participants, who will include cabinet officials and other government representatives, and executives and key staff and professional personnel from labor and business.

Representing labor on the President's advisory committee are AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Vice Presidents David Dubinsky, George M. Harrison, Joseph D. Keenan, David J. McDonald and Walter P. Reuther, and Pres. Thomas Kennedy of the unaffiliated Mine Workers.

ly supported by the AFL-CIO, were opposed by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, which charged that they would give the secretary of labor "unparalleled power" to probe into corporation records.

Two amendments by Sen. John G. Tower (R-Tex.) were defeated by identical 57-27 votes in the Senate. One would have shifted enforcement and administration of the law from the Labor Dept. to the Securities & Exchange Commission. The other would have totally exempted plans having 100 or fewer participant

Recommittal Rejected

The House passed the bill on a 191-85 standing vote, after defeating a recommittal motion by Rep. Edgar W. Hiestand (R-Calif.). By a 106-79 vote, the House adopted an amendment by Rep. John M. Ashbrook (R-O.) to prohibit Labor Dept. employes administering the plan from belonging to affiliated unions. The AFL-CIO-affiliated Government Employes announced that they will urge the conference committee to eliminate that restriction.

As passed by both houses, the bill gives the secretary of labor authority to prescribe reporting forms to be used by fund administrators. Under the present law, use of the Labor Dept. form has been optional which, the AFL-CIO told Congress, made it easier for an administrator "who decides to withhold some of the information . . . to escape detection."

The Labor Dept. is given subpeona power to investigate a fund for "reasonable cause." It is also authorized to seek a civil court injunction against misuse of a fund.

Under the present law, the only criminal penalty provided is for willful refusal to file a report.

A Dept. of Research Analysis:

AFL-CIO, Kennedy Agree on Trade Plan

Pres. Kennedy has sent to Congress his proposal for a bold new program to expand America's foreign trade and strengthen free world economic cooperation. His recommendations for transforming our national policy in the field of international trade are set out in a draft bill, "Trade Expansion Act of 1962," and an accompanying message outlining the thinking behind the new program.

In all major respects the President's proposals jibe 100 percent with the resolution on international trade adopted by the AFL-CIO at its December 1961 convention. The AFL-CIO called for a national policy "which looks toward gradual reduction of barriers to trade while at the same time assures that no undue burden resulting from such trade liberalization will be placed on any individual or group." The AFL-CIO goals are the objectives of the new trade bill.

The bill sets the stage for expanding trade between the U.S. and the rapidly growing countries of Western Europe as well as other free nations. But it contains built-in safeguards to reduce to a minimum injury to workers or businesses resulting from increased imports.

Why a New Trade Policy?

For 28 years the foreign trade policy of the U.S. has been guided by the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act. Launched by Cordell Hull, secretary of state under Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt, that act has been extended on 11 different occasions since 1934. Many amendments have been added during this long period; in recent years most of these amendments tended to bolster tariffs and strengthen restrictions against imports. Nevertheless, during the time the Reciprocal Trade Act has been in effect, it has made possible considerable lessening of barriers to trade and substantial growth not only of our own trade, but of the trade of our many foreign trading partners as well.

The Reciprocal Trade Program was last extended in 1958. In that year Congress gave the President the power to reduce tariffs by a maximum of 20 percent on a reciprocal basis in give-and-take international negotiations. The deadline for use of this authority is June 30, 1962. Such international negotiations have just been completed, but because of certain restrictions in the present law the amount of reduction in American and foreign tariffs actually achieved was far less than 20 percent.

The choice before the President—and now before the Congress—was whether to let the act die, to extend it for one or more years pretty much in its present form, or to replace it by a new, modernized program. The President chose a new American trade initiative to meet the challenges and opportunities of a rapidly changing world economy.

The AFL-CIO reached the same conclusion in its convention resolution:

"However serviceable the present trade legislation may have been in the past, America now needs an international trade policy geared to the vastly changed world of the '60s. For this reason, amending or extending existing legislation is not enough. We need a new law and a new approach to the opportunities, problems and challenges of international trade."

Common Market Role

The biggest change requiring a whole new approach in our foreign trade policy isn't one at home. It is the development and growth of the European Common Market or, under its formal title, the European Economic Community (EEC). EEC began with six countries (France, Italy, West Germany, Belgium, Netherlands and Luxembourg), but it is now likely that the British and most of the other Western European countries will join. If that happens the expanded EEC will have a population of 250 million, 50 percent larger than the U.S.

The EEC's development is particularly important to us in the U.S. for at least three reasons:

1—Western Europe is the fastest growing area in the world. Its economy has been expanding much faster than our own.

2—It is our most important export market. Western Europe takes 30 percent of our exports, amounting to $4 billion in industrial goods and nearly $2 billion in farm products. Moreover, we sell to Western Europe about 60 percent more than we buy.

3—The EEC plans to eliminate all tariffs between member countries before 1970 but to maintain tariffs against outside nations like the U.S. This means that a French firm will be able to sell in Germany without paying a tariff just as an Ohio company doesn't pay a tariff when it ships to California. But U.S. producers will suffer the disadvantage of paying the duties still levied on products going into the Common Market.

EEC is prepared to lower its external tariffs against non-member countries but only on a reciprocal basis. This puts a premium on our readiness to negotiate mutual cuts on EEC tariffs and our own.

In his trade message Kennedy highlighted the Common Market developments as the major reason for revamping our trade policy. But he also cited some other important factors on the world scene, including the imperative necessity of blocking the increasingly dangerous Soviet trade offensive and the urgent need of Japan, as well as the newly developing countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America, for outlets for their raw materials and the products of their new industries.

He also emphasized that the new trade program would increase our dollar sales abroad, and thus help meet our vexing balance of payments problem. Larger exports would help restore the equilibrium between our dollar-inflow and dollar-outflow which is represented by our balance of payments. In 1961 our balance of payments was in the red by some $2.5 billion. The deficit was down considerably from the previous three years, but still was too high. This was because the $5.5 billion surplus of our exports over our imports was not enough to offset the dollar outlays overseas for our military forces, foreign aid and other purposes.

If Congress passes the new trade bill, the President will have over the next five years authority to cut tariffs now in effect. He will do this primarily in what are called "across-the-board" tariff negotiations with the EEC and other countries. This is what he could do:

First, he could lower tariffs up to 50 percent in reciprocal negotiations with other countries. These cuts would go into effect gradually over the five-year period. This would mean that if a particular tariff was reduced by 50 percent, ordinarily it would drop 10 percent each year until the full 50 percent reduction took effect. For a tariff lowered 40 percent, the annual reduction would be 8 percent, and so on. In addition to this general authority to decrease existing tariffs by 50 percent, the bill gives the President special authority to reduce or eliminate all tariffs on groups or categories of products where the U.S. and the EEC together have 80 percent of world trade.

'Across-the-Board' Cuts

The key word here is "category." In the past, the U.S. has negotiated tariff reductions on an item-by-item basis. Now it is proposed that mutual tariff lowering be worked out not item-by-item, but on the basis of certain broader categories of products on an "across-the-board" basis. Thus, instead of considering a narrow item like "bookkeeping and accounting machines," or "card punching, punched card and auxiliary machines," mutual reductions might be negotiated for all office machines as a single category.

This is to meet the problems of the EEC countries whose internal differences require them to negotiate on a broader basis than item-by-item even though they can negotiate as a single group of nations. The way the President put it is that instead of "the traditional technique of trading one brick at a time off our respective tariff walls . . . we must talk instead in terms of trading whole layers at a time in exchange for other layers, as the Europeans have been doing in reducing their internal tariffs."

The bill would give the President two other tariff-cutting powers. He could eliminate tariffs altogether on articles where the duty is now 5 percent or less. He could also reduce or eliminate tariffs or other restrictions on tropical, agricultural or forestry products not produced in significant quantities in the U.S. if the EEC made comparable cuts. This feature of the bill would particularly help the less developed countries because the President could exercise this power without forcing these countries to take reciprocal action which in many cases would harm their infant economies.

Under the new program, we will continue to apply the so-called "most favored nation" principle. This means that any tariff cuts we negotiate with the Common Market or any other country or group of countries will be extended to our other trading partners if they have any significant trade in such items. In this way, we will assure that the new trade program will not just benefit our own country and the advanced Western European nations, but will also help to enlarge markets for Japan and the developing nations.

International Fair Labor Standards

There is one other type of negotiation the new program would include, mentioned by the President in his trade message but not specifically spelled out in the bill. The President is aiming at negotiating with other countries looking toward international acceptance of the principle of what the labor movement has called "fair labor standards in international trade."

This idea, long advocated by the AFL-CIO as well as trade union movements in other countries, aims at improving wages and labor standards through the mechanisms of international trade. The AFL-CIO convention resolution urged that improvement of international labor standards should be "an important objective of U.S. trade policy." Both the Democratic and Republican platforms in 1960 also endorsed the international fair labor standards principle.

The President says this goal will be pursued "by appropriate consultations on an international basis." The purpose, he says, will be to encourage the narrowing of the wage gap of U.S. workers and those abroad, which he notes has already begun. This would help safeguard American workers against unfair competition based on exploitation of workers abroad. It would also assure the workers in other lands their fair share of the economic gains made possible by expanded trade.

Safeguards Against Import Injury

At every stage of the tariff-negotiating process, the bill sets up safeguards against injury to American workers, businesses and farmers who may be affected by increased imports. The new trade program will result in rising exports and imports. Past experience indicates that exports will rise more than imports and therefore the net effect will be to increase jobs for American workers. Still, in the process, in some industries there will be some loss of production to imports and some displacement of workers from their jobs. The bill contains effective features designed to hold such injury to a minimum.

These safeguards would go into operation even before the tariff negotiations began. This is what would happen. Before entering into any negotiations, the President would give to the Tariff Commission the list of the products or categories on which he proposes to negotiate. The Tariff Commission would report to the President the likely effects of tariff cuts or other trade-liberalizing measures on the firms or workers now producing those items. The Tariff Commission would particularly take into account "the probability of the occurrence on a widespread basis in the industry of significant idling of productive facilities of firms, of prolonged and persistent inability of firms to operate at a profit, and of unemployment or underemployment of workers." Before reaching its conclusions on these points, the Tariff Commission would hold hearings at which companies, unions or other interested parties could testify.

These procedures are similar to the so-called "peril point" procedures in the expiring legislation under which the Tariff Commission determines the lowest point to which an existing duty can be cut without hurting the domestic producer. The new procedure would improve on this because instead of the Tariff Commission making a bare determination of the "peril point," it would provide the President with information on what the effects of lowering tariffs might be in various industries under consideration.

On this basis, the President could hold out from the negotiations items or categories where the Tariff Commission found that tariff cuts would have a particularly serious impact. In addition to these, the bill specifically prohibits the President from including in the negotiations any items on which tariffs have been increased by so-called "escape clause" action under the old law. This means that no tariff reductions could be negotiated for such sensitive products as women's fur felt hats, bicycles, stainless steel flatware and lead and zinc.

Trade Adjustment Assistance

The pre-negotiation safeguards are aimed at preventing tariff cuts on items where increased imports might have a disastrous effect on the American firms and workers. But the bill also has provisions to deal with problems that may arise after tariffs have already been lowered. The main post-negotiation safeguard is the new trade adjustment assistance program which is designed to help workers, companies and firms who may be affected by increased foreign competition to adjust to the new situation.

Kennedy describes adjustment assistance "as an essential part of the new trade program." The AFL-CIO convention resolution put it in even stronger terms:

"Adequate assistance or relief for those adversely affected by imports is essential if the American labor movement is to continue its support for a liberal trade policy."

The idea behind adjustment assistance is a simple one. Until now all the President could do if he found that reduced tariffs had hurt American industry was to raise the tariff or impose some other type of restrictions on imports. This was self-defeating, but even more important, unnecessary in many cases. Labor has urged for many years that he be given an additional alternative under which he could provide adjustment assistance instead of just tariff relief. The new bill gives the President this new type of authority.

Adjustment assistance would accomplish three significant things. It would advance the national interest

PRR-NYC Plan Hit:

Harrison, Kennedy Assail Rail Merger

Two rail union presidents have urged the government to block the proposed merger of the New York Central and Pennsylvania Railroads as contrary to the public interest.

George M. Harrison, president of the Railway Clerks and a vice president of the AFL-CIO, called for intervention by the attorney general, charging that a merger of the two giant systems would create "a monopoly in violation of the spirit of the anti-trust laws."

Pres. W. P. Kennedy of the Railroad Trainmen warned in a telegram to the two railroads and in an article in his union's newspaper that the proposed merger "cannot be justified."

His wire to top officers of the two railroads charged the effect would be to "curtail service and render whole communities without the advantages of competitive railroad schedules and rates." He added:

"It will weaken our national defense. It will foster monopoly. It will cause much unnecessary unemployment and loss of earnings upon which many communities depend. It will blight whole regions of the nation . . . It will harm, if not destroy, smaller railroads."

Harrison, who gave his views in an interview on Labor News Conference, AFL-CIO public service program carried by the Mutual radio network, pointed out that the Interstate Commerce Act requires that a railroad merger be in the public interest.

The proposed New York Central-Pennsylvania merger, he declared, "is designed primarily to improve the profits of the two railroads and to shrink the transportation service. We see nothing in such proposals that would in any way be of benefit to the public."

He said changes in bookkeeping methods and increased depreciation claims have concealed the fact that the railroad industry is making "tremendous profits."

The Interstate Commerce Commission, Harrison charged, "has been extremely liberal in looking after the railroad corporate interest, and I think it has substantially neglected the public interest."

RUSSELL K. BERG
Named Boilermakers' President.

Boilermakers Pick Berg as President

Kansas City, Kans. — The Boilmakers have named Russell K. Berg as their president to fill the unexpired term of the late William A. Calvin, who died Jan. 27.

Berg, a member of the union for 29 years, will serve by appointment of the executive board until the next convention in 1965. He is 57, lives in Bonner Springs, Kans., and since last June had been assisting Calvin as executive vice president.

Initiated into Local Lodge 470 in Niles, Mich., Berg was an apprentice boilermaker there.

Goldberg Supports Arts Council Bill

A Federal Arts Council got strong backing from Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg in testimony before a House Education subcommittee during two days of hearings.

The AFL-CIO went on record last May in support of legislation to set up an Advisory Council on the Arts and to authorize funds for arts projects. At that time Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller of the federation's Dept. of Legislation stressed the need for federal programs to meet the challenge of the "technological revolution" brought on by automation and reductions in the standard work week.

AFL-CIO affiliates in the entertainment field also have given strong support to the proposal. A bill by Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr. (D-N. J.) to create a Federal Arts Council has been reported favorably by the House Education Committee and is pending in the Rules Committee.

Thompson was chairman of the hearings completing a nationwide inquiry into the economic status of the performing arts and artists.

Goldberg, calling for action on the Arts Council legislation, said he did not fear political domination of the performing arts because the contribution of the federal government should be not "dominant" but advisory.

While he did not rule out federal funds, he said the first step by government should be the passage by Congress of a bill creating a Federal Arts Council.

He said the problem is not that the arts are dying but that they are on a starvation diet, and that the artists themselves are subsidizing performances by accepting low wages.

Other testimony came from the Rev. Gilbert V. Hartke, head of Catholic University's drama department, who urged a clearing house operated preferably by the Arts Council to help find jobs for drama school graduates; Music Critic Paul Hume of the Washington Post, who said artists should not pursue an arts career unless they are prepared to take on "side" jobs, and who recommended a national arts center and a secretary for the arts at cabinet level.

While composer-conductor Roy Harris was testifying in support of the Arts Council, Thompson interrupted the hearings to announce that Kennedy had sent a strong personal endorsement of his bill.

in expanded trade. It would safeguard the welfare of farmers and workers who might otherwise suffer from lowered trade barriers. It would strengthen our economy at home as well as our world competitive position by helping firms and workers to increase their efficiency either in their present lines or by getting into new ones. Trade adjustment assistance is based on the broad moral principle that if by government decision we decide to expand our trade to advance our welfare and security as a nation, the government has an obligation to take effective action to meet the adjustment problems arising from that decision.

How Adjustment Assistance Would Work

Various forms of adjustment assistance would be available under the bill to workers, firms and farmers. If a group of workers or their union thought that in their plant or even a department of the plant a significant number of workers might be laid off because of increased imports, they could file a petition with a government agency to be determined by the President (presumably the local employment office) for eligibility to apply for adjustment assistance. Within 45 days the Tariff Commission would have to advise the President of the extent to which increased imports had had an injurious effect on those workers and the President would then determine whether the workers were eligible for adjustment assistance. Business firms would also go through a similar procedure to get a determination of eligibility.

If the President felt that reduced tariffs had caused or threatened significant job displacement, the workers involved would be eligible for three kinds of adjustment assistance:

1—Readjustment allowances providing in most cases 65 percent of the worker's average weekly wage for up to 52 weeks for all workers, with provision for up to 26 additional weeks for a worker in an approved training program, and a possible 13 additional weeks for workers over 60 not receiving training. The law stipulates, however, that the readjustment allowance cannot be more than 65 percent of the average wage for all factory workers. It also provides that if the worker affected by imports is employed part-time, his readjustment allowance is reduced by 50 percent of his wages. Also any unemployment insurance the worker is entitled to receive is deducted from the readjustment allowance.

The following examples illustrate how the readjustment allowance would be determined:

● An $80-a-week worker is laid off because of imports. For a full year he could get 65 percent of $80, or $52 a week. But if during the first 26 weeks he is getting $30 a week in unemployment insurance, the remaining $22 will come out of the readjustment allowance. After his unemployment insurance runs out, the readjustment allowance will be the full $52 for the remaining 26 weeks.

● A worker has been paid $120 a week. His weekly wage is above the national average in manufacturing which in 1961 was $92.34. This means that he would be entitled to 65 percent of $92.34, or $60.02, with the deductions noted above for any unemployment insurance received.

● A worker previously receiving $90 a week goes on half-time and gets $45 weekly. In addition to his pay, he receives a readjustment allowance of 65 percent of $90, or $58.50, minus 50 percent of $45 (his part-time pay), or $22.50, for a total of $36 ($58.50—$22.50=$36). With his part-time pay of $45, he gets a total amount weekly of $81 ($45+$36=$81).

2—Workers hurt by imports will also be eligible for vocational education and training to help them develop higher and different skills. Workers receiving training are eligible for up to 78 weeks of readjustment allowances.

Workers who refuse to take advantage of suitable training opportunities will be disqualified from receiving readjustment allowances.

3—Heads of families who can't find a job in their present community will get a relocation allowance to pay for moving the worker and his family and his household effects plus a lump sum equal to 2.5 times the average weekly factory wage. Based on the 1961 figure, this cash amount would be $230.85.

Businessmen and farmers could also get assistance, but first they would have to present a proposal for their economic adjustment. The firm could get technical assistance from the government in working out its plans, but it would have to show that the steps it proposed would contribute to the firm's economic adjustment, make maximum use of its own resources, and "give adequate consideration to the interests of its workers."

After the government okayed the firm's proposal, it would be eligible for:

1—Technical assistance either from appropriate government agencies or from private sources, partly or completely paid for by the government.

2—Tax relief permitting firms to credit losses due to imports against profits over the next five years.

3—Loan guarantees or actual loans on reasonable terms to be used for modernization of existing facilities or shifting into a new line of production or for working capital for such purposes as developing expanding markets or financing technical assistance.

The bill sets up a Cabinet-level adjustment assistance advisory board with the secretary of commerce as chairman, plus the secretaries of labor, agriculture, interior, treasury and health, education and welfare and the small business administrator. The board will advise the President and the various agencies he designates to administer the program on overall coordination of the various adjustment assistance activities. It will give special consideration to devising ways of keeping workers in their present companies wherever possible. It will also set up special advisory committees, composed of employers, workers and public representatives, to consider the problems of particular industries.

If adjustment assistance alone would not shield the firms and workers in an industry affected by imports from undue injury, then the bill gives the President the power to invoke "extraordinary relief" in the form of increased tariffs or other import restrictions. Thus, the old escape clause mechanism is still available in particularly dire cases, either alone or in combination with adjustment assistance measures. In most cases, where the President took action to restrict imports, the adjustment assistance would go hand in hand with the tariff relief so that in time, the tariff could be restored to its original level without hurting the industry. The law looks for extraordinary tariff relief to expire in four years after it goes into effect unless the President decides the national interest requires a longer period.

Protections for National Security

The bill also contains provisions for protection of the national security. First, tariff cuts will not apply to Communist countries. Second, if large imports of defense-related items are threatening a U.S. industry producing those articles enough to impair the national security, the President can take action to reduce such imports to a level that will no longer jeopardize the national security. This provision on national security is quite broad and is taken without change from the existing law. As a matter of fact, the national security clause is so broadly worded that it could conceivably be used to cover situations only remotely or not at all related to the national defense requirements.

The new trade bill may seem complex and technical. Many Americans may feel that foreign trade is unrelated to their lives, that it is really a matter to be left to the experts.

This just isn't so. The well-being of every American will be affected by what Congress decides to do with the President's trade proposals.

The choice is clear. We can set up impassable barriers to the trade of other nations, but if we do they will shut us out of their markets, too. We would not only suffer economically, but we would strike a fatal blow against free world economic cooperation and progress. Nothing could give Khrushchev greater satisfaction: nothing could give as big a boost to the trade offensive he is already waging against the free world.

The alternative is the one the President has outlined and the AFL-CIO has traditionally supported. It is to follow the broad path of expanded trade with our free world partners by adopting an up-to-date trade policy geared to the requirements of our own country and the other free nations of the world in the 1960s.

In Subcommittee Report:

High Jobless Level Termed Intolerable

The persistence of heavy unemployment in the past year "is the most perplexing and troublesome domestic economic problem that confronts our nation," a congressional subcommittee has reported.

"The inability of 4 to 5 million American workers to find jobs in a period of prosperity cannot be tolerated," a subcommittee of the Joint Economic Committee said, adding:

"Unemployment cannot be viewed simply as a consequence of dips in the business cycle. The experience of the past four years, in which our economy underwent two down-and-up swings, while unemployment stayed above 5 percent, averaging 6.1 percent over a period of 50 months, provides confirmation for this. Merely damping the downswings and upswings of the cycle is not enough."

Senate Pair Signs

The subcommittee report was signed by Senators William Proxmire (D-Wis.) and Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) Rep. Thomas B. Curtis (R-Mo.) filed a minority report.

Examination of the significant statistics, Proxmire and Douglas declared, did not show any meaningful changes in the employment structure causing unemployment. The bulk of the increase of the unemployment rate to more than 4 percent "reflects a failure of demand forces to keep pace with the rise in the nation's potential output at full employment," the majority said.

But, the report stressed, the persistence of high-level unemployment through the cylical swings of the past few years "suggests that the usual cyclical approach to unemployment, a temporary increase in government outlay or the stimulation of a temporary spurt in private spending or investment, may not provide the answer to what appears to be a basically long-range problem."

Labor Supply Stressed

A key factor in the unemployment picture, said the report, is the supply of labor, with indications that recent high unemployment rates have actually been minimized by a slow rate of growth in the labor force.

There are indications that the labor force may grow rapidly at high levels of prosperity as workers who have been discouraged by the lack of job opportunities into leaving the labor force, as defined statistically, will resume looking for work.

"This," said the report, "may have important implications for the idea of an unemployment 'target.' The goal of a given low percentage figure for unemployment may turn out to resemble the pot of gold at the end of the rainbow, receding with the swelling of the labor force at higher levels of prosperity."

The report cited figures showing that unemployment averaged 4.2 percent of the civilian labor force over the 11 postwar years from 1947 through 1957. The four-year average since 1957 has been over 6 percent.

In the Twentieth Century, the report noted, there have been only two other periods of four years or more during which unemployment both averaged 6 percent or more, and continuously equaled or exceeded 5 percent. The first was 1908-12; the second 1930-41.

L-G Reports Now Available in Field

Union reports filed under the Landrum-Griffin law are now available for public inspection at 24 field offices of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor-Management Reports, LMR Commissioner John L. Holcombe has announced.

Holcombe said each field office has on file the reports of unions in the area it covers. Reports filed by employers and management consultants will soon be available locally also, he said.

The bureau has received reports from 52,400 labor organizations. The law requires the secretary of labor "to make reasonable provision" for the inspection of all reports by any person. Copies of the reports may also be obtained by mail from the bureau's Washington office at a cost of 25 cents a page, Holcombe said.

CONCERN OVER UNEMPLOYMENT in Massachusetts shipyards led to this conference of congressmen from the state, Commerce Sec. Luther H. Hodges, and representatives of labor, industry and the public. Pres. John J. Grogan of the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, front row, back to the camera, led the union delegation. Facing the group are, left to right, Representatives F. Bradford Morse (R), Laurence Curtis (R), Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr. (D), and James A. Burke, (D), Sec. Hodges and House Speaker John W. McCormack. Hodges promised a decision soon on Bethlehem Steel's bid for a subsidy under the Merchant Marine Act to build two ore carriers at its Fore River Shipyard, Quincy, Mass., where some 6,000 shipbuilders are jobless.

Kennedy Economic Report Called 'Step Forward'—But Still Short

"too low," he added, to cope with advancing productivity and a growing labor force. He added:

"The AFL-CIO's major concern over these short-run objectives, however, is not with their limitations. Our concern is that even these limited objectives may not be achieved. The President's proposals do not spell out an adequate program, in our judgment, to bring to reality the objectives he set forth for 1963. These objectives will certainly not be achieved automatically."

Turning to the President's proposed stand-by anti-recession measures, the AFL-CIO official agreed that tax reduction authority, capital improvements and permanent strengthening of the unemployment insurance system "can provide leverage to arrest recessionary spirals and to return the economy to the path of healthy growth."

"These measures have been proposed, however, to deal with the next recessions," he said. "We believe they are needed now."

Reuther rejected the Administration thesis that wage increases should not exceed productivity gains, declaring that to achieve a workable balance in the economy a shift is needed "in the present distribution as between labor and nonlabor income, an increase in wages and salaries, at least in the immediate future, greater than our normal potential for increasing productivity."

Demand Will Lag

Otherwise, he said, the demand for goods will continue to lag behind productive capacity and perpetuate the unemployment problem.

In the area of a shorter workweek, Reuther proposed a study of amending the Fair Labor Standards Act to provide for an "automatic adjustment" of the statutory standard "based upon the level of unemployment."

"The standard workweek under this plan would remain at 40 hours when industry's need for labor was high and unemployment low. When industry's need for labor was low and unemployment high, the workweek would be reduced accordingly, to help create more jobs, Reuther said.

Take-home pay of workers on a shorter week would be maintained through a "national workweek adjustment fund" accumulated by a small payroll tax on all employers, Reuther said.

A key to the entire economic situation, said the president of the Auto Workers, is national planning. He urged specifically a study of economic planning in other free nations which have found answers to the problems facing the U.S. He noted that countries in Western Europe "with far less resources and far less opportunities have achieved full employment and rapid economic growth" through use of planning agencies.

Reuther opposed as unnecessary the Administration's proposal for an 8 percent tax credit for investment in new plant and equipment, declaring the "urgent need" is not for increased investment but for a "rapid and sustained advance in demand."

On the overall economic problems facing the nation Reuther warned that "our greatest danger now is that we may be satisfied with too little."

New Recession 'Unavoidable'

"If we let our efforts be weakened by a partial measure of recovery, if we give way before the fears and the opposition of those who would rather look to the past than venture courageously into the future, then we shall not only fail to achieve the goals we might have reached, but we shall be unable to avoid an early recurrence of recession," he said.

The 20-point program outlined by Reuther included national planning, aid to education, medical care for the aged, an urban affairs department, government contracts for distressed areas, public works, resource development, youth conservation corps, aid for farmers, higher wages and salaries, more adequate measurement of unemployment, flexible work week, fair employment practices law, action against administered prices, foreign economic aid, national defense, continuing research, improved international trade, monetary policy tied to economic growth and tax reform.

Federal Radiation Disability Benefits Urged

Legislation to create a federal compensation program for workers disabled by radiation exposure has been endorsed by AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller.

The federal government must move into the disability area, which for a half-century has been dominated by the states, because the states have failed to protect workers from radiation hazards, he told a House Labor subcommittee.

"It is true that almost all states list radiation-induced disability as compensable, but the statement is more illusory than real," Biemiller declared.

He recalled that nearly three years ago, before a Joint Atomic Energy subcommittee, employers and insurance companies confidently predicted that the states would properly handle the program, and expressed fear that if the federal government stepped in, it would soon take over the complete workmen's compensation system.

"No state which permitted employers to elect or refuse workmen's compensation in private employment has [since] abolished the election," Biemiller said. "Twenty-four states still provide election by employers in private employment. In other words, in half the states of the union employers may elect or refuse to cover their employes under workmen's compensation for injuries induced by radiation.

"A few states increased the allowance for medical care but not one state which had a maximum dollar or time limit in 1958 has repealed its restrictive limitation and extended full medical coverage.

"Less than half of the states provide full medical care for occupational disease."

Biemiller said the proposed legislation modifies the traditional concept of workmen's compensation but "carefully retains the experience" of present workmen's compensation legislation while modeled on the Longshoremen & Harbor Workers' Act.

"Unless this proposal or a similar proposal is adopted," he warned, state administrators are going to have to stretch beyond recognition their state workmen's compensation laws if employes suffering latent injury from exposure to radiation are to receive adequate protection."

Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg, citing both deficiencies in state workmen's compensation problems and the radiation safety record, told the subcommittee that "in a progressive society such as ours, it is unconscionable for a worker injured in the course of his employment to be without the protection of compensation because of unnecessary limitations or procedural bars in the existing programs, or because they are not adequately designed to meet new and emerging programs."

Existing Programs Fail

"I think it may be fairly concluded," he added, "that the existing workmen's compensation programs in many state jurisdictions do not provide adequate protection against work-connected radiation injuries."

He said the Labor Dept. has prepared proposed regulations dealing with radiation hazards "which will become an integral part of the safety and health standards for federal supply contracts." The Federal Bureau of Mines and the Public Health Service also have programs," he added.

Ashley St. Clair, an attorney for the Liberty Mutual Insurance Co., and Russell Hubbard, employe benefits consultant of the General Electric Co., representing the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, gave the subcommittee statistics purporting to show that work in atomic energy is among the safest in industry.

They declared a federal law covering only radiation injuries would be "discriminatory," and could see no need for congressional action.

Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. said the CofC testimony was "of deceitful nature."

Carey presented at a press conference Mrs. Ruby Smith, whose husband died on Feb. 15, 1957, after radiation exposure at the Goodyear Atomic Plant, Ohio, and Harold T. Mahoney, a victim of lymphatic leukemia as the result of radiation received in an accident at a Union Carbide Co. plant at Oak Ridge, Tenn., in March 1961.

Carey said they and Mrs. Howard N. Pierce, widow of another radiation poisoning victim, had been invited by the subcommittee to testify and had come to Washington at government expense. However, he said, Mrs. Smith and Mahoney were denied the right to appear because the AEC had objected it was still considering their claims.

Showdown Votes Loom on Major Kennedy Proposals

FINAL EXAMINATION TIME comes to the union hall as steamfitter apprentices are tested on their knowledge of trade union history and goals to culminate a course given by Baltimore Local 438 of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters. Supervising the examination is Edward H. John, former president of the Baltimore AFL-CIO and now a labor adviser with the Agency for Intl. Development, who served as instructor. (See story, Page 9.)

Factory Workweek Slackens

The government's economic indicators for January, issued by the Dept. of Labor and Dept. of Commerce, reveal:

- A decline in factory worker earnings as a result of cutbacks in overtime work, especially in the auto industry.
- A total work force which for the third straight month has failed to gain over the year-ago figures.
- A drop in personal incomes, the first month-to-month decline since August, following an earlier report that retail sales, seasonally adjusted, had declined for the second straight month.

Unemployment and job displacement by automation received major attention when Pres. Kennedy at his news conference declared "the major domestic challenge . . . of the Sixties (is) to maintain full employment at a time when automation . . . is replacing men."

The President said that over a 10-year period 25,000 new jobs would have to be found every week "to take care of those who are displaced by machines and those who are coming into the labor market." This situation, he added, places a "major burden" upon the economy and is a problem "which we will have to give a good deal of attention in the next decade. I regard it as a very serious problem."

The Labor Dept.'s detailed report on the job situation showed that "large seasonal employment changes" accompanied the improvement in the rate of unemployment which had been announced Jan. 31. It was then reported that the jobless total had risen less than seasonally from 4.1 million to 4.7 million, dropping the adjusted jobless rate to 5.8 percent from December's revised rate of 6 percent.

With the close of the Christmas period, the Labor Dept. said, jobs in trade fell about seasonally by 900,000 and the release of some 250,000 temporary postal workers restored the federal job level to its November total.

Unusually cold weather caused a larger than seasonal cutback of 300,000 construction jobs, the report said, while the drop of 200,000 factory jobs was mostly seasonal.

In sum, the Labor Dept. said, total non-farm payrolls fell by 1.8 million to 53.7 million.

In noting the seasonal job changes, the report said "this is the third month in which the labor force has shown little or no gain over a year ago."

The factory workweek in January declined by 42 minutes to 39.9 hours as auto overtime was cut; the shortened hours dropped factory production worker earnings by $1.67 to $94.96 per week.

Tests Set on Retraining, Urban Dept.

Congress comes back from a Lincoln's Birthday pause to move into test votes that will provide the first major rollcalls of the session on key sections of Pres. Kennedy's domestic program.

The Senate will vote, probably on Feb. 20, on the President's reorganization proposal to create a Dept. of Urban Affairs and Housing at the Cabinet level. The plan will go into effect unless it is vetoed by either House of Congress.

On schedule for the House, assuming that the urban affairs proposal clears the Senate as anticipated by Democratic leaders, are votes on both the reorganization plan and the Manpower and Training bill passed by the Senate last year but held up in the House until now by a blockade in the Rules Committee.

Kennedy in repeated statements and in news conferences has indicated that he wants both Senate and House to move to rollcalls on major proposals in his domestic program. Administration spokesmen think the showdown votes will improve chances for the program or, in an election year, establish responsibility for the defeat of proposals.

The issue in each case is the strength of the conservative coalition of northern Republicans and southern Democrats. In the House, a combination of these groups, with Republican control held tightly by Floor Leader Charles A. Halleck (Ind.) and House Rules Committee Chairman Howard W. Smith (Va.) influencing many southern Democrats, has checked or slowed much Administration legislation.

AFL-CIO Asks Strengthening:

Kennedy Welfare Program Backed

By John M. Barry

The Kennedy Administration's proposals for major reforms in federal welfare assistance, with emphasis on rehabilitation, have been given strong AFL-CIO endorsement before the House Ways & Means Committee, with three amendments proposed to bolster the program.

In joint testimony, Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security and Leonard Lesser, director of social security activities for the Industrial Union Dept., praised the program as a "fresh . . . thoughtfully constructive approach" to complex social problems.

They said Kennedy's announced goal of "stressing service instead of support, rehabilitation instead of relief, and training for resourceful work instead of prolonged dependence," deserves congressional approval.

The Administration bill, introduced as a draft measure by chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.) of the Ways & Means Committee, would provide funds for the rehabilitation of potential relief recipients as well as those already on the welfare rolls and make permanent the present temporary aid to dependent children of unemployed parents.

It would also help communities set up work and training programs for those on relief, raise the federal share of essential rehabilitation costs, and increase federal assistance for training social workers and other welfare personnel.

Cruikshank and Lesser proposed that the measure be amended to:

- Incorporate another bill, directly sponsored by Mills, to provide federal financial aid for research in maternal and child health services.
- Assure that local work pro-

Labor Bids West Open Counter-Drive

Berlin—The time is ripe to launch a "diplomatic counter-offensive aganst Soviet imperialism," and American labor is "urging our government to do so," AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan told an audience of German union leaders and newspapermen in Amerika Haus here.

Keenan spoke as the Russians were increasing pressure to seal off air corridors into Berlin. His visit came just before the Soviet Union released Francis Gary Powers, U.S. U-2 pilot, in exchange for Col. Rudolf I. Abel, convicted Red spy in this country, and the USSR proposed that disarmament talks scheduled Mar. 14 in Geneva be turned into 18-nation "summit" negotiations.

"We believe our government must seize the initiative on a broad front," Keenan said, "to do the following things:

"First, we and our Allies should offer Moscow a genuine peace treaty for a united Germany based strictly on the right of the German people to self-determination.

"Second, we believe that any agreement on Berlin must be within the framework of a settlement of the entire German problem which can only be accomplished through unification in freedom. This means that Berlin is not negotiable; access to Berlin, the presence of the Western Allies there, and the continuing relationship between Berlin and the Federal Republic, as well as the right of all Berliners to freely

Royal York Penalized by Court Ruling

Toronto, Ont.—The embattled Royal York Hotel strikers have won the third and biggest round of their court battles with the Canadian Pacific Railway as the Ontario Appeals Court ordered the hotel found guilty of unfair labor practices.

The court also directed that "appropriate" penalties be imposed against the hotel for first threatening to fire and later firing 600 striking employes who refused to return to work on company terms.

The decision was considered by the union as a major blow to the hotel, which had won a first round when Magistrate T. S. Elmore ruled that employers had the right to fire strikers on his decision that the right to strike "did not exist" in Ontario.

Round two went to the strikers,

Use Integrated Facilities, Central Bodies Ordered

All state and local central labor bodies chartered by the AFL-CIO have been directed by Pres. George Meany to hold all their functions in "fully integrated facilities." He instructed them also not to sponsor, support or participate in conventions, institutes or conferences which exclude persons on the basis of race, color, creed or national origin.

In a letter to central bodies, Meany spelled out the application of these rules where fully-integrated facilities, including housing and meals, are not generally available.

State organizations, he said, must hold their functions in whatever city or cities do have desegregated accommodations. If none exist, the choice must be facilities that "most nearly conform" to that standard. Local central bodies are required to follow the same policy within their geographic areas.

"The AFL-CIO will give all possible assistance to its affiliates in their efforts to comply with this policy, and will make personnel, field staff or other services available in every instance where there is full compliance with it," Meany's letter concluded.

Rights of Women Study Opened by Commission

A presidential commission, headed by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, has opened a full-scale probe of job and pay discrimination against women with a strong endorsement from Pres. Kennedy.

Kennedy spoke at a White House swearing-in ceremony for the 26-member President's Commission on the Status of Women. He called on the commission to "examine laws across the country which may adversely affect the right of women" and to investigate the pay and promotion opportunities of women workers.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler is a member of the commission and Assistant Sec. of Labor Esther Peterson is its executive vice chairman.

Mrs. Roosevelt said the commission's first two topics will be the elimination of sex discrimination in government employment, with "full equality in federal hiring, pay schedules and promotion," and establishment of the principle of equal pay for equal work in private industry.

"The paying of lower wage rates to women workers . . . is contrary to the concept of equality and justice in which we believe," the former First Lady declared.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg predicted at the opening session that the commission's findings "will lead to great, forward steps in the months ahead."

Pointing out that "several million women earn less than $1 an hour," Goldberg said the gathering and presentation of all facts regarding job discrimination because of sex should be "a first order of business."

Mislabeling Turned Up In Illegal Drug Resales

The Food & Drug Administration, continuing its crackdown on the illegal resale of free physicians' samples of drugs by commercial pharmacists, has reported finding a mislabeled container in a group of repackaged drugs seized from a Florida pharmacy.

Included in a seizure of repackaged samples valued at $1,100 was a container labeled with the name of a combination tranquilizer and diuretic drug, but which actually contained tablets of a different drug.

Three other seizures of repackaged samples obtained from doctors and drug detail men were also reported by the FDA. In each case, the agency said, important information required by the federal Food, Drug & Cosmetic Act was not transferred to the new packages.

In other actions, the FDA:

- Seized 403 tons of food contaminated by pesticide residues or filth.
- Seized 92,000 cans of orange juice which the FDA said were falsely labeled as being "equal to the juice of one dozen average size oranges."
- Seized a shipment of "pure strawberry preserves" which were made in part with cherries.
- Seized 175 tons of grapefruit juice charged with having been manipulated chemically to make it appear to be of a better quality.

Interest Proposed In Back Pay Award

A National Labor Relations Board trial examiner has for the first time recommended that interest at 6 percent a year be added to lost wages for a worker fired unfairly.

The interest would provide a suitable remedy in illegal discharges for union activity and would not be "punitive," Examiner Herman Marx said. His ruling was the first to meet a recent recommendation of NLRB Gen. Counsel Stuart Rothman that interest be included as part of the penalty in all cases of unlawful discharge.

In the case at issue, Marx found that the Puget Sound Bridge & Dry Dock Co. had illegally fired a Carpenters' steward, Allen E. Walker, for pressing safety demands at a bridge-building project. He ordered reinstatement of Walker, with back pay and 6 percent interest.

UPWA Strike Continues at Illinois Plant

Du Quoin, Ill.—Negotiations attended by federal mediators have failed to end a strike of nearly four months—a walkout of 220 meat packing workers at the Du Quoin Packing Co. here.

The strike started Oct. 23 when Local 156 of the United Packinghouse Workers renewed a long-time effort to move wages at the plant here to the level of the industry in other parts of the nation. Union officials say the company, locally owned and highly profitable, pays between 57 and 85 cents an hour less than other meat packing firms.

In addition, the union is seeking the reinstatement of five workers fired for participation in a so-called "wildcat" strike earlier last year.

The company, which markets meat products throughout Illinois under the Blue Bell label, has made no direct efforts to break the strike.

About six weeks ago, however, a group of organizers of the unaffiliated Teamsters showed up in Du Quoin. They have made tentative and thus far unsuccessful efforts to woo the workers away from the UPWA.

The local union, in a strongly-worded resolution, condemned the Teamsters' action as "disruptive" and aimed at strikebreaking. Copies of the resolution criticizing the Teamsters were sent to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and to Teamsters Pres. James R. Hoffa.

Local President Wins JC Award

Alton, Ill.—Orchids have been coming Buddy Davis's way since the president of Steelworkers Local 3643 became president of the Alton-Wood River Area United Fund. The Junior Chamber of Commerce gave Davis its annual distinguished service award, and the Alton Evening Telegraph extended congratulations in a lead editorial.

Said the editorial: "We feel the entire community should extend him a vote of thanks . . . His selection will add prestige" to the Junior Chamber's award. And the fund's executive director added: "Buddy did an outstanding job. We are all in accord with the Telegraph."

Davis and his wife have four boys and a girl. Aged 31, he is a director of the local Red Cross chapter and active in parent-teacher work, the Cub Scouts, American Legion and the YMCA.

'Good First Step'—Keyserling:

Economic Plan Seen Vague on Growth

The President's Economic Report to Congress "is a good first step" but does not contain a "sufficiently comprehensive growth program," and some of its recommendations move in the "wrong direction," Leon H. Keyserling has declared.

Keyserling, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers under former Pres. Truman, told the Joint Economic Committee of Congress that the President's proposal to offer an 8 percent tax credit to stimulate investment is "highly unwise" economic policy.

Hailing the general tone of the President's report and that of the CEA as "progressive, candid and far-sighted," Keyserling said they do not contain a comprehensive analysis of why the nation's economic growth rate "averaged so dismally low" during the past nine years or how the economy's operations must be readjusted to improve the record in the future.

The greatest failure of our economic system, said Keyserling, "has been our failure to expand private consumer spending and public investment sufficiently to equate with the growing productive power in being and the even greater productive potential which have resulted from the actual processes of business investment and the thrust of new technology and automation."

"Except under conditions of actual war or rapidly stepped-up mobilization or demobilization," he declared, "the core of our economic difficulties at least throughout this century has been the failure to achieve this adequate expansion of ultimate demand."

On the tax credit proposal, Keyserling declared that he would have no objection to special tax concessions to encourage a rate of investment consistent with a 5 percent or 6 percent gross national product growth rate "if at the same time we took measures to promote an expansion of ultimate private and public demand consistent" with the same GNP growth rate.

The tax concession plan, he said, would not produce a stimulative effect on the economy in the short-run and in the long-run would "generate economic disequilibrium" and work against economic growth.

Union Group Hailed for Aid In Upper Volta

Four union leaders who helped raise money for an African Boystown have done "as much to offset potential Communist propaganda" as the official U. S. aid program in Upper Volta, the American ambassador to that new nation has informed them.

Ambassador Thomas S. Estes had requested aid funds to help two young Jesuits working with a boys' village near Quagadougou, Upper Volta. When aid was refused because the project did not qualify legally for funds, he made an appeal for private aid.

The appeal, transmitted through Labor Dept. channels, was answered by Sec.-Treas. William C. O'Neill of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, Pres. David Sullivan of the Building Service Employes, Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, and the late Pres. William A. Calvin of the Boilermakers.

O'Neill collected $10 apiece from 30 delegates to the AFL-CIO convention in Miami Beach, and the other three gave $100 each. The money was forwarded through the ambassador to "Kamba Tenga," the mud-hut village the boys built with their own hands. Wrote Estes:

"Surely we have 60 boys who will always remember that unknown Americans provided them with food when it was desperately needed. I thank you and your colleagues."

The village was built by boys 7 to 17 on land secured by Pres. Yameogo of Upper Volta. They are being taught how to read and write, how to build their huts and how to raise cotton.

UAW Demands GM End Overtime, Hire Jobless

Detroit—The hotly disputed issue of overtime during periods of heavy unemployment erupted here in a demand by the Auto Workers' National GM Council that General Motors Corp. stop engaging in "excessive and unnecessary overtime" that could provide at least temporary work for nearly 25,000 laid-off workers.

Delegates from GM plants all over the country reported many workers have been ordered to do overtime work while former workers remain on layoff. They adopted a resolution of vigorous protest.

For the entire industry, overtime jumped from 436,000 hours in October to more than 1 million hours in November and December, the UAW said. In the Detroit area alone, GM plants worked enough overtime to give a full week's work to 16,762 on layoff in December, the conference was told.

The council demanded that GM "eliminate this type of overtime work and rehire sufficient laid-off workers to achieve its needed production within a 40-hour week."

The union's GM Dept. said it has repeatedly protested to GM against the "improper scheduling of overtime" during periods of recession and layoff. The conference adopted a resolution saying:

"Workers resent overtime while their friends and neighbors are laid off."

During negotiations last year the UAW demanded contract protection against overtime except in emergencies. This was refused but the corporation sent a letter to plant general managers which the union said was "completely inadequate."

Since then two union-management meetings have been held to discuss the union's protests of overtime scheduling.

Boycotts Hearing:

Struck Jamestown Company Rebuffs Probe by Mediators

Buffalo—The status of a special state mediation panel, named to investigate a 20-week strike by the Furniture Workers at the Jamestown Sterling Corp., was thrown into confusion on the eve of hearings when the company reversed itself and pointblank refused to appear.

James Tillotson III, president of the firm, in a statement appearing Feb. 9 in the Jamestown Post-Journal, had said the company "welcomed" the interest of the mediators and hoped "their suggestions will prove feasible."

On Feb. 14, however, Tillotson sent a telegram to Joseph F. Finnegan, chairman of the State Board of Mediation, charging that previous operations of the mediation service had failed to halt alleged "violence" on the picket line, that the company had offered "concessions" to the union without reciprocation, and that an appearance by the company might encourage a settlement "dictated" by a governmental body. He said no company spokesman would attend the hearings and no one would be authorized to speak for the firm.

Tillotson sent a copy of the telegram to Furniture Workers Pres. Morris Pizer with a suggestion that "you and I sit down together in the hope that we can reach a settlement more satisfactory to both of us than one empowered by any governmental authority."

As the AFL-CIO News went to press, it was still uncertain whether the mediation panel would proceed with the hearings without company spokesmen present.

Strike Began Oct. 2

The strike at the Jamestown furniture plant, about 75 miles south of here, began last Oct. 2 in an effort by 140 members of UFWA Local 45 to obtain an initial contract. Jamestown Sterling has since attempted to operate with strikebreakers escorted by sheriff's deputies through union picket lines.

In appointing the special mediation panel, Finnegan "directed" the company and the union "to be present and make available to the panel all the information it seeks."

Veteran labor-management observers here described the panel as a highly unusual procedure, although the group does not have the power of subpoena.

UFWA Intl. Rep. J. Howard Proudman of Jamestown "welcomed" the creation of the panel and said the union would appear.

Dean Andrew V. Clements of the Albany Law School, a member of the seven-member Board of Mediation, is chairman of the panel.

The UFWA was certified as bargaining representative for Jamestown Sterling's production and maintenance workers last year after winning a secret-ballot National Labor Relations Board election.

When management stalled in negotiations and finally said it would meet with the union committee only for "two hours, once a week," members of Local 45 walked out after a unanimous strike vote.

Unfair labor practice charges accusing management of refusing to bargain in good faith were filed by the union Dec. 27 and still are pending in the Buffalo regional office of the NLRB.

Proudman said the union also is consulting its attorneys on the possibility of taking legal action against Chautauqua County Sheriff Charles C. McCloskey for ordering his deputies to restrict picket line activities—although he had no court order to do so.

State Supreme Court Justice William B. Lawless last December rejected a company application for an injunction to limit picketing because, he ruled, there was insufficient evidence of picket line violence to warrant court intervention.

Lawless this month again rejected a company request for an immediate injunction, saying he would not do so unless local officials asked for help from the state police and the latter failed to preserve order.

Pizer urged Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller not to become "entrapped" in any use of state police. If this should be done, he told the governor in a telegram, "it would be a monstrous injustice to the strikers, who have already been made to suffer severe privations" because of the company's refusal to bargain.

Proudman said the strikers are receiving "wonderful support, both financially and morally," from the members of more than 100 local unions in the Jamestown area.

TWUA Votes to Seek Hikes at Northern Mills

New York—The Textile Workers Union of America, at meetings of delegates representing 65,000 workers, has voted to recommend cancellation of contracts with 265 northern textile firms and to seek new contracts with wage increases and improved fringe benefits.

The TWUA declared that wages have not been increased since 1960, that fringes remain the same as in 1957, and that textile employers have made "notable progress" in emerging from a slump which gripped the industry two years ago.

Delegates from textile centers in New England and the mid-Atlantic states met in separate conferences. They represented 45,000 workers in 190 cotton-rayon plants and 20,000 in 75 woolen and worsted plants.

A resolution adopted by the meetings also recommended that negotiators aim at eliminating inequities and changing or clarifying contract language. Policy committees for each division were authorized to draft goals and assist local union negotiators.

Most TWUA northern cotton-rayon contracts expire or are subject to reopening Apr. 15. Woolen and worsted agreements come up for review May 1. In each case 60-day advance notice to employers is required.

Pollock said that while northern cotton-rayon workers got raises averaging 7.5 cents an hour in 1960 and woolen and worsted rates went up 7 cents an hour two years ago, all other major industries have granted equal or larger increases and many are committed to additional raises in 1962.

Textile productivity, Pollock said, is rising at a rate of 4 percent annually, contrasted to a rate of 3 percent for manufacturing as a whole.

"Textile workers have not shared the fruits of this increase, and their fringe benefits are substandard by any comparison with modern American industries," he said. "A continuance of this situation cannot be tolerated."

Other factors listed as part of the improving textile picture:

- The industry has received substantial special help under the Kennedy Administration, including $25 million a year in depreciation tax savings and another $25 million in prospect.
- Cotton manufacturers are getting relief from excessive imports under a U.S. agreement with 16 cotton-exporting nations.

Victor Canzano of Woonsocket, R. I., the union's cotton-rayon director, and J. William Belanger of Boston, Mass., woolen and worsted director, presided at the conferences.

Glass Industry Pact Continues Long Peace

More than 6,500 skilled machine operators in the glass container industry will receive pay raises, job transfer rights, higher pensions and improved vacations under a new three-year contract negotiated by the Glass Bottle Blowers.

The industrywide agreement, covering workers at 81 plants of 24 container manufacturers, will also provide for the first time life insurance for retirees and hospital and surgical benefits for both retired workers and their wives.

In another development, the union and the Glass Manufacturers Association agreed to extend the principle of industry-wide bargaining to some 35,000 production and maintenance workers represented by the Glass Bottle Blowers. Negotiations will begin in March for workers in plants east of the Rocky Mountains. An additional 6,000 workers west of the Rockies are already covered by a single agreement.

The contract covering journeymen operators and related workers provides a 3 percent raise on both base pay and incentives effective Mar. 1, the equivalent of 3 percent in fringe benefits beginning the second year of the contract, and an additional 3 percent raise on Mar. 1, 1964.

GBBA Pres. Lee W. Minton said the job transfer provision of the contract provides "significant" employment stability.

Preferential hiring in other plants is guaranteed workers whose jobs are eliminated for any reason, including automation or technological changes. If plants of the same company have no job openings, the displaced workers are to be given preference in hiring by other companies in the industry.

The pension improvement, beginning in the second year of the contract, raises the pension base from the present $2 to $2.50 for each year of service and eliminates the previous 35-year maximum of credited service. The pension agreement also provides for earlier retirement because of age or disability.

Going into effect at that time will be a third week of vacation after 10 years of service. The present requirement is 15 years.

Union and company officials, who reached agreement after 17 days of negotiations in Chicago, hailed the new contract as extending for three more years the 77-year record of peaceful agreement between the GBBA and the container manufacturers, without a single national strike.

Auto Union Ratifies Pact At Studebaker

South Bend—Members of the Auto Workers Local 5 have ratified a new three-year contract with the Studebaker-Packard Corp. ending a six-week strike by the 6,700 members.

The agreement, reached in Washington by UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther and company Pres. Sherwood Egbert, closed out the current round of auto industry negotiations.

Members agreed to give up five minutes of their 15-minute washup time when production of 1963 model cars begins this summer. In exchange, wage increases total 16 cents, and the contract includes improvements in pensions, insurance and supplemental unemployment benefits. Also, the local won the right to represent workers at Studebaker's new defense plant here.

The UAW said management dropped its demands for cuts in vacation pay, shift premiums and overtime provisions.

The strike was called Jan.1 when the company announced it was terminating the old contract and instituting these cuts along with a 15-minute reduction in relief and cleanup time.

UAW Regional Dir. Raymond H. Berndt, who led the bargaining team here, said he feels both sides are satisfied with the final agreement. The union is determined to forget past disputes, he said, and go back to the job of "building better jobs and better cars" at Studebaker.

Ontario Court Ruling Hits Royal York Hotel

now in their tenth month on the picket lines, as Chief Justice J. C. McRuer ruled that there was a right to strike and employers could not punish workers for engaging in a lawful union activity.

The CPR, owners of the hotel, largest in the British Commonwealth, said it will take the case to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Three appeal court judges took only a few minutes to deliver the verdict against the Royal York.

Onofrio (Murph) Zambri, business manager of striking Hotel Employes Local 299, hailed the verdict as "a great victory for the strikers and every union in Ontario."

The Royal York announced after the verdict that it would still decline to meet with a city council mediator, Controller Herbert Orliffe. The hotel said it would not accept city mediation until the council voted to end its blacklist on the scheduling of city functions in the strikebound hotel.

After 10 months, there are 500 remaining strikers. Of the original 1,188 strikers, 520 have returned to work and 166 have quit or taken their pensions. The picket lines have cut hotel business by at least 20 percent, according to union interpretation of CPR statements.

Job Injury Deaths Reach Record Low

Deaths resulting from work accidents dropped last year to a rate of 21 per 100,000 workers—the lowest on record—and disabling injuries to a rate of 30.1 per 1,000, second lowest in history, the U. S. Dept. of Labor has reported.

The number of deaths totaled 13,500, a drop of about 300 from the 1960 figure, and disabling injuries were down to 1.93 million, a decrease of about 20,000.

The department's Bureau of Labor Statistics said each of the injuries studied in its report disabled a worker for one full day or more. In addition to the deaths, approximately 80,500 injuries resulted in some permanent physical impairment and the total made 163 million mandays of disability, equivalent to a year's full-time employment of about 525,000 workers.

The principal decrease in injuries was in manufacturing—about 6 percent below the 1960 total. The BLS reported modest decreases in injuries, paralleling drops in employment, in mining, agriculture, transportation and public utilities.

Injuries in contract construction remained about the same as in 1960, but the rate was up 5 percent because of the decline in employment, it said.

Boilermakers Fight Cut in Ship Funds

The Iron Shipbuilders Intl. Marine Council of the Boilermakers has appealed to Congress to help save the shipbuilding industry by substantially increasing the budget appropriation proposed for the Maritime Administration.

The new budget request for the Commerce Dept. agency cuts construction-differential subsidy funds for the year ending June 30, 1963, from $98 million to $50 million, the council charged.

A. F. Young, administrative director of the council, called the proposed cut "wholly unrealistic" and "ridiculously inadequate." It will if approved, he said, "hasten the death of our shipbuilding industry, which already has been given the last rites."

Young said "grave unemployment" prevails in most coastal and inland shipbuilding areas and that a further cut in subsidy funds would "multiply the depressed areas" of the country.

Eighteen ships were contemplated for 1962, but less than half that number will actually be constructed, Young pointed out. If all presently proposed 31 merchant ships are placed under contract by June 30, 1963, he said, this still would be only half the bare minimum needed to keep the merchant fleet "remotely modern" and U.S. shipyards operating at a minimum for national defense.

Anti-Trust Act Suit Filed on Blouse Pact

A civil anti-trust suit against an Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers local and three management groups will provide a test of the union's collective agreements in an atmosphere "free of politically motivated sensationalism," ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky has declared.

The civil suit was filed Jan. 23 by the Justice Dept. against New York Local 25 and three trade associations in the blouse industry. Dubinsky noted that the action is a sequel to a criminal suit brought against the same organizations by the Eisenhower Administration in 1959.

"At long last," he said, "the government is doing what it should have done in the first place if it wished to test the validity of the ILGWU collective agreements—namely to make a test in a civil forum rather than bring a sensational criminal case."

He said the union's contracts are based on procedures recommended by a special commission appointed in the 1920s by the late Alfred E. Smith, then governor of New York.

The object of the contracts, Dubinsky declared, is not to restrict competition but "to put an end to substandard labor conditions."

Sidney Barson of SCME Staff Dies

Sidney Barson, a member of the publications staff of the State, County & Municipal Employes, died at his home in Washington, Feb. 9, following a heart attack. He was 65.

A native of Russia, Barson came to this country with his father at the age of 15.

He was a founder and for many years president of the Harrisburg, Pa., Newspaper Guild and for 28 years was on the editorial staff of the Harrisburg Evening News. He later edited technical publications for the Navy Dept. and an engineering firm. At the time of his death, he was vice chairman of the Washington Guild's labor press unit.

Services were held Feb. 11 in the chapel of Chisuk Emunah Congregation in Penbrook, a Harrisburg suburb.

Rochester Unions Score In Organizing Campaign

Rochester, N. Y.—A city-wide organizing program started last February by the Rochester AFL-CIO had a .500 batting average in its first year, according to a report to delegates at an AFL-CIO Seminar on Organizing here.

Seminar speakers praised the "Rochester Plan" as a return to the method and the spirit that once helped labor grow, and said it will be tried elsewhere. Among them were guests from the Canadian Labor Congress who announced they would carry a favorable report and recommendation back to Canada.

Robert Miller, AFL-CIO staff organizer stationed here, reported that 59 organizing campaigns were started in this area under the supervision of the central body's organizing committee, with affiliated unions helping in the campaign.

Twenty of the 40 campaigns completed in the first year resulted in victory for AFL-CIO unions, Miller said. Others who gave details of the plan, initiated at a seminar here a year ago, were Edward J. Halter of the Auto Workers, organizing committee chairman; Pres. Anthony Schneider, Rochester AFL-CIO; Regional Dir. Michael Mann; and Assistant Dir. Charles Hasselmeyer of AFL-CIO Region 2.

The spark that ignited a fire of interest was an agreement by affiliated unions that all organizing campaigns would be conducted under the general supervision of the council organizing committee.

Mann said the membership increase in the Rochester central body gives it "one of the finest records" of the region's 51 city federations. He applauded the "unity and brotherhood" evidenced by local unions and added: "Rochester is leading the way back to the basic concept of all labor, and reviving the spirit that in the past has made labor great."

Other speakers included John Schreier, assistant director of organization, AFL-CIO; William Dodge, executive vice president, Canadian Labor Congress; Joseph MacKenzie, CLC director of organization; Pres. Harry Spodick of the Jewelry Workers, and William Higler, UAW regional representative.

Schreier warned that unions still are not organizing new members in the same ratio as the increase in the national work force, and said that unless the trend is reversed, labor will "see its strength dwindle and its powers diminish."

Unions must increase per capita income to finance more organizing efforts, increase field staffs for campaigns and make better use of the labor press to counteract anti-union public relations forces, he declared.

Delegates recommended that shop stewards be used as the key to organizing non-union members. They also collected $260 for the Furniture Workers' strike against the Jamestown, N. Y., Sterling Corp. Donations should be sent, the meeting was told, care of the Sterling Strike Fund, P.O. Box 133, Falconer, N. Y.

Youth Crime Post Given Don Ellinger

W. Don Ellinger has resigned as an area director for the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education to accept a post as labor and employment consultant to the President's Committee on Juvenile Delinquency and Youth Crime.

He will be part of a team of experts advising the committee and giving technical assistance in demonstration project cities.

In announcing Ellinger's appointment, Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, chairman of the committee, noted that a coordinated attack on the juvenile delinquency problem must include efforts to reduce the school dropout rate and provide constructive employment opportunities for the nation's youth.

Since the AFL-CIO merger in 1945, Ellinger has been director of COPE Area 8, which includes Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri. Before that he was southwestern states director of the former CIO Political Action Committee.

He is a member of the Papermakers & Paperworkers and formerly was a member of the Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers. He served the ILGWU as an organizer and as manager of its Dallas Joint Board.

To Get Out the Vote:

COPE Women Plan Intensified Program

An intensified political program by women of the labor movement, culminating in large-scale registration and "get out the vote" campaigns, will be the major item on the agenda for the Women's Activities Div. of AFL-CIO COPE for the remainder of 1962.

That was the recommendation of 52 delegates to the first nationwide WAD conference in Washington, D. C.

In six intensive days of activity the delegates got a "cram" course in political education, heard government and labor officials discussing their past successes and their future intentions, toured the White House and were guests at a tea in the home of Vice Pres. and Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson.

Business sessions were highlighted by addresses by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, COPE Dir. James L. McDevitt, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew Biemiller, Mrs. Esther Peterson, assistant secretary of labor, AFL-CIO Education Dir. Laurence Rogin and five of his staff members, and other experts.

The COPE women's leaders, representing WAD groups in 24 states and the District of Columbia, also got a message of greeting from Pres. Kennedy, spent an afternoon on Capitol Hill with legislators from their states, and were addressed by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg.

The conference was called at the request of unions and central bodies impressed with the work of WAD groups in a dozen states, and was arranged by the two COPE area directors of women's activities —Mrs. Margaret Thornburgh of the western area and Mrs. Esther Murray of the eastern area.

The delegates got advice from such experts as Louis Harris, who led a discussion on how to canvass your neighborhood; the WAD directors on organizing, recruiting workers, and setting up files of union members and registered voters; Biemiller on legislation; Rogin on educating voters on issues; Edwin Goldfield of the U.S. Bureau of the Census on how to use census figures.

'Teachers' Listed

Among "teachers" at the business sessions were COPE Deputy Dir. Al Barkan, who showed samples of pamphlets distributed by the "radical right"; Mrs. Peterson, and Ray Purdy of the Communications Workers, who told how CWA polls its members.

Schnitzler told the closing conference session: "Talk about the good things we do, and stop trying to defend labor from the attacks of those who don't like us.

"What does the future hold for us? More work. Keep organizing. Tell what we're doing—raising $1 million for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Fund, giving a third of all the money raised by community funds and chests in America—$160 million of $480 million.

"Help build the kind of country we all want. This country is only going to be as good as you're ready to make it for yourself."

McDevitt sounded the conference keynote as he declared: "The very life of the labor movement, the welfare of our nation, depends on your ability—and ours—to get the unregistered registered so they can vote."

UAW Offers New Plan To Finance Elections

The Auto Workers have proposed a program for "clean and responsible financing of federal elections" that would eliminate large contributions and set a $10 maximum on individual contributions to any candidate or party.

The nine-point program submitted by UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther to the President's Commission on Campaign Costs would permit a qualified voter to contribute $10 each to a congressional candidate, a senatorial candidate, a presidential candidate, and to the party of his choice or an independent political committee. The contributions could be offset by a tax credit of 90 percent of the total.

Thus, the overall ceiling on contributions per voter would be $40 in a presidential election year and $30 in a congressional election year. In years when there are no elections for federal posts, the voter could give $10 to his party or to an independent committee.

Among other proposals outlined by the UAW, in addition to the tax credit, were:

- Broadening the system of free and equal radio and television time for candidates and their parties.
- One free mailing from each candidate to every voter in his constituency.
- A limited subsidy to each candidate, based on the number of votes in preceding elections, to be used for advertising, television, radio and other "visible" expenditures.

Reuther noted that poll-taker George Gallup had estimated that 17 million families would be willing to give as much as $85 million in $5 campaign contributions. He said it was "not unreasonable to assume" such a total could be raised in $1 to $10 contributions if a limited tax credit were allowed.

"Expenditures for the most part would be self-controlling in view of the fact that only small sums from many contributors, together with the amounts to be provided by the federal government, would be available to candidates," he continued.

"None of this money would have a special-interest axe to grind and no candidate would feel under obligation for such small contributions."

He said the UAW program would "produce for the first time an enforceable limit on campaign contributions."

Health Care Speech Reprints Available

Copies of a major speech on health care for the aged by Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.M.) are available without charge from the Pamphlet Division, AFL-CIO Dept. of Publications, 815 16th St., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security describes the speech, delivered to the Senate last year, as "still the most comprehensive" statement of the case for financing such health care through social security.

Anderson is co-sponsor, with Rep. Cecil R. King (D-Calif.), of the Administration bill embodying the social security approach.

Meany Stresses Distinctions:

Trade Unionists, Socialists, Communists

AFL-CIO President George Meany in a signed editorial in the February 1962 issue of The American Federationist, official AFL-CIO monthly publication, writes on the subject of trade unionists, Socialists and Communists. Herewith is the full text:

We hear a great amount of talk these days from the right-wing condemning socialism as a form of communism. This, despite the record of many so-called socialistic countries of sincere, determined, long opposition to communism and all other forms of dictatorship.

As free trade unionists, we of the AFL-CIO loyally support the principles of democracy and reject all forms of dictatorship. Totalitarianism—whether it be communism, fascism, Nazism, Falangism, Castroism or Peronism—is reprehensible to us. American labor yields to no one in the vigor and consistency of its opposition to every type of tyranny. Nor has our trade union movement ever shown any preference for one Communist clique as against another. We see nothing but evil in communism, whether Lenin, Stalin, Khrushchev, Mao Tse-tung, Tito or Castro be its dictatorial standard-bearer.

Experience has taught us, however, to avoid certain dangerous mistakes in the fight against communism. One mistake often made by sincere anti-Communists is to lump together all critics of our economic system with the Communists who seek nothing less than the total destruction of that system. Opponents of communism who take this position render great service to the Communist conspiracy when they equate democratic Socialists and other serious critics of our social system with Communists as enemies of liberty. In the present world situation, fraught with danger of Soviet aggression, this mistake can be very harmful to the forces of freedom and peace.

It is not hard to see why rock-ribbed reactionaries should, wittingly or otherwise, resort to such a fantastic amalgam. They are anxious to preserve their privileges. That is why they resent and resist the efforts of the trade unions to assure the workers decent conditions of life and labor and a just share of the national product. For the same reason they consider every urgently needed social reform, no matter how much it might improve and strengthen our free society, as a threat to their "good old days."

It is, however, very unfortunate when those who take pride in calling themselves liberals fall into the same error. Some of these self-styled liberals have only contempt for trade unionists and democratic Socialists. They resent and reject the democratic Socialists, especially when they also happen to be trade unionists. Such prejudice is, at best, rooted in ignorance or in the utterly unwarranted and dangerous notion that they can speak for labor better than labor can speak for itself.

American free labor believes in democratic free enterprise. In our country experience has shown that it is possible to promote individual dignity, human freedom and the well-being of the great mass of people through the free enterprise system. Also under this system American labor can and does support legislation, government action, projects and services in the interest of the public welfare on the theory that forward looking government policies and undertakings can strengthen and stabilize our free economy and enable it to serve society better.

Not only labor but management, the farmers and other segments of our society have from time to time called for governmental action to correct economic imbalance and inequity and to eliminate social injustice in our country. It is the folly of reactionaries to label all such proposals as socialistic. Every genuine liberal will agree that it would be silly to question or oppose needed reforms merely because Socialists have been espousing and supporting them.

The latest congressional inventory has disclosed that, as of June 30, 1961, U.S. government assets in real estate and personal property, drastically undervalued, amount to $282.9 billion. This represents a gain of $6.97 billion over the previous year. This American social wealth is very probably greater than the total wealth controlled by the Soviet Communist dictatorship which calls itself socialist. This extensive American social wealth has not made our democratic way of life and institutions any less vital or robust. The growing vitality of American democracy stands out today in sharper contrast than ever with the dictatorship which Khrushchev is attempting to modernize and streamline.

We cannot emphasize too strongly that the decisive reason why democratic-minded people oppose communism and every other dictatorship is because all such despotic systems are destructive of individual dignity, human freedom and well-being. Economic forms are not the decisive factor.

Everyone devoted to democracy and human dignity must draw a sharp line of distinction between the democratic Socialists and the totalitarian Communists. One need not accept the doctrines of democratic socialism to realize that its adherents are true democrats who are uncompromising enemies of communism and all other forms of dictatorship. As a matter of fact, democratic Socialists have often shared with free trade unionists the honor of being the first and main target of Communist hostility, abuse, persecution and liquidation. We need but cite the latest Communist campaign of terror, bombing and murder in Venezuela.

No matter how much we may differ with some of their economic doctrines, we must recognize that Socialists believe in and support democracy. On the other hand, the communists who hate and despise democracy make use of its institutions and processes in order to destroy democracy in toto. Communists living in the free world may talk a lot about their being for equal rights. In reality, the only right which interests them is their right to work for the destruction of democracy and its replacement by what they call a "proletarian dictatorship"—actually an absolute dictatorship over the workers and the nation by the Communist Party.

In the United Nations and its vital agencies, like the Intl. Labor Organization, democratic Socialists—and especially the Socialist trade unionists—have often been of the greatest service to human freedom. They have helped to defeat the Communist moves to infiltrate and paralyze these institutions in the interest of Soviet imperialism.

And who can deny the splendid service to human freedom and world peace by Socialist Paul-Henri Spaak when he was secretary general of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization?

In France, Germany, Austria, the Scandinavian and other countries, the democratic Socialists side by side with other democratic forces have rendered superb support to the free trade union movement in its efforts to promote social justice and human dignity and freedom.

In the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, the non-Socialist AFL-CIO has worked closely with social democratic trade unionists to build an effective rampart against communism and other dictatorships.

Experience has taught the free trade unionists of all countries that Communists always look upon the trade unions merely as instruments for promoting Communist aims and interests, for advancing the totalitarian dictatorship of their party over labor and all society. Communists of every type and stripe slavishly follow Lenin's orders "to agree to any and every sacrifice . . . to resort to all sorts of devices, maneuvers, illegal methods, to evasion and subterfuge, in order to penetrate the trade unions, to remain in them and to carry on Communist work in them at all costs." Realizing this role of the Communists, the former CIO years ago expelled the Communist-controlled unions and stressed that:

". . . The purpose of the Communist Party is to promote the interests of the Soviet Union . . . Although the Communist Party has claimed to champion unionism and organization, it has always done so in order to carry on Communist work within trade unions and in order to pervert their policies to the advantage of the Soviet Union. The Communist Party . . . does not believe in trade unions. It believes in using them for the purposes of the Soviet Union . . . Once the Communists gain control of a union, the union inevitably becomes nothing more than a robot-like instrument of the world-wide Communist movement, with the true economic and social interests of the workers in the union sacrificed to the interests of the foreign policy of the Soviet Union."

We trade unionists have learned from life to distinguish clearly between Communists as deadly enemies of democracy and social democrats as loyal supporters of democracy. To be genuine and effective, liberals must welcome the cooperation of the democratic Socialists, the Socialist trade unionists and all other truly democratic forces in the struggle against communism as the mortal foe of human dignity, freedom and world peace.

The powerful forces of Communist totalitarianism which we face today call for coordinated effort by all those who believe in human freedom as a basic ingredient for a progressive and peaceful world.

Job Bias Measure Sent To House Rules Group

An equal job opportunity bill, aimed at banning discrimination in employment, has moved out of the House Education & Labor Committee into the Rules Committee—where northern Democrats will need Republican help to clear it for floor action.

The committee bill is aimed at prohibiting discrimination in employment because of race, religion, color, national origin or age. It would set up a five-member commission appointed by the President to investigate possible cases of discrimination in hiring or promotion practices by private employers, unions or government agencies.

In one major feature — enforcement authority—the bill appears short of AFL-CIO recommendations for enforcement powers comparable to those possessed by the National Labor Relations Board.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, testifying last month on fair employment legislation, referred to the "abundant experience" of the NLRB during the past 25 years and declared: "We think exactly the same kind of procedure would work in this field as well."

Under NLRB procedure, the labor board makes an initial decision as to whether the law has been violated, issues cease-and-desist orders and designates appropriate remedies, including back pay. The board may seek a compliance order in a U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

As reported by the committee, the bill would require the commission to go to federal district court to seek a finding of discrimination and an injunction—which, in effect, would make the court, rather than the commission, the body that decides if illegal discrimination exists and what remedy should be applied.

Committee Chairman Adam Clayton Powell (D-N.Y.) said a subcommittee proposal dealing with employment discrimination because of sex had been dropped with the intention of handling it in separate legislation. A provision banning discrimination because of age was retained on the basis of "strong testimony as to extensive discrimination against older workers," he said.

Powell has asked the Rules Committee to clear the bill.

HOWARD JENKINS, JR.

Jenkins Appointed Top L-G Act Aide

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has named Howard Jenkins, Jr., a specialist in the fields of administrative and labor law, as an assistant commissioner for the Bureau of Labor-Management Reports.

In his new post Jenkins is the highest-ranking Negro civil service employe at the Dept. of Labor. He will advise BLMR Commissioner John L. Holcombe on administering the Labor-Management Reporting & Disclosure Act, and will supervise the work of the newly reorganized Office of Regulations & Administrative Determinations.

Community College Aid Seen Vital to Students

Federal construction grants for two-year community colleges would make it possible for almost a quarter of a million additional high school graduates to continue their education, Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N. J.) has declared.

Case described the community college provision of the Senate-passed aid to higher education bill as offering the "first meaningful assistance" by the federal government to 400 state-and-city-supported junior colleges which currently enroll 645,000 students.

Large-scale aid to community colleges is one of three major differences between the Senate and House-passed bills. The others are the Senate's college scholarship provision—strongly supported by Pres. Kennedy and opposed by House conservatives—and the House provision for construction grants and loans for public and private senior colleges, contrasted with loans only in the Senate bill.

An immediate conference was blocked by a Republican objection in the House, which sent the issue to the Rules Committee. Some observers saw this as a device to mandate House conferees to reject the college scholarship provision.

While the House bill permits junior colleges to qualify for limited federal grants and loans, the Senate bill earmarks $50,000 a year for five years in matching grants to permit construction of new two-year colleges or expansion of existing facilities.

Community college enrollment has soared more than 16 percent in two years, straining existing facilities. An AFL-CIO convention resolution, urging increased public support, declared experience "has clearly demonstrated that when higher education is brought closer to the student, enabling him to live at home while studying, many young people go to college who might not otherwise do so."

Case, who sponsored the Senate junior college provision, said passage of the bill would encourage creation of additional community colleges to serve areas where high school graduates must either attend distant senior colleges at considerable expense or discontinue their education.

Romney the Liberal?

THE ALMOST JET-LIKE propulsion of compact carmaker George Romney to national political attention has raised anew the question of Republican liberalism.

Romney, in announcing his availability as a GOP candidate for the gubernatorial nomination in Michigan, has called for a new liberal image for the Republican Party and a program that will more accurately reflect the needs and desires of the majority of voters.

While there are a number of liberally oriented Republicans in Congress and the state legislatures, they constitute a relatively small section of the party's officeholders and leaders. An increase in their number would be to the general benefit of the nation.

Romney's political orientation is largely unknown at the moment, even in Michigan. His participation in the state's constitutional convention should provide one key to his new image, thinking in terms of the state's badly gerrymandered state legislature.

The instantaneous and almost simultaneous projection of Romney as a national political figure by the nation's press, radio, television and magazines indicates that he is considered something more than just another gubernatorial candidate.

This makes it more important that his position be documented on the major national issues—issues such as health care for the aged under social security, federal aid to education, civil rights legislation and other programs that offer distinguishing marks between a liberal and a conservative.

Railroads and the Nation

THE COUNTRY'S RAILROAD unions have provided the nation with a demonstration of responsible unionism in the national interest in the preparation and distribution of a major economic study of the industry and its accelerated trend toward mergers.

The nub of the study, prepared by Leon Keyserling, is that the problems of the railroad industry must be viewed in terms of national economic policy.

This detailed and documented study, advocating the formation of a National Transportation Commission to deal with all forms of surface transportation, provides an intelligent benchmark from which to deal with a complex problem—one requiring a national solution rather than the narrow-interest approach of the rails.

How the Promotors Work

THE REPORT of the National Better Business Bureau on the fund-raising activities of the National Right-to-Work Committee should be required reading for every businessman in the nation.

The businessmen have been misled on several counts by the solicitations of the national committee. They have been told by committee fund-raisers that their contributions will help eliminate "compulsory unionism." In fact, as Rep. Ray J. Madden (D-Ind.) noted in introducing the Better Business Bureau report in the Congressional Record, they are promoting "compulsory open-shop laws" and creating "friction in our industrial life."

The weakening and destruction of unions that is the real objective of the "right-to-work" committee would injure every businessman in the nation whose sales are directly tied to the high living standards unions have helped create.

But the businessman's contributions, solicited in the name of the phony dedication and idealism of the "right-to-work" group, do not really go to work for this "cause." Nearly half of the funds donated in 1960 were used for fund-raising—almost 18 percent ending in the till of a professional fund-raising firm.

New Mahout?

70 Percent of People in Cities:

Rural-Dominated Legislatures Point Up Need for Urban Dept.

WHY AN URBAN AFFAIRS DEPT.? The President outlined some of the broad needs for such a Cabinet-level department in his message to Congress.

"The times we live in urgently call for this action," he declared. "In a few short decades we have passed from a rural to an urban way of life; in a few short decades more, we shall be a nation of vastly expanding population, living in expanded urban areas in housing that does not exist now, served by community facilities that do not now exist, moving about by systems of urban transportation that do not now exist."

In blunt statistics, approximately 70 percent of the American people live in urban or suburban areas today compared to the time when only 5 percent of the population lived in non-rural communities.

The need for such a department might not be quite so great if the state legislatures, most of them under conservative rural domination, had done a half-way decent job in providing the needs of their cities.

The fact that they have not is best seen in the extremely strong stand taken by the non-partisan United States Conference of Mayors in support of the President's proposal. The conference represents all cities with 30,000 or more population.

Not only Democratic mayors but Republican mayors of such cities as Denver, Seattle and San Francisco are supporting the plan.

When you have more than two-thirds of the American people under-represented in their state legislatures and under-represented in Congress it creates a critical problem.

A study by two University of Virginia professors shows how the value of the urban vote has dropped since 1910. For example, if a fair value vote is 100, for citizens in communities under 25,000 it rose from 113 in 1910 to 171 in 1960. In cities of 500,000 or more the value of the vote fell from 81 in 1910 to 76 in 1960.

A number of states have not reapportioned their legislatures for decades. The U.S. Supreme Court is now considering whether there have been any constitutional violations in Tennessee, where there has been no reapportionment since 1910.

That's not the most horrible example. Vermont has not reapportioned since 1798, Alabama since 1901.

Since state legislatures map congressional districts we find that most congressional delegations have a strongly rural bent. The average urban district has a population of 431,000, the average surburban district population is 548,000, while the average rural district population is 364,000.

This does not present the full picture.

IN CONGRESS, under the seniority system, congressmen from rural areas chair 14 committees in the House, urban congressmen chair four committees and suburban congressmen chair two committees.

In the Senate, where members are elected on a statewide basis, the rural vs. urban problem does not arise. It might also help to explain why the Senate is now the more liberal of the two houses of Congress.

Sen. Clifford Case (R-N.J.), in supporting the Kennedy Urban Dept., declared that "no one believes we are going to solve for 126 million urban-dwelling Americans all their housing, transportation and land-use problems just by creating a new agency. But I believe that a useful purpose will be served by the new department."

He pointed out that whereas the federal government has sought to encourage the solution of urban problems through state and local action, "the activities of the federal government are not sufficiently coordinated. The welter of agencies dealing with city problems often obscures objectives. One arm of the government finds itself at odds with the goals of another."

Case said he felt the proposed Urban Affairs Dept. "would be in a position to coordinate the multiplicity of federal programs which have, as their purpose, the promotion of orderly community planning and growth."

Today, we are witnessing stagnation and blight in central cities, strangling transportation problems, rising crime and juvenile delinquency and haphazard suburban growth. No single city or even a single state can resolve these problems adequately. That would be the job of an Urban Affairs Dept.

The House Rules Committee blocked reporting of the proposal for floor action. Therefore, the President invoked Reorganization Plan No. 1 to establish the department.

Each house of Congress has 60 days to vote the plan up or down. If it is rejected it will, no doubt, be a major campaign issue in every city in the country. (PAI).

Morgan Says:

Price of Leadership Is High, UN Bond Issue Dispute Shows

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

WE AMERICANS, on the whole, really dig the United Nations in a romantic sort of way as a glassy symbol of the shining kind of world we like to think is possible. The place bothers us, though. It is full of foreigners and they have had a growing tendency lately to vote as they please and this, along with obstructive Communist shenanigans, makes us uneasy. Furthermore we have been carrying more than our share of the financial load of the UN.

Morgan

And now the President is asking us, through Congress, to buy half of a $200 million UN bond issue to haul the organization out of a crisis caused largely by other members failing to pay their special assessments. Are we being the gullible Uncle Sap?

It is easy to draw that superficial conclusion but it is a wrong one. The UN is actually an investment without which the costs of conflict would be incalculably higher. We can and should goad other countries more than we have done to absorb more of the burden than they have but what a deep stain on our reputation, what a burning shame to us as citizens it would be if we, the richest nation in the world, were to let the UN close up shop because of a financial crisis which we can afford to solve. Indeed, should it come to that, we can't afford not to solve it.

The present crisis was precipitated by the cost of UN military action in the Congo. France, the Soviet Union and other members, for different reasons, have refused to pay their part of that emergency item. Some members of Congress and private citizens have opposed the bond issue because they oppose the Congo expedition.

But the fact is that that effort, barring unforeseen catastrophe, is paying off and there aren't enough IBM machines in operation to figure what the cost of a head-on clash between East and West in the heart of Africa would have been if the UN hadn't been there as a buffer from the beginning—called in at the first Congolese government's request to check chaos.

One of the functions the UN has had to assume, as Ambassador Adlai Stevenson testified before a Senate committee in support of the bond issue, is that of a kind of midwife at the birth of so many new nations since World War II.

The UN is not equipped to do everything. Indeed it wasn't outfitted at the start to do much of anything, making its achievements all the more remarkable. It failed to prevent India from using force in seizing Goa but before its critics discard it for that failure let them be reminded that instead of precipitating an armed clash between Indonesia and the Dutch over New Guinea, as predicted, the Goa crisis galvanized the UN into mediative action between Jakarta and The Hague. At the moment, it is reliably understood, it is the patient talent of Sec. Gen. U Thant in talking to both sides which has injected into the dangerous New Guinea spat some cautious hope of an eventual peaceful settlement.

ALTHOUGH WASHINGTON never did "control" the UN and the U.S. government never made such an intention its policy, we are human and we are apt to be irked when things don't go our way. We have nursed the growing impression that we are being defeated in the UN. This is a false impression.

"Actually," Stevenson testified, "there is a great power which is regularly outvoted in the Assembly, but it is not the United States. It is the Soviet Union, whose aims and actions so often inspire widespread distrust."

Some of the statistics to back that up are impressive. In the entire history of the UN, the Soviets have never been able to pass an Assembly resolution in their own name. In the current session they have introduced more than 12 on such matters as China, Korea, colonialism and Angola. Every one has been defeated. And their biggest defeat of all has been the failure to reorganize the secretariat into the "troika" pattern of three mutually obstructive secretaries —though that threat admittedly has not been buried.

Pres. Kennedy was asked about the UN bond issue at his news conference. Instead of buying $100 million and hoping other nations would match it, would we turn it around and match them? (Some senators honestly feel this is the way to prod other governments to kick in.) "We are prepared to meet our responsibilities," the President said. "I hope they will be." Earlier he had conceded that we were carrying greater burdens around the world than any other free country.

"But I must say," he added, "that if we did not carry them, in my opinion, the cause of freedom would collapse in a whole variety of ways." The price of world leadership is not cheap.

Washington Reports:

Keating, Clark Predict Senate Approval of Urban Affairs Dept.

SEN. JOSEPH S. CLARK (D-PA.) and Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R-N.Y.) predicted approval by the Senate of Pres. Kennedy's proposal to set up a Cabinet-rank Dept. of Urban Affairs and Housing, but were doubtful about what would happen in the House.

Interviewed on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on 500 radio stations, Clark said that the proposal to veto the President's reorganization plan proposal would be brought up on the Senate floor on Feb. 19 with the vote probably coming the next day.

Both supported naming of Robert C. Weaver, a Negro, now director of the Housing & Home Finance Administration, as secretary of the new department.

"In my opinion, Mr. Weaver is one of the ablest men it has been my privilege to meet, to know and work with," Clark asserted. "He is a top-flight administrator of great experience, great tact, great persuasive power. He will make a great Cabinet secretary."

"DR. WEAVER is personally known to me and is a friend," Keating declared. "He is a distinguished and able public servant. I supported his nomination as director of the Housing & Home Finance Administration enthusiastically, appeared in his behalf, spoke for him.

"But I don't think his qualifications and abilities have a single thing to do with the basic organizational question as to whether we should have such a department. . . . I must express resentment at the effort to inject a racial question into this controversy. . . . There are quite a few Republicans like myself who favor the department and will be disappointed if unrelated and extraneous political considerations like this kill the proposal."

Clark, on the other hand, asserted, "I think it was candid and wise of the President to announce the appointment in advance, just as Pres. Eisenhower announced in advance that Oveta Culp Hobby would be the first secretary of Health, Education & Welfare before that department had received congressional approval (as a part of Eisenhower's reorganization plan).

"I think this move by Pres. Kennedy just brings bigotry out into the open. It is just as well to have it out where everyone can see."

Both senators said the new department is necessary to deal with the problems of urban areas, where more than two-thirds of the nation's people now live, just as the Dept. of Agriculture was needed to handle the affairs of farmers, who, Keating said, are now "15 percent of the population."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

UNPLEASANT THINGS have been happening to right-wing rabble rousers, though it would be premature to imagine they may not have some political influence in scattered precincts in the November elections.

South Carolina's Sen. Strom Thurmond, who is acknowledged by his peers as a card-carrying Democrat but is a long way from the party principles of the Roosevelt, Truman and Kennedy administrations, has been the collapse of his charges that State Dept. and Defense Dept. censors for nefarious purposes are "muzzling" military officers who are "outspokenly anti-Communist."

His prize exhibit, resigned former Maj. Gen. Edwin A. Walker, lost his value and charm when he rejected all advice and decided to run for governor of Texas as a self-proclaimed conservative Democrat.

This takes Walker out of the martyr class and submits him to the judgment of the voters, which is the normal method for citizens who challenge the political viewpoints of responsible officials.

Republicans who had been egging on Walker suddenly lost their enthusiasm. Sen. John Tower, the Texas Republican who had seen a potential ally in Walker as a champion of what Tower calls conservatism, wants far less to do with an avowed Democrat who might reduce Tower's own appeal along those lines.

IN ADDITION, THURMOND was run over by a tank when a couple of his staffers invaded a Marine group and forced enlisted men to answer a questionnaire on what was "dialectical materialism," etc. The intention of the staffers apparently was to prove that the Armed Forces were not indoctrinated adequately on why they should "hate" and "fear" communism.

Chairman John C. Stennis of the Senate subcommittee investigating Thurmond's charges got up on the floor, assured the senators that Thurmond's staffers were unauthorized and that there would be no repetition.

And by droves widely advertised political bigwigs began dropping from the speakers' list and awards list for a ballyhooed "conservative rally" in New York's Madison Square Garden Mar. 7, at which drums were to be beaten for "world liberation from communism."

This rally, officially sponsored by Young Americans for Freedom, offered as its special guest the embattled Congo politico of the breakaway province of Katanga, Moise Tshombe. The UN effort to force Katanga to remain in the Congo, as was necessary to give the new republic the economic base for survival, is backed by the United States government, but the Young Americans and a couple of senators, Republican Barry Goldwater of Arizona and Democrat Thomas J. Dodd of Connecticut, joined in proposing to hero-worship him.

Now Dodd has pulled out, explaining that as a lone Democrat among many Republicans, he would look as if he were helping make anti-communism a partisan thing. Goldwater and Tower of Texas objected to the listing of Walker as a speaker, and the Young Americans shocked Walker by scratching his name.

Herbert Hoover, also advertised on the program, is reported by friends as peacefully fishing in Florida—and planning to stay there. A Washington Evening Star syndicated reporter, Mary McGrory, says movie star John Wayne may find himself too busy with a film to attend and accept an award. Tshombe hasn't yet got an American visa but says he is "coming anyway."

THURMOND'S EXPERIENCE with the investigating committee should not have been a shock to him. Stennis, designated as chairman by Sen. Richard Russell of the Armed Services Committee, is a vastly respected member of the Senate's inner club who would never dream of allowing investigating processes to be abused and made a witchhunt.

Such senators have a low opinion of generals who erupt publicly in challenge to civilian authorities and a low opinion generally of demagogues, ranters and emotionalists with little knowledge of or respect for American political processes. They were perfectly willing to give Thurmond his inquiry, since he insisted on it, but their private attitude toward extremists is something less than tolerant.

A DEPT. OF HOUSING & URBAN AFFAIRS is needed to represent the more than two-thirds of the nation's people who now live in urban areas, Sen. Kenneth Keating (R-N.Y.), left, and Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) asserted on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

How to Buy:

Milk Surplus Problem Solved: Cut the Price, Widen the Market

By Sidney Margolius

ENERGETIC AND DETERMINED as he is, it does not seem likely that Pres. Kennedy will be able to drink up the present milk surplus. In line with Agriculture Sec. Freeman's campaign to increase milk consumption, the President's family of four has stepped up its use to about six quarts a day.

Freeman himself is drinking six glasses of milk a day and eating ice cream for dessert at every meal. But even with the help of Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy and his seven children, who consume 72 quarts a week, the effort seems impossible. As a promotion effort, it is of course laudable.

We have a more effective solution, so simple it seems surprising no one in Washington thought of it. That is, reduce the price of milk.

We can think of some 25 million families with income under $5,000 a year which could make short work of the surplus if the price were lower or their incomes higher. Otherwise, few families can emulate the currently high rate of milk consumption of Administration officials, which would cost a family of four about $10 a week. The government's own "modest but adequate" budget for a family of four allows only $33 a week for all food, and the average industrial wage is less than even this modest budget requires.

ONE WAY would be to remove the barriers to shipment of milk from states where prices are low. These barriers often are set by state authorities to keep up the price for their own producers and processors.

Another is to eliminate or at least narrow the difference in the price paid by the public for milk, and that paid by processors who manufacture milk into dairy products such as ice cream and cheese.

Under federal marketing orders in many metropolitan areas, Class I milk sold as fluid milk is priced higher than Class III milk used for manufactured dairy products. This is exactly the same milk. But it is called "surplus." The fact is, if the Class I price were reduced there wouldn't be be so much "surplus" Class III milk, to be sold at a low price to processors.

A third way would be to require state authorities to quit restricting low-cost methods of selling milk. For example, in New York State, the Agricultural Commissioner restricts milk-dealer licenses even in cases of consumer-farmer cooperatives seeking to distribute milk at lower prices.

Instead of merely pleading that "food is a bargain," Freeman or local authorities, for that matter, could well investigate why milk costs so much more in some cities than others. For example, milk costs only 18 cents in Minneapolis, 20 cents in Kansas City, and 22 cents in St. Louis, but 28 cents in Philadelphia, Baltimore and Atlanta.

IT'S SAFER to try to save on milk's cost in other ways than cutting down. It's perfectly true, as Pres. Kennedy said, that many people, and especially adults and teen-age girls, don't get enough milk, and that the most serious present nutritional deficiencies are the very vitamins and minerals such as calcium and vitamin A which are most present in milk. Milk is still more economical than a lot of other foods of similar protein quality.

One increasingly popular way to save is to buy milk in half-gallon and gallon containers. These often cost 1 to 2 cents a quart less. Too, many home-delivery companies give a discount on quantity purchases.

You can save additionally by buying ordinary milk rather than special types.

One of the best suggestions offered by the Administration is to have your children use the school milk program. If your school does not yet have this program, try to convince school officials to make it available. Here milk is offered children at a special low price, and the experience is that children do drink more when they have access to low-priced milk at school. (This proves our point that the simple secret of increasing consumption is to lower the price.

Another milk product that is reasonable for its high food value is cheddar cheese—that is, plain cheddar off the loaf, not packaged and jar types which have fillers such as water and are comparatively expensive.

Still another way to make sure your family gets a high intake of milk is to use low-price nonfat milk powder and canned evaporated milk in cooking and baking. Extra milk powder added to hamburgers, stews, casseroles, omelets, soup and baked desserts gives you additional protein and also enhances flavor, at small cost.

Economists figured out that it costs 25 cents to stop at your house whether the milkman leaves you 2 quarts or 10 quarts. It's quite practical to buy milk in quantity with today's large refrigerators. Modern pasteurized milk remains fresh a week under usual refrigerator temperatures.

From Soup to Nonsense:

Dolls That Chatter, Get Measles, Give Mom a Pain in the Neck

By Jane Goodsell

I HATE to sound like an alarmist, but something sinister is going on in the doll manufacturing world. I suspect that a bunch of lunatics has seized control of the industry. Call me a scaredycat if you will, but, frankly, the products they're turning out these days give me the heebie-jeebies.

I used to love dolls, but that was back in the days when dolls were doll-like. They looked like dolls. They had cloth bodies and china heads and painted hair. They didn't do anything—except for a few advanced models that opened and closed their eyes, and said something that sounded like "mama" when they were tipped forward. What life they had was breathed into them by their small mothers, who made-believe that they cried and slept and ate.

All that is changed now. Dolls are so lifelike that they're a pain in the neck and a menace around the house. They eat, they drink, they cry real tears, wet their pants, burp, squirm, talk and parade around the house bumping into furniture. In short, they have assumed the less attractive features of human beings.

My own six-year-old has a doll whose official name is Chatty Cathy, but we refer to her behind her back as Old Blabbermouth. She never shuts up. All day long that doll squawks shrilly to be fed, changed, dressed, taken for a walk or put to bed.

LIVING WITH A DOLL these days is no bed of roses. Some models even get sick. One little horror comes equipped with a special cloth, guaranteed to produce a realistic measles rash. Another has her broken leg in a splint. Still another has abdominal troubles, necessitating surgery. She has an incision on her tummy, which can be unlaced to expose her doll-sized plastic intestines.

To make matters worse, modern dolls have real honest-to-goodness hair—which their small mothers are obligated to wash and set.

Modern dolls are altogether too lifelike, too demanding and too much of a problem.

Public Interest Base Proposed for Pricing

AMERICA'S LARGEST CORPORATIONS have grown to such great size and power that they are no longer bound by the traditional restraints of competitive supply and demand pricing. Instead they are able to administer their prices so as to earn whatever rate of profits they desire. Only the fear of new firms entering their industry, attracted by high profits, sets an upper limit to the prices which these large corporations charge.

This is the thesis developed by Gardiner C. Means, one of the nation's outstanding economists, in a new book entitled "Pricing Power and the Public Interest." The book is scheduled for publication later this month by Harper & Brothers. Means describes the problem this way:

Uncontrolled pricing power can lead to results inimical to the general welfare. It can produce prices that are out of proportion to costs, cause a misallocation of resources, increase the incomes of some groups at the expense of others, and retard technological advancement.

Public policy has developed only two means of dealing with companies and industries that do not follow the competitive model: antitrust prosecution or government regulation. And neither of these two methods is suited for dealing with administered price industries. On the other hand, reliance on the corporate executives' sense of social responsibility or on the development of countervailing power by unions and consumer groups does not seem to give the desired social results.

WHAT IS CALLED FOR is an entirely new approach, one that recognizes the unique situation that has developed among corporations where management has been effectively separated from ownership, where this separation has enabled vast sums of capital to be accumulated and devoted to large-scale, highly complex methods of production, and where the economic power of the corporations has enabled them to administer prices without fearing the entry of new firms to trim down the profits. Such corporations should be designated as "collective enterprises," with a status halfway between that of a regulated company and an ordinary business firm.

As in the case of a regulated company, government authorities would help to set a target rate of return the collective enterprise must earn in order to be able to attract new capital and carry on needed expansion.

But as in the case of an ordinary price-competitive business firm, the self-interests of the managers would be the means by which a responsible optimum rate of profit is achieved. The managers of the collective enterprise would receive a maximum bonus for achieving the target rate of return. If the actual profits were below or above this figure, the managers would receive smaller bonuses. Moreover, to encourage other socially desirable ends, the managers of collective enterprises would receive even more substantial bonuses for any efficiencies or innovations which they might effect.

Under the new approach the central objective of high economic performance is sought not through appeals to the trusteeship of management, or through a representation of competing interests, but by setting up conditions in which the self-interest of management is directly tied to economic performance and the guide to performance arises out of the technical rules of economic performance developed over the years by professionals outside the specific management.

By such a procedure, the great potentials of modern technology can be made to serve the public interest without the centralization which comes from government regulation and without the fragmentation and waste that would come from the attempt to regulate prices through market competition. The freedom of enterprise would be retained but canalized to serve the public interest.

Something New Added:

Craft Trainees Study Trade Union History

Baltimore—The lesson that good unionism means good citizenship was given effective emphasis for a group of Baltimore steamfitter apprentices recently.

As one of the conditions for completing a pioneer training course given by Local 438 of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, the apprentices were required to produce evidence that they were registered as qualified voters.

Purpose of the course, being studied by other Baltimore unions as a pilot project, was "to introduce the apprentices to the American trade union movement and its role in the economy," said Edward H. Johns, who presided at the classes. He said the program also was designed to acquaint the students with the contributions of their union to its members and to "the great social reforms which have been accompished by the trade union movement."

Local Pres. Robert Loughery, who attended three of the classes, said the local was "delighted with the results."

Johns, first president of the merged Baltimore AFL-CIO and now a labor adviser with the Agency for Intl. Development, noted that the 29 fourth and fifth-year apprentices taking the course appeared to be "no different from the average high school graduate" in their lack of adequate information on the labor movement.

For that reason, he said, the first concept of the course was revised to include at the start a basic study of trade union terms and symbols.

Other lessons, developed in consultation with Training Director Roy Justice and members of the local's training committee, covered such topics as the structure and history of the AFL-CIO and the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, union administration, parliamentary procedure and the role of unions in legislation and politics.

Advice and assistance in preparing the course were obtained from the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters Training Dept. and its Intl. Training Fund, Johns reported. The AFL-CIO Dept. of Education supplied films and pamphlets.

In evaluating the six weekly three-hour lessons, Johns said legislation and political action produced "the most spirited" discussions. He and the local training committee recommended that future courses be extended to 10 lessons with more instruction time devoted to these subjects and to union administration.

Results of the written test which closed the training program, said Johns, "were very gratifying and encouraging."

And this feeling was echoed by the students themselves.

CWA Seeks Pay Hike To Eliminate 'Inequities'

Workers in the telephone industry represented by the Communications Workers are among those who suffer from wage inequities, the CWA's collective bargaining policy committee has declared.

Meeting in Washington to map its wage goals for bargaining with the Bell Telephone System this spring in wage reopeners, the 59-member group spelled out the need for higher wages based on both higher productivity and a need for inequity adjustments.

Pointing to higher pay in other sections of the economy and the "illogical wage structure" in an industry noted for "high profits, dynamic growth and improved technology," CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne said the committee approved this five-point program for bargaining this spring:

- An "appropriate" general wage increase, including improved schedule adjustments.
- Job reclassifications and job differentials based on demonstrated changes in job content.
- Further narrowing of wage differentials by making changes in town classifications and area scales.
- Improvements in fringe benefits where contracts permit.
- Local needs that members consider crucial.

Beirne said the union's 1962 wage goals are fully in line with the Kennedy Administration's call for restraint. The policy committee, he said, drafted them because of the compelling need of the workers it represents to "catch up" on past inequities.

Pres. Kennedy addressed the group in the White House Rose Garden after the conference. He commended committee members for the "responsible way you are moving toward your assignment" of representing union members and preserving the national interest.

Heller Addressed Group

In its three-day sessions the committee heard talks by Dr. Walter Heller, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, and John Diebold, management consultant on automation problems.

In its report the committee said it had studied statements by Administration spokesmen and others that labor should "restrain its wage ambitions" and limit wage adjustments to corresponding productivity increases, with special provisions for those industries suffering inequities.

The CWA believes, it said, that "this concept has substantial merit," but that any application of the approach which does not make "particular allowance for the situation" in the telephone industry would be "sorely deficient."

It said telephone workers have an average wage rate of $2.42 an hour as against an average of $3.24 an hour in steel, $2.98 in auto, and $2.80 in gas and electric utilities.

Heller on Record—Favors Direct Tax

"Labor's own interests are best served by the advocacy of direct taxes levied according to the principle of ability to pay as over and against indirect taxes which ultimately fall on the consumers of the necessities of life."

Who said that?

Walter W. Heller, now chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, in an article in the American Federationist in April 1939. The article, "Organized Labor and Tax Policy," was co-authored by Heller and Merlyn S. Pitzele. It was based on a report prepared for the Wisconsin State Federation of Labor.

Arms Control Held Logical Path to Peace

The long-range approach of arms control and disarmament negotiations is the only logical path to lasting peace, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) told a three-day conference on world affairs, legislation and civil rights conducted by the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

The short-range approach of massive arms build-ups, Humphrey declared in the Washington, D. C. meeting, is dangerous and costly and cannot guarantee security.

"An accident on a radar screen could bring a deadly exchange of megaton bombs," he commented. "What assurance do we have that nothing will go wrong, or that a nuclear war will not result over a smaller foray?"

He expressed the belief that the Soviet Union also is concerned with ending the arms race and said the U.S. is "prepared to consider complete disarmament or anything short of that best of goals."

Humphrey's address was among the highlights of the conference, which drew some 200 delegates from IUE locals across the country.

IUE Pres. James B. Carey said the meeting was designed as a "full citizenship" conference because of the inter-relation of the functions of union members "as citizens in a free society." These functions, he said, can no longer be "compartmentalized."

Other government leaders addressing the conference included Senators Paul O. Douglas (D-Ill.), Clifford Case (R-N. J.), Wayne Morse (D-Ore.), and Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.); Representatives James Roosevelt (D-Calif.), John Shelley (D-Calif.), and Henry Gonzalez (D-Tex.); Under Sec. of State George Ball; Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg; George L-P Weaver, assistant secretary of labor for international affairs, and Robert C. Weaver, administrator of the Housing & Home Finance Agency.

Additional labor speakers included IUE Sec.-Treas. Al Hartnett; Victor Reuther, director of the Auto Workers' Intl. Affairs Dept.; Nelson H. Cruikshank, AFL-CIO director of social security; Al Barkan, deputy director of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education; Esther Murray, eastern director of the COPE Women's Activities Div.; Rocco Campanaro, executive vice president of the Long Island AFL-CIO, and Pres. Joseph T. Kelley of IUE Local 113, Philadelphia.

James B. Egan Dies; ANG Vice President

Jersey City, N. J.—James B. Egan, a vice president of the Newspaper Guild, died here recently after a long illness. He was 40.

Egan had been an ANG vice president since 1957. He had completed 25 years of membership in the union shortly before his death, having joined in 1937 as a copy boy on the New York World-Telegram. At the time of his death he was assistant advertising production manager for the paper, now the World-Telegram & Sun.

Mrs. Morrison Dies, Widow of AFL Leader

Mrs. Alice S. Morrison, wife of the late Frank Morrison, who served the former AFL for 43 years as secretary and secretary-treasurer, died at her home in Washington Feb. 13.

Her husband died in 1949 at the age of 89, nine years after completing his final term as AFL secretary-treasurer. An early leader of the Typographical Union, he was first elected secretary of the federation in 1896. Mrs. Morrison is survived by a son, Felix, and a daughter, Nettie Morrison.

'No Moving' Pact Won in 12-Day Strike

New York—A 12-day walkout of 2,000 workers in direct mail shops has achieved the strikers' main objective—a "no moving" clause in the contract with 36 employers—and other basic improvements. It was the group's first city-wide walkout in 30 years.

Members of the direct mail local of District 65, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, walked out Feb. 1 for a contract that would control "runaway" shops. They returned Feb. 13 with an agreement that they will be paid for their regular Feb. 12 holiday, and these other gains:

- A clause limiting moving to a 35-mile area and providing for payment of travel expenses beyond listed points.
- Wage increases of $4 a week this year, 7.5 cents hourly in two steps next year, and a final 7.5 cents in 1964.
- A reduction in the workweek to 39 hours in August 1962, to 38 hours the following Feb. 1, and to 37.5 hours later in 1963.

The new contract also calls for severance pay, 10 paid holidays with Columbus Day the new holiday, and a new sick leave clause—one day this year and a second day next year, according to Ralph Passman, RWDSU representative.

MichiganDemocrat Wins Close Race

Detroit—Democratic State Sen. Harold M. Ryan won a close victory in a special election to fill Michigan's 14th district congressional seat, left vacant by the death of Rep. Louis C. Rabaut (D).

Ryan defeated Robert E. Waldron (R) by 767 votes among nearly 60,000 cast, according to official returns. The tally gave Ryan 30,367 to Waldron's 29,600.

The veteran Rabaut was in his 13th term in Congress and in recent years had won re-election by margins of 30,000 to 54,000 votes. The total vote in general elections, however, usually ran from 150,000 to more than 200,000.

GOP National Chairman William E. Miller said that while Republicans were disappointed by the loss, they could take "much comfort" from the closeness of the result.

Democratic National Chairman John M. Bailey said the narrow margin was "the best thing that could have happened" to the party. He said "the warning is plain" that it runs the risk of losing seats in the congressional election this year unless it improves its organization.

Latin America Unions Press Fight on Reds

Latin American labor unions are experiencing a "very encouraging upsurge of the democratic spirit" and show a firm determination to free the labor movement from Communist and left wing domination, an AFL-CIO representative has reported after recent visits to five Latin nations.

Most significant, said Inter-American Rep. Serafino Romualdi, was the assurance by Ecuador's Special Ambassador Galo Plaza that the labor movement is free to grow, and to accept the aid and advice of the AFL-CIO. Galo Plaza, former president of his country, called on AFL-CIO officials in Washington, D. C., as a representative of the newly installed Pres. Carlos Arosemena.

In Peru, said Romualdi, democratic elements are strengthening their leadership in unions, and have made gains in the Cuzco area, a leftist stronghold. In Brazil, free labor is awaiting the results of two important pending elections—in the National Federation of Maritime Workers and in the National Confederation of Industrial Workers.

Romualdi also surveyed the labor scene in Chile and Uruguay. In Brazil he was a member of an Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT) mission which included Arturo Jauregui, ORIT general secretary, and Manuel Pavon of the Confederation of Mexican Workers (CTU).

In speeches in Ecuador and Peru Romualdi urged the Latin American labor movement to take an active role in Pres. Kennedy's "Alliance for Progress" and to encourage the formation of worker cooperatives.

Diplomatic Counter-Offensive Urged Against Soviet Drive

choose their own government, must never be put on the block.

"Third, we must continue to demand that the final demarcation of Germany's boundaries can only take place after a peace settlement for the whole country freely negotiated by the whole of Germany with her former enemies.

"Fourth, our government must continue to reject out of hand any recognition of the Ulbricht regime (in East Germany) as a flagrant violation of the basic right of self-determination of peoples.

"Fifth, our government should demand that the wall between East and West Berlin be dismantled as a precondition to any settlement or negotiation."

In a review of American labor policy on Berlin and German reunification, Keenan, who is a federation Executive Council member and secretary of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, said the stand is "basically the same" as it was at the time of AFL-CIO merger.

"It is a strong stand against Soviet aggression and for the right of self-determination," he reiterated. "We regarded it as correct then and we think it is correct today. Our stand has been as constant for the last seven years as the pressures from Soviet imperialism have been persistent."

If we crumble before "Soviet salami tactics" in Berlin, he warned, "we undermine the whole fabric of western unity."

Keenan said the AFL-CIO is urging that the diplomatic offensive be broadened to include action on "the Soviet imperialist violation of the Baltic states and freedom of choice for the peoples of Eastern Europe," and that the Soviet Union be called into account before the United Nations for violating its principles.

"We are heartened by the complete failure of Moscow to legitimize their puppet governments in Eastern Europe after 17 years of totalitarian control," he declared.

"In no place is this failure more glaring than in the case of the prostituted East German regime with its aging hatchet man, Walter Ulbricht. The world has before it the testimony of all those German citizens who have voted with their feet and walked away. We believe that the Western Allies must maintain an incessant demand that people be allowed to choose. Communists cannot destroy or counter that demand."

Agreement With Richter

Keenan said the AFL-CIO "completely agrees" with German labor's denunciation of "Ulbricht's concentration camp" recently described by Willi Richter, president of the German Trade Union Federation (DGB).

"Here in Berlin," he added, "we see a magnificent example of the best in the West and the worst in the East divided by the Aug. 13 wall that so quickly became a symbol for the world of oppression triggered by fear."

The AFL-CIO is convinced, he said, that a firm Allied position, supported by accelerated military preparedness and economic and political unity, will insure a peace with honor and "frustrate Moscow's drive for weakening and eventually controlling Germany and then Europe."

"We declared in 1955 and we declare today," he declared, "that the American government can never assume as final any conquests the Kremlin or any other dictatorship made through military aggression, threats of armed intervention or subversion. Appeasement of unreasonable demands only invites further aggression.

"American labor's opposition to Communist dictatorships has been consistently extended to other brands as well. The policy and actions of the AFL-CIO in this respect include Salazaar's Portugal, Tito's Yugoslavia, and all efforts to impose totalitarian regimes.

"We know that a dictator always recognizes free trade unions as mortal enemies. He will try to snuff them out as quickly as possible precisely because they are in the vanguard of freedom. We can take pride, as trade unionists, that we are accorded this place of honor."

Keenan served in Germany as labor adviser of the Allied Military Government from 1945 to 1947. He concluded his talk by hailing the German unions for their role in the country's political and economic reconstruction.

NLRB Seeks Court Aid In 12-Year Pay Case

The National Labor Relations Board, in another of a series of decisions cutting down its backlog of unsettled cases, has asked the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to enforce payment of $58,000 in back pay to 27 workers fired more than 12 years ago for union activity.

The back pay order ran against the Ozark Hardware Co., which disposed of its business after the firings, and its successor, the Ozark Hardwood Mfg. Co., of Clarksville, Ark. The union involved was Local 373 of the now-unaffiliated Teamsters.

All five NLRB members agreed not to calculate further amounts of back pay due the fired workers since Mar. 31, 1954, to avoid further delays and possible dissipation of any remaining company funds.

The order recounted that efforts to settle the case have been unsuccessful and that management has rejected settlement on any basis and shut down its operations. It stressed the advantage of concentrating attention on "effectuating payment of the sums so long due and unpaid."

The case is one of a number recently processed by the board in which employers have fought for more than a dozen years over the amount of back pay due workers they discharged because they supported a union.

The Ozark firm fired its employes May 16, 1949. The following actions then took place: Nov. 3, 1950, the NLRB found the company guilty of unfair labor practices and ordered it to make the employes whole for lost pay; Mar. 7, 1952, the 8th Circuit Court issued an enforcing order; Dec. 19, 1957, the board set $58,000 as the amount due through Mar. 31, 1954; on Aug. 2, 1960, the 8th Circuit Court agreed that the successor company should work out a settlement.

Weisberger Again Named by Sailors

San Francisco—Morris Weisberger, secretary-treasurer of the Sailors Union of the Pacific since 1957, has been re-elected to a two-year term over George Bonareto of Portland, Ore., by a vote of 3,430-126 in a union referendum.

Weisberger has been a member of the union since 1926 and an official since 1938. He served as New York port agent from 1939 to 1957. The Sailors Union is affiliated with the Seafarers.

Better Business Bureau Reports:

R-T-W Group Spent 42% to Raise Funds

Businessmen who contributed to the National Right-to-Work Committee, a major promoter of state laws prohibiting union shop agreements, paid 42 cents out of every dollar they donated in 1960 for committee fund-raising expenses, according to a National Better Business Bureau report.

Rep. Ray J. Madden (D-Ind.) inserted the report in the Congressional Record and noted that it showed that a professional fund-raising firm received $3,000 a month plus one-third of the money it raised—after deduction of expenses—through contributions and membership dues.

The committee itself, said the Better Business Bureau, reported that the total spent for fund-raising in fees, commissions and expenses amounted in 1960 to 42.2 percent of income.

The Better Business Bureau report revealed that the national "right-to-work" group received $418,732 in contributions and dues during 1960. This does not include large sums contributed by businessmen directly to state "right-to-work" organizations.

The bureau, which emphasized that it does not attempt to evaluate the programs of organizations seeking funds from business firms and the public, reported:

"The ('right-to-work') committee has retained the firm of Wilson E. Hamilton & Associates, Washington, D. C., at a fee of $3,000 per month, plus a commission of thirty-three and one-third percent of the net income on all membership dues and contributions received through their efforts. The commission is based on the amount left after all expenses and the firm's fixed fees are deducted from the gross income."

Tax Claim Advised

Although the "right-to-work" group conceded to the Better Business Bureau that the government has not ruled that contributions to it are tax exempt, it nevertheless advises contributors that "contributions to this organization may be classed as a business expense, but we can give no assurance that this will not be challenged by the Internal Revenue."

In a recent case, involving a contribution by the Coca Cola Bottling Co. of Indianapolis to the Indiana Right-to-Work Committee, the Internal Revenue district disallowed the deduction on the ground that it "constitutes a payment to influence legislation" and therefore is not a proper business expense.

The report also quoted the National Right-to-Work Committee as declaring that it does not register as a lobbyist under state or federal laws because its function at the state level is to "assist and advise local leadership in right-to-work" drives.

It told the Better Business Bureau that it is "loosely affiliated" with state "right-to-work" organizations, but has no official connection. Its purpose, it declared, is "to bring about the elimination of compulsory unionism in the entire nation."

Madden said the committee's purpose might better be described as promoting "compulsory open shop laws" and he said the "work" committee "is creating nothing but friction in our industrial life."

The National Right-to-Work Committee charged that the Better Business Bureau report, issued in August, was "erroneous" and has since been withdrawn by the organization.

A BBB official told the AFL-CIO News that the report had been based on information furnished by the "work" committee itself and denied that it was "erroneous." He said the bureau has since "updated" its report to include additional explanatory information the committee subsequently furnished.

The current report quotes the "work" group as stating that one-third of its fund-raising expenses should be considered "educational" expenditures, since "educational material" is included in mailings soliciting money. The committee also said it now pays only an 11 percent commission on membership renewals, but continues to pay 33⅓ percent for new memberships.

Bookbinders Named in Non-Compliance Ruling

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has notified all AFL-CIO affiliates that the Intl. Brotherhood of Bookbinders has been found to be in non-compliance with an impartial umpire's decision under the federation's plan for settling internal disputes and is subject to sanctions set up under the plan.

Meany's notification came after a subcommittee of the federation's Executive Council found that Bookbinders Local 119 refused to withdraw from a raid upon Local 107 of the Intl. Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers at Card Processing, Inc., Brooklyn, N.Y. Impartial Umpire David L. Cole had found the action to be a violation of the AFL-CIO No-Raiding Agreement.

The Pulp-Sulphite Workers filed a complaint that the Bookbinders were not in compliance with Cole's decision, leading to the action of the subcommittee composed of Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler and Vice Presidents Joseph A. Beirne and Al J. Hayes.

Meany wrote that under the Internal Disputes Plan, adopted by the fourth AFL-CIO convention in December 1961 as Article XXI of the federation constitution, these provisions of Sec. 15 apply to the Bookbinders effective Feb. 12, 1962:

"1—The non-complying affiliate shall not be entitled to file any complaint or appear in a complaining capacity in any proceeding under this Article until such compliance is remedied or excused as provided in Section 16;

"2—The Federation shall, upon request, supply every appropriate assistance and aid to any organization resisting the action determined to be in violation of this Article;

"3—The Federation shall appropriately publicize the fact that the affiliate is not in compliance with the Constitution;

"4—No affiliate shall support or render assistance to the action determined to be in violation of this Article."

The case involving the Bookbinders and the Pulp-Sulphite Workers arose in 1961 before the effective date of the new plan and was disposed of under Sec. 21, which provides that procedures applicable in the past be used but that recommendations of the impartial umpire issued after Jan. 1, 1962, shall be subject to the compliance procedure.

Economic Trends & Outlook:

Liberalized U.S. Trade Policies Demanded by Common Market

A liberalized foreign trade policy is "essential" if the United States is to benefit, rather than suffer, from the rapid growth of the European Common Market, an article in the current AFL-CIO American Federationist asserts.

Pres. Kennedy, the article declares, should be given the power he seeks to bargain down the common tariff wall being erected around the European trading bloc, which in 1960 took 31 percent of this country's exports and supplied 27 percent of its imports.

The article, titled "The United States and the Common Market," was prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research as an Economic Trends & Outlook feature of the monthly publication.

"One thing seems certain," the magazine observes, ". . . unless the European Economic Community the [Common Market] sees some signs of willingness on our part to lower tariffs, her continuing external tariff wall will mean serious problems for our domestic economy in terms of unemployment, idle plant and capacity, etc."

On the other hand, it continues, a liberal trade policy would have advantages even beyond an increase in trade volume and value:

"The present balance of payments crisis may well be eased, for not only will increased exports entail a more favorable balance of visible trade, but if European tariffs are reduced . . . incentives for United States businessmen to invest in Europe and thus operate behind the tariff wall are weakened. . .

"Furthermore it is necessary for the United States to try to keep the markets of Europe open not only to its goods, but also. . . to the products of its main trading allies, Japan and Latin America."

Jibe with Kennedy Goals

These were some of the goals set forth by Kennedy in asking Congress for power to negotiate gradual reductions in tariffs of up to 50 percent and to eliminate them altogether on categories of products where the U.S. and the Common Market countries share 80 percent of the world's trade.

The Dept. of Research analysis traces the growth of the Common Market from the Treaty of Rome, which on Jan. 1, 1958, brought the EEC into being. Its objective was to form a single economic unit by 1970 among the six signatory nations—Belgium, France, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and, West Germany. A long-term aspiration is eventual political unity, as well.

The treaty called for removal over a 12-to-15-year period of all barriers to the free movement of goods, labor and capital within the six-nation area of 450,000 square miles and 165 million population.

"Not only will goods move freely," the Federationist article notes, "but the aim of free movement of labor means that a worker will be able to take up a job in any of the community countries. In addition, freedom for capital movement will enable firms to set up new factories, branches and agencies . . . anywhere in the community."

This concept of completely free trade, comparable to the situation in the United States where free interstate commerce is guaranteed by the Constitution, is "new and revolutionary" in Europe, the magazine notes.

At least as important from the American point of view, it continues, is the Common Market goal of a single external tariff to replace all the national tariffs of the member countries. This process, which began on Jan. 1, 1961, and is now a year ahead of schedule, will require France and Italy gradually to reduce their tariffs and the other four nations to raise theirs.

Job Implications

This will have direct implications for American industry and workers, the article points out, since in recent years two-thirds of U.S. exports to the EEC countries went to Germany and the Benelux group—the low tariff nations.

The success of the EEC plan, the analysis finds, has been such that it is well ahead of schedule, and the full Common Market may be achieved by 1967 instead of the 1970 target date.

Already the group has established a European Social Fund to reimburse member nations for half the cost of retraining workers and providing them with temporary unemployment compensation in cases of conversion to other forms of production—a system not unlike the trade adjustment measures proposed in the U.S. by Kennedy.

Since 1953, the Federationist notes, the Common Market countries have had an impressive rate of economic growth, exceeding those of the United States and of other European nations.

The article cites as one example the increase in industrial production between 1953 and 1960—71 percent for the Common Market countries as against 19 percent for the U.S.

Other countries of western Europe, which first countered the EEC with a loose organization known as the European Free Trade Association, now are taking a closer look at the Common Market, the magazine observes. Great Britain is negotiating for admission and Norway and Denmark have applied for membership. Sweden, Switzerland and Austria have sought "association" with the EEC.

"It is, therefore, almost certain that within five years Europe will present to the United States a single united market of at least 10 countries, with a combined population of almost 250 million," the article states. "Thus, by 1967 the European Common Market will be an economic unit greater than the U.S. in population and labor force."

MORE THAN 1,400 FRIENDS of James C. Quinn paid tribute to the retiring treasurer of the New York City Central Labor Council at a combination testimonial dinner and Lincoln Day celebration. Quinn got scrolls, resolutions and more substantial tokens from unions for 55 years of union membership—in the Hatters—and for 34 years of service to the Central Labor Council and its predecessors. Pictured left to right are Morris Iushewitz, central council secretary; John Finnegan, business manager of Boilermakers District 2, one of four local unionists also cited for outstanding service to labor; Quinn, and Council Pres. Economist Proposes Rail Merger Freeze

A ranking economist has called for a temporary halt to railroad mergers, declaring that a growing national economy will need more, not less rail transportation.

Leon H. Keyserling, a former chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, warned on the basis of a year-long study that the current trend towards railroad mergers is against the public interest. It is also, he added, against the long-range interests of the railroad industry itself.

The Railway Labor Executives' Association, which commissioned the study, termed the 102-page Keyserling report "a highly significant contribution to better understanding of the railroad problem." The RLEA emphasized that the study represents his "independent work and conclusions."

Keyserling summarized the basic findings of his study as follows:

- "If our economy had grown as it should have during recent years, we would have needed far more railroad plant and services than we have had."
- "If our economy grows as it can and needs to in the years ahead, we shall need far more railroad plant and services than we now have available."
- "We need an expanding railroad economy, not only to service an expanding national economy, but also . . . to help build an expanding national economy."
- "Railroad capacity is not being geared to . . . defense needs, even for a period far short of total war."

To "better serve the public interest," Keyserling said, railroads may need "more or better public prompting, guidance, regulation or financial assistance."

He advocated formation of a National Transport Commission to deal with all forms of surface transportation and "to weigh real national costs against real national benefits."

Keyserling said that transportation "which makes use of facilities provided in whole or in part through public funds" should be required to pay the "fair cost" of such use "and to include those costs among the expenses on which their rates are based."

Although conceding that railroads have had a decline in business and income, he said this "does not justify the conclusion that the railroads in general are in a financial crisis" or warrant "the neglect of the national interest involved in the rush toward further contraction of plant and services."

He found that the drop in net income has been largely due to the fact that railroads have been setting aside more and more reserves for depreciation.

The current trend is for merger of "the strong with the strong," he noted, adding that "the comparatively few lines which are in real and even critical financial difficulties" are left out of mergers and merger proposals.

Emphasizing that some types of mergers may be found to be necessary and desirable, Keyserling said the purpose of a temporary halt would be to "provide time to substitute thought for fears, analysis for propaganda, a rational long-range approach for the threat of a dangerous series of disconnected emergency actions."

There is no conflict between the economic and financial interests of the railroads and the public, Keyserling asserted.

Hill Named Director Of URW District

Akron—Robert L. Hill, a 22-year veteran of the Rubber Workers' field staff, has been named director for URW District 1, with headquarters here. He succeeds Harley C. Anthony, who retired at 65.

Hill was chairman of the original organizing committee at the U.S. Rubber plant in Detroit and was first president of URW Local 101 there. Anthony had been district director since the death of Carl F. Swartz last June, and was a union pioneer at the B.F. Goodrich plant here.

1,465 Foreign Visitors Welcomed by AFL-CIO

A total of 1,465 visitors from other countries attended briefing sessions at AFL-CIO headquarters during 1961, while about 100 additional foreign union leaders met with acquaintances in the Dept. of Intl. Affairs, according to a report to Pres. George Meany.

Union leaders accounted for 805 of the total, which also included 414 businessmen, 146 political leaders or government officials, 58 educators or editors, and 42 from miscellaneous classifications.

Japan with 433 visitors led all countries. Of these, 196 were union officials, 216 were businessmen, 13 were educators or editors and 8 were politicians or government officials.

The African contingent, instead of increasing as expected, dropped from 87 in 1960 to 69. In his report, Henry Rutz of the Dept. of Intl. Affairs, said:

"This was partly due to internal political maneuvers in the Congo and North African countries, but also to the concentrated drive early last year on the part of Iron Curtain countries to attract African trade union leaders. The East German Trade Union Bulletin stated that over 400 African unionists visited the European Communist bloc during this period."

In contrast, Asia and the Middle East provided 800 visitors, Latin America 422 and Europe 174.

Not all prospective visitors were made welcome, the report showed. Hospitality was not extended to a group of so-called labor leaders from Yugoslavia and several members of the labor ministry of Franco Spain, both proposed by the State Dept., and to 40 Polish university students under the guidance of the Intl. Student Council. In all cases it was explained that representatives of dictatorships, whether of right or left, are not welcome.

"Our steady rate of unemployment worried European trade union leaders," he advised Meany.

"Latin American unionists wanted to know how the working class will benefit through the Alliance for Progress, and labor and management representatives from some Latin American countries and Japan wanted to know how the AFL-CIO could use its influence in stopping the growth of communism in their respective labor movements."

3 Publications on Trade Available from AFL-CIO

Three new publications dealing with international trade and Pres. Kennedy's new trade program are now available from the AFL-CIO.

The publications—single copies available free—are:

- "Why More Trade"—a pamphlet presenting five basic reasons why the U.S. must increase foreign trade. This publication, containing a number of charts and graphs, is available at 10 cents per copy and $7.50 per hundred.
- "An Analysis of the Kennedy Trade Program" spells out the wide area of agreement between the AFL-CIO position and the President's program. The 12-page booklet is available at 5 cents per copy and $3.50 per hundred.
- "The Common Market and the United States," a four-page reprint of an article appearing in the February 1962 issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist. Up to 50 copies of this reprint are available without cost. Larger quantities are priced at $10 per hundred.

The three publications can be obtained from the Pamphlet Division, AFL-CIO Dept. of Publications, 815 16th St., N.W., Washington 6, D.C.

Urban Affairs Dept. Backed:

Cabinet Voice Urged For Booming Cities

Further delay in creating a Cabinet-level Dept. of Urban Affairs & Housing would be "unconscionable," the AFL-CIO has declared in testimony before the Senate Government Operations Committee.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller stressed the continued growth of the nation's urban population and warned that "with this growth will come additional problems and the need for greater knowledge about them."

He told the committee — at hearings on Pres. Kennedy's reorganization plan establishing the new department—that a central federal department would in no sense be "an invasion of states' rights," but would in fact permit "the voices of the states and cities to be heard in the highest levels of government."

Biemiller noted that federal programs to assist cities have "grown rapidly in number and scope." He added:

"There is no reason to believe that this continual expansion of federal aid to the cities is about to halt."

What is needed, he emphasized, is a single place within the federal government where the programs administered by a variety of agencies can be coordinated, "some one place which can serve as a clearinghouse for the relationships of the states and cities to the federal government."

Biemiller noted that governors of 23 states—representing a majority of the nation's population — and mayors of both large and small cities have endorsed creation of the department.

Support was also expressed by Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. in a letter to Committee Chairman John L. McClellan (D-Ark.).

He said an urban affairs department is "vital to the well-being of millions of American workers and their families" and urged that Congress regard the reorganization measure as a "non-partisan necessity."

As supporters and opponents of the plan marshalled their forces for the showdown votes in the Senate and House, Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N. J.), inserted in the Congressional Record a speech by Housing & Home Finance Administrator Robert C. Weaver, slated by Kennedy for the Cabinet post if Congress permits the department's creation.

Weaver said the function of the new department would be to assist states, communities and private interests in:

- Planning community development and redevelopment.
- Elimination of slums and blight.
- Planning of "better homes for Americans, better locations for the offices and shops where they work, better commercial facilities to serve them."
- Preservation of open spaces for recreation.
- Development of urban transportation systems.
- Planning and construction of community facilities.
- Financing of residential construction, home ownership, home improvement and maintenance of a stable market for government-insured mortgages.

Shortage of Doctors Hits Health Groups

The increasing shortage of doctors has been keenly felt in the area of voluntary non-profit group medical practice, a spokesman for Group Health Association of America has told the House Commerce Committee.

Dr. James Howard Means urged prompt enactment of the labor-backed Hill-Harris bill to provide federal aid for medical school construction and scholarships.

Means, who is professor emeritus at Harvard Medical School and a former president of the American College of Physicians, said GHAA affiliates have suffered the impact of the doctor shortage in efforts to recruit physicians for group practice.

The organization, composed of direct service medical care plans across the country, believes that "greatly expanded" educational facilities are needed to increase the rate of production of doctors, he said.

He urged the committee to consider particularly the effect on the general public—"the consumers of health services"—of the financial plight of medical and dental schools "and the growing competition of other scientific and technical fields for students."

AFL-CIO SUPPORT for establishment of a Cabinet-level Dept. of Urban Affairs & Housing was voiced in both House and Senate Government Operations Committee hearings by Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, left, shown here with House Committee Chairman William L. Dawson (D-Ill.). Dawson's committee backed the measure by rejecting a resolution of disapproval, 17-9.

JOINT STATEMENT supporting the Kennedy Administration's new welfare plan is discussed by AFL-CIO spokesmen before testifying at a House Ways & Means Committee hearing. They are, from the left, Leonard Lesser, director of social security activities for the Industrial Union Dept.; Nelson H. Cruikshank, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security; Clinton M. Fair, a legislative representative of the federation.

grams do not involve projects "normally undertaken by a community in the past."

- Eliminate all residence requirements for public assistance.

Residence Limitations

As it stands, the Mills draft bill would require states to limit residence requirements to a maximum of one year for assistance to the aged, blind or disabled instead of the current maximum of five years.

It also would give added federal aid to states which completely erase their residence requirements.

Cruikshank and Lesser emphasized the AFL-CIO's position that, in the light of the nation's shifting population trends, "people who find themselves caught in these movements should not be denied help" by artifical residence requirements, particularly since a major share of public assistance comes from federal funds collected from citizens in every state.

"We do not believe," the AFL-CIO spokesmen said, "that the elimination of residence requirements will encourage people to wander from state to state in search of higher relief checks."

In supporting the objectives of the bill's community work and training provisions, Cruikshank and Lesser stressed that built-in safeguards were essential, such as those incorporated in the measure to assure payment of prevailing wages, observance of health and safety standards, protection of children against adverse effects if their mothers are assigned to work, and preservation of aid to persons who, with good cause, refuse such work.

Specific on Work

The AFL-CIO statement noted that the bill, as drawn, would limit community work projects to those which do not displace regular workers or involve work normally done by other employes. It urged, however, that a specific requirement be included to "make more certain that a state could not use these work projects and federal funds to finance normal community functions."

Cruikshank and Lesser praised the Mills bill on child and maternal health research and urged that it be combined with the administration program.

This, they said, "would substantially increase the ability of the Children's Bureau [of the Social Security Administration] to carry out its responsibilities in child health research as complementary to and coordinated with the program of the National Institutes of Health."

They praised the Administration bill for stressing rehabilitation but said labor's support "does not rest on the belief that it will solve all the problems of need, dependency or destitution. . . ."

"In fact," they declared, "some of the most tragic occurrences of the past several months have arisen from the misguided efforts of those who believe or claim they have simple, short-cut solutions to complex social problems."

Guild Leader Joins Rep. Green's Staff

A. Wesley Barthelmes, Jr., a former president of the Washington Newspaper Guild, has resigned as an assistant city editor of the Washington Post to become administrative assistant to Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.). He succeeds James B. Harrison, who has joined the staff of the House Special Education subcommittee.

Union Backing For Local Aid Bills Sought

The AFL-CIO has asked all state central bodies to get behind six model bills aimed at helping local governments and metropolitan areas meet pressing financial, service and planning problems.

The bills were drafted by the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations, set up by Congress in 1959 with strong labor support to study and recommend ways to raise the efficiency of government at all levels.

In a joint letter, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller and Stanton E. Smith, coordinator for AFL-CIO state and local central bodies, urged active support for state legislation to:

- Permit local governments to invest idle funds in interest-bearing accounts.
- Authorize metropolitan areas to acquire land to preserve "open spaces."
- Establish an Office of Local Affairs in each state to provide technical assistance to local governments.
- Authorize voluntary transfers of functions by municipalities and counties in metropolitan areas.
- Authorize creation of metropolitan service corporations.
- Permit cooperation by local governments for the performance of local functions.

Showdown Votes Near On Kennedy Program

The Manpower and Training bill, as passed by the Senate last year, would set up a four-year program of vocational education and on-the-job retraining for workers with obsolete or insufficient skills to get steady employment.

It was recommended by Kennedy to meet some of the problems of workers automated out of jobs either by new techniques of production or by the closing of obsolete plants.

A similar bill was approved by the House Labor Committee last year but limited to a two-year period instead of four. It was cleared for floor action by the Rules Committee early this month by a bare 8-to-7 vote.

If passed and sent to Kennedy for signature, the bill would for the first time establish the principle of federal responsibility for helping meet the mounting problems of joblessness created by automation, insufficient education and training or obsolescent skills.

Small-scale retraining programs are already being conducted in several states, however, under provisions of the 1961 Area Redevelopment Act.

Kennedy's Urban Affairs Dept. proposal became a hot political issue when the House Rules Committee voted 9-to-6 to kill a measure to create the department by legislative authority.

The President promptly announced he would attempt to establish it under his reorganization authority and announced, also, that unless the proposal was rejected by Congress he would name Robert C. Weaver, now head of the Housing & Home Finance Agency, as first secretary. Weaver would become the first Negro to sit in the Cabinet.

Coalition Votes Needed

Observers consider that the Administration needs about 50 to 55 votes from southern Democrats or Republicans or both to win a major battle with the Halleck-Smith coalition on the House floor.

Democratic congressional leaders hoped Senate approval of the Dept. of Urban Affairs would strengthen its chances in the House, particularly among Republicans.

The House Government Operations Committee rejected a resolution to disapprove the plan by a surprisingly large 17-to-10 vote, thus in effect giving it approval.

Register-and-Vote Drive Launched for '62 Election

AFL-CIO EXECUTIVE COUNCIL, meeting in Bal Harbour, Fla., approved a blueprint for a major voter registration drive to start immediately and acted on major legislative issues now before Congress.

Labor Plan Aimed At Off-Year Inertia

By Saul Miller

Bal Harbour, Fla.—A major registration and get-out-the vote campaign has been launched by the AFL-CIO to assure the greatest possible participation in the 1962 elections by union members, their families and friends.

The nonpartisan campaign, designed to overcome "off-year" voter apathy, will exceed the federation's 1960 register-and-vote campaign which produced successful results in the presidential election. The 1962 elections involve the entire U.S. House of Representatives, one-third of the Senate and many governors.

The 1962 campaign approved by the AFL-CIO Executive Council will begin immediately, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said, to assure a major effort in all states before registration closes. It will be financed by $250,000 in federation funds, a request to all AFL-CIO affiliates for a contribution of three cents per member, and additional contributions from state and city central bodies and local unions.

The registration campaign action highlighted the council's winter meeting here, which has dealt with a number of legislative problems and internal federation affairs. The council called on Congress for:

- Creation of a Dept. of Urban Affairs. (The House two days later turned down Pres. Kennedy's proposal.)
- Support for a 14 per cent pay increase for government workers.
- Government purchase of $100 million in United Nations bonds.

Health Care Action Slated

The council was expected to act before the meeting ends on health care for the aged under social security and tax legislation now before the House Ways & Means Committee.

The 1960 register-and-vote campaign was launched by the council in August 1960 in key states where registration rolls were not closed. It resulted in a sharp increase in voters in those areas.

Despite the registration efforts by the AFL-CIO and other groups, more than 37 million citizens of voting age did not participate in the 1960 election.

The Committee on Political Education and its administrative committee, composed of council members and 25 other international union officers, considered these factors in recommending to the council the stepped-up campaign.

The 1960 drive was financed by AFL-CIO affiliates' contributions of about $585,000 as against a goal of $550,000. If all unions meet the requested three-cent-per-member contribution this year, a potential $375,000 could be raised in addition to the $250,000 federation contribution, with an anticipated $125,000 to be

Coalition Triumphs:

House Votes Down Urban Affairs Plan

By David L. Perlman

The conservative coalition in the House handed Pres. Kennedy a stinging defeat by rejecting his plan to set up a Cabinet Dept. of Urban Affairs by a lopsided 264-to-150 margin.

All but 13 Republicans voted against the reorganization plan and the usual hard core of conservative southern Democrats was joined by moderate southerners and several Democrats from rural areas outside the South. Only 137 Democrats lined up with the Administration, while 111 opposed the President's program.

Establishment of the department, aimed at giving the 70 percent of the nation's population living in city areas a direct voice at the top policy-making level of government, has been termed "long past due" by the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

A resolution backing the reorganization plan was passed as the first order of business at the council's meeting at Bal Harbour, Fla., and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told a press conference that the department was needed "to prevent our cities from becoming cemeteries or ghost towns." Later, expressing regret at the plan's defeat, Meany predicted that an urban affairs department will "eventually" be set up.

The House vote set the stage for a double-barreled political issue in November's congressional elections. In addition to dealing a direct rebuff to city dwellers, the coalition also blocked appointment of the nation's first Negro Cabinet member. Kennedy had disclosed his intention of naming Housing & Home Finance Administrator Robert C. Weaver to head the new department.

Senate Backs Committee

Administration plans to bring the reorganization program to a vote first in the Senate were blocked when the upper house refused, 58 to 42, to take the measure away from its Government Operations Committee and bring it to the floor for immediate action.

The Administration wanted first a rollcall vote in the Senate, with the hope that expected approval might be an influence in picking up wavering votes in the House. As it turned out, the House defeat prevented a Senate vote on the direct issue, while the Senate rollcall on discharging the committee was clouded in its political effect by the issue of senatorial courtesy to a committee chairman.

Hard Issues Seen In Steel Pact Talks

Pittsburgh — Union and management negotiators in steel industry contract talks have reported they are making progress through "serious, responsible collective bargaining" but cautioned against undue expectation of a speedy agreement.

Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald and the industry's chief negotiator, R. Conrad Cooper, noted that the talks "have just gotten into the difficult matters in the area of economic settlement" in which there are "no quick, easy or automatic solutions."

Council Raps Federal Pay Raise Plan

Bal Harbour, Fla. — The AFL-CIO Executive Council has called for a "substantial" pay raise for postal and rank-and-file government workers, rejecting as inequitable an Administration proposal to give big raises to the top civil service grades and only token increases to the lowest-paid workers.

The council also voiced full agreement with AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany's dissent from the recommendations of a presidential Advisory Panel on Federal Pay Systems proposing that all government salaries be based on "comparability" with private industry.

Recommendations of the panel, which was headed by Clarence Randall, former board chairman of the Inland Steel Co., were adopted in large measure by Pres. Kennedy in a special message on federal pay reform.

Meany, one of seven panel members, said it would be "difficult, if not impossible," to find jobs comparable to those in the Post Office in private industry and said that "many other factors" must enter into determination of adequate pay. He called for pay raises for the lower grades "far larger" than the panel proposed.

Kennedy's pay message came as the Senate Post Office & Civil Service Committee was in the midst of hearings on federal pay.

First Step in January

Spokesmen for the three biggest government worker unions—Letter Carriers, Postal Clerks and Government Employes—sharply challenged the "comparability" formula as applied to postal and lower grade government pay, and endorsed bills providing immediate pay increases averaging 14 percent.

The President's proposal would

State Courts Upheld on Contract Enforcement

Suits to compel enforcement of labor-management contracts may be brought in state as well as federal courts, the U.S. Supreme Court has ruled in a case involving the Charles Dowd Box Co. and a Steelworkers local in Massachusetts.

Affirming a decision of the Supreme Judicial Court of that state, the high court said Congress did not intend to narrow the jurisdiction of state courts when it enacted Section 301 of the Taft-Hartley Act.

Particularly significant, according to union attorneys, is the strong implication running through the decision that state courts must apply federal labor law when dealing with suits over violations of union contracts, although the Supreme Court did not specifically rule on that point.

Should the high court eventually so hold, the state court decisions in such cases would be subject to review by the Supreme Court just as lower federal court decisions now are.

Union Position Upheld

The Massachusetts case arose when John F. Courtney sued the Dowd Box Co. in behalf of Steelworkers Local 5158 for reneging on an agreement to put into effect a wage increase and certain fringe

Procedures for Miami:

Meany Offers Plan To Settle Bus Strike

Miami, Fla—A public fact-finding committee, arbitration and a countywide referendum were proposed here by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to end a three-week bus strike triggered by "the most fantastic financial scheme I have ever heard of."

The AFL-CIO president told 7,500 attending a bus drivers' strike rally at Bay Front Park that these procedures, plus use of the good-faith offices of a prominent Miami clergyman and proper use of the courts and labor board, would restore bus service and protect the citizens of Dade County and the 750 bus workers, who are members of Local 1267, Street, Electric Railway & Motor Coach Employes.

Meany charged that all the evidence at hand indicates that Dade County officials are "out to destroy this union — they have proved it with every action they have taken."

"To restore justice and bus service," he proposed:

- A return to the status quo that existed on Jan. 29 before the strike.
- Arbitration of the economic issues by a recognized expert on traffic systems who is also a recognized arbitrator.
- A referendum in Dade County allowing the voters to determine whether they "want to guarantee . . . gilt-edged prosperity" to the former owner of the bus lines, who has arranged for sale of the lines to the county in exchange for $7.7 million in bonds paying 5 percent tax-exempt interest for 15 years.
- Submission of all legal questions, including the right of the unions to engage in collective bargaining with Dade County, to the courts and labor board.
- Use of the services of Bishop Coleman Francis Carroll to bring the parties together and get the talks going again. The bishop has offered his "good offices" toward a settlement.
- Establishment of a public fact-finding committee to collect all the facts in the complex situation and put them before the public.

The federation president stressed that Local 1267 is a "responsible and conscientious" union that seeks only to bargain for its members, protect their jobs and set up a grievance procedure and a seniority system. The county has refused to bargain, claiming that under state law it is barred from doing so, and has offered a grievance procedure that does not cover basic problems such as dismissals or reduction in pay.

Meany said the situation is "intolerable" in terms of the workers, the bus riders and the citizens. He reviewed the "deal" worked out between William Pawley, owner of the bus lines, and Dade County which while giving Pawley his tax-exempt bonds would give him also "complete, exclusive, unregulated control" over area mass transport.

This would result, charged Meany, in "the most fantastic, unregulated private utility that I have ever heard of."

He told the strike rally that the facts in the case, including terms of the Pawley deal, have been "suppressed for far too long." Public airing of the situation can bring "responsible labor-management relations" to Dade County and restore industrial peace, he said.

Jersey Bus Union Ends Brief Walkout

Newark — A three-day strike of union bus drivers and mechanics employed by Public Service Coordinated Transit has ended in a new 25-month agreement providing wage increases and other improvements for 6,500 workers.

Federal mediators helped bring both sides together with the aid of Gov. Richard J. Hughes (D) and Newark Mayor Leo P. Carlin (D). The governor refused to invoke a state public utility anti-strike law empowering him to seize the buses and order compulsory arbitration.

'Substantial' Federal Pay Raises Called for by Executive Council

raise the salaries of the 1.64 million annually-paid federal employes an average of 10 percent over three years, with the first installment effective next January.

Some of the lowest paid government white collar workers, however, would receive only a total 3 percent increase—1 percent a year — while increases for top grade employes would add up to as high as 38 percent.

Two new grades would be added to the top of the classified civil service structure. This would raise the civil service ceiling, now $18,500, to $28,000 a year.

Letter carriers and postal clerks would receive increases adding up to approximately 7.5 percent over the three years.

In testimony before the Senate committee:

- Letter Carriers Pres. William C. Doherty said members of his union are still trying to "catch up with the economic parade." They are in "deep economic trouble," he said, and "they need a pay raise now—not three years from now."

Doherty noted that 97 percent of letter carriers remain in the same pay grade throughout their careers. He noted, too, that the average salary of $5,000 a year is far below Bureau of Labor Statistics surveys on the amount of money necessary for a city worker's family budget. As a result, he said, "moonlighting" —a second job—is commonplace among postal workers.

- Postal Clerks' Legislative Dir. John F. O'Connor challenged the Administration's application of "comparability," declaring: "We know of no employment in outside industry that can be exactly compared with that of a post office clerk."

The closest comparison, he added, would be jobs in transportation and public utilities, where he said the average pay is more than $900 above the postal rate.

- Government Employes Pres. James A. Campbell told the committee his union recognizes that the pay lag has been greater in some grades but "cannot accept" as a solution the granting of only token increases to the lower grades.

He said the Administration's "comparability" yardstick "consigns the lowest paid employes to the dismal prospect of no economic improvement."

Campbell cited the Auto Workers contract covering office workers employed by Chrysler Corp. as evidence that organized white collar workers are above the federal pay scale for comparable work.

The Executive Council statement declared that low-paid postal employes "need substantial economic assistance immediately and cannot wait for this assistance to trickle down from the top, gradually."

It warned that the difficulty of attracting and keeping able employes at pay levels offered "could lead to a complete breakdown in the postal service in the near future."

Present pay, the council said, "is simply not enough" for a federal employe "to provide decent shelter for his family and to bring up his children with a proper degree of security."

Dept. of Urban Affairs Killed by House Vote

A few minutes after the House rejected his reorganization plan, Pres. Kennedy told his news conference that the defeat is not "so much the Administration's loss as it's a loss for the cities and the country."

The President said that despite the setback, he was confident "we are going to have an urban department."

"It may not come this year," he said, but "in my opinion it will become as necessary and inevitable as the Dept. of Agriculture or Health, Education & Welfare."

Kennedy blamed the defeat on "sectionalism" and warned that the nation would "come to a grinding halt" if people from the cities voted against measures to help farmers, rural areas voted against policies helping cities and if everybody who lived outside the Tennessee Valley voted against TVA.

Rep. Dante B. Fascell (D-Fla.) opened the debate in support of the President's reorganization plan, but only three southerners joined him on the rollcall. They were Representatives Henry B. Gonzalez and Albert Thomas of Texas, and J. Carlton Loser of Tennessee, all Democrats.

Despite the twin issue of aid to the cities—where Republican political strategists have said frankly the GOP needs to mend its fences—and civil rights, only 13 Republicans supported the Urban Affairs Dept.

Rep. Chet Holifield (D- Calif.) closed the House debate with a warning to the Republicans that their party's political future was linked to the urban areas.

Kennedy Calls U. S. Wage Proposals 'Reform' Rather than Pay Increase

The Administration's pay proposals for government employes, Pres. Kennedy emphasized in his message to Congress, are not intended as a "pay raise" in the normal sense, but as a far-reaching, permanent "reform."

Both the President and the advisory panel which counseled him on salary standards expressed concern over the government's problem of competing with private industry for the services of top-level professional, scientific and administrative personnel.

The President's Advisory Panel on Federal Pay Systems, headed by Inland Steel executive Clarence Randall, called for application of the "principle of comparability" with private industry in pay and eventually in other forms of benefits.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany sharply dissented from the panel's proposal that "comparability" be binding on all government pay levels "from the lowest to the topmost."

Meany stressed that "other factors," including living costs, the need for continued improvement in standards of living and the concentration of government workers in costly metropolitan areas must be considered in setting salaries for lower-paid employes. He joined in the panel's finding as to the need for upper grade pay adjustments.

Kennedy in his pay message said flatly that he considers "adequate adjustment" in the top executive and professional pay levels "the most vital single element" in his entire proposal.

The President set his pay target considerably higher than most observers think Congress would approve, especially since it would raise the civil service pay ceiling from $18,500 to $28,000 — well above the $22,500 salary of congressmen and senators and the $25,000 paid Cabinet members.

He offered to "cooperate" with Congress in determining a more "appropriate" level of congressional and executive pay. He noted that it is "neither customary nor appropriate" to provide increases to elective or appointive officials to be effective during current terms of office.

The Randall panel, while conceding that it would be impractical to set the salaries of Cabinet members and agency heads at private industry levels, termed present pay "grossly inadequate" and recommended a "substantial upward adjustment."

UN Bond Purchase Given Full Backing

Bal Harbour, Fla. — The AFL-CIO Executive Council has adopted a resolution, sent immediately to Chairman J. William Fulbright (D-Ark.) of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, upholding the proposed purchase of United Nations bonds by the United States government.

"The AFL-CIO enthusiastically supports the proposal before Congress that the U.S. should purchase up to $100 million of the needed UN bonds to finance its activities," the council told Fulbright, whose committee has conducted hearings on the issue.

AFL-CIO Launches Registration Drive

Council Backs Push On Off-Year Apathy

contributed by state and local bodies adding to the resources available.

State and city bodies and local unions will receive from COPE $2 for every $1 they raise for the register-and-vote drive.

Aimed at Unionized Areas

The campaign will be primarily directed to the areas across the nation where union members, their families and friends live. Studies show that there is a tremendous potential in these areas.

Registration lists will be checked to determine the non-registered persons. Personal visits, posters, sound trucks and other information devices will be used to enroll these persons in the political party of their choice.

The campaign will be augmented by a new COPE film, now in the process of production, to be used at COPE and union meetings. The half-hour film deals with why unions are in politics, how to run a successful registration campaign and how to set up a get-out-the-vote campaign.

The film, tentatively entitled "People and Politics," will be finished in mid-March. It is designed as three segments which can be used as a unit or separately.

Rail Mergers Hit

In other actions during the opening days of the meeting the council:

- Endorsed a report published by the Railway Labor Executives' Association recommending a temporary halt in railroad mergers and calling for establishment of a national transport commission to develop guidelines in the public interest.
- Recommended support for the fifth international Conference on Health and Health Education to be held this year in the United States.
- Heard reports by Omer Becu, general secretary of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, and Peter DeVries, secretary-general of the Intl. Transportworkers Federation. Meany told a press conference that they had indicated a solution was being worked out to a problem involving the Seafarers Intl. Union and the ITF, and that the SIU probably will rejoin the Transportworkers which it left in a dispute involving British seamen.
- Heard an appeal by the Greater Boston Central Labor Union from a suspension of its charter by Meany and establishment of a trusteeship. Meany said that the central body president, Joseph P. McNamara, left the meeting with a general indication that the problem can be worked out and the suspension lifted. The body was suspended because of difficulties with its constitution.
- Mourned the death of AFL-CIO Vice Pres. William A. Calvin and praised his long and distinguished service to the labor movement.

Progress Against Exploitation Seen

Meany told a press conference that the New York City AFL-CIO is "making progress" in preventing the exploitation of Puerto Ricans and other minority groups by "selfish employers" and racketeer-led so-called independent unions. His response came in reply to questions by reporters about a statement sent the council by the Association of Catholic Trade Unionists, claiming that the AFL-CIO was not aiding these workers.

Meany pointed out that the New York City AFL-CIO had a permanent committee and a fulltime AFL-CIO organizer assigned to protecting minority groups from the racket unions and that good progress had been made. He said a full reply would be forthcoming from the New York City Central Labor Union.

He made it clear that he did not agree with the ACTU criticism and that it is "not true" that substandard wages are paid members of AFL-CIO unions in New York City. He said the head of the New York AFL-CIO, Harry Van Arsdale, is "doing a good job" with a difficult problem. Meany termed the ACTU proposals impractical and nonsensical, especially one that would penalize AFL-CIO unions with contracts calling for wages below $1.50 an hour.

Executive Council Hails Glenn on Historic Flight

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO sent its "warmest congratulations" to Lt. Col. John Glenn and Pres. Kennedy on the successful globe-orbiting flight and expressed its pride in the national effort.

Federation Pres. George Meany wired the President that "the thousands of workers throughout the United States who contributed their skills and labor to making this launch possible, the technicians and scientists who put our space vehicle into orbit, and the courageous astronauts all deserve the heartiest thanks of a grateful nation."

The Executive Council wired Glenn that "We are proud of you and your associates" in the space project. "This is a great day to be an American," it added.

"It is a wonderful thing," said Meany, that this flight has taken place. He pointed out that the United States had launched the orbital flight for all the world to see after a series of delays and postponements. These may be some of the handicaps of the democratic system, he said, but it contrasts sharply with the Soviet approach where all such things are done in great secrecy.

NEW COPE FILM titled "People and Politics," now in production, includes sequence being filmed above, with AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany (right) and COPE Dir. James L. McDevitt discussing why labor is active in political affairs.

Meany Sees 'Too Much at Stake' To Be Spectators in Game of Politics

"We in organized labor have too much at stake to be mere spectators in the game of politics," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declares in a new COPE film nearing completion for use in the 1962 COPE registration and dollar campaigns.

Meany calls on union members to "participate in an active and organized way" in COPE programs and fund-raising efforts because, he asserts, "only through politics can this land of ours fulfill its unlimited promise; only through politics can America's future be even prouder than her past."

Labor is "in politics," Meany says, "for the same reason we're in the labor movement—to build a better life for ourselves and for all Americans. No one is really 'out' of politics; we're all affected by political decisions."

Recalling Samuel Gompers' famous declaration that the AFL's political objective was "to defeat labor's enemies and reward its friends," Meany describes it as "a pretty good statement of the case, even after 50 years—except that we have to take into consideration the changes in the country and in the labor movement itself."

Since Gompers' time, he notes, the trade union movement has grown much more powerful, "but our obligations—our responsibilities—are also much greater."

Labor still has the fundamental obligation of improving the wages, hours and conditions of its members and fighting for their job security, Meany observes.

"But we can't stop here. The labor movement today is the trustee of the national interest. We are proud to call ourselves the people's lobby—by far the strongest organized force in America that is dedicated to the progress of the country as a whole.

"What do we want in the way of progress?

"First of all, we want to keep our country strong and free—the rightful leader of the free world.

"We want every American to enjoy all the blessings of liberty—in school, on the job, in the place he lives—equal opportunity for all . . . an end to unemployment and misery, to substandard wages and a future without hope . . . to wipe out segregation . . . to do away with crowded classrooms . . . to remove the financial barriers to higher education . . . to get rid of our slums.

"We want economic security within the framework of the new technology, automation. We want to be protected against the hazards of illness and old age—protected as a matter of right—under our time-tested social security system.

"We want all these things and a lot more; not just for ourselves, but for all Americans.

"And we can get them. They won't come easily. They won't come overnight. We have to fight for them.

"This battle for the general welfare can't be fought only at the collective bargaining table or on the picket line.

"It has to be fought by union members—with their time, with their energy, with their convictions—and with their COPE dollars."

War-Chests of Opponents

The war-chests of labor's enemies are "bigger than ever" and business and industry are stepping up their political activities, Meany notes.

"We have the manpower," he declares, "if we get moving.

"We even have the money—not as much, but enough—if we all contribute.

"So when someone asks you to give a dollar to COPE, or to take a COPE assignment, remember:

"Politics is the key to your future."

U.S. Treasury Bond Swap Deadline Near

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The U.S. Treasury Dept. has granted an AFL-CIO request to extend the time to exchange U.S. Treasury Bonds, of which unions are substantial holders, for new bonds carrying higher interest rates but only until the close of business Feb. 28, 1962.

The Treasury had previously announced that it would accept exchanges through Feb. 21.

Federation Pres. George Meany wired Treasury Sec. Douglas Dillon that because labor funds and those administered jointly by labor and management trustees were involved, and because many union officials were attending the AFL-CIO Executive Council meeting here, an extension of time was important.

The bonds involved and the recommended exchanges are:

U.S. Treasury 3 percents, expiring Feb. 15, 1964, for U.S. Treasury 4 percents expiring 1971.

U.S. Treasury 2⅝ percents, Feb. 15, 1965, for U.S. Treasury 4 percents, 1971.

U.S. Treasury 2.5 percents expiring at various times in 1967 and 1972 for U.S. Treasury 3.5 percents, 1990.

Hotel Workers Seek Wage-Hour Extension

The Hotel & Restaurant Employes opened a drive for extension of the federal wage-hour law as 320 delegates met in Washington for a three-day legislative conference, which included calls on congressmen and senators.

The legislative conference—first in the union's 72-year history—also asked:

- Crediting of tips as a part of wages in computing social security benefits.
- Congressional support for "resonable" tax deductions for legitimate business entertainment expenses.
- Passage of the Anderson-King bill to provide medical care for the aged under social security.

Union Pres. Ed S. Miller said the hotel and restaurant industries employ "the largest single group of workers not yet covered" by the Fair Employment Standards Act.

Noting that Congress last year extended coverage to a number of retail stores, a move which the union supported, Miller said he considers "it's our turn now."

Failure to include tips as a part of wages for social security purposes, he said, means that service workers whose salaries are "very low" because part of their income comes from tips "are the low folks on the totem pole" at retirement time.

CANDLE OF HOPE lighted by Edward R. Murrow, head of the U.S. Information Agency, to mark 25th anniversary of Foster Parents' Plan was described by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler (second from right) as a symbol of U.S. labor's determination to share its well-being with the children of workers overseas. At left is Gloria C. Matthews, executive director of the plan, and at right is Assistant Sec. of Labor Esther Peterson.

Foster Parents' Plan Hailed by Schnitzler

American workers have learned from yesterday's struggles and hardships that "we are all truly our brother's keeper," according to AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler.

"In its most real sense," he said, "that's the lesson of trade unionism—the lesson of brotherhood. And brotherhood knows no artificial boundaries; it is the spirit that must extend across all nations of the world."

Schnitzler spoke at a ceremony in the office of Edward R. Murrow, director of the U.S. Information Agency, at which a "candle of hope" was lighted to mark both the 25th anniversary of the Foster Parents' Plan and the start of its nationwide appeal for funds to help 100,000 child victims of war and poverty.

Under the Foster Parents' Plan, gifts in units of $15 a month are earmarked for specific children with whom the foster parent exchanges letters and photographs. The child receives $8 a month in cash, plus clothes, blankets, food, medical care and school aid.

Schnitzler lauded the operation as a voluntary association working to build a better world by helping the people of less fortunate lands build better lives for themselves.

"This candle has more than a symbolic meaning," he added. "The meaning is human, individual and of the most profound importance. It means quite simply the difference between decent lives for children or living death for children—the difference between human dignity and hunger, ill-health, ignorance."

Most of the children of 28 nationalities whom the program has rescued are, he pointed out, the children of workers.

"This candle which we light today," Schnitzler said, "symbolizes the determination of American workers to share our well-being with the deprived children of our brothers overseas.

"Labor supports the Foster Parents' Plan because, through its non-sectarian program of aid to workers' children, it is in fact and in spirit building the workers of tomorrow."

Murrow recalled that he was a radio news commentator when he first became a sponsor.

"Like most of the 600,000 Americans who have given their support to the plan," he said, "I found the act of giving was its own immense reward. Like them, I never expected an added dividend. But I've come to realize that the dividends have been piling up to the credit of the U.S. government.

"The fact is that everyone who helps support a foster child overseas makes a friend for himself and for America, and strengthens U.S. foreign policy. The $15 a month that foster parent gives helps a destitute child and his whole family. The letters exchanged between foster children and their foster parents have been creating an intimate network of friendships between Americans and the next generation of Europeans and Asians."

Assistant Sec. of Labor Esther Peterson declared that every American who supports the program "by that act advances American leadership of the worldwide thrust for equal opportunity to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness."

Gloria C. Matthews, executive director, announced at the meeting that the program is being extended into Latin America with a beachhead already established in Colombia.

Guild, NABET Sign Toronto TV Contracts

Toronto, Ont.—The Toronto Newspaper Guild and the Broadcast Employes & Technicians have won wage increases ranging from $5 to $30 a week in first contracts with CFTO-TV, which is controlled by the Toronto Telegram.

The Stage & Theatrical Employes are still in negotiation with the TV station. Bargaining followed staff cuts.

The Guild agreed to a minimum of $135 a week for news writers and reporter-interviewers after five years experience; $145 for assignment editors after three years, and $165 for news editors after three years.

The contract also includes standard job security provisions, overtime after a five-day, 40-hour week, eight paid holidays, two weeks of vacation after a year and sick leave up to six months.

NABET rates were set at $78 a week after four years for cablemen and dollymen; $117 for cameramen after seven years and $140 after three years for a technical direction supervisor and supervisoring maintenance engineer.

The technicians' contract contains the same sick leave provision as the Guild agreement, five paid holidays, a third week of vacation after one year, safeguards against the farming-out of work and the use of video tape; and job security guarantees in case of replacement of equipment.

To Use Pension Funds:

Building Trades Unions Push Housing Mortgage Investments

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Building trades unions have approved a "real push" to encourage their 8,000 local unions to invest pension funds in government-insured mortgages.

Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. told newsmen, after a meeting of the department's executive council here, that the 18 affiliated unions will emphasize in letters to locals the threefold goal of using pension fund investments to:

- Stimulate construction by making more mortgage money available at reasonable rates.
- Encourage use of union labor in residential construction.
- Enable pension funds to realize a greater return on investments.

Haggerty said the stepped-up mortgage investment program could make between $800 million and $1 billion of new mortgage money available each year.

The department's council acted after hearing AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Alexander Bookstaver, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Investments, describe the federation's program of helping unions channel idle funds into socially-useful mortgages. The AFL-CIO office will be available to assist and advise unions in mortgage investments.

Nearly all of the pension funds are jointly administered by union and management trustees, Haggerty noted. He emphasized that the program would benefit the construction industry as a whole.

Haggerty said a pilot project in the District of Columbia-Maryland area has already demonstrated the value of mortgage investments in spurring the use of union labor in residential construction — now almost entirely non-union in the Washington suburban section.

Meany told the building trades leaders that pension funds invested in mortgages could result in substantial savings to home buyers through elimination of extra interest and fee charges and still earn a greater rate of return than at present.

In another move to stimulate employment and construction activity, the department voted strong endorsement to a $2 billion public works program sponsored by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.). A similar program has been recommended by Pres. Kennedy as a standby measure to be used when economic indicators point to an on-coming recession. The building trades—as has the AFL-CIO — asked that the public works program be put into effect immediately.

Other legislative targets set by the department included removal of restrictions on jobsite picketing, a 40-hour week law for federal construction, establishment of a Dept. of Urban Affairs & Housing, repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act authorization for state "right-to-work" laws, federal aid to education, a fair employment law, and health care under social security.

NLRB Ends 6 Months of Hearings On 'Boulwarism' Charges Against GE

A National Labor Relations Board trial examiner has concluded nearly six months of hearings on charges that a "take-it-or-leave-it" bargaining policy of the General Electric Co. violates the federal labor law's requirement of good faith negotiations.

The charges, and a resulting government complaint, grew out of 1960 contract talks between GE and the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. The negotiations culminated in a 22-day strike by IUE members when, the union charged, GE refused to make any significant change in its original offer.

The IUE, supported by the complaint issued by the NLRB general counsel, charged that the giant electrical firm entered negotiations with a closed mind, made a package proposal to the union, and refused to move significantly from its position during the collective bargaining sessions.

Accompanying this "hard-line" position at the bargaining table, says IUE, was an intensive communications program designed to bypass union negotiating efforts by belittling IUE leadership and bargaining directly with GE workers.

The union has labeled the company's bargaining approach "Boulwarism," after its author, Lemuel Boulware, former head of industrial relations for GE.

At stake in the NLRB hearings, IUE Pres. James E. Carey declared, is the "need to clearly label and outlaw GE's purposeful efforts to make a mockery of collective bargaining."

The hearings, at which Trial Examiner Arthur Leff presided, required some 10,000 pages of testimony by government, union and company witnesses, plus exhibits estimated at 10,000 pages.

The case against GE now awaits Leff's finding and an order by the NLRB itself. Union officials anticipate that the order, whatever its nature, probably will be appealed to the courts.

193 Votes Decide Race For House

New York—Benjamin S. Rosenthal, a Democrat running with Liberal Party and Brotherhood Party backing, won an apparent 193-vote victory in a three-way congressional race in New York City's 6th Dist.

Republicans have requested a recount and the ballots have been impounded.

Only 36,000 voters turned out in the normally Democratic Queens district, where 237,600 persons voted in 1960. Rosenthal tallied 16,032 votes to 15,839 for his conservative Republican opponent, Thomas F. Galvin, and 4,216 for Emil Levin, a Democrat running as an independent.

The special election was held to fill the term of former Rep. Lester Holtzman (D), who resigned to become a state Supreme Court judge.

One reason given for the unexpectedly small turnout was the interest in the orbital flight of Lt. Col. John H. Glenn, Jr. Party canvassers reported that people were staying close to their television and radio sets.

The total vote cast was less than 14 percent of the eligible, registered voters.

Udall Lauds Equality Gains Under Kennedy

A call for new frontiers in the field of brotherhood was sounded by Sec. of the Interior Stewart L. Udall at the annual Washington region Brotherhood Dinner of the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

To 1,400 people he expressed satisfaction with many of the developments that have stemmed from the Emancipation Proclamation since it was promulgated a century ago. He noted that "bigotry is yet on the defensive," recalled the widening in the area of equal opportunity and asserted that "respect for law and justice" is growing in relation to school desegregation.

"But we still have our problems," he added, "for the forces of ugly extremism are still at work."

Declaring that "the cause of brotherhood and fair play needs a champion" and that "good will has to be organized," he added that some of "the most notable accomplishments in the history of our fight for equal treatment of all citizens" have taken place in the past 15 months.

Udall particularly cited the election of Pres. Kennedy, when "the people of America punctured one of the ugliest myths of our society" by electing a Catholic to the presidency, and "the fact that our national unity has progressed to the point where a President of the United States could propose, as Pres. Kennedy did a few days ago, that a member of that minority group which has been most sinned against . . . should sit in the highest councils of our government."

He referred to Kennedy's statement that if his proposed Dept. of Urban Affairs & Housing went through, he would name as secretary Housing & Home Finance Administrator Robert C. Weaver, a Negro.

Dr. Lewis Webster Jones, NCCJ president, announced the establishment of a new nationwide program of monthly "conversations" at local levels, aimed at easing religious tensions growing out of differences on public issues.

Earlier the NCCJ had presented the 1962 Brotherhood Award to Kennedy at a simple ceremony in the White House.

Finland and Norway Aid ILO Institute

Geneva—Finland and Norway have advised Dir.-Gen. David A. Morse of the Intl. Labor Office that they will contribute to the endowment fund of the ILO's new Intl. Institute for Labor Studies.

Mrs. Vieno Simonen, Finnish minister of social affairs, said a contribution of $15,000 has been authorized. Norway's decision to give $26,000 was made known in a letter from Minister of Social Affairs Olav Bruvik.

Harrison Charges:

Profit, Not Service, Rail Merger Goal

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The 14 railroad mergers presently pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission are financial schemes to increase profits rather than improve service to the public, AFL-CIO Pres. George M. Harrison charged here.

The ICC's support of rail mergers, he added, is a complete failure by the agency to implement the 1940 legislation adopted by Congress calling on it to regulate railroads in the best interests of the nation.

"The ICC," said Harrison, president of the Railway Clerks, "is prostituting the full intent of the railroad amendments. . . . It is railroad-corporation-minded and has long since lost its function of protecting the public interest."

Harrison's press conference statements came as the AFL-CIO Executive Council gave its full endorsement to a major study of the railroad industry and rail mergers by Leon Keyserling. Published by the Railway Labor Exeutives' Association, the study recommended a "temporary halt" in mergers and establishment of a national transport commission to "develop guidelines adequate to protect the public interest in providing adequate railroad transportation for the future."

The council urged the Kennedy Administration "to exercise executive leadership along the lines which the Keyserling report indicates to be necessary to bring transportation policy into line with general economic policy under the Employment Act of 1946."

Harrison told reporters that the United States is not nearly as well off in its railroad services as it was during World War II, when ancient equipment was pressed into service. He said the nation now has fewer locomotives and fewer freight cars.

On mergers, Harrison noted that "there are undoubtedly some railroad mergers that would be in the public interest" and that the rail unions would favor mergers "that would give better service to the public and strengthen a railroad." But, he stressed, many of the mergers being proposed are designed basically to increase the profits of private ownership.

"They provide for abandonment of lines and services, they establish monopolies, will hurt the communities affected and will produce substantial unemployment," he charged.

Many railroads which cite poverty as a reason for merger, declared Harrison, are paying heavy charges on "watered stock" representing costs that stem from the days of railroad speculation and manipulation.

"If we would wring the water out of them," he said, "we would find that many of them are profitable ventures."

The council said Keyserling's study showed conclusively that the deficiency in the national economy "has led to a deficiency in railroad performance" and that the contraction of railroad plants and services in recent years has also been "a powerful causal factor in the failure of the whole American economy to expand at an adequate rate."

BRIEFING SESSION for Washington newsmen was held by the Railway Labor Executives Association in connection with the publication of a major economic study on the impact of railroad mergers. RLEA Chairman G. E. Leighty is shown opening the background news conference, which was addressed by Economist Leon H. Keyserling, who urged an immediate halt to railroad mergers until long-range transportation policies have been worked out to protect the public.

NLRB Clarifies Picketing Rules In Review of 4 L-G Decisions

Reconsideration by the National Labor Relations Board of four cases in which union "informational" picketing had been found illegal has resulted in dismissal of two complaints and the upholding of two previous decisions.

All four cases involved unions which had picketed company premises in protest against firings or other management actions. The unions asked the NLRB for reconsideration, and the board agreed, with Members Philip Ray Rodgers and Boyd Leedom dissenting, to review board policy on what constitutes lawful or unlawful picketing under the Landrum-Griffin Act passed in 1959.

The original decisions were reached on Feb. 20 and 24, 1961, before two present board members —Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Member Gerald A. Brown— were named by Pres. Kennedy.

The new decisions were to dismiss unfair labor practice complaints against the Hotel & Restaurant Employes, who picketed the Crown Cafeteria in Long Beach, Calif., and the Typographical Union for picketing Charlton Press, Inc., in Darby, Conn.

Reaffirmed were unfair practice findings against Hod Carriers Local 840, Kansas City, Kan., on a charge brought by the Blinne Construction Co., and against two Hotel & Restaurant locals which picketed the Stork Club in New York City for three years after union members had been fired.

Key features of the four decisions are:

Blinne Construction—The union asked recognition from Blinne, a subcontractor on troop housing at Ft. Leonard Wood, Mo., for three laborers who had signed designation cards. Blinne refused and transferred one laborer to another site to break the union's majority. The union picketed with "unfair" signs for more than 30 days but did not file a timely election petition because of the employer's action in transferring a worker.

McCulloch and Brown found the union violated the law by failure to file for an election before 30 days. Rodgers and Leedom repeated their earlier finding against the union. Board Member John H. Fanning said the charge should be dismissed. The final vote was 4-1.

Crown Cafeteria—Picketing began when the cafeteria opened May 5, 1959. Pickets carried "Do Not Patronize" signs saying "This Establishment Is Non-Union." From September 1959 the picketing was only at the public entrance and only at times of service to the eating public.

A year ago the NLRB decided 3-2, with Fanning and Jenkins on the dissenting side, that the picketing was to win recognition and thus was not protected by the "publicity" proviso of the law. The two dissenters stated that, if the picketing truthfully advised the public and did not stop deliveries, it was privileged. In the latest decision, McCulloch voted with Fanning and Brown to make a new majority. Leedom and Rodgers again voted no.

Stork Club—The union began organizing campaign late in 1956. When the club discharged several employes in January 1957, the union asked reinstatement and contract negotiations. The employer refused, and the employes struck and began picketing.

Four days after the club filed an unfair practice charge against the union, the locals withdrew their demand for recognition but continued picketing to inform the public of the club's labor practices and the absence of a union contract. A U.S. District Court enjoined the picketing, and the order later was modified by the Circuit Court of Appeals.

The board has voted to affirm the original decision that the union broke the law. All five members said the picketing from Nov. 13, 1959 to Jan. 15, 1960, was a law violation. Three members said picketing after the latter date was illegal also, but McCulloch and Brown dissented.

Charlton Press—Nine composing room employes joined the ITU Feb. 9, 1959, and eight of them were fired. The union requested recognition, and when the company refused, picketed from Mar. 9, 1959, to Dec. 15, 1959, when the union filed an election petition with the NLRB. Later the ITU filed unfair practice charges and an examiner found the company guilty of discriminating against the employes by firing them.

The original board decision, with Fanning voting no, was that the union violated the law. The latest decision was to dismiss the complaint. This time, Rodgers and Leedom voted no.

Unionists Hail Caliber Of U. S. Foreign Service

Members of the State Dept.'s Foreign Service Selection Board serving during the last three months of 1961 included two labor leaders who were so impressed by their experience that they have helped set up a committee to enlist the backing of former board members in promoting better public understanding of the Foreign Service.

"We were all very much concerned by the public image of the Foreign Service which had been created in recent years by 'The Ugly American' and other factors tending to brand all these fine people in an unsatisfactory and inequitable manner," said Vice Pres. Andrew J. Pettis of the Shipbuilders.

Pettis and Administrative Vice Pres. Paul A. Nagle of the Postal Clerks were critical of the system under which Foreign Service officers receiving the least favorable ratings are "selected out" of the service.

Nagle branded the techniques a "total waste of highly qualified officers." He said that in a personal study of the files of 376 career personnel, "I didn't come across a single one of them who was not an able and devoted public servant, one whom I would be proud to have working for me."

"It is almost unthinkable that the U.S. government would not find ways to use the abilities which all of these people possess," he added.

Pettis said that as a union man, he was particularly impressed by the tremendous amount of overtime worked by Foreign Service officers, "although they have the same personal and family problems to deal with that we all have."

Other members of the selection board were Charles D. Lewis, former president of the American Sumatra Tobacco Corp., who is now chairman of the newly formed committee; Benjamin C. Essig and William H. Figy, Denver businessmen, and Prof. Lowry Nelson of the University of Minnesota.

At a discussion of Foreign Service problems with Sec. of State Dean Rusk, they gave him a letter expressing their pride in the service's men and women and added that "we feel it a privilege to convey to you our sincere praise of their abilities and accomplishments."

Editor Ridicules Anti-Strike Laws

Toronto, Ont. — Much more damage is being done to Canadian living standards by "absenteeism, unnecessary industrial accidents, sloppy production techniques and poor management" than by strikes, Jack McArthur, financial editor of the Toronto Star, said in a recent editorial.

"If we worried and talked as much about them," he wrote, "we would rapidly increase the efficiency of Canadian industry."

McArthur recalled that time lost by walkouts last year was only one-tenth of 1 percent of the man-days worked.

"Let's face it," he wrote. "A system of free collective bargaining results in some strikes. In spending so much of its time, speech-making ability, energy and money trying to beat the strike, Canada is probably making a poor investment."

IBEW Locals Hailed For Role at Cape

Completion of Lt. Col. John H. Glenn's orbital space flight brought quick congratulations to members of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers at Cape Canaveral for their part in making the flight a success.

IBEW Pres. Gordon M. Freeman, in a telegram to Bob Palmer, business manager of Local 756 at Daytona Beach, Fla., said, "I fear that those who have been so ready to criticize the delays during the program will be too busy today to take note of the fact that without the efforts of the skilled workmen at the Cape Canaveral base today's event would not have been possible."

Labor Joins Group Talks On U. S. Aims

The AFL-CIO and a number of its affiliates are cooperating in a nationwide discussion project to derive a cross-section of opinion on what the national purpose of the United States should be in today's world.

Union participation is being coordinated by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education.

Discussion kits for the project have been distributed to federation affiliates, and a conference of educational directors was scheduled in Washington to study ways of increasing union participation.

Reports of the discussions received by the National Purpose Project before the end of April are to be included in a nationwide summary. One group of Communications Workers, which has already held a discussion, found high enthusiasm for the 2-hour session.

Local unions may obtain additional discussion guides from the National Purpose Project, 8 West 8th St., New York 11, N. Y.

The project is being sponsored by the National Recreation Association. Other organizations taking part, besides the AFL-CIO, are the U.S. Agriculture Dept.'s Extension Service, General Federation of Women's Clubs, Kiwanis Intl., Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, the National Student Association and the National Council for Social Studies.

Rights Group Named By Chemical Workers

The Chemical Workers, by executive board action, has established a civil rights committee headed by Sec.-Treas. Marshall Shafer. Other members are Vice Pres. James R. Gallagher and Intl. Rep. J. Cornelius Maiden.

Paradox in the House

WITHIN 24 HOURS of Astronaut John Glenn's successful orbiting of the earth three times, a majority of the U.S. House of Representatives voted for the horse-and-buggy era of a rural America that no longer exists.

The two events—the globe-girdling orbital flight and the narrow, restricted vision of the vote—accent better than any recent pair of events the tremendous gap beween scientific and engineering achievement and the techniques of political science and government.

The same House that voted to deny urban America, representing 70 percent of the nation's population, a Cabinet-level agency to help solve the complex problems of the cities and their suburbs, had voted unstintingly the the funds that created Project Mercury and Glenn's successful exploration of space.

The defeat of Pres. Kennedy's plan to reorganize a number of federal agencies into a Dept. of Urban Affairs & Housing is not an earth-shaking crisis. Eventually the problems of urban America must be met and solved, and necessary legislation will be adopted. But the defeat reflects an intolerable viewpoint in mid-Twentieth Century America. It is the viewpoint that "big government" is a threat to the nation's future; that a Negro in the Cabinet cannot be tolerated.

It was the same "big government" deplored by the Republican leadership in the House that mobilized the government's resources and those of private industry to send John Glenn around the globe at 17,500 miles per hour; these resources were mobilized with the tax monies of all Americans regardless of race, color or creed.

In the national rejoicing over Glenn's successful flight, the urban affairs issue will perhaps be overlooked or marked down as a passing "political" matter. But the problems of the urban areas persist and will continue to cry for a national solution in terms of a space-age nation.

Man's Brotherhood

THE TRADE UNION movement would be but a shadow of its present strength if brotherhood were something relegated to a week of dutiful speeches, editorials and sermons—and ignored the remainder of the year.

American workers long ago discovered, sometimes the hard way, that the employer who was able to keep his workers divided on ethnic, racial or religious lines had a powerful weapon against organization. There is no such thing as a "separate but equal" picket line.

The great value of Brotherhood Week, sponsored each year by the National Conference of Christians & Jews, is that it prompts us—individuals as well as organizations—to a critical self-scrutiny. Few in our society will find themselves wholly without blemish.

It reminds us also of our common religious heritage, no matter what church we attend or how we pray, that to acknowledge the fatherhood of God mandates an acceptance of the brotherhood of man.

A sometimes skeptical world eyes America to see if she practices the ideals which have inspired the world. Even more important than this scrutiny from outside is an inner, unquenchable conscience which demands that we follow in our daily lives the path that we know in our hearts to be right.

Lippmann on the GOP:

Why Do Republicans Lose? —Because They're Out of Date

By Walter Lippmann

The following column on the Republican Party and its problems was written by the distinguished political commentator, Walter Lippmann, and syndicated through other newspapers by the New York Herald Tribune.

THE SOUL-SEARCHING which went on among the Republican orators on Lincoln's birthday did not bring forth that new "image" which they were all seeking. Somewhere there is a block. It prevents the Republican Party from getting to a position which is both conservative and popular. The block, I venture to suggest, is that the Republican position has been moved so far to the right that the party has conceded to the Kennedy Administration not only the left but the whole vast dominant center.

This has left the Republican leaders with no elbow room, and they are squeezed into a corner where they can only say no. This cannot make for popularity and for votes in a country where the population is growing prodigiously, where the way of life is changing rapidly, where the people, conscious of the huge productive capacity of our economy, are demanding that their crowded life in the cities be made more comfortable and more civilized.

The displacement of the Republican leaders from the center to the right has many causes. One of them, for example, is the control of the party organization by the old codgers, who have safe seats and keep on being re-elected. There is another reason which is that in recent years Republican doctrine has been shaped by theorists who are out of touch with the modern world. Indeed it would not be an exaggeration to say that it has been shaped by theorists who do not know what they are talking about.

These theorists have produced a formula which discombobulates Republican thinking. It is that liberalism and progressivism are the high road to socialism, and that socialism is the high road to communism. The extremists use the formula to say that the United States started down the road to communism when the income tax was legalized in 1913. But even the moderates, Gen. Eisenhower for example, are deeply suspicious of social security and the welfare state and of aid to education, and above all of the modern conception of the compensatory economy.

The difficulty about making a new image is that the Republican theorists have created such a false image of the Kennedy Democratic Party that there is no effective way they can oppose it. Applied to the Kennedy Administration, the formula of the theorists of the right, that progressivism leads to socialism and socialism to communism, is absurd. It is silly. Though Mr. Kennedy is a progressive and a liberal, he is also a profound conservative, and only the befuddled theorists find that strange and hard to understand.

A BIG RICH COUNTRY spends more, of course, than a small poor country. The proper basis of comparison, therefore, is the volume of government spending against the size of the economy.

1959 is the most recent year for which adequate comparative figures are available. In that year in the United States total public spending (federal, state, local) was 28.3 percent of the gross national product. As this includes national defense, public education, highways, police, hospitals and whatnot, can it really be said that spending less than 30 percent publicly puts us on the road to, or anywhere near the road to, socialism and communism? Can it really be said when of this 30 percent which is spent publicly over half goes to purchases from private firms producing for profit?

As a matter of fact, in public spending we are behind Belgium (29.3 percent), Canada (30 percent), France (33.5 percent), United Kingdom (34.9 percent), Sweden (35.7 percent). In West Germany the latest figures are for 1957. That was before the big rise of German defense spending and at that time the percentage of public spending was slightly bigger than ours (28.6 percent).

But, it will be said, while spending is necessary, the real creeping socialism is the money spent for social security, veterans benefits, government interest, and cash subsidies. For the United States the ratio of such payments to gross national product was 7 percent in 1959. The Canadian ratio was 8.7 percent. The United Kingdom's ratio was 11.2 percent. The West German (in 1957) was 12.1 perccent, the Belgian 13.6 percent, the French 16.5 percent. There are other comparative figures which could be cited. All of them point to the conclusion that as compared with the advanced industrial nations of the world the ratio of our public spending is conservative. There is no hard factual basis for the theory that we have turned our back on the free economy and are on the high road to socialism and communism.

The latter day Republican propaganda does not work for the very simple reason that it is not true.

Morgan Says:

Choice on Atomic Tests 'Awful', And Only Kennedy Can Make It

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m. EST.)

TO MOST OF US, it is impossible to become totally involved in a crisis until and unless a crisis involves us—a death in the family, an accident, a romantic heartbreak. Even a heavy cold can be vastly more important to most of us than the latest political quake from the Kremlin. But for the President it is different. He is human and is not immune to personal crisis — witness Joseph P. Kennedy's stroke. But mostly the President has to involve himself daily in crises that could affect us all, the complexities of most of which are beyond our ken and the responsibilities for which are beyond our reach.

Morgan

It is appropriate for us to remind ourselves of this double burden of a chief executive just now because the international situation is in a fluid condition again; the water is dark and deep but interesting little fragments of the iceberg have broken off and the question is whether more are to follow or whether a more sinister freeze in the cold war is in the offing.

The alarmists are convinced that this is all a Communist trick and warn the White House not to go near this dark water, even to count the fragments. The sentimentalists are sure that the warmest of thaws impends and they importune Washington to barge out in the floe to meet it.

THE PRESENT INCUMBENT of the White House is not likely to be stampeded by either side. Here is a resilient young man who has steadily regained confidence after the stunning blow of the Cuban fiasco nearly a year ago. Pres. Kennedy is cautiously keeping his own counsel but he is pressed by the boldness of an intelligent curiosity to probe the periphery of the Communist bloc to try to find a soft spot that may yield an opening to observe a little more clearly what's going on inside.

There is no sure sign he has found a soft spot. And yet reports increase of the gravity of the ideological struggle between the Soviet Communists and the Chinese Communists. Whatever shape or direction this monumental wrestling match of Marxists takes it is not likely to make our position any easier or more secure.

There is fascination in this prospect, laced with excitement, and it would be a grand spectacle to sit back and follow on our radios or TV sets or via the daily unfurling headlines if the stakes were not so insufferably high. We have reached the explosively ridiculous posture wherein the best way we seem to be able to devise for avoiding a nuclear war is to prepare for increasing destruction. This is called the operation of deterrent power and it is a fact that the statesmen of this 20th century of civilization are trapped with it.

THERE IS ONE hopeful little chink in this deadly deadlock. The powers trapped by it don't like it and they would like to break out of it without blowing up the nuclear powder magazine.

So the President's task becomes not only to assess as best he can the strengths and weaknesses and outward intent of a Communist world heaving under internal strains. He must make sure, unprovocatively, that our own intentions and the strength behind them are known.

This brings him to the toughest job of all—the dilemma of what to do about what Kennedy himself described at a news conference as "this deadly business" of nuclear weapons competition. If he decides as he reluctantly may that we must resume testing in the atmosphere it may be temporarily reassuring.

But how long can this lethal upward spiral go on? If we resume the Soviets are sure to resume. Probably history has never witnessed such a macabre Maypole dance. The choice is an awful one and in deciding in our own minds how it should be made we ought to try to realize the enormity of it and that, for us, only one American can make it.

In counseling against easy acquiescence to summit conferences before he became Secretary of State, Dean Rusk wrote an article in the quarterly Foreign Affairs arguing they could deflect a president from his course and sap his strength.

For, Rusk wrote movingly, "the President (finally) must prepare himself for those solemn moments when, after all the advice is in from every quarter, he must ascend his lonely pinnacle and decide what we must do. There are such moments, when the whole world holds its breath and our fate in its hands. Then every fragment of his experience, all that he has read and learned, his understanding of his own nation and of the world about him, his faith, conscience and courage are brought to bear."

Washington Reports:

Jobless Aids Seen Improved If Bills Ever Reach Rollcalls

WHETHER OR NOT federal standards for unemployment compensation are set by the present Congress depends upon whether the Administration gets its bill on the floor, Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N.J.) asserted on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on 500 radio stations.

"The votes are there," he declared.

The Administration problem, observers believe, is to get the bill cleared by the conservative House Ways & Means and Senate Finance Committees.

Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy (D-Minn.), author of the Administration measure, said "the time is ripe" for passage, since unemployment continues high although the economy generally is improving in the sense of broadened business activity. Previously when a jobless crisis occurred, he said, only temporary relief was approved. And when the economic situation was good, he added, "it was said there was no need for the legislation."

"One of the important things we have to do in this session of Congress is to straighten out and reform the unemployment compensation system," Case declared. "The action taken last year didn't go to the basic system at all. It was just a stop-gap temporary measure."

Case is sponsor of a permanent employment benefit bill similar to the Administration measure. Each would increase the wage base for a payroll tax from $3,000 to $4,800, extend the benefit period and offer incentives to the states so that workers would be eligible for benefits equal to at least half the state's average weekly wage.

THE McCARTHY BILL would extend coverage to 3 million additional workers. The Case measure would make the legislation apply to non-profit organizations, not now affected, and workers engaged in agricultural processing.

McCarthy reported that hearings of the Senate special unemployment subcommittee he heads showed that some states had benefits as low as $26 a week for as short a period as 13 weeks. Case remarked that many states with inadequate unemployment compensation were offering "inducements" to business and industry in northern states which have greater protection for workers, "thus causing more unemployment in the affected states and tending to depress all unemployment compensation programs."

The Minnesota senator pointed out that more adequate unemployment compensation programs would not only help take care of the jobless, but would also provide them with purchasing power to bolster the economy.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE CHAIRMAN of the National Labor Relations Board, Frank W. McCulloch, recently talked to an American Management Association assembly about board decisions reversing or modifying earlier decisions made largely in the Eisenhower years. The speech should be made required reading for corporation industrial relations officers—and perhaps for executives somewhat higher in the pecking order, who not infrequently indicate by a wink or a nod the policies they would like the industrial relations underlings to follow.

McCulloch quite frankly acknowledged that the "personal orientation" of a board member may have an effect on his interpretation of the Wagner Labor Relations Act and its Taft-Hartley and Landrum-Griffin amendments.

He also observed that Congress has refused to allow long-term membership on the board, limiting terms to only five years, staggered to allow each new President to make appointments. This permits an inference that Congress "intended" that each Chief Executive should have some influence on the broad direction of the board's decisions.

McCulloch also made a fundamental point that a great many businessmen—particularly those with a tradition of non-union operations—find it difficult to accept. The basic statement of policy in the Wagner Act was that "free collective bargaining" should be substituted for industrial strife—and this basic policy objective has not been altered in the least by either the 1947 amendments or the 1959 amendments.

HE ALSO MADE a second basic point: it would have been exceedingly difficult for the NLRB, no matter what individuals made up its personnel, to imagine about a year ago that the courts were well satisfied with the way in which it had been doing its work.

During the 1959-60 Supreme Court term, he pointed out to the management group, there were six NLRB cases in the high court and the board's decisions were reversed in five of them.

During the 1960-61 term, the NLRB was in the high court nine times and lost five cases, won three, with a split half-decision in the other case.

On the issue of alleged illegal picketing involving an alleged secondary boycott, the board had attempted to apply a precedent very broadly—and was "repudiated," McCulloch pointed out, by the 2nd, 3rd and 5th U.S. Circuit Courts of Appeals and the District of Columbia Court of Appeals, and each time the Supreme Court refused review.

In addition, panels of experts reporting to congressional committees had analyzed the NLRB's work. Cases involving the 1959 Landrum-Griffin Act were just beginning to flow up to the board.

The board had been "seriously criticized over a two-year period by the Supreme Court," he summarized, and the "common theme" of the criticism was that congressional intent had been ignored and that the board should "re-examine our approach as well as our end results."

AS IT HAPPENS, three of the members of the present five-man NLRB are holdovers from the Eisenhower Administration, so that McCulloch and the additional Kennedy appointee, Gerald A. Brown, could not alone produce reversal of precedents.

Board Member John H. Fanning often dissented from the earlier rulings; his dissenting opinions of that period now have become majority views. Former Chairman Boyd Leedom occasionally dissented in the past and sometimes now joins the new majority. There is little mechanical about the process of decision: occasionally McCulloch and Brown are on opposite sides.

The reformed board—reformed both by the coercion of court decisions and the presence of new blood—is taking steps to make the law effective in other ways than through reversal of precedents.

One is an effort to add interest payments to back-pay orders when there is a finding that an employer has violated the law by firing union leaders and members.

A second is to use court injunction procedures to prevent unfair employer practices—a power the board has possessed since 1947.

STRONGER UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION benefits is "must" legislation for the present Congress, Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N. J.), left, and Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy (D-Minn.) declared on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

Automatic Washing Machines '62's Standout Consumer Value

By Sidney Margolius

AUTOMATIC WASHING MACHINES are really 1962's standout consumer value, with standard models selling for as little as $115 and even some deluxe models under $200.

Both washers and dryers have been improved, with more deluxe features available in the lowest-price models. Most notably, more of the low-cost washers now offer such features as variable cycles, automatic dispensers and suds savers. More of the lower-price dryers now have electronic controls that turn the dryer off automatically when the load reaches the correct degree of dryness.

Top-loading washers with center-post agitators have become the leading type. Even the manufacturer of one of the more popular front loading tumble-action washers is now also making a top loader.

The front-opening machines do use less water for the load washed, a help in homes where the water supply is limited, advise U.S. Agriculture Dept. home economists.

Tests made by the government home economists found that neither type can be considered best in soil removal. The top loaders tested ranged from best to poorest.

This year's low prices may raise the question in some families of whether it is wise to spend money on costly repairs of an old washer. Any washer can be repaired. But if a machine is more than five or six years old, and extensive repairs are needed which would cost over $75-$80, it might be advisable to consider a new machine.

GENERALLY TOP LOADING automatic washers fall into three different price brackets,

The standard or lowest-price models now generally offer two cycles, one for regular, and one for "gentle" washes for fabrics requiring extra care. Low-priced washers now often have filters to screen out sediment and lint. Water temperature also is variable for hot, warm and cold washers. Washers in this group often are available for $165 or less in sales.

Medium price models generally are likely to have three-cycle timers with regular, gentle and soak cycles, and in addition to a two-speed wash, a two-speed spin dry. This group is more convenient for wash and wear fabrics. Washers in this group also are more likely to have detergent dispensers, suds savers and multi-temperature wash and rinse selectors. They often cost about $185 or less in special sales.

Deluxe washers are basically the medium-price models with additions. They generally have a dispensomat to add liquid bleach automatically, and offer greater variation in temperatures, speed and washing cycle. In some, the tub is a little larger than in the standard and medium-price models. Deluxe washers also often have push buttons instead of a dial, and a fully-lighted backguard. The price is generally around the $200 mark.

Which should you get? The standard lowest-priced washers, of course, are basically good machines and will do almost everything the deluxe models do, but they require more tending to take care of different types of fabrics. You have to adjust the cycle yourself by resetting the dial and so may have to stay in attendance at some times.

The more deluxe washers have "memory." You set them for different types of fabrics and they "remember" how long rayon should be washed, or nylon or cotton. Thus, they are more convenient. But since they have more complicated mechanisms, they also sometimes require more service. There are more things that can go wrong.

Most of the medium-priced automatics provide sufficient flexibility without being overly-complicated.

A suds-saver is useful if you have a limited water supply. But of course to use it, you then have to wash white items first, then colored things, and very dirty items last.

One useful feature of some models is a cold rinse before spinning begins. This cuts down on wrinkles.

BROTHERHOOD WEEK poster, distributed by the National Conference of Christians and Jews, features a photo, "Rejected Child," by Marion Palfi from the Family of Man exhibition of the Museum of Modern Art.

Some Thoughts on Brotherhood Week

These quotations from prominent Americans were compiled by the National Conference of Christians & Jews in connection with the 1962 observance of Brotherhood Week:

Happily the government of the United States, which gives to bigotry no sanction, to persecution no assistance, requires only that they who live under its protection should demean themselves as good citizens.

—George Washington

As I would not be a slave, so I would not be a master. This expresses my idea of democracy. Whatever differs from this, to the extent of the difference, is no democracy.

—Abraham Lincoln

All men are children of one Father and brothers in the human family. Brotherhood dedicates us to the practice of understanding and justice through which freedom and equality flourish in human society. While we are engaged in a mighty struggle to preserve our institutions and to extend the boundaries of liberty on the earth, it is good for us to pledge renewed devotions to the fundamentals upon which this nation has been built. Brotherhood must prevail. Our inescapable choice is brotherhood or chaos.

—Franklin D. Roosevelt

The true foundation of the brotherhood of man is belief in the knowledge that God is the Father of mankind. For us, therefore, brotherhood is not only a generous impulse but also a divine command. Others may be moved to brotherhood only by sentiment. We acknowledge brotherhood as a religious duty.

—Harry S. Truman

Our abundant plains and mountains would yield little if it were not for the applied skill and energy of Americans working together as fellow citizens bound up in common destiny. The achievement of brotherhood is the crowning objective of our society.

—Dwight D. Eisenhower

If there is any doubt today in anyone's mind about the need for better human relations—the practice of brotherhood—look at the daily headlines. Chances are that the failure to practice brotherhood created the news behind all too many of those headlines.

—Ralph McGill

Our answer, and the only answer there is in a democratic society, is to exert every possible effort to eliminate undemocratic practices and undemocratic attitudes, to do all that we can to close the gap between our professions of democracy and our practice of it.

—Ralph Bunche

I deny that the satellite is a portent of disaster. I think rather of John Donne's marking of the times in history that "are pregnant with those old twins, hope and fear." Surely this is such a time, not of catastrophe, but of choice, not of disaster but of decision, a time when the preferment of our aspirations over our fears becomes the duty of citizenship in civilization.

From Soup to Nonsense:

Snow Is a Wonderful Plaything That Drives Parents to Profanity

By Jane Goodsell

DURING NORMAL CONDITIONS parents and children exist together under a sort of armed truce. The appearance of snow divides the generations into enemy camps that view each other with open hostility.

Parents regard snow as a catastrophe, and they look on the white, fleecy stuff with distaste. They utter oaths and mutter words of dread and dismay.

Their young, on the other hand, rejoice. They whoop with delight and shout, "Oh boy!" and "Hot diggety dog!" They exhort the snow to fall harder and faster and thicker. They pray that schools will have to close, and they chortle of snowmen and sledding and snowball fights.

Meanwhile their parents listen anxiously to weather reports and worry about anti-freeze and tire chains and shrub damage. They fuss about dangerous road conditions and icy pavements. They become grumpy and self-centered about shoveling walks and stocking up on groceries.

And parents and children look at each other in amazement. Each group thinks the other is crazy.

To children snow is a rare and wonderful plaything. Their one desire is to get out in it, and to stay there as long as possible. Their parents—beset with worries about wet feet and chills and accidents—regard snow as a menace, against which they must dutifully protect their offspring.

Large steaming bowls of oatmeal are placed before gagging children who are too excited to eat. ("Aw gee, Mom, I'm not hungry! All the other kids are outside already!")

PARENTS BUNDLE their young into so many layers of sweaters, jackets, leggings, mittens, socks and caps that the children are reduced to straitjacket immobility. They are still, however, able to complain. ("Aw gee, Mom, it isn't cold out! It's warm! I'll roast!")

Mothers interrupt the construction of a snow fort by calling that it's time for a nice, hot bath. ("Aw gee, Mom, none of the other kids have to go in yet!")

The children, in turn, infuriate their parents by tracking snow into hallways, by losing their caps and mittens and by dropping dripping jackets on tables and chairs. ("How many times do I have to tell you . . . ")

Children feel that their parents are unreasonable tyrants, and parents feel that their children are unreasonable little monsters.

As the snow thaws, children mourn. ("Oh heck!") And parents rejoice. ("Thank goodness!")

By the time the snowman in the front yard has melted down to the knees, the snow ceases to be an issue. Family life drifts back to normal, and children and parents find something else to argue about instead.

Collective Bargaining Report:

Wage Increases of 7-12 Cents Seen in Most Contracts in 1962

The largest concentration of negotiated wage increases in 1962 probably will be in the 3 percent to 5 percent bracket—7 to 12 cents an hour—accompanied by various liberalizations in fringe benefits, although "substantially larger wage increases" would be warranted because of a more rapid U.S. productivity rate and rising corporate profits.

This is the outlook as seen by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, which emphasizes that the judgment is offered not as a statement of policy but simply a candid evaluation of the prospects. The analysis appears in the department's Collective Bargaining Report, a feature of the current AFL-CIO American Federationist.

Saying that larger increases would be "extremely helpful in stimulating expanded consumer markets, accelerated national economic growth and needed additional jobs," the department concluded nevertheless that there are no signs of any sizable change in wage settlement levels.

Rises May Edge Up

"A continuing economic upturn in 1962 may contribute to the edging up of wage increase averages," it said in its analysis, but it cited several economic factors which may continue as restraining influences:

- The calls of Pres. Kennedy and Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg for "responsibility in wage negotiations so that wage increases" fit within the general framework of productivity advances.
- Serious unemployment in many areas.
- The level of wage increases in contracts negotiated in previous years.
- The relatively slight rise in the cost of living.

These factors, the research experts said, probably will outweigh several other economic factors which warrant "substantially larger wage increases than in the past few years." Most notable of these are "the more rapid rate of productivity advance and the marked upturn in corporate profits."

Of these the analysis said:

"The upturn in productivity from early 1961 and on into 1962 is at an unprecedented rate, at least twice and probably several times as large as the postwar average annual rate of increase. This sharp upturn . . . is evident not alone in manufacturing but in virtually all nonmanufacturing sectors."

Various estimates of the corporate profits in 1962 range from $52 to $57 billion, compared to $45 billion in 1960 and 1961 and a previous all-time high of $47 billion, the Dept. of Research reported. The 1962 total profits would therefore represent an increase of 15 to 25 percent over recent levels, it said.

It concluded that a "reasonable guess" is that wage increases negotiated in 1962 will be equal to, or somewhat larger than, those in recent years. Raises for 1962 negotiated in previous years range from 2.5 to 4 percent, plus cost-of-living adjustments, and may serve as "somewhat of a restraining force" on new increases, the economists believe.

They noted that although "average" amounts have been cited, there will be no uniform, standard, or even common wage settlement pattern because each negotiation is influenced by factors peculiar to it alone—membership attitudes, union strength, the economic status of the employer, area or industry; the level of existing wages, the extent of wage inequities, and other factors.

The Federationist article reported that 1962 cost-of-living increases are likely to be small—probably from 1 to 2 percent, following less than 1 percent in 1961.

Hikes Sure for 2.5 Million

The Dept. of Research cited a U.S. Labor Dept. survey of major bargaining situations as showing that nearly 2.5 million workers will receive in 1962 wage increases already fixed by long-term agreements. If there is any rise in consumer prices, more than 1 million workers will automatically receive additional pay raises, according to the terms of their contracts.

Negotiations last year were notable for increased union attention to job and income security. The new automobile contracts included a "noteworthy new benefit"—a provision that in any week in which an employe works but has less than a full week's work, he shall be paid for the hours of layoff at 50 to 65 percent of his regular pay, the report said.

The magazine gave this bargaining schedule for 1962: open for bargaining, major agreements in aircraft, airlines, aluminum, communications, oil, paper (Pacific Coast), railroads, steel and textiles; bargaining on some agreements in apparel, construction, utilities, shipbuilding and other industries; no bargaining scheduled in automobiles, electrical manufacturing, meat packing and rubber.

* This tabulation covers over 5,660,000 workers who received wage increases during 1961 under collective bargaining agreements covering 1,000 or more workers each. (It does not include workers under major agreements providing no increase).

All industries are included except construction (where the great bulk of increases were at least 10 cents or more) and three industries with relatively limited unionization, services, finance and government.

The tabulation includes both wage changes negotiated during the year and those made effective automatically (such as cost-of-living escalator adjustments and fixed annual or "deferred" increases under long-term agreements). It refers only to wages, however, for it does not include the value of nonwage (so-called "fringe benefits") adjustments.

† Includes over half a million Auto Workers who had an additional 3 cents of wage increase diverted to hospital, medical and pension benefits; their employers also assumed payments formerly made by the workers. Although their wage rates rose only some 5.5 cents, their take-home pay increased an average of about 12 cents per hour.

'No Cause for Alarm' Seen in January Lull

Detroit—The Administration's top economist, assessing the downward movement in January of several key economic indicators, has offered an assurance that the "lull provides no cause for alarm" when placed in perspective.

Walter Heller, chairman of Pres. Kennedy's Council of Economic Advisers, said in remarks prepared for a speech before the Economic Club of Detroit that the January signs can be answered "with a reaffirmation of our favorable forecast for 1962."

Government reports earlier had shown January declines in factory worker earnings and in the workweek, in personal income generally, and in retail sales and in industrial output.

Heller said he does not share doubts raised by "the slight pause in the recovery during January." The prospect for 1962, he said, is for "continued recovery, rising business activity and expansionary public policy."

The Administration is never content with declines in economic activity, however small or temporary, he said. He added, however, that "every recovery has its sharps and flats, its spurts and pauses," and that, in this longer view, "the January lull provides no cause for alarm."

He traced the 42-minute decline in the factory workweek, to 39.9 hours, "directly to the unusually bad weather in the South and Midwest."

On the plus side, he added, was a 3 percent increase over December in orders for durable goods and the decline from 6 percent to 5.8 percent in the jobless rate.

Heller repeated a series of forecasts. He said the Administration's 'interim" target is a 4 percent jobless rate by mid-1963. He sees the January rate of 5.8 percent going "somewhat lower" in 1962's first quarter.

He expects the Federal Reserve Board's index of industrial production to reach 117 percent of the 1957 base figure by March; it was a record 115 percent in December and slipped to 114 percent in January. The aim for output should be 94 percent of plant capacity, compared to the current 86 percent.

He also reiterated the Administration position on wage increases and higher profits: when these are pressed beyond productivity gains, 'they are unjustified and inflationary;" when they reflect productivity advances, they are "healthy."

CWA Wins 14-Cent Gains For Installers

The Communications Workers have finished a round of Bell Telephone System wage negotiations with a settlement that will give 16,000 Western Electric installers about 14 cents an hour more in wages and other benefits, according to a union estimate.

The settlement—biggest of the series—is worth $4.7 million a year and came in time to head off a threatened nationwide strike of installers.

The settlement, subject to membership ratification by Feb. 23, provides:

- A basic wage boost averaging 9.94 cents an hour, plus a company agreement to make merit reviews Mar. 26 and Oct. 1, 1962. The reviews will cost the company $750,000 and will cover 45 percent of those eligible for merit increases, CWA said.
- Increased transportation expenses and travel time allowances.
- Improved per diem allowances for permanent and temporary transfers.
- Upgrading of job clerks in specified areas.
- In-charge payments raised from $2.30 to $2.50 a day.

CWA National Dir. Kenneth A. Silvers headed the bargaining team for the first of two wage reopeners under a three-year contract. Pres. Joseph A. Beirne joined the negotiators for the final sessions, and signed the contract.

AFL-CIO Aide Edits New Book

Harry W. Flannery, AFL-CIO radio coordinator, is editor of a new book, "Pattern for Peace," published by Newman Press.

The volume includes all important documents and official commentaries on international world order made by the popes since Leo XIII on Feb. 11, 1889, to John XXIII. The recent encyclical, "Mater at Magistra," is included.

In addition to papal statements, comments on world peace by the bishops of the United States and declarations on the principles for international order by Catholic, Protestant and Jewish leaders, are printed in the completely indexed volume.

Union Lockout Claim Supported by Movies

Philadelphia—A motion picture film of longshoremen, shown unloading bags of sugar 31 months ago from a freighter in this port, has been cited by a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner as supporting the claim by longshoremen of an illegal lockout by employers.

Examiner C. W. Whittemore found, as he had in a previous report, that the Philadelphia Marine Trade Association and its 47 employer-members committed an unfair labor practice when they locked out several thousand port workers for three weeks because a small group of union members refused June 30, 1959, to unload bags of sugar from the freighter Caribe with the use of wooden pallets.

The men and the union charged that pallets were unsafe. Whittemore viewed films taken three weeks after the work stoppage and said the men "had a bona fide belief of an unsafe condition." The customary unloading device was slings, he said. He reported after viewing the film that some bags fell off the pallets but none fell out of the slings.

He recommended that the employers be ordered to give back pay for all time lost but that instead of the usual lengthy back pay hearing, the union and the association be permitted to use the grievance procedure of their present contract to agree on the amount of money involved, and to put the money into a waterfront welfare fund, provided the union can get waivers from all members who lost time.

Observing that probably no other U.S. port has a healthier relationship than that existing between the union and Philadelphia employers, Whittemore recommended "that, in the interest of continued peace on the Philadephia waterfront, they work out and submit to the board, before the latter issues any formal order, a mutually acceptable settlement."

After Whittemore's first report, issued on Dec. 14, 1960, the NLRB ordered him to hold another hearing and to review the "history" of port disputes. He found that from 1947 to 1951, all disputes were handled "without any work stoppages on the Delaware River" by the association and ILA Vice Pres. Paul E. Baker. After Baker's death, Rev. Dennis Comey, S.J., so called "waterfront priest," was the arbitrator from 1951 until 1959.

Two work stoppages, including the one on the Caribe, took place shortly after Father Comey's resignation. The priest testified he had never ordered the men to work under unsafe conditions.

Long Island Labor Joins In Organizing

Hempstead, N. Y.—The Long Island Federation of Labor has set up an organizing committee and launched a cooperative drive to bring all unorganized workers—an estimated 150,000—under the protection of AFL-CIO union contracts.

Encouraged by the success of the Rochester AFL-CIO in winning 20 organizing campaigns last year, delegates agreed that all member-unions on Long Island would pool their resources to carry out an intensified organizing effort.

They named a committee with these officers: Chairman Sol Molofsky, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union; Vice Chairmen Robert Kennedy, Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and Jay Sheridan, Hotel & Restaurant Employes; and Sec. Morton Bahr, Communications Workers.

Declarations of support were made at an organizing conference for representatives of 19 unions by AFL-CIO Reg. Dir. Michael Mann and Pres. Charles Brown of the Long Island federation.

Mann assigned AFL-CIO Field Rep. Vincent Quinn to help coordinate the campaign and said the "spirit of unity and common purpose" shown by the conferees would "pay real dividends in membership and trade union solidarity."

"The full resources of the Long Island federation will be behind this project all the way," Brown said.

The growth of population and new industry on the island—Nassau and Suffolk Counties—has created a need for cooperation among all federation unions in organizing non-union establishments, the conferees agreed.

Labor Board Decisions Set New Record

The National Labor Relations Board set new records in the issuance of unfair labor practice complaints and decisions in the last quarter of 1961, it has reported.

Despite a continuing increase in its business, the board whittled down the backlog of pending unfair labor practice and representation cases—489 at year's end compared with 1,018 at the beginning—by 52 percent.

Other highlights of this report for the last quarter:

- The general counsel issued 401 unfair labor practice complaints—greatest number for any quarter in NLRB history and 31 percent above the same quarter of 1960. Of these 315 were against employers, 71 against unions, 15 against both.
- The five board members decided 212 contested cases of unfair practices, up 80 percent over the preceding quarter and 216 percent more than the comparable quarter of 1960. The board also issued decisions in 127 contested election cases.
- NLRB regional directors issued 549 decisions in contested representation cases, a 35 percent increase over the preceding quarter.

From October through December unions won 56 percent of the 1,877 bargaining elections held among 121,260 voters. AFL-CIO unions were on the ballot in 1,277 elections and won 52.6 percent of them.

Castro Subverts Unions, Exiled Leader Charges

The trade union movement in Cuba has become "nothing more than an apparatus used by the state to control the workers," an exiled Cuban labor leader, who recently fled to this country, told a U.S. radio audience.

"Practically speaking, the [Cuban] labor movement does not exist," said Vicente Rubiera, president of the Natl. Federation of Telephone Workers of Cuba, appearing on As We See It, AFL-CIO public service program broadcast by the ABC network.

"It is impossible to even think in terms of social conditions and working conditions there," he continued. "The unions . . . actually are being used as police to watch and to guard against the people of Cuba. . . . Workers are forced to work 12, 14 or 15 hours a day and after they have put in a day like this, they are forced to become police guards and members of the militia in the very industry in which they are working."

Rubiera, a former executive committee member of the Postal, Telegraph & Telephone Intl. appeared on the program with William C. Doherty, Jr., inter-American representative of the PTTI, who served as his interpreter and described his long struggle for a free trade union movement. Rubiera, he noted, had fought the dictatorships of Machado and Battista before Fidel Castro turned Cuba into a Communist base.

The Cuban labor leader is regarded as "one of the founding fathers of our free and democratic trade union movement in the Western Hemisphere," Doherty said, and about seven years ago traveled throughout Latin America preaching the cause of inter-union cooperation in the hemisphere to preserve freedom, advance working conditions and repel communism.

After a year and a half of underground operations against the Castro regime, Rubiera was marked for arrest in the roundup of Cuban freedom fighters following the ill-fated invasion of the island last April, Doherty recalled, but as soldiers armed with machine guns chased him through a house, the veteran unionist "escaped through the back door and got into the Venezuelan Embassy, where he sat exiled."

Rubiera finally was allowed to leave Cuba for Venezuela last Jan. 30, following the intervention of the Mexican government and strong protests by labor organizations throughout the hemisphere. He subsequently came to the United States via Mexico. He has not seen his family since gaining asylum and has never seen his sixth child, born during his exile.

Recalling his period of asylum in the Venezuelan Embassy, Rubiera reported that more than 1,000 Cubans sought sanctuary in various embassies at the time of the invasion and that Castro has refused to give many of them safe conduct from the island.

"Speaking politically, there is a tremendous terror of this regime of Castro," he said. "And this terror has increased even more as a result of the conference at Punta del Este in Uruguay. The government has, once more, increased shootings of the people."

Although he estimated that Castro has the support of only 15 percent of the Cuban people—including the Communist Party apparatus and the militia—Rubiera nevertheless expressed a personal belief that the people's freedom cannot be restored "without arms."

He expressed gratitude for the economic sanctions imposed against the Castro regime by the United States and for the strong anti-Castro position taken by the majority of Latin American nations at Punta del Este.

AFL-CIO Backs Bill:

Adult Illiteracy Fight Seen Help to Jobless

An initial drive to throw federal aid into a massive effort to wipe out adult illiteracy has won the support of the AFL-CIO.

Legislative Rep. Clinton M. Fair told a special House Education & Labor subcommittee that there is a "clearly established" relationship between illiteracy and unemployment. He said lack of education has been, and is, one of the most serious problems in retaining workers displaced by technological changes.

The adult education program—launched by the Kennedy Administration and introduced by Rep. Carl D. Perkins (D-Ky.) and Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.)—would authorize $45 million in grants to states over a five-year period. Additional grants, estimated at $4.25 million, would be made to colleges to be used for training of adult education teachers and preparation of teaching aids.

The program would be aimed at raising the educational level of persons with less than six years of schooling and furnishing instruction to an estimated 20 million adults who, while not illiterate, are unable to read and write English adequately.

Fair, who was accompanied by Jack Sessions of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education, noted that some 7.8 million adults have had less than a fifth grade education, while more than 2.5 million "are completely unable to read and write."

The AFL-CIO testimony emphasized that workers with little or no education for the most part are "condemned to work in low skill, underpaid jobs" and have the poorest opportunity of finding new jobs when they are unemployed.

"The best planned retraining program is of little use to workers who can neither read nor write," Fair declared. "The modest expenditures which are proposed in this bill would save the nation many times that amount by attacking an important cause of present and future unemployment."

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg said the literacy bill could make more effective the Administration's manpower training and youth opportunity bills. He added:

"A man with no education, with no skill, is bound to be a derelict in our fast-moving industrial world unless active efforts are made to reclaim him."

Educational problems "transcend state lines," Goldberg declared, adding that "their urgency calls out for federal help."

The bill is being considered jointly by two House subcommittees—General Labor and Select Education. Perkins is presiding.

$125,000 Equity Fund Highlights Glass Pact

Cincinnati—A $125,000 fund for inequity adjustments is a feature of a new two-year agreement between the Glass & Ceramic Workers and the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. covering 12,000 glass division employes in seven plants.

After two weeks of bargaining here the parties came to terms on pay raises of 6 cents for each year of the contract and improved insurance, vacation and retirement benefits, including a provision that employes may retire at 62 after 15 years with the company at $5 a month for each year of service.

Management agreed also, UGCW Pres. Ralph Reiser said, to put aside $50,000 for improvement of the incentive system along lines to be worked out by a joint committee. The new pact provides that if no agreement is reached within a year on inequity adjustments, the company will make an across-the-board pay increase of 1 cent an hour.

The negotiators settled a dispute over holiday pay by agreeing to new language.

Affected by the contract are workers in window glass factories at Clarksburg, W. Va.; Henrietta, Okla., and Mt. Vernon, O., and plate glass factories in Creighton and Ford City, Pa.; Crystal City, Mo., and Cumberland, Md.

The new agreement follows the pattern set earlier at plants of the Libby-Owens-Ford Glass Co. and six firms comprising the "Little Glass" section of the industry.

PERSONAL GREETINGS are extended by Pres. Kennedy in the White House Rose Garden to the Communications Workers collective bargaining policy committee during its recent meeting in Washington. Kennedy spoke from the porch, then mingled with the delegates. CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne is in the foreground, back to camera.

Company Assails Conciliation:

Jamestown Mediation Panel Proposals Rejected by Firm

Buffalo—A special panel of the State Board of Mediation has recommended that the Jamestown Sterling Corp. and the Furniture Workers settle their 21-week strike by agreeing to a 17-month contract which will include wage increases, incentive rate guarantees, and the full union shop and dues checkoff.

The recommendations were made public after the panel, appointed by Board Chairman Joseph F. Finnegan of New York, concluded a day-long hearing here.

Union representatives participated in the hearing and offered their cooperation in an effort to settle the long dispute. However, management boycotted the session after issuing a statement attacking the State Mediation Board for failing to "halt" alleged picket line violence and criticizing the use of public recommendations to settle labor-management disputes.

The company promptly renewed its attack on the board after the settlement proposals were announced.

James Tillotson III, president of Jamestown Sterling, in a telegram to Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, said:

"We regret the unbelievably high-handed and blatant effort to railroad a solution to a labor dispute in New York State."

He called the panel's recommendations "arbitrary, bureaucratic, and undemocratic" and threatened to close and liquidate the plants.

State Officials Attacked

Tillotson also charged that Rockefeller's stated policy of creating industrial growth and job opportunities in the state is being nullified by the mediation board—"apparently with the blessings" of Finnegan and Industrial Commissioner Martin P. Catherwood. He demanded the Governor's "personal attention to this appalling situation."

Meanwhile the Buffalo regional office of the National Labor Relations Board said it still has not completed an investigation of unfair labor practice charges filed by the union Dec. 27. The union accused Jamestown Sterling of refusing to bargain in good faith.

In a preamble to its settlement recommendations, the mediation panel said it did not agree with the company's reasons for refusing to attend the hearing.

"They reached into areas over which the State Board of Mediation has no jurisdiction," the report said.

Dean Andrew V. Clements of Albany Law School and Edward A. O'Hara, a retired Syracuse newspaper publisher, signed the report. Both are Mediation Board members.

Specifically the panel recommended:

- Adoption of a full union shop in which all employes would become members 45 days after signing the agreements or 45 days from date of hire, with provision for checkoff of union dues and initiation fees.
- Wage increases for incentive workers of 5 cents an hour on signing the contract and another 5 cents Dec. 1, 1962, with pay raises of 7 cents an hour on the same dates for non-incentive workers.
- A guarantee of a 30 percent premium on the base rates of any incentive worker taken from his regular work for the convenience of the company.

Recommendations 'Fair'

The panelists said they believe the recommendations to be "fair and reasonable," affording a basis for "immediate resumption of work and the establishment of harmonious relations during the life of the contract."

The proposals, they said, were based upon full information given by the union delegation during the hearing and upon detailed information received from management last Jan. 31.

Furniture Workers Intl. Rep. J. Howard Proudman, after reporting the panel's proposed settlements to the 140 striking members of Local 45, said the membership voted unanimously to give "serious consideration" to the recommendations if the company accepted its responsibility and included the recommendations in an offer to the union.

The strikers took that action, he added, even though they were disappointed by what they considered inadequate wage increases and failure to maintain average hourly wages under all conditions.

"As responsible citizens of the Greater Jamestown area we are concerned in doing what is best for the community at large," Proudman said.

"We hope our concern in doing what is best for the community will be matched by a similar position taken by the company."

Cost Per Ounce Easy To Figure, the Man Said

A top official of the Procter & Gamble Co. confessed that he couldn't figure out the cost to the consumer per ounce of his company's 12.75-ounce package of soap powder, but he was sure that the ordinary housewife would be able to do the computation "if she wanted to know."

Five college-trained women, set loose in a supermarket with $10 to spend for the most economical purchases of 14 different products, flunked their test even though they spent twice as much time as the average shopper examining labels and prices.

These examples of the pitfalls set by odd-sized or misleading packaging and labeling were brought out at Senate subcommittee hearings at which manufacturers and packagers vigorously defended existing marketing practices—and consumer spokesmen sharply challenged their statements.

It was Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.) who suggested to Henry W. Purcell, sales merchandising manager of Procter & Gamble, that a consumer might have difficulty determining the cost per ounce of his company's 35-cent, 12.75 ounce package. Then followed this dialogue:

Purcell: She could figure it out.

Hart: What is it?

Purcell: I don't have any cost sheets before me.

Hart: Neither does she.

Purcell: If she wanted to know, she would either be smart enough to figure it in her head or she would figure it with a pencil.

Mrs. Helen Ewing Nelson, consumer counsel to California Gov. Edmund G. Brown (D), described the shopping test in which all five college-trained housewives were able to find the best buy on only one out of 14 products—cheddar cheese. On rice and toilet soap every shopper was baffled.

She noted that packagers have expressed the view that today's consumers are "not primarily interested" in price and pointed out that in the United States there are 2 million people living on unemployment compensation, some 3.5 million families receiving aid to needy children, more than 2 million other persons getting public welfare aid and 19 million people who earn less than $5,000 a year.

The subcommittee also heard:

- The director of consumer programming for the Food & Drug Administration, Mrs. Carla Williams, declare that the American housewife is "confused and angry" at the "many abuses and malpractices that are being foisted upon her in the marketplace today."
- Prof. Ruby Turner Morris, chairman of the Economics Dept. at Connecticut College, who displayed samples of "slack-filled" food and merchandise containers. She said in most cases the largest containers contained the greatest amount of empty air space.

While the buyer may think that "the bigger the box, the bigger the bargain," the fact is, she pointed out, "that only too often the bigger the box, the bigger the hoax."

She noted that considerable money is being wasted, adding to the cost of products, because "it costs money to box air and it costs money to move boxed air around the country."

An industry spokesman, Pres. Lee S. Bickmore of the National Biscuit Co., defended the food industry's record and claimed that competition has kept food prices low and "acted as a steadying brake on the cost of living."

"The fact that we are a well-fed nation," he declared, "is certainly one of America's strongest defenses against the world-wide advances of communism."

CSA Aide Gets Two Civic Posts

Bristol, Pa.—John H. Spadaccino, AFL-CIO Community Service Activities representative here, has been elected to two top civic posts—chairman of the Bucks County Board of Assistance and president of the Lower Bucks County Hospital board of directors.

Spadaccino is a member of Local 88, Glass & Ceramic Workers, assigned fulltime with the county United Services Federation. He is also secretary of the county AFL-CIO's Community Services Committee and its Senior Citizens Association.

CSA Dir. Leo Perlis said Spadaccino is an "outstanding example" of the many trade unionists who are "exercising decisive leadership" in community affairs.

Printing Trades Pay Average 10-Cent Rise

Wage scales of union printing trades workers in cities of 100,000 population or more increased an average 10 cents an hour during the year ended last July 1, the Bureau of Labor Statistics has reported.

Average scales increased 10.5 cents, or 3.4 percent, to $3.18 an hour in book and job shops and 10 cents—2.9 percent—in newspaper shops.

New York Reporters Share Broun Award

Two reporters for the New York World-Telegram & Sun share the Newspaper Guild's 1961 Heywood Broun Memorial Award for the year's outstanding journalistic achievement in the spirit of the union's founder and first president.

The winners were Dale Wright, who joined a group of migratory farm workers to write a first-hand account of their economic plight, and Michael Mok, who posed as a mental patient to expose conditions in New York City mental hospitals.

They were selected from more than 100 entries in the Guild's 21st annual competition, which seeks to recognize work done in the crusading tradition of Broun, columnist for the New York World and later the World-Telegram, who died in 1939.

Wright and Mok shared a $500 cash prize presented at the mid-winter session of the ANG's international executive board. Their paper will receive plaques marking their accomplishments.

They were chosen by a panel of judges which included Richard L. Strout of the Washington staff of the Christian Science Monitor; Herbert F. Corn, recently retired managing editor of the Washington Star; and Henry Brandon, Washington correspondent for the Sunday Times of London.

Wright's award was for a series of articles written after he had signed on with a migrant farm group in Florida and had worked his way north to Long Island as the crew harvested maturing crops. His stories stressed the effects of low pay and inadequate living quarters on the workers' morale and the tragedy of insufficient schooling for their children.

Mok wryly observed at the awards presentation that it had been much easier to obtain admission to Kings County Hospital, by feigning mental illness, than to win release. At one point, he said, he had actually been scheduled for transfer to a state institution. The New York City administration already has moved to correct conditions exposed in his series, written from the patient's viewpoint.

The judges gave honorable mentions to Jack Mabley of Chicago's American for the first news stories exposing the right-wing John Birch Society; to Ian Menzies and Ian Forman of the Boston Globe for a series on education in Massachusetts schools; and to a New York Post reporting team of Irving Lieberman, Don Forst and Normand Poirier for their stories on an attempt to "fix" a federal court case.

Strout, speaking for the judges, also had high praise for an entry from the Overseas Weekly in Germany which led to the Defense Dept.'s investigation of the methods and right-wing materials used by Maj. Gen. Edwin L. Walker in indoctrinating troops under his command. The entry, however, was ineligible for the competition, which is restricted to work done in the Guild's jurisdiction in the United States and Canada.

Chiefs of Staff Open College To Civilians

The Industrial College of the Armed Forces has extended enrollment in its graduate-level correspondence course, the Economics of National Security, to qualified civilians.

The announcement by the college, operated under the direction of the Joint Chiefs of Staff at Fort McNair in Washington, said all texts and instructional materials would be furnished to students at no cost.

Units of study, the announcement said, take about a year for completion and include background information, resources and facilities, processes in the economics of national security, foreign aspects of national security and general problems of national security.

While a college education or its equivalent is desired as a prerequisite for students, the college said persons without this qualification but with compensating education and experience also will be considered.

Applications should be sent to the Industrial College of the Armed Forces, Correspondence Course Division, Washington 25, D. C.

Clerical International To Push Organizing

Amsterdam—The executive committee of the Intl. Federation of Commercial, Clerical & Technical Employes at a meeting here voted to extend organizing activities to the developing areas of the world.

The committee acted after hearing reports from Charles D. Gray of the Retail Clerks in the United States, who spent four months visiting unions in Asia, and by IFCCTE Gen. Sec. Erich Kissel, who had been on an extensive mission to Africa.

Congress Gets Bill:

Stand-by Works Plan Sought by Kennedy

Pres. Kennedy has asked Congress for stand-by power to spend up to $2 billion on expanded federal, state and local public works programs whenever a rising unemployment trend signals the beginning of a new recession.

In letters to the House and Senate accompanying his draft bill, the President made clear that his proposal was designed to combat future economic slumps and not the current recession.

"Despite the large number of people currently unemployed—a problem this Administration is attempting to meet through legislative proposals now before the Congress—recovery from the 1960-61 recession is proceeding in a satisfactory manner," Kennedy's message said. "This is, therefore, an appropriate time to prepare our defenses against future economic fluctuations, with a view to benefiting from the lessons of the last recession and those that preceded it."

He recalled that in his State of the Union message he had told Congress "the time to repair the roof is when the sun is shining," and urged prompt attention to his draft bill "as insurance against a rainy day that we can hope will not recur."

The President's assessment of the current recovery pace runs sharply counter to the views of the AFL-CIO as expressed during the federation's Economic & Legislative Conference last month.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany protested that the Administration lacked "a sense of urgency" toward the "basic problem of jobs" and declared that anti-recession measures such as greater spending for public works are needed "not for the next recession, but for this one."

Because frustrated job-hunters have given up the search for work and dropped out of the labor market, Meany observed, the nation's unemployment crisis is even more severe than the statistics show.

Labor's 'Solemn Duty'

He said it was the labor movement's "solemn duty" to remind the President and Congress that the recession is "not over and done with" and that providing jobs for the jobless is still "the No. 1 issue."

In January, 4.7 million workers were unemployed, according to the Labor Dept., and the 5.8 percent of joblessness was measured against a listed labor force that had declined by more than 100,000 over the year.

In seeking public works spending authority only on a stand-by basis, the Administration proposal also differs from a labor-backed bill introduced last year by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.). The Clark measure would give the President immediate power to provide federal grants-in-aid for stepped up state and local public works projects whenever unemployment is high and to maintain the program until joblessness drops to 4 percent of the work force.

Kennedy's bill would allow him to inject up to $2 billion of federal funds into the economy when unemployment rises in three out of four or four out of six consecutive months by a total of at least 1 percentage point.

The President would have the responsibility to determine if the extra spending was needed or whether the rise in joblessness was not caused by some special factor.

The $2 billion of spending authority would be broken down as follows:

- Up to $750 million in direct expenditures for such previously authorized federal projects as post offices and other buildings, dams, reforestation and other conservation measures.
- Up to $750 million in matching grants for state and community capital improvement programs, such as airports, city government buildings, sewer systems, even schools.
- Up to $250 million in loans to state and local governments otherwise unable to raise their share of the cost of projects eligible for federal grants.
- Up to $250 million for expansion of the first three programs if the need so warrants.

His draft bill, the President said, requires that all of the projects "must meet essential public needs, must be capable of early initiation and of completion within 12 months, must contribute significantly to reducing unemployment, and must not merely replace existing public expenditures."

"Virtually every community in the nation has a backlog of needed capital improvement projects," he added. "Certainly that is true of the federal government. An acceleration of these projects—all worthwhile in their own right—is a wise and proper method of increasing employment and expenditures at times when such action is urgently needed to help stabilize our economy."

The stand-by public works authority is part of a three-pronged program the President has urged Congress to enact quickly.

Other aspects of the plan are improved unemployment insurance and stand-by authority to cut the withholding tax on individual incomes.

Although he has suggested the tax-cutting authority in earlier messages to Congress, Kennedy has not yet submitted draft legislation to achieve it. His unemployment insurance proposals are embodied in the McCarthy-King bill, which would set federal minimum standards for state benefits, expand coverage and establish a permanent program of supplemental benefits to the long-term jobless.

UNIFIED GOALS FOR BARGAINING with employers of nearly 500,000 Machinists and Auto Workers were outlined at a joint IAM-UAW Aircraft & Missile Conference in Washington, D. C. Pictured are some of the 250 delegates who discussed a program aimed at improving wage policies, union security, insurance, layoff provisions, severance pay and other benefits. Contracts covering about 300,000 of the covered workers expire or are up for wage negotiations this year.

IAM, UAW List Job Security as Key Demand in Air, Missile Pacts

By Eugene A. Kelly

Protection for the jobs of half a million workers in the aircraft and missile industry will be the major objective of the Machinists and the Auto Workers in negotiations on new contracts this year, the two unions have declared.

Meeting in joint conference in Washington, D. C., delegates from IAM and UAW locals noted the insecurity of thousands of workers plagued by frequent job layoffs in an industry whose profit margins are guaranteed by the government, and concluded:

"A country that asks aircraft and missile workers to contribute steadily without work stoppages should see that these same workers are treated equally with workers in other basic industries."

Rejecting the argument that the industry "cannot afford to pay decent wages" and citing a rise in the after-tax return on stockholders' investment from 7.4 percent for 1960 to 10.9 percent for the third quarter of 1961, the delegates:

- Asked that the federal government call a labor-management conference to determine the approach that should be used to help overcome the economic insecurity of workers.
- Proposed two alternatives—that government procurement agencies reimburse each contractor for the supplemental unemployment benefits and separation benefits he must pay to laid-off workers, or that an industrywide fund be established by uniform employer contributions, and that such a fund be insured by the government.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg in a speech urged labor and management to negotiate "responsible and non-inflationary" wage settlements without strike, and announced that he would head a special governmental "task force" to examine strike costs, unemployment caused by contract cancellation, and other problems.

Strikebreaking Subsidies Hit

Rep. Frank Kowalski (D-Conn.) reported to the conference on a bill he has introduced to halt federal subsidies used to pay the costs of strikebreaking, and said he will press for early hearings.

The Defense Dept. has told him, Kowalski said, that it plans to pay $7.5 million to United Aircraft Corp. for costs incurred during a nine-week strike of IAM and UAW members in Connecticut.

Conferees agreed to seek these objectives in new contracts with Boeing, North American Aviation, Douglas, Lockheed, Republic, UAC, General Dynamics and others when present contracts expire this spring and summer:

2-24-62

Employment Security — Specific protection against layoffs, and adequate benefits for those who are laid off. Present layoff benefits have a top of $500 per worker, compared to maximum benefits up to $7,200 in private industry.

General Wage Policy—A recovery from what the unions call the wage lag of recent years. They will ask that workers share annually in the gains resulting from increased productivity, seek strong cost-of-living clauses providing quarterly adjustments and fully reflecting the rise in living costs, demand compensation for the time and effort required in learning needed skills and wage adjustments up to the general level of wages paid for similar work within a plant, and other plants in the industry.

The conferees also spelled out opposition to "rigid job evaluation plans," excessive job classifications and impossible merit rate ranges.

They agreed to "fight any effort to destroy the uniformity of off-site missile programs," and listed gains they will seek in insurance, health security and union security.

States Upheld by Supreme Court On Enforcement of Union Contracts

benefits. The company was ordered to comply with contract provisions.

The Worcester County Superior Court and the state's highest court both upheld the union position and rejected the company's argument that jurisdiction in such controversies had been reserved to the federal courts by Section 301 of Taft-Hartley.

The Supreme Court agreed. The opinion, written by Justice Potter Stewart, declared:

"On its face, Section 301(a) simply gives the federal district courts jurisdiction over suits for violation of certain specified types of contracts. The statute does not state nor even suggest that such jurisdiction shall be exclusive. It provides that suits of the kind described 'may' be brought in the federal courts, not that they must be."

The court rejected an analogy drawn by the company to its decisions barring state courts from acting in disputes within the jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board, such as unfair labor practice cases.

Congress, the Supreme Court noted, "expressly rejected" the proposal that contract violations be made unfair practices and, instead, "deliberately chose to leave the enforcement of collective agreements 'to the usual processes of the law'."

The court also rejected the company's argument that the "task of formulating federal common law in this area of labor management relations must be entrusted exclusively to the federal courts" because state court participation would lead to disharmony "incompatible" with the high court's 1957 Lincoln Mills decision.

In that case, which involved a federal suit by the Textile Workers Union of America to compel enforcement of a contract arbitration clause, the Supreme Court held that Section 301 was more than procedural and, in fact, authorized federal courts "to fashion, from the policy of our national labor laws, a body of federal law for the enforcement of agreements within its ambit."

Excerpts from Justice Stewart's opinion:

"We start with the premise that nothing in the concept of our federal system prevents state courts from enforcing rights created by federal law. Concurrent jurisdiction has been a common phenomenon in our judicial history, and exclusive federal court jurisdiction over cases arising under federal law has been the exception rather than the rule. . . ."

"It is implicit in the choice Congress made that 'diversities and conflicts' may occur, no less among the courts of the 11 federal circuits, than among the courts of the several states, as there evolves in this field of labor management relations that body of federal common law of which Lincoln Mills spoke. But this not necessarily unhealthy prospect is not more than the usual consequence of the historic acceptance of concurrent state and federal jurisdiction over cases arising under federal law. To resolve and accommodate such diversities and conflicts is one of the traditional functions of this court."

Council Urges 'Aggressive' Steps to Buttress Economy

AFL-CIO News

Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C.

FULL AFL-CIO SUPPORT for striking Miami, Fla., bus drivers was promised by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany at a night rally of the 750 drivers and almost 7,000 supporters, shown above. Meany urged Div. 1267 of the striking Street Electric Railway & Motor Coach Employes to "keep your ranks firm" and promised that all the federation's 60,000 local unions would be given the facts about the "fantastic" financing agreement between William Pawley, bus line operator, and Dade County officials.

Hits 'Overly Timid' Recovery Policies

By Saul Miller

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO has called for an "urgent, re-examination" of the Administration's "overly timid" economic policies in order to achieve full recovery from the 1960-61 recession and avert a new downturn.

The federation's Executive Council took a close look at the nation's economic health in mid-February, found it "alarming," and declared "a more adequate and aggressive program is essential."

It called for an "aggressive collective bargaining policy combined with vigorous efforts to cut taxes on low-income groups and initiation of a public works program" as essential to return the economy to full employment levels.

The nation's economic health, and legislation to improve it, dominated the final days of the council's mid-winter sessions here. Earlier the council had launched a major register-and-get-out-the-vote campaign for 1962 aimed at overcoming off-year inertia and apathy.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany not only underscored labor's concern with the inadequacy of the Administration's economic program, but in reply to a press conference question expressed his disagreement with Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg's views that the government should assert a national policy on collective bargaining.

'Infringing' Charged

Goldberg, in a speech in Chicago, had said that when the government moved into collective bargaining it would define and assert the national interest, not just mediate the immediate issues. Meany told reporters he believed that the government should use mediation and conciliation and "do everything it can to help people get together," but that to assert a national policy would be "infringing on the rights of free people in a free society." To propound a national policy, he explained, is to tell both sides what they should do and "I don't agree."

Besides the economic policy statement, which included a proposal for a flexible workweek program designed to curtail the workweek with no reduction in take home pay when there is anything less than full employment, the council called for:

- Immediate amendment of the unemployment compensation system to help the long-term unemployed by providing additional weeks of benefits and generally shoring up the system to withstand the fluctuations of the economy. (See story on page 4.)
- Raising the minimum wage for all workers to $1.50 an hour, extending coverage to restaurant, hotel, laundry and other groups of unprotected workers, and making fully effective without further delay the $1.25 minimum wage. (See story on page 4.)
- Enactment of the Anderson-King bill to provide health care for the aged under social security as the "most important and immediately necessary step toward the development of well-rounded protection for older citizens in meeting the costs of health care." (See story on this page.)
- Re-examination of the draft tax bill now before the House Ways & Means Committee to determine if it should be supported or opposed. As the bill shaped up before final committee action, the council made it clear it could not be supported by the AFL-CIO unless drastic revisions were made. (See story on page 2.)

In the area of international affairs, the council in a series of statements:

- Strongly endorsed the U.S. government's "determined opposition to Moscow's maneuver to monopolize the air corridors to Berlin," and welcomed West Germany's "rejection of the Soviet

NLRB Issues Rulings on Jurisdiction

The National Labor Relations Board has issued its first decisions assigning disputed work jurisdiction in compliance with a January 1961 Supreme Court mandate.

The board stressed that although unions were involved in each of the first three cases, it was awarding the disputed work to a "group of employes performing a type of work," and not to a particular union or to members of that union.

In the past the NLRB had declined to go this far and had instead accepted an employer's as-

Cost of Living Index Stable in January

The consumer price index for January was unchanged from December, the Labor Dept. has reported, standing at 104.5 percent of the 1957-59 average. This showed a rise from January 1961 of only seven-tenths of 1 index point—the smallest year-to-year increase since 1956.

Factory workers' spendable earnings and buying power both dropped about $1.50 a week from December.

This is the first time the Labor Dept. used the 1957-59 CPI base. The index previously was based on the 1947-49 price average. On the old base, the CPI stood in January at 128.2 percent, also unchanged from December.

Substitutes Prove Need:

Health Plan Chances Seen on Upgrade

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Proposed substitutes for Pres. Kennedy's program of health insurance for the aged through social security have served to underscore the need for prompt enactment of the Administration plan, the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared at its meeting here.

While the substitute plans "represent a significant shift in the position of their proponents," the council observed, "they provide no ground for lessening public support" of the Administration measure sponsored by Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.M.) and Rep. Cecil R. King (D-Calif.).

"On the contrary, they confirm our contention that the enactment of the Anderson-King bill is the most important and immediately necessary step toward the development of well-rounded protection for older citizens in meeting the costs of their health care," the council declared.

It said swelling public support of the social security approach had "apparently inspired" opponents to re-examine their position and come up with alternatives.

Prospect of Passage Good

All of this, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told reporters at a news conference, points to a better outlook for enactment of the Anderson-King bill.

Meany said prospects for passage of the measure "are much brighter now than a few months ago." He predicted that if it clears House and Senate committees and reaches the floor in both chambers, it will pass by a "substantial vote."

The Executive Council's statement analyzed five proposed substitutes for the Anderson-King bill and concluded that they are "unacceptable as alternatives but con-

Rail Unions 'Reject' Commission Proposals on Jobs, Wages, Rules

By David L. Perlman

Rail operating unions have "rejected" proposals of a presidential commission to abolish the jobs of most locomotive firemen, revamp the system of setting pay, and require that disputes over technological changes and the size of train crews be submitted to binding arbitration.

The long dispute with rail management over work rules, wages and hours now goes back to direct negotiations for at least 30 days, with the parties apparently as far apart as in the fall of 1960, when they agreed to establishment of a tripartite commission which would study and attempt to mediate the dispute.

The five unions involved—the AFL - CIO - affiliated Railroad Trainmen, Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, and Switchmen, and the unaffiliated Locomotive Engineers and Railway Conductors—charged that the commission had made little effort at mediation and expressed "shock and disappointment" at the proposals.

Recommendations of the five public members of the commission, which was headed by former U.S. District Judge Simon H. Rifkind, were accepted by management as being "in the public interest."

Union members sharply dissented and said the report will hinder a negotiated settlement and could lead to a strike if the railroads attempted to impose the changes unilaterally.

Chief executives of the operating unions told a news conference that the recommendations "parrot the extreme position taken by the carriers early in the dispute."

"After all this time," they said, "we find the issues back at the be-

HOSPITALIZATION COSTS AND OLDER PERSONS

Substitutes Seen Underscoring Necessity of Anderson-King Bill

tain elements that can be made to work usefully as supplements to the basic social security coverage."

The council found that:

1. The proposal offered by Blue Cross and the American Hospital Association is commendable for its recognition of the need for government aid and its departure from earlier opposition to the use of the social security mechanism.

But the plan rejects the principle of health care benefits as a matter of right during retirement, based on premium payments during working years. And by insisting on operation of the plan by Blue Cross, it appears to display "a self-serving lack of faith in the social security and railroad retirement agencies, which have worked effectively on behalf of the American people for 26 years."

2. A parallel proposal of Blue Shield and the American Medical Association on careful reading amounts to no more than a "press release" saying that "after a while, if the 69 Blue Shield plans agreed, they would offer a nationwide plan to cover doctors' bills for persons over 65, at an approximate cost of $3 per person per month."

Cost of the plan, plus the estimated $12 monthly premium for the proposed Blue Cross hospitalization insurance, would add up to one-sixth of the average individual income—about $1,000 a year—of persons over 65.

3. A substitute proposal of Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N. Y.), while containing some sound elements and accepting the social security approach, has major weaknesses in that not all workers contributing through the social security system would be eligible for benefits, the railroad retirement system is ignored, and needless costs would be added through provision of some coverage by commercial insurance companies.

4. The plans of the commercial insurance industry itself still do not offer adequate protection for older people at rates within reach of those who depend on retirement incomes.

5. The Kerr-Mills Act, adopted more than a year and a half ago, "simply has not worked." Less than half of the states have both passed enabling legislation and appropriated funds to implement its provisions and only 16 had programs in operation as of Feb. 1.

Among these 16 states there is "fantastic variation" in benefits, ranging in some cases down to a maximum of six days of hospital care, the council said, and the means test of the act is "highly distasteful to the vast majority of self-reliant citizens."

Nevertheless, the approach of the Kerr-Mills Act, the council said, will always be needed not as a "first line of defense" but as a supplement to the basic social security program.

The council was encouraged by the "common conclusion" evident in recent developments that "action must be taken to meet the needs of older people for a practical way to finance health costs."

This need was outlined statistically in a background paper issued with the council's statement showing, among other things, that:

- Older persons have more days of illness, go to the hospital more frequently and stay longer. A study by the U. S. Public Health Service in 1957 found that on the average people under 65 use about 883 days of hospital care a year per 1,000 persons, against 2,332 days a year for every 1,000 persons over 65.
- Older persons have less income. Census bureau figures for 1960 list the median annual incomes of 2-person families at $5,314 where the head of the family is under 65 and $2,530 where the head is over 65. The figures also place the median annual incomes of persons living alone or with non-relatives at $2,570 for those under 65 and $1,050 for those over 65.
- Hospital stays are costly, and growing more so. Figures compiled by the AHA show that the average cost per day has risen from $9.39 in 1946 to $23.12 in 1955 to $32.23 in 1960.

Basic Protection Essential

To cope with this problem of more frequent illnesses, high costs and low income, the Executive Council said, the aged need a basic floor of protection as offered in the Anderson-King bill, "just as basic financial protection in old age is provided through the Social Security Act."

Enactment of the Administration measure, the council observed, actually would stimulate supplementary action. It pointed out, for example, that with their basic protection secured, the aged would be in a better position to finance other health insurance needs, thus bolstering private insurance plans.

"In this connection," the council said, "we hope that the American Medical Association and Blue Shield continue their efforts to make available, at a reasonable cost, the nationwide insurance plan they recently announced."

It noted, too, that with the main burden of health care for the aged borne through social security, the states would be better able to provide for the remaining needy aged through Kerr-Mills.

"In short," the council concluded, "these programs, operating not as substitutes, but as supplementary to the basic protection provided in the President's program, would make possible the development in America of a well-rounded comprehensive health care program for the aged."

Council Picks Paul Hall For Vacancy

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Paul Hall, president of the Seafarers, has been elected a vice president of the AFL-CIO and member of the Executive Council, succeeding the late Pres. William A. Calvin of the Boilermakers.

Hall, 47 years old and a native of Alabama, has been president of the Seafarers and of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. since 1957. Previously he had been first vice president of the Seafarers since

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Paul Hall

1949, serving also as chief officer of the union's Atlantic, Gulf, Lakes & Inland Waters District.

He began going to sea in the Thirties, sailing in ships' engine rooms with an oiler's rating, and his service included the period of World War II. He came ashore as an elected officer of the union, successively as port patrolman, New York agent and director of organization for the SIU Atlantic, Gulf, Lakes & Inland Waters District.

Hall comes from a trade union family. His father, a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, worked for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad and was chairman in Louisville of the brotherhood's L&N lodge.

Measure Clears Committee:

Tax Bill 'Loopholes' Rapped by Council

The House Ways & Means Committee has approved a tax revision program after sharply changing certain recommendations submitted by Pres. Kennedy last year.

The committee made last-minute modifications in some sections previously approved on a tentative basis, specifically in regard to taxation of U.S. corporate income earned in foreign countries.

Such income has been tax-free until returned to this country, and Kennedy urged that the tax-escape hatch be closed on income earned from investments in "developed" countries but retained for investment in underdeveloped countries.

The Ways & Means Committee in its last-minute shift provided that income earned on foreign corporations would be subject to U.S. taxation unless it was reinvested in underdeveloped countries.

After final drafting, the bill is scheduled for formal committee approval on Mar. 6, after which it will be reported to the House.

Revenue measures are traditionally cleared by the Rules Committee under a rule preventing piecemeal amendment, but Rep. John W. Byrnes (R-Wis.), ranking GOP Ways & Means member, denounced the foreign-income tax provision and served notice that he would offer a substitute to preserve the loophole.

Original Measure Hit

Earlier the AFL-CIO Executive Council, meeting in Bal Harbour, Fla., had sharply criticized the original committee measure, saying it "cannot be supported" unless some of its provisions were basically revised.

The federation reserved final decision until formal report of the bill by the committee, but AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told a press conference the original measure was a "bad" one that opened more loopholes instead of closing existing ones.

The council statement specifically urged the committee to return to Kennedy's original proposal on taxing foreign income.

The federation declared that it was "not encouraged" by the committee's original action on the seven proposals put forth by the President except for the provision to initiate a withholding tax against dividends and interest.

Dividend Credit Unchanged

The committee, the council said, had "refused to do anything about repealing the dividend credit and exclusion provision which would recoup for the treasury some $400 million in lost revenue."

The statement noted that the committee had "only toyed with trying to tighten expense account allowances and has very inadequately dealt with other proposals of the President."

"The net revenue loss from the bill might be between $750 million and $1 billion," it observed.

On the issue of foreign income, the council said the "unwarranted" tax loophole "has accelerated the export of American dollars and American jobs, has worsened the balance of payments deficit and in addition causes a revenue loss of approximately $250 million yearly."

Failure to plug the loophole would "encourage further the export of capital and jobs," the council charged.

The AFL-CIO Executive Committee will re-examine the bill in its entirety after it is reported out by the committee and "at that time we will decide whether the good aspects of the bill outweigh the bad," the council said.

"On the basis of that decision," it added, "we will determine whether we will urge the House of Representatives to pass it or kill it."

Kennedy Asks Speed On Health Care Bill

Pres. Kennedy called on Congress in a special message to move quickly on the "urgent" task of setting up a nationwide system of health insurance for the aged financed through the social security system.

The message also repeated Kennedy's requests for a wide range of federal programs to bring "the miracles of modern medicine" within "the reach of any group of Americans."

A new proposal urged Congress to authorize a 5-year program of federal loans for construction and equipment of group practice medical and dental facilities, with priority to facilities in small communities and those sponsored by nonprofit organizations.

The AFL-CIO convention last December called for expansion of such direct-service group practice plans and elimination of impediments to their growth, such as state laws that bar consumer sponsorship and hospital regulations denying staff privileges to physicians in group practice.

The President also outlined a mass inoculation program he had suggested earlier in his State of the Union message. He urged grants of $35 million to cover the entire cost of vaccines to immunize all children under 5 against whooping cough, diphtheria and tetanus.

Other major proposals called for:

- Federal grants for construction of medical and dental schools and scholarships to help fill them.
- Federal grants and technical aid to states and communities in combating air pollution and establishment of a National Environmental Health Center to coordinate research in air and water pollution.
- Expansion of the facilities, research and training activities of the National Institutes of Health, including establishment of a new Institute for Child Health and Human Development.
- A 3-year extension of last year's temporary program of federal matching grants for the construction of health research facilities, at $50 million a year.
- Federal aid to states to encourage provision of medical facilities for migrant agricultural workers.

The President laid his strongest emphasis on the need for a health insurance plan that would make benefits available to every person over 65 eligible for social security or railroad retirement payments.

"By this means," he declared, "the cost of health services in later years can be spread over the working years—and every worker can fact the future with pride and confidence."

'Aggressive' Action Urged on Recovery effort for a bilateral deal." (See story on this page.)

- Praised the action of the Organization of American States in expelling Cuba from its ranks, but warned that "sterner measures" are needed to isolate completely the Cuban Communist regime. (See story on this page.)
- Called for a series of immediate short-run projects that would demonstrate the benefits of the Alliance for Progress to the needy millions in Latin America and make it a "meaningful, current reality."

In internal matters, the council:

- Named Pres. Paul Hall of the Seafarers an AFL-CIO vice president and a member of the Executive Council. (See story on page 2.)

It accepted the resignation of Vice Pres. L. S. Buckmaster effective at the end of the meeting and said it will fill the post at its next session.

- Received a progress report from its Committee on Organization. Meany said the committee will try to formulate a plan for area organizing campaigns jointly sponsored by interested unions, keyed to the elimination of union competition. The plan will be submitted to the council and if approved, a meeting of the federation's General Board will be held to implement it.
- Heard a report from Meany that the Internal Disputes plan adopted at the December 1961 AFL-CIO convention is "working well" and has been successful in adjusting disputes at the mediation level. He reported that nine of 11 cases had been disposed of or settled before or after the mediation process, and declared that the "sanctions that can be taken have had some effect" in helping settle these cases.

The council has before it two cases involving claims from unions that they have a justifiable basis for taking action that would normally violate the plan and want council approval.

- Received a report from Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, chairman of the federation's Civil Rights Committee. Meany said it was a "very good report," and pointed out that the committee is working with international unions to have each appoint a high headquarters official to handle civil rights complaints channeled to it by the AFL-CIO. This approach, said Meany, will prove very important in future handling of discrimination complaints.

In other actions the council:

- Gave its full support and confidence to the Steelworkers in their current negotiations for a new contract. (See story on this page.)
- Announced that the 1963 Murray-Green Award will go to Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther of the American Red Cross for his outstanding contributions to voluntary welfare work. The 1962 award, previously announced, will be made later this year to Gov. Luis Munoz Marin of Puerto Rico.
- Authorized the director of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities to organize a "truth squad" on public assistance "for the purpose of clarifying the issues" in communities where irresponsible attacks have been launched on public assistance and welfare programs, and proposed the development of a special community service project designed to encourage retired union officers to participate actively on the boards and committees of national health and welfare agencies. (See story on page 8.)
- Voted donations of $2,000 per month for the next 10 months to the National Council of Senior Citizens, which is actively campaigning for health care under social security; $10,000 for the U.S. Committee on Refugees; $2,500 for the American Association for the United Nations; and $40,000 for a William Green-Philip Murray Memorial Library at Roosevelt University in Chicago.
- Set the next council meeting for April 26 in Washington, D. C.

In its statement on the economy, the council stressed that the nation's present problem is not inflation but unemployment; that there is no shortage of goods and services but one of buying power. The federation's proposals to restore full employment constitute "fiscal responsibility in its most proper sense," the council declared, and an "investment in America's economic health" — not a "cost item."

Economy Hits 'Lull'

The economy in mid-February, said the council, was in a "lull," with industrial production, hours of work and personal income all declining in the past month and retail sales down for the past two months. Persistent high unemployment continues to plague the nation and "there is a danger that high levels of unemployment will remain through 1962."

The council stressed that "the pick-up from the recession in employment and unemployment has been the poorest of all recoveries from postwar recessions" and that "production and sales have not been increasing fast enough" to create new jobs and reduce joblessness.

Extraordinary rises in productivity have "slowed considerably the rise in employment and consequently unemployment has not significantly declined," it declared.

This situation, said the council, "is alarming and calls for urgent re-examination of the Administration's policies and more effective remedial action by the government in the immediate period ahead."

"A more adequate and aggressive program is essential," it said. "Pres. Kennedy's program as far as it has gone is fine, but the approach has been overly timid and will not meet the nation's needs."

'Vigorous Bargaining' Urged

The council called for "vigorous collective bargaining" to reverse the trend showing that real wages of workers have been increasing at an annual rate only half as fast from 1956 on as in the earlier years of the decade.

The statement declared that "there has been a concerted effort to distort the Administration's position" on the relationship between the productivity increase and wage increases. The report of the President's Council of Economic Advisers "has not been saying 'limit wage increases to productivity,' as some observers have falsely contended," the council said. "The report lays even more emphasis on factors other than productivity that enter into wage and fringe benefit determination."

The council warned that long-term interest rates "have begun to creep up" and that if the level of money supply tightens and credit becomes available only at high interest rates, "the next recession will be upon us before we have completely recovered from the last."

Commenting on Kennedy's request to Congress for authority to cut taxes and increase expenditures for certain types of public works projects if economic activity slows down, the council declared that this authority should be granted "to take effect now instead of waiting until there is another recession."

Such authority will "contribute to ending the present recession and probably averting the next," it said.

Stern Measures Urged Against Castro Regime

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO Executive Council praised the action of the Organization of American States in expelling Cuba from its ranks but warned that "sterner measures" are needed completely to isolate the Cuban Communist Regime.

The Council called on all OAS members to put into effect as rapidly as possible diplomatic and economic sanctions against the Castro regime and expressed its firm support of U.S. action to "suspend completely whatever trade was still being conducted with Cuba."

The council also adopted statements:

- Calling for a series of immediate and short-run projects that would demonstrate the benefits of the Alliance for Progress program to the needy millions in Latin America and to make the program "a meaningful, current reality."
- Authorizing an emergency shipment of 11,500 pounds of food to the Trade Union Council of British Guiana to aid white collar workers "affected by the recent national strike against repressive economic legislation proposed by the pro-Communist government of that country."

The AFL-CIO appropriated $2,700 for the food, the Retail Clerks donated $3,000, and the remaining $1,000 will be supplied by ORIT, the inter-American affiliate of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

In its statement on the Punta del Este meeting of foreign ministers, the council viewed "with satisfaction that the principle of collective action against the subversive offensive of international communism has been overwhelmingly upheld."

It appealed to labor movements in the free countries of the hemisphere and elsewhere to persuade their governments to suspend trade with Cuba, especially in those basic materials that would strengthen the Castro regime.

It called also for active participation by representatives of inter-American free labor in the operation of the OAS Special Consultative Committee on Security against the subversive action of international communism, and urged the U.S. to include labor representatives on its list of candidates.

The statement reiterated "our condemnation of the totalitarian dictatorships in Haiti and Paraguay" and urged the government "to stop all economic and military aid to these countries until such time as political and trade union freedoms are firmly re-established."

U.S. Stand Backed on Berlin Air Corridors

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The U.S. government's "determined opposition" to the Russians' attempt to monopolize air corridors to Berlin was strongly endorsed by the AFL-CIO Executive Council at its midwinter meeting here.

The council expressed "great concern" at "repeated provocative Soviet attempts to cut down Western rights" in the corridors and also at "the resumption of Kremlin threats to sign a separate 'peace treaty' with its East German puppet."

These moves it characterized as "sundry devices to slice away" the position of the Allies.

"The Executive Council especially welcomes the Federal German Republic's rejection of the Soviet effort for a bilateral deal," a council statement said.

"This is nothing but a clumsy Kremlin effort to sow suspicion and distrust among the Allies with a view of conquering and dividing them one by one. Every freedom-loving nation must realize that Moscow's basic and overall aim is to conquer and dominate the whole free world and not merely any particular part of it."

At the same time the council reaffirmed AFL-CIO solidarity with the German people "in their aspiration to national unification in freedom."

"We further reassure the heroic people of that great beleaguered fortress of freedom," the AFL-CIO leaders said, "that American labor will continue to support vigorously all-out efforts by the U.S. and its democratic allies to preserve their freedom and protect their security.

"We of American labor, and we are sure our entire nation, realize that our country's self-respect and self-preservation demand that the security and freedom of the people of West Berlin be assured. We share a common fate."

American labor is not fooled by the Kremlin's occasional resort to "sweet reasonableness," the council asserted, because faith in Soviet words, without concrete action towards peace and justice, at best "can only excite false hopes and lead to deep disillusionment and dangerous despair."

"We will put no trust in the Soviet dictator's words for peace," the council asserted, "until he acts to remove the evil consequences of his deeds for war."

The council called on Soviet Premier Khrushchev to remove the "wall of shame" dividing East and West Berlin and to stop opposing self-determination for the German people.

Council Backs USWA In Steel Negotiations

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The "full support and confidence" of the AFL-CIO has been extended to the Steelworkers in their efforts to "achieve fair and equitable collective bargaining agreements."

The federation's Executive Council declared here that the union's proposals to the steel industry "are well within the framework of increasing technological productivity and the profitability of the industry" and that what these proposals ultimately gain for the members "will pose no inflationary threat to the nation."

The achievement of the Steelworkers' goals of job and income security "will strengthen the entire economy," the council said. It added that "it is imperative that the steel employers step up their social responsibilities in dealing with the union."

Few American industries, the council declared, "have suffered more from the ravages of unemployment and underemployment than this key basic industry in our economy." Full employment, income security and constantly advancing living standards for the employes, the council concluded, "are the keystone of stability and dynamic expansion for our whole economy."

Rail Unions 'Reject' Commission Proposals on Jobs, Pay, Rules

ginning point—Nov. 2, 1959," when the railroads formally submitted their demands for rules changes after an extensive advertising and public relations campaign attempting to pin a "featherbedding" label on railroad workers.

The union chiefs "reaffirmed" their intention to press in subsequent negotiations for "modernization of the work rules so that operating employes can enjoy shorter hours, job stabilization, differential, holiday and overtime pay, and the protection of life and limb through minimum crew provisions."

Pres. Kennedy, when the commission's report was presented to him, termed it "useful" as a basis for collective bargaining and called on both sides to use "mature wisdom" in settling their differences.

He promised that the "good offices" of the Secretary of Labor and the National Mediation Board would be available to help bring about an agreement and added:

"I cannot point out too strongly that while the carriers and the unions have great responsibility to their respective interests, they have an overriding responsibility to the national interest to provide the most efficient and safe rail transportation possible."

The Rifkind Commission made these major recommendations:

Locomotive Firemen — Upheld management's claim that locomotive firemen are not needed on diesel-powered freight trains, rejecting the union contention that firemen are essential to safety and needed to make running repairs. A gradual changeover was recommended with job protection for firemen with at least 10 years seniority and separation allowance and retraining for those with less service.

Firemen with between five and 10 years of service would receive 60 percent of their regular pay for three years after dismissal, with no restriction on outside earnings. Lesser allowances would be paid to laid-off workers with less service. Terminated workers would also be entitled to 75 percent of tuition costs for up to two years of a government-approved retraining program.

Hours and Pay—Rejected union demands for shorter hours and a five-day week with no reduction in pay and proposed a revision of the existing pay system, which is based on a combination of miles traveled, hours worked and average speed.

Rifkind said the proposal would result in shorter hours or more pay for three-fourths of the workers, while the remainder would either have to work longer hours or take a pay cut. He said the present system results in some employes working "incredibly long hours," while others work only three or four hours a day.

The commission recommended a standard five-day week for yard service and "consideration" in negotiations of a gradual reduction in the local freight service workweek from the present six or seven days to five days, and from the 30-day work month to 26 days in other classes of road service. It said there should be "some adjustment —although not a proportionate adjustment" in pay rates.

Mandatory Retirement—Although neither party had made a proposal in this area, the commission recommended that operating employes be required to retire at age 70 by July 1, 1963, with a gradual reduction in the compulsory retirement age to 65 by 1967. Supplementary retirement benefits were suggested to encourage retirement of those over 65 before the 1967 deadline.

The commission noted that 22 percent of locomotive engineers were 65 years of age or over and more than 5 percent were 70 or over in 1959.

Technological Changes — Railroads should have an "unlimited right" to introduce technological changes. If these require amendment of existing rules or agreements, they should be negotiated with employes, the commission said. Failing agreement, issues should go to a special tribunal for arbitration. The same arbitration provision would be applied on proposals for changes in the size of train crews. Special benefits would be accorded employes losing their jobs because of technological or manpower changes.

Division Points—The railroads would get greater leeway in establishing division points and in eliminating existing requirements for crew changes. They would be required to compensate employes for moving expenses, loss of home values and wage loss when forced to relocate because of changes in terminals.

Fringe Benefits—It was recommended that railroads provide either lodging or a lodging allowance for employes away from their home terminals, but a union proposal for payment of away-from-home meal expenses was rejected. Seven paid holidays were recommended for some, but not all, groups of workers. The commission turned down union proposals for night work differentials and a guaranteed annual wage.

In addition, the commission urged greater leeway to management in assigning road service employes to switching and terminal work. It also recommended that the operating unions merge into one engine service organization and one train service organization and suggested that management modernize its labor relations policies and encourage supervisors to seek on-the-spot settlement of grievances.

Public members of the commission, in addition to Rifkind, were Russell A. Smith, associate dean of the University of Michigan Law School and co-director of the Institute of Labor & Industrial Relations; Dr. John T. Dunlop, chairman of Harvard's Dept. of Economics; Dr. Charles W. Myers, industrial relations professor at Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Francis J. Robertson, attorney and arbitrator.

Once Headed by Mitchell

Former Labor Sec. James P. Mitchell, who was instrumental in helping to set up the commission, served as chairman during its first months. When he resigned to run for governor of New Jersey, Kennedy appointed Rifkind as his successor.

The commission's recommendations would mean the loss of jobs by approximately one-third of the 40,000 locomotive firemen, and the unions contend it could lead to elimination of as many as 80,000 of the 200,000 railroad operating jobs.

Sharpest union criticism was aimed at proposals to eliminate firemen on freight trains and recommendations for compulsory arbitration of future efforts by railroads to reduce crew sizes or abolish jobs because of technological changes.

The unions argued that firemen-helpers are needed as safety lookouts, to provide temporary relief for the engineer and to make running repairs on diesel units. The unions have compared the fireman's role to that of co-pilot on a plane.

Denouncing the arbitration recommendations, the unions charged: "Nothing else does more to characterize the commission's efforts as lacking in originality and practicality as its reliance on this form of compulsion.

"We have to look upon the commission's use of compulsion as admission of its inability to find a solution that would aid the collective bargaining process. Failing to provide an honorable base from which to start, the commission believes the solution lies in one arbitration board after another, compelling men to sacrifice their jobs, earnings and contract protection—all in the name of saving a terribly mismanaged industry."

$1.50 Rate Urged:

3-Point Minimum Wage Plan Backed

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Citing Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg's recent report to Congress as "fresh evidence" of the value of minimum wage increases and broader coverage, the AFL-CIO Executive Council called for an increase in the federal pay floor to $1.50 an hour and extension of coverage to workers now unprotected.

A statement issued by the council at its meeting here declared Goldberg's report to Congress showed that:

- "The minimum wage improvements enacted in 1961 brought substantial benefits to millions of low-paid workers, with economic and social gain to the nation."
- "Horribly low wages are unbelievably widespread in the restaurant, hotel, laundry and other industries still not covered by the minimum wage law."

Workers in these industries, the council observed, were left "out in the cold" when Congress last year broadened the Wage-Hour Act to cover 3.6 million additional workers. And while the amendments also increased the $1 minimum hourly wage to $1.25, 10 cents of the increase was scheduled to go into effect only in late 1963, the council pointed out.

It recalled that opponents of minimum wage improvements had predicted the increases would cause "soaring inflation and widespread discharges."

"Now the secretary's report of what actually happened after the improvement shows, as in past improvements, that these charges were not borne out," the statement declared. "Prices were not pushed up and unemployment was not created."

Despite Goldberg's findings that the 1961 amendments "bolstered the living standards of the working poor and thereby contributed to the economic welfare of the nation, the council said, "the secretary's report fails to state clearly what is evident between its lines:

"The minimum wage improvements last year were too modest. A larger increase, to the full $1.25 immediately, and wider extension of coverage were needed and would have provided even more beneficial results."

The council found "shocking evidence" of the need for expanded coverage in the new wage surveys requested by Congress and just completed by the Labor Dept. These showed that earnings are less than $1 an hour for most of the 1.5 million restaurant workers and the 500,000 hotel workers and for more than 13 percent—some 60,000 workers — in laundry and dry cleaning.

Other industries in which protection is needed for large numbers of workers earning substandard wages, the statement said, include hospitals, agricultural processing and logging.

"We urge the Congress to move quickly," the council declared, "(1) to make the $1.25 minimum wage fully effective without further delay; (2) to raise the minimum wage for all workers to $1.50 an hour, and (3) to extend coverage of the minimum wage law to restaurant, hotel, laundry and other groups of unprotected workers.

"We urge these moves in behalf of the nation's needy, lowest-wage workers to aid them and their families, their communities, the economy, and our national conscience."

Action on Idle Aid Urged To Head Off 'Disaster'

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO has called for "immediate action" by Congress to enact the Administration's program for permanent improvement in unemployment compensation in order to prevent "disaster" for hundreds of thousands of long-jobless workers this spring.

The temporary extension of benefits enacted last year expires July 1, the Executive Council noted, and after Apr. 1 no new applications will be accepted from workers whose regular state benefits have been exhausted.

Within four months after the temporary program expires, the council warned, more than 500,000 workers who have used up their state benefits "will be left stranded with neither help nor jobs."

Calling for permanent reform of the unemployment compensation system, based on improved federal standards, the Executive Council warned that continued reliance on "temporary patchwork actions may well lead to the foundering of the entire wage insurance system."

Enactment of the Administration-backed McCarthy-King bill, the council said, would "provide benefits at the right time, in the right place, and for the right persons when they need it."

"It will also alleviate the threatened 'sudden death' in jobless help caused by the impending termination of the temporary program," the council declared.

The labor-backed bill would establish a permanent federal program of additional benefits, up to 13 weeks, for persons who have exhausted their regular state jobless benefits. During recession periods —when insured unemployment nationwide is 5 percent or more for three consecutive months—eligibility requirements for extended benefits would be lowered. Other features include:

- Gradual extension of state unemployment benefit ceilings from 50 percent of the statewide average weekly wage in 1964 to two-thirds after 1967.
- Extension of coverage to include employes of non-profit organizations, agricultural processing workers and persons employed in establishments with fewer than four employes.
- Employers would pay federal unemployment taxes on the first $4,800 of a worker's annual earnings, as contrasted with the present $3,000 ceiling. A four-tenths of 1 percent increase in the tax rate, imposed to finance the expiring temporary extension program, would be made permanent, and states meeting federal standards would be entitled to grants from the federal fund when their total benefit payments are unusually high.

The Executive Council estimated that enactment of the McCarthy-King bill would result in payment of an estimated $160 million the first year to long-term unemployed, "mostly heads of families whose jobs in many cases have disappeared due to technological change."

House Rollcall on Urban Affairs Dept.

Here is the rollcall vote by which the House defeated the Administration reorganization plan to establish a new Cabinet Dept. of Urban Affairs & Housing. The vote to disapprove the reorganization plan was 264-150. Democrats backed the President's program, 137-111; Republicans voted 153-13 against it.

On labor's scoreboard, a vote for the resolution of disapproval was a wrong vote (W), while a vote against rejecting the reorganization plan was a right vote (R). Other symbols: PR—paired right; PW—paired wrong; A—absent and not voting. Numerals denote district; AL—at large; NV—not voting.

How Liberalism Can Win

THE 1962 CONGRESSIONAL elections will put to the test once more the historic formula that conservatives often win the "off-year" elections by default.

An analysis of congressional elections going back to the turn of the century produces evidence a liberal tide may recede from its peak strength in presidential years to a low point in the off-year voting.

The intense drama of a presidential election brings to the polling places every four years millions who normally ignore "politics," the decisions of government that affect every phase of daily living. In the intervals they become concerned with other problems and remain on the sidelines as the important decision as to whether the conservatives or liberals will control Congress is made.

This is the problem of 1962—whether the normal off-year inertia and apathy will again be a decisive factor or whether the political tone and complexion of the next Congress will be decided by a real majority of those eligible to vote.

REGISTRATION LAWS and procedures vary from state to state. A few still have poll tax requirements; others provide for annual registration; the states with permanent registration laws display a great variation in the availability of registration places at times convenient to most working persons; residential requirements in many states are archaic in terms of the modern mobility of the American voter.

These are some of the problems that must be overcome if an important majority of American citizens is made eligible to vote in the primary and general elections.

But even with progress in this area, the massive task this year is to convince American workers, their families and friends that their participation in the congressional and state elections is critical to the nation's future.

To allow the conservative forces to win by default is to deny the vitality and effectiveness of American liberalism. To fob off participation in political affairs and decisions as someone else's business is to deny the basic tenets of a democratic system.

"POLITICS," says AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in a new COPE film, "is the key to your future." The battle for the general welfare cannot be won only at the collective bargaining table or on the picket line. "It has to be fought by union members with their time, with their energy, with their convictions and with their COPE dollars," he says.

Labor is in politics, he continues, "for the same reason we're in the labor movement—to build a better life for ourselves and for all Americans. No one is really 'out' of politics; we're all affected by political decisions."

As the strongest organized force in America dedicated to the progress of the country as a whole, the AFL-CIO has a responsibility to mobilize all its resources to insure that every citizen of voting age is qualified to vote. It is discharging this responsibility in the current drive to enroll every eligible citizen as a registered voter in the party of his choice.

If these millions who usually bypass the off-year elections are registered and turn out at the polls, the nation will progress along liberal lines and the battle for the general welfare will produce victories.

Pollsters Claim:

Too Few 'Really Understand' Great Issues Confronting U. S.

TOO FEW AMERICAN citizens really understand the great issues that we face today. This rather alarming conclusion is reached in a study conducted by the Fund for the Republic's Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions. It is based on interviews with two of the nation's outstanding public opinion analysts—Dr. George Gallup and Elmo Roper.

Roper, for example, says that only 10 percent of the American people are "politically active" and he blames the situation on widespread apathy and vast "areas of ignorance."

"We show in our polls," Roper said, "that 70 percent of the American people do not know the length of the term of the United States senators; that 56 percent cannot name either of the two senators from their own home states; that they haven't the vaguest notion of what a tariff is; that Americans are all in favor of selling American goods abroad but not of buying imported goods (as though this were possible).

"So we expose areas of ignorance in American life. And once you know where the areas of ignorance are among the American people you can do a better job of educating them."

This points up the tremendous job that faces our entire educational system, labor's political education arms and other groups which have the responsibility of bringing light where there is ignorance.

Roper thinks that exposing the "areas of ignorance of the American people, their ignorance of economics, their ignorance of politics," will help to bring understanding.

"We find that ignorance is the cause of most of the 'anti' feeling in this country," he said. "People who are afraid of Jews and are anti-Semitic haven't known many Jews in the first place. In Connecticut we found that we had a minority of about 18 percent who are anti-Negro, but these people have never seen a Negro to talk to in their lives."

Gallup substantiated Roper's view that people just don't understand the issues.

"IT HAS BEEN ASSUMED that people want to be regarded as well-informed on every issue," Gallup said. 'In the 25 years we have been polling, we've never found that to be true."

He recalled some early polls on the now vital issue of reciprocal trade, "when 90 to 95 percent of the people said they did not have sufficient information on which to base an opinion. That, of course, was a case when they actually did not have enough information to make a judgment."

To those who believe that issues are the basic means of making a determination of opinion, this question and Gallup's answer are alarming:

Question: "What are the factors that seem to influence and affect opinion in this country most? Is it events? Political leaders? Religious leaders? Educators? Entertainers? The press?"

Gallup: "I don't believe this question has ever been answered, but I think statements from political leaders do not have much effect upon opinion. Events, on the other hand, have a tremendous impact on opinion. I'm always amazed at Washington correspondents who believe that some act taken by Congress will somehow exert a tremendous effect upon opinions and attitudes.

"When we go to the people, we find that very few of them even know what any given congressman has said or done. The factors that are the long-term influence on opinion in this country are education, social and economic background and religion. Those are the constants. People's basic attitudes change very little."

Organizations such as the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education have worked hard turning out voting records of members of Congress, recognizing that the votes on key issues make a vast difference in the life of individuals and the welfare of the country. The obstacles they face are tremendous.

"The thing that always amazes me is how badly informed a lot of our college graduates are," Gallup observed. "It is absolutely shocking to one in our business to see how anyone can graduate from college and be so ignorant about economic issues."

While he favors putting some requirements on the right to vote, Gallup feels that the voter with less education frequently shows at least as much understanding as his college counterpart.

Both Roper and Gallup believe that the people are often ahead of their leaders and feel that people have a "practical wisdom despite their gaps in knowledge." (PAI.)

Morgan Says:

'Unconventional' Warfare Plan Is Effort to Fight Fire with Fire

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m. EST.)

ONE OF THE WORLD'S GREATEST authorities on guerrilla warfare, Red China's Mao Tse-tung, warmly and openly embraces in his treatise on the subject the theory that "there is no reason to consider guerrilla warfare separately from national policy."

Morgan

In a major policy declaration, Soviet Premier Khrushchev warned on Jan. 6, 1961, that the peace-loving Kremlin would nevertheless support "wars of national liberation." This was public admission of long-existing Communist policy, which has amounted to exploitation by subversive means for party ends of all manner of local conflicts.

This strategy has been maddeningly difficult for the western powers to counteract partly because Moscow, though subsidizing the subversion, has insisted with a cold, straight face that these upheavals were strictly local affairs, with which it had no governmental connection. This hoodwinking fooled nobody but it demonstrated the infinite practical value of local Communist parties for murderous mischief-making.

But last year the Kennedy Administration began to grapple with this painful anomaly. It decided, in effect, to declare war on guerrilla warfare; to fight fire with fire. New emphasis was put on the importance of "conventional" warfare in addition to nuclear combat. Some of this warfare isn't very conventional and one of the places where the unconventional is taught is the Army's special warfare school at Fort Bragg, N. C. And to a graduating class of that school an important speech was made on June 28, 1961, by Walt Whitman Rostow, then special assistant to the President, now head of the State Dept.'s policy planning council.

"We confront in guerrilla warfare in the underdeveloped areas," Rostow said, "a systematic attempt by the Communists to impose a serious disease on those societies attempting the transition to modernization. This attempt is a present danger in Southeast Asia. It could quickly become a major danger in Africa and Latin America."

The Rostow concept of the mission of the Fort Bragg special warfare specialists was to help in the revolutionary process of fashioning independent, modern societies by helping to stamp out the disease of communism in the jungles and across the rice paddies of, say, South Viet Nam.

Now that effort is being mounted in major proportions. In a speech in Chicago, Defense Sec. Robert McNamara made it more than official. He warned Khrushchev by name that the United States was now ready to fight in a "twilight zone" between full dress combat and political subversion.

McNAMARA SAID the Army, Navy and Air Force are training men to fight the kind of battle necessary to respond to such Communist tactics as sniping, ambushing, raiding, terror, extortion and assassination. It is against such warfare that we are helping the South Vietnamese.

This concept of increased military flexibility makes a great deal of sense but it won't make any sense at all if other hard realities of the situation are not considered and dealt with. How do you carry out a land reform program, for instance, if the government you are supporting is sniping at it with political opposition? How do you train a local army in tactics to counter the Communist guerrillas if the army's heart is not in the battle? We are committed in South Viet Nam to the extent of several thousand American troops and technicians and untold millions of dollars in military and economic aid. Is this the extent of the commitment? If, despite McNamara's confidence on his return from his latest Hawaii meeting, if the situation crumbles, is it worth it to commit more men, money and materials? How many and how much?

In a pathetically confused but at the same time revealing editorial, that Chicago Tribune of the Pacific Northwest, the Spokesman-Review of Spokane, Wash., complained that "American military action against communism in a faraway nation (like South Viet Nam) is somehow inconsistent with Administration chastisement of those Americans at home who are alerting themselves to all the ways in which the Reds operate."

This editorial reflects an attitude which says, in effect, "nuts to the strange, complicated things Washington is trying to do abroad. We're going to stay home and look under the bed." This is not the prevailing national attitude but it could become so if the Administration is not more informative about its operations abroad and more candid about the problems they involve. A good concept isn't worth much if it can't be effectively activated.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

AFTER THE HOUSE VOTE overwhelmingly approving the Manpower Development & Retraining bill, the Republican leadership pointedly announced that the bipartisan backing given the measure showed that the GOP delegation in Congress was by no means "always negative" and that it welcomed a chance to prove itself forward-looking and constructive.

This is a perfectly respectable and natural reflection of political awareness of the on-rushing election season. Another reflection is a decision by Senate and House Republican leaders to draft a statement of principles, covering a canvass of major GOP groups across the country, on which party candidates could stand for the record in November.

It is perfectly clear, also, that the Republicans are gradually building up what they hope will be an effective strategy of attack upon Pres. Kennedy. It appears, as of the moment, to include these charges:

- Kennedy is attempting a dangerous encroachment on the prerogatives of Congress in his proposals for presidential authority, in future recessions, to cut taxes by limited amounts for a limited period, subject to a veto by Congress, and to spend specified sums for authorized federal local and public works without direct appropriation.
- Kennedy's foreign policy of supporting the United Nations and backing the urgency of colonial or dependent peoples toward freedom involves opposition to "friendly nations" in Europe, our oldest allies.

Rep. Charles A. Halleck (R-Ind.), House GOP leader, and his Senate counterpart, Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.), are sounding both themes.

Halleck said the public works spending idea was a "worn-out proposal" and the tax plan "preposterous." A moderate veteran Republican, Sen. George D. Aiken (Vt.), also is dead opposed to the tax proposal.

THE REPUBLICAN LEADERS are shrewd and experienced political tacticians.

The amount of evidence they can offer that they are "forward-looking" rather than "always negative" remains to be shown, of course.

Even on the manpower retraining bill, they held up the measure in the Rules Committee last year and agreed to support it, with modifications, only at the last minute. They voted overwhelmingly just the previous week to kill Kennedy's proposed Dept. of Urban Affairs, which will surely be established as a necessary answer to the problems of the 70 percent of our people who live in cities.

Perhaps more important will be the votes to come—if they come—on such things as the McCarthy-King bill for permanent improvement in the unemployment insurance system and on the Anderson-King bill for social security health care for the aged.

These are measures that involve the tax system, since both programs are self-financed by independent revenues, and they are stuck in the tax-writing House Ways & Means Committee.

THE ADMINISTRATION does not yet have the sure votes to clear either bill from committee. Even if it could persuade 10 of the 15 Democrats to support the measures, it would need enough of the 10 Republicans to win a majority.

The bills may be forced to the floor by Senate amendment of some other tax measure, but this will not assure passage if a solid Republican-southern Democratic coalition fights them in the House. Or if the House passes some companion bill, and the coalition blocks a conference committee with the Senate by forcing the issue back to the Rules Committee.

Election returns will depend on many things—the final record, the foreign policy situation and by all means the state of the economy next fall. It will depend also on how closely the people look at the final record in terms of strengthening the economy and promoting the general welfare—not the votes on just one or two issues.

Washington Reports:

Opposition to UN Bond Issue Seen Strengthening Red Cause

FAILURE OF CONGRESS to authorize U.S. purchase of $100 million of the United Nations $200 million bond issue would play into the hands of the Soviet Union, Sen. John S. Sparkman (D-Ala.) declared on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program carried on more than 500 radio stations.

"I think Russia would be pleased to see the UN collapse," Sparkman asserted. He is sponsor of the Administration bill in the Senate.

He pointed out that the bond issue is necessary because of failure of the Soviet Union and its satellites to support financially the special UN operations in the Congo and Gaza Strip. Sparkman remarked that the Communists were probably "trying to starve the UN out."

Sen. John Sherman Cooper (R-Ky.), commenting on the UN's Congo operations, asserted that those who oppose these actions either do not realize the situation there or fail to face the alternative.

"As you remember, after the Congo government was established, riots broke out and the government asked the UN to send in troops to preserve order," he said. "It should also be remembered that the Belgian government met with all the leaders of the provinces, including Tshombe of Katanga, and agreed that a central government should be established. The Congo is not viable without the rich Katanga province. Also, when the secessionist movement began, the UN had to act. If it had not, the Soviet Union would have intervened."

SPARKMAN SAID that when the UN General Assembly approved the bond issue, almost the only nations which voted against it were the Soviet Union and its satellites, including Cuba.

He also said that the $200 million bond issue payments would be made part of the general UN budget, "and under the charter each country is liable for payment. If any nation is two years in arrears, it loses its vote in the General Assembly."

Cooper recalled that when the UN was set up in 1945, the late Sen. Walter F. George (D-Ga.) and two leading Republicans, Senators Arthur Vandenberg (Mich.) and Robert A. Taft (Ohio), "predicted that the UN would have difficult days."

"They said that we must live through this period of development and be able to take it," he said. "When we don't win every vote, I don't think it's a great example of courage or wisdom to flee and leave the whole UN to the Soviet Union."

How to Buy:

A Lady Who Doesn't Like 'Em Talks About Sales Gimmicks

By Sidney Margolius

MAURINE NEUBERGER hasn't the slightest reluctance to wear 79-cent nylons right on the floor of the U.S. Senate. And that gleam in her hair comes from no costly TV-advertised shampoo. The tall slim senator from Oregon, who is certainly one of the most attractive legislators this country ever had, uses inexpensive tincture of green soap, as well as unperfumed theatrical cleansing cream that costs 49 cents a pound.

And when she gets back to her house in the evening, she makes her own corn-muffin mix. She knows from her own and other women's experiences how consumers often are overcharged.

In fact, recently she candidly told New York Times Reporter Charlotte Curtis that "advertising contributes to the cost of products" and that she herself is "so conscious of this that I deliberately try to buy things that are not highly advertised." To its credit, the Times printed this outspoken comment, and also what must be some of the frankest statements on other selling practices ever uttered by a U.S. senator.

Two situations Sen. Neuberger is especially determined to help correct are the high prices of drugs, and deceptive credit fees. She recently told a New York meeting sponsored by Mid-Eastern Cooperatives that in a drug store one day she waited while a poorly-dressed woman in front of her had a prescription filled. "That will be $7," the druggist said. The woman gave him five $1 bills, and then silently fished in her handbag for her remaining nickels, dimes and quarters to make up the rest of the price.

"She never uttered a word of complaint or protest," Sen. Neuberger recalled. "She just gave up all the money she had to get that prescription."

The new oral drugs used by diabetes sufferers are a revealing example of high charges for vital medicines, the senator told the consumer co-op representatives. Diabetics who can substitute the oral drug for insulin injections pay a list price of 14 cents a tablet, for which the druggist himself pays eight cents. But the cost of production, including tableting, bottling and packaging, is only seven-tenths of one cent. At three tablets a day, the typical patient must pay $150 a year for dosage with a total production cost of about $14.

THE OTHER IMMEDIATE consumer legislation, which Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) has recommended that co-op, union and credit-union members support, is the Douglas "truth-in-lending" bill.

"Recently a girl on my staff wanted to buy a used car," the senator reported. "She began to discuss the terms with the salesman. Since she works in my office where we often discuss consumer problems, she offered to pay cash if this would lower the price. She got a real hard sales pitch about easy credit, simple weekly or monthly payments, how they would carry the insurance, etc., until it became evident that they didn't want cash—the real profit on this transaction would come from the carrying charges which figured at about 32 percent.

Sen. Neuberger feels that the single most important agency protecting consumers is the Food & Drug Administration, but with characteristic candor, she said, "the FDA's program is inadequate and it is unable to take action in many areas where it feels action is warranted, because its budget is too small, the laws under which it operates need clarification, and it can't hire enough enforcers."

Among recent FDA protective actions, Sen. Neuberger cited cases of ocean water sold at $3.75 a gallon as a cure for arthritis and other illnesses and as a general pep-up tonic; orange "juice" which contained up to 50 percent water and sugar, and many instances of short weights.

"It was a particularly interesting insight to note that FDA had to seize as being short weight some 348 pounds of Welch's chocolate-covered nut caramels, manufactured by the Welch Co. of Cambridge," she reported.

Sen. Neuberger has introduced her own bill to create a Senate committee on consumer interests. The committee would deal with the relationship of prices, quality, packaging, labeling and costs of production and distribution. Its object would be to further the effective expenditure of income. The committee also would 'ride herd' on the operation of current laws and have the responsibility for developing new consumer-protection legislation. It would examine the need for more effective and central consumer representation in the federal government.

From Soup to Nonsense:

New Hieroglyphics Replace What Used to Be the First 'R'

By Jane Goodsell

"THIS LETTER from Nancy somebody-or-other," said my husband. "Why does she say she's sorry to hear that my lips are chapped?"

"What?" I said.

"It says here," said my husband, 'I'm sorry to hear that Jim's lips are chapped. Why would somebody write you a thing like that? Besides, my lips aren't chapped."

"Let me see that letter," I said. "Where does it say that?"

He pointed, and I read where he pointed. "Why, it doesn't say that at all!" I exclaimed. "It says that she's worried for fear the pigs have flipped—or maybe it's tripped. And," I said, reading further, "she wishes us lots of Chummus Cheam."

"That's easy," said my husband. "Christmas Cheer. You ought to be able to figure that out. After all, you wished everybody a Wevy Wenny Chutvus on your own Christmas notes."

To put the situation in a nutshell (where it belongs) the art of penmanship has disappeared, leaving in its place a system of hieroglyphics that nobody can decipher,

Just the other day a woman appealed to me for help in the grocery store. "Can you figure this out?" she asked, pointing to her shopping list. "I wrote it myself, but I haven't the faintest idea what 2 bxs. ctps. means."

I shook my head. I had my own troubles, trying to decode my Sanskrit. I kept wandering around, hoping I'd recognize 2 pks. bg. rc. when I saw them.

HANDWRITING has reached such a low point that we might as well abolish it entirely, and rely on telephones, wire recorders, telegrams and printed messages. Everybody is in too much of a hurry to write legibly.

I don't blame the schools for this sorry state of affairs. Children have lovely handwriting. Well, maybe it isn't exactly lovely, but it can be read—which is more than you can say for adult handwriting.

I have a cookbook full of recipes that I'd like to try, but I can't. I don't know what 2 cps. gr. cd. ch. and ½ tp. rmy means. I've written myself a note to rtn. dr. spls. Wd. and I wish I knew what I'm supposed to do. I have a postcard from Palm Springs signed by two people named Garu and Yami, who state that the meather is lonely, there are lots of vice people in the hotel, and they wiss us.

The whole situation is, as a friend wrote me the other day, in an amful wess.

Central Bodies Urged To Mark Library Week

All state and local AFL-CIO central bodies have been urged by Federation Pres. George Meany to join in the observance of National Library Week, Apr. 8-14, by establishing a "friendly, year-round relationship" with community libraries and state library associations.

Repeating a recommendation he has made in past years, Meany reminded central bodies that today's union member has a "pressing need" to keep pace with the changes affecting his work and that a library made aware of the problem can "provide valuable tools" to help.

"The furtherance of education at all levels is among our movement's major objectives," Meany wrote.

"Education means more than formal schooling. The grade school graduate who keeps up his reading and seeks constantly to expand the scope of his knowledge has a better claim to being educated than the university graduate who stands pat on his diploma."

The AFL-CIO cooperates on a continuing basis with the American Library Association through a joint committee on library service to labor.

Counterattack Launched:

Council Authorizes Relief 'Truth Squads'

A DOUBLE-BARRELED PROGRAM aimed at countering attacks on public welfare programs by the "radical right" and strengthening labor participation at the policy-making levels of health and welfare agencies was approved by the AFL-CIO Executive Council at its meeting in Bal Harbour, Fla.

Acting on the recommendations of its Community Services Committee, the Council:

- Authorized Community Service Activities Dir. Leo Perlis to organize a "truth squad" of qualified speakers to address community-wide meetings in areas where public assistance programs are "irresponsibly and falsely attacked."
- Urged the "full utilization" of retired officers of national and international unions on the boards and committees of national health and welfare agencies.

The "truth squad," which would be brought in at the request of local central labor bodies, would include speakers from both within and without the AFL-CIO.

Pointing out that opponents of public welfare "have been making speeches throughout the country defaming public relief recipients and directing many baseless charges against public assistance generally," the council declared:

"Much needs to be done to improve our public assistance programs, but these irresponsible attacks not only do not help but actually hinder all constructive efforts in this direction."

The statement on utilization of retired union officials authorized a special community service project to encourage this program and urged that unions cooperate by reimbursing retired officers for necessary travel expenses in connection with their responsibilities.

"How do you expect to be anything more than a senior vice president if that's the attitude you're going to take?"

To Study Chicago Programs:

FCC Calls Hearing On TV Complaints

The Federal Communications Commission has announced it will hold its first public hearing on the program content of local television stations Mar. 19 at Chicago as a result of complaints from labor unions and other organizations.

Robert E. Lee, a member of the seven-member commission, who will preside at the hearing, said the FCC had received a "number of complaints" over an alleged defficiency in public service programs and local programs originated by the Chicago stations.

He said the inquiry would be limited to the city's five TV stations but that radio programming may be the subject of a future hearing.

Stations involved are WNBQ, Channel 5, National Broadcasting Co.; WBBM-TV, Channel 2, Columbia Broadcasting System; WBKB, Channel 7, American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, Inc.; WGN-TV, Channel 9, affiliated with the Chicago Tribune, and WTTW, Channel 11, an educational station.

Lee said the hearings would be general in scope and that the FCC was "not looking at any license trouble or license renewal."

The Chicago local of the Television & Radio Artists recently called on the commission to determine whether licenses should be renewed for NBC's Chicago outlets, WNBQ and radio station WMAQ.

Charging that the programming of the two stations has been "almost completely devoid of any effort or intention to broadcast local live shows utilizing local talent," the AFTRA local declared:

"We submit that 'riding the network' and a steady fare of reruns and old movies, coupled with a reduction of live performers, writers, musicians and technicians to a bare-bone crew, is not in the public interest in a market area of over 5 million richly endowed with talent and cultural interests."

The FCC recently concluded three weeks of hearings on network program practices, during which officials of NBC, CBS and ABC testified that almost no local programming was done by their affiliated stations.

Strike Call Jails Hungarian Worker

Vienna—Sandor Ueveges, Budapest factory worker who advocated a strike to protest new work quotas in Soviet-ruled Hungary, has been sent to jail for four years.

Reuters news agency picked up a report from the Budapest radio that the welder was found guilty of "inciting his colleagues against the regime" by urging a strike.

Ueveges was reported to have said it would be "better to have a world war than to have to put up with this regime any longer." The regime squelched Ueveges and the strike.

LIFE AT THE CAPITOL is full of interest for 15-year-old John F. Curtis, Jr., left, of Hopkins, Minn., who spent some time early on the job as a Senate page getting friendly advice from Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn.). John's father is director of organization of a Hotel & Restaurant Workers' local in Minneapolis and president of the State Culinary Council.

Johnson Plans Parley On Job Training Bias

Plans for a conference of educators and community leaders to combat discrimination in job training were announced by Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson at a recent meeting of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity.

"We do not accomplish anything by telling a man or a woman that they have a chance for a job when they do not have the chance to become prepared for that job," declared Johnson, who is chairman of the committee.

"Equal access to employment is only one step. "The more important step is equal access to the training that lays down the qualification for that employment."

Purpose of the conference, the vice president said, would be to seek long-range recommendations to make up for past neglect.

He said he had become "increasingly impressed with the willingness of the American people to make progress" in the field of equal job opportunity and that "the real problem is to break down old habits of thinking and old ways of doing things."

In its first nine months, the President's Committee has laid the groundwork for important achievement in the years ahead, Johnson said as he outlined a report to the President covering the period. The report also was signed by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, committee vice chairman, and Assistant Labor Sec. Jerry R. Holleman, executive vice chairman.

Highlights of the committee's accomplishments as listed by Johnson included:

- The "plans for progress" program under which 51 large industrial firms employing more than 3.5 million workers have pledged "affirmative and specific" steps to end job discrimination.
- A check of the first six companies signing such pledges, which showed they had subsequently increased minority group employment at rates ranging from 47.5 percent for officials and supervisors to 13.3 percent among semi-skilled and unskilled workers.
- The opening of negotiations for similar pledges by major unions.
- Non-discrimination clauses in the joint apprenticeship programs set up by the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the Bricklayers with employer organizations in their fields.
- Significant breakthroughs in the employment of the first Negro production workers in a number of industrial plants, chiefly in the South.
- Establishment of an accounting system on minority group employment among 38,000 firms employing some 15.5 million workers to provide information for the future guidance of the committee.

Earlier, Johnson, Goldberg, Holleman and John Field, executive director of the committee, met with Roy Wilkins, executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and Herbert Hill, NAACP's national labor secretary, to discuss the association's criticism that the committee was moving too slowly.

An NAACP spokesman said the meeting produced "a good response" from the government officials. Wilkins urged the Administration to move quickly and firmly against alleged discrimination involving unions, federally-certified apprenticeship programs, federally-aided employment services and the textile, airline, utility and construction industries.

Strange Customs These Robots Have

The British Post Office, which operates the telephone system, is having automation trouble, reports the Communications Workers.

Seems they have a robot named George. When the system had a power failure, George dialed "O" to raise the operator and said: "There is a power failure, send repairman."

Somehow the "O" got changed to "100" at the receiving end, but George didn't get changed. Instead of getting the operator when he dialed "O," he got Robot Charlie. And Robot Charlie answered with his instructions: "You no longer dial 'zero' for operator. Replace receiver and dial '100.'"

For the next three hours—until an unautomated repairman got in the act—George kept on dialing "O" and reporting a power failure to Charlie, who kept telling him to hang up and dial "100."

Circuit Court Okays Handbills on Boycott

New York—The 2nd Circuit Court of Appeals has overturned a Taft-Hartley Act injunction against union handbills urging customers to boycott firms doing business with a struck manufacturer.

The National Labor Relations Board, the appeals court noted, has held that such handbills are protected by the so-called "publicity proviso" of the act and are not in violation of the secondary boycott ban.

In the light of the NLRB ruling, the 2 to 1 majority found, the injunction never should have been issued by the U.S. District Court for Southern New York.

The NLRB regional director had sought the injunction on the basis of charges by the Remington Rand Univac Division of Sperry Rand Corp. that handbills distributed by Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers Local 495 violated the act's secondary boycott provision, as tightened by the Landrum-Griffin amendments.

The IUE members, on strike at Remington since last September, service the tabulators and computing machines the company leases to other businesses. Their handbills urged the public not to patronize Remington's customers continuing to do business with the struck firm.

The appeals court noted that Sec. 10(l) of Taft-Hartley permits temporary injunctions pending a final NLRB decision if there is "reasonable cause" to believe the act has been violated.

Because of this limited purpose, the court said "a finding of 'reasonable cause' must be premised on a belief that there is a reasonable possibility of the board's sustaining the unfair labor practice charge. But previous board decisions preclude it from finding an unfair labor practice here without reversing field, and needless to say, there has been no showing there will be such a reversal."

The majority cited the NLRB's ruling last year in the Lohman Sales Co. case that strikers were protected by the "publicity proviso" when they urged the public not to buy tobacco distributed by a struck wholesaler.

Afro-Asian Labor Institute Holds Seminar

Tel-Aviv—The Afro-Asian Institute for Labor Studies and Cooperation operated by Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation, has opened its third seminar with 52 students from 21 English-speaking nations.

Cyprus, with three students, is represented for the first time. Tanganyika, with eight students, has the largest delegation. Thirteen African nations and eight Asian countries have sent one or more men or women from their trade union or cooperative movements.

The faculty includes two foreign lecturers—Prof. I. Aboyada of the University of Ibadan, Nigeria, and F. Howarth of the Co-operative College, Loughborough, England.

The institute was founded in 1960 and since then has graduated 120 students from 30 countries. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and E. Elath, former Israeli ambassador to the United Kingdom, are co-chairmen of the board of directors. Akiva Eger is director.

HotelWorker's Son Appointed Senate Page

John F. Curtis, Jr., 15, new Senate page and son of a Minneapolis union man, likes everything about his job in the nation's Capitol with one possible exception—reporting for school at 6 a.m.

To be on time for the first class at the Capitol Page School, John has to get up at 5 o'clock.

He's getting used to it, but "it's a change from school in St. Louis Park, Minn.," a Minneapolis suburb, John told Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn.), former Minneapolis mayor and longtime friend of John's father, who is director of organization for Local 458 of the Hotel & Restaurant Employes and president of the union's State Culinary Council.

Young John came to Washington shortly before the Senate convened, reported to Sergeant-at-Arms Joseph C. Duke of the Senate, and was accepted as a pupil of the Capitol Page School, the District of Columbia's only four-year high school.

Five days a week he goes to school from 6 a.m. to about 10:30 in the Library of Congress. Senate, House and Supreme Court pages are enrolled in grades 9 through 12 for the school's academic program, plus typing and bookkeeping. Six teachers conduct classes in French, Latin, Spanish, mathematics, science, social studies and economics.

Senate pages sit in the chamber while the Senate is in session, run errands, deliver telephone messages and make themselves generally useful to the senators and the staff.

Where will it lead? John, Jr., isn't sure, but he believes he will have an answer during the three years he is scheduled to serve.

Pastors Told To Use Union Building Labor

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.—Bishop Alexander Carter of the Roman Catholic diocese of Sault Ste. Marie has directed that preference be given contractors employing union workers in future parish construction projects.

He acted after a meeting arranged by P. E. Guertin, business manager of Carpenters Local 2486, Sudbury, at which the case for union labor and wage scales was presented in the light of the recent "Mater et Magistra" encyclical of Pope John XXIII. Sudbury is in the Sault Ste. Marie diocese.

Bishop Carter spelled out the decisions he reached after the meeting and following discussions with his diocesan consultors in a letter to Guertin. They were:

"We shall do everything possible to encourage our workers to join and take an active part in their respective unions.

"I shall instruct the priests in all diocesan construction the scale of wages established by the government in conjunction with the unions must be observed.

"In all diocesan work in the future preference will be given to contractors using union labor.

"We shall remain in close contact with union leaders and will not encourage any contractor when proof is given that he refuses to hire union labor or refuses the union the right to approach his men for organizing purposes."

Guertin said that to the best of his knowledge the directive was the first by a Catholic bishop in Canada.

AMERICAN UNION members at work are depicted in a set of framed photographs presented by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, right, to George L-P Weaver, assistant secretary of labor for international affairs. The photographs, which once decorated the Washington headquarters of the former AFL, will be used in Labor Dept. exhibits at international trade fairs.

Informal Understanding Ruled Within T-H Scope

The Supreme Court has unanimously ruled that a "statement of understanding" settling a Toledo department store strike is a contract enforceable in federal courts under the Taft-Hartley Act, even though the union involved had waived bargaining rights as part of the settlement.

The high court's decision reversed the ruling of a U.S. district court —later affirmed by the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals —that a suit to enforce terms of the strike settlement could be brought only in state court. The trial court was ordered to rehear the case.

The case arose from a 13-month strike and boycott by the Retail Clerks involving several Toledo department stores. The strike was settled when a citizens' committee obtained separate agreement from the union and the struck stores on a "statement of understanding." The committee itself was to arbitrate disputes over the meaning of the agreement.

When the unions won two arbitration cases calling for the return of two strikers to their prestrike jobs and establishing the right of the RCIA to communicate with employes in the stores, the companies—Lion Dry Goods and LaSalle's—refused to honor the awards.

The union sought enforcement of the agreement in district court under Section 301(a) of the Taft-Hartley Act, which permits federal court suits over violations of contracts between unions and employers or between unions.

The trial court held that the law gave federal courts jurisdiction only over formal collective bargaining contracts negotiated by a recognized majority representative of the employes. The court said the "statement of understanding" was not sufficient and noted, also, the union's disclaimer of representation rights.

"The words of Section 301(a) require no such narrow construction as is suggested; rather they negate it," the Supreme Court declared.

The high court's opinion, written by Justice William Brennan, said Congress had not intended to limit the law to collective bargaining contracts. It pointed out that another section authorized pre-hire agreements between unions and employers in the construction industry affecting workers not yet even employed.

"If this kind of strike settlement were not enforceable under Section 301(a)," the decision said, "responsible and stable labor relations would suffer and the attainment of the labor policy objective of minimizing disruption of interstate commerce would be made more difficult."

The court disposed of the second claim by declaring:

"Had Congress thought that there was any merit in limiting federal jurisdiction to suits on contracts with exclusive bargaining gaining agents, we might have expected Congress explicity so to provide. . . . if the federal court's jurisdiction under Section 301(a) required a preliminary determination of the representative status of the labor organization involved, potential conflict with the National Labor Relations Board would be increased . . . and litigation would be much hindered."

Workers Told To Join Union And Church

Rock Island, Ill.—Be an active member of your church and your union, labor unionists were urged at a dinner here honoring Lutheran and Catholic chaplains of the Quad-City AFL-CIO.

Church and labor groups have worked so cooperatively for social justice in this area that a religion and labor fellowship, which lapsed a few years ago, will be revived in April, AFL-CIO Religious Relations Rep. Charles C. Webber said at the dinner for the Rev. A. D. Mattson of Augustana Seminary and the Rev. William T. O'Connor of St. Ambrose College. The fellowship is a joint religion and labor study program.

Others who joined in tribute to the two clergymen were Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.), Pres. George Burdon of the Rubber Workers and Pres. John Heidenreich of the midwestern council of the Machinists.

Dr. Mattson is professor of Christian ethics and sociology at Augustana. Father O'Connor is professor of social sciences and philosophy at St. Ambrose.

In NLRB Intermediate Report:

'Boulwarism' Held Violation Of Good Faith Requirement

Hamilton, Ohio—A company which engaged in so-called "Boulwarism"—making its maximum offer in an early stage of bargaining and refusing to change it—has been held in violation of the Taft-Hartley Act's requirement for good-faith bargaining.

Sidney Sherman, trial examiner for the National Labor Relations Board, made the intermediate finding against the Miami Cabinet Division of the Philip-Carey Mfg. Co., where Auto Workers Local 689 has been on strike for a first contract since Sept. 7, 1960.

Concluding that the company "froze its position" on all bargaining issues on July 28, 1960, except for "one inconsequential concession," Sherman recommended that the NLRB order it to:

- Bargain collectively in good faith with the union and, if agreement is reached, put it in a signed contract.
- Stop discouraging membership by discriminating against union members.
- Reinstate 102 fired employes to their former positions without prejudice to their seniority or other rights, and make them whole for any loss of pay suffered.

Sherman's decision was said to be the first of the kind involving a union charge of unfair practices arising from a take-it-or-leave-it bargaining attitude. The technique was named Boulwarism for Lemuel R. Boulware, formerly General Electric industrial relations head. Another NLRB examiner has just concluded six months of hearings into a charge by the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers against GE for an alleged "take-it-or-leave-it" policy in 1960 contract talks which resulted in a strike.

In the case involving Miami Cabinet and the UAW, the examiner concluded that whatever justification management might claim for its practice, "its vice, as measured by the requirements" of the labor law, is that "it creates a collective bargaining vacuum."

Once management has made its offer, Sherman reasoned, it may "listen attentively to the union's arguments, but there will be no interchange of ideas or objective weighing of the merits of the union's arguments, and no re-evaluation of the employer's offer in the light of such arguments."

Union Case Prejudged

A prejudgment of the merits of a union's demands before it has concluded its presentation falls short of good-faith bargaining, said Sherman, pointing out that from July 28, 1960, to the date of the strike "there was no genuine bargaining in the sense contemplated" by the law.

Sherman cited two other aspects of the company's bargaining policy which he said were unlawful. One was requiring the union after July 28, 1960 to deal with management representatives lacking authority to liberalize the company's offer. The other was notices to strikers that if they did not return to work by Oct. 3, 1960, they would be replaced and the replacements would have "super-seniority" in future layoffs and recalls.

The UAW won an NLRB election Mar. 9, 1960, and negotiations began a few weeks later. The company offer encompassed a 9-cent package which, the examiner quoted a company official as testifying, it would have given if there was no union in the plant. Management's bargaining attitude was this, as stated by Sherman: "We didn't want the union in the plant to start with, and we aren't going to do anything to see that the union stays in the plant."

2 Students Win Morgan Essay Scholarships

Names of two college scholarship winners and eight other winners of the Edward P. Morgan Essay Contest have been announced by the ABC Radio Network, which sponsored the competition on the topic "Youth's Role in U.S. Foreign Policy."

First prize winners are Carol M. Burns, a senior at Reed College, Portland, Ore., and Gerald T. Bongard, a junior at the College of St. Thomas, St. Paul, Minn.

Each will receive a $1,350 scholarship for graduate study, an expense-paid visit to New York and Washington, and a 24-volume set of the 1962 edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica.

Judges of the competition were Chester Bowles, special adviser to the Secretary of State on African, Asian and Latin American Affairs; Sen. William J. Fulbright (D-Ark.), chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee; Sen. Everett M. Dirksen (R-Ill.), Senate minority leader; R. Sargent Shriver, Peace Corps director, and Morgan.

ABC network stations contributed to the top scholarship money. The AFL-CIO, sponsor of ABC Radio's "Edward P. Morgan and the News," gave $500. Other cash gifts came from Furman & Feiner Advertising Agency and Morgan himself.

Sets of the "Britannica" were won by these eight semi-finalists in the contest: Nancy Essig, Ohio University, Athens, O.; Virginia S. Foster, Mt. Holyoke College, South Hadley, Mass.; Marcella Beckman, El Camino College, Lomita, Calif.; Joanne Zarzour, Marygrove College, Detroit; Mel White, Warner Pacific College, Portland, Ore.; Robert Ghent, University of Oregon; Wayne A. Benjamin, University of Illinois, and John Goldenetz, Ohio Northern University, Ada, O.

First NLRB Rulings Issued on Jurisdiction

signment of work in a jurisdictional dispute as final, unless he was bound by an agreement with a union or was attempting to evade his obligations to a certified union.

The Supreme Court, however, ruled on Jan. 9, 1961, that the law requires the board to make an affirmative decision in jurisdictional disputes involving strikes or strike threats unless there is a voluntary means to adjust the issue and the employer and labor groups agree to be bound by it.

In the first three cases issued in an effort to conform with this ruling, the NLRB unanimously:

- Awarded to hod carriers rather than engineers the work of operating and making minor repairs on plaster mixers and power applicators for a plastering contractor in Pennsylvania, West Virginia and Ohio. The case involved the Operating Engineers, the Laborers and Frank P. Badolato & Son.
- Awarded to electricians instead of machinists the job of operating electric overhead cranes in a large shop facility of a Richland, Wash., contractor. The case involved the Machinists, the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and J. A. Jones Construction Co.
- Awarded to tobacco worker "fixers" rather than machinists the work of adjusting and maintaining automatic packing machines in a Louisville cigarette factory. The case involved the IAM, the Tobacco Workers and P. Lorillard Co., Inc.

In directing the board to make specific awards where work jurisdiction is disputed, the Supreme Court acknowledged that the Taft-Hartley Act provides no guidelines to aid the NLRB in this area.

The court, however, cited the board's "long experience in hearing and disposing of similar labor problems" and added: "experience and common sense will supply the grounds for the performance of this job which Congress has assigned the board."

In its first jurisdictional award, the Jones case, the NLRB said it could not at this stage formulate general rules but would decide each case on its own facts.

It said it would consider "all relevant factors," citing as examples "the skills and work involved, certifications by the board, company and industry practice, agreements between unions and between employers and unions, awards of arbitrators, joint boards and the AFL-CIO in the same or related cases, the assignment made by the employer, and the efficient operation of the employer's business."

'Planned Joblessness':

U. S. Aircraft-Missile Rotation Policy Hit

A government policy of "rotating" defense orders among selected aircraft and missile companies means security for employers but insecurity for workers, two unions representing 500,000 industry employes have charged.

An employment layoff benefit plan, first negotiated by the Machinists and the Auto Workers in 1960 to cushion the shock of sudden layoffs, was a step in the right direction but has proved inadequate, the two unions asserted.

Meeting in Washington, D. C., at a Joint IAM-UAW Collective Bargaining Conference, delegates from aircraft and missile plants resolved that, in 1962 negotiations:

- Across each bargaining table the unions will insist that highest priority be given to establishing a program that will provide both layoff and termination benefits comparable to the SUB and separation pay plans common in other basic industries.

- The government should meet its responsibilities for layoffs caused by its "rotation" policy by sponsoring an industry conference between management and labor to determine the best way of meeting the problem of economic security for workers.

The conferees reported that government expenditures for aircraft and missiles determine the job security of most production workers in the industry. About 90 percent of the sales of 15 major aircraft and missile companies with IAM-UAW contracts are to the government, which finances the building of plants, provides the machine tools, reimburses the contractors for costs incurred, and guarantees or limits profits, they found.

"Defense orders appear to be rotated among that number of companies that the government desires to keep in business," a union statement said.

"For example, if the interest of the nation requires a certain standby capacity for the production of Navy fighters . . . greater than the volume of orders at any given moment, then successive Navy fighter contracts are rotated from North American to Chance-Vought to Douglas to McDonnell."

As layoffs occur at plants, "this policy also means a government-sponsored planned program of employment insecurity for the very workers whose efforts contribute to the security of others," the conference charged.

Employment dropped, the unions said, from a peak of 619,200 in April 1957 to 385,000 last October for aircraft and parts production workers. Missile production work made up for about half the loss of 234,000 jobs but few of the laid-off aircraft workers got the new jobs, IAM and UAW said. They cited these examples:

At North American Aviation's Downey, Calif., missile plant, almost 10,000 UAW-represented workers were terminated suddenly in 1957 when the government canceled the Navajo project without warning. Today in the Downey plant, NAA is again increasing its production workers from 3,000 to a reported 10,000 to carry out contracts to build the Apollo and portions of the Saturn.

At Republic's Farmingdale, N.Y., plant, the Air Force caused a 50 percent reduction in the IAM bargaining unit when it "phased out" the F-84 Thunderjet in 1957. A year lated, Republic was given the F-105 fighter contract, which resulted in a buildup of production workers to 15,500 last March. Next, a scheduled shift in planes will cut the number of production workers to about 2,500 by next December.

UAW Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock, summing up bargaining goals, said the only real answer is jobs growing out of planning by the "only agency that can really plan, the government"—and failing that, "we want the protection of supplemental unemployment benefits on top of unemployment compensation, as well as separation pay" when plants close.

Kefauver Lauds COPE Education

Philadelphia — The AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education "provides one of the main foundation stones" for a well-informed electorate, Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) declared at the 13th annual banquet of the Philadelphia branch of COPE.

A case in point, Kefauver told the gathering of more than 1,100, "is what you are doing in alerting the community to the medical and health needs of our senior citizens." The problem is so great, he said, "it can no longer be met by mere halfway measures."

Edward F. Toohey, executive director of the local COPE, reported that a recent survey showed the organization's efforts had increased the number of eligible voters in the city by some 70,000. He described the current citywide registration drive as a year-round campaign.

Other speakers included Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.), Gov. David Lawrence (D) and Philadelphia congressmen.

84 in IBEW Win $96,000 In Shutdown

York, Pa. — An arbitrator has awarded $96,000 in separation pay to 84 former employes of the Bell Telephone Co. of Pennsylvania.

The 84, members of Local 1944, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, were laid off when the Bell System sold its toll office here in June 1961 to the York Telephone & Telegraph Co. The IBEW claimed they were entitled to separation pay under the contract but Bell refused on the ground that the employes were promptly rehired by the York company.

Arbitrator Donald A. Crawford ruled that the contract clearly obligated Bell to give separation pay. He pointed out in a 30-page opinion that the employes were laid off and not given "reasonably equivalent" employment by their new employer.

Twelve of the IBEW members will receive more than $3,000 and one will get more than $8,000.

Wool-Worsted Increase Hailed as Breakthrough

Boston—The Textile Workers Union of America has negotiated wage and vacation improvements in an agreement with the Wyandotte Worsted Co. that the union hailed as the first breakthrough in 1962 negotiations with the woolen and worsted industry.

Management of four company plants offered, and union members have approved, a proposal to raise wages 7 cents an hour effective May 7 and to pay for any contract holiday falling in a regularly scheduled vacation period.

The raise was the first won by TWUA since the spring of 1960, when a similar 7 cent boost went into effect. The agreement with Wyandotte is expected to have an impact on union negotiations with 75 other woolen and worsted plants employing an additional 19,000 union-represented workers.

Wyandotte plants are in Pittsfield, Mass., Waterville, Me., Rochester, N. H., and Central Village, Conn.

The new agreement provides that wages of 1,200 workers will go up 7 cents an hour on the first work day after the April 30 reopening date in the contract. Minimum rates will go from $1.50 an hour to $1.57 an hour for mill workers and from $1.885 to $1.955 for weavers.

The holiday clause is the equivalent of an additional paid holiday and boosts the negotiated "package" to about 8 cents an hour, TWUA Sec.-Treas. John Chupka said. Union and management agreed also to make a joint study of the present life-medical insurance plan with a view to improvement.

The pact was the first since TWUA delegates representing 65,000 workers voted last month at New York conferences to seek new contracts or contract clauses with wage increases and improved fringe benefits from 265 northern textile firms.

All-out National Effort Seen Needed To Meet Problem of Unemployment

The pressing problem of unemployment and job displacement arising out of automation can be solved only by an all-out national effort, with emphasis on government economic programs, Nathaniel Goldfinger, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, has declared.

Collective bargaining can "soften the blows" of automation by providing such cushions as supplemental unemployment benefits or severance pay, Goldfinger observed on Labor News Conference, AFL-CIO public service program broadcast by the Mutual radio network.

"But collective bargaining, in itself, cannot solve this problem," he declared. "Basically, what we need are national programs and government programs, as well as collective bargaining efforts."

He called for, as the first requisite, a "much more rapid rate of economic growth than we have had in recent years" to provide a sharp increase in opportunities for employment.

Secondly, Goldfinger declared, "we have to adjust to the specific problems of automation" through such measures as a manpower retraining program, improved unemployment compensation for the temporarily jobless, and a system of relocation allowances for workers in distressed economic areas.

As examples of automation's inroads on employment, he cited the decline between 1953 and 1960 of 1.5 million production and maintenance jobs in manufacturing industries, 900,000 jobs in farming, 400,000 in railroads, 200,000 in mining.

Thus, he noted, in seven years 3 million jobs "disappeared" in key parts of the economy without a sufficient increase in other employment opportunities to compensate for the loss.

Interviewed on the radio program by Joseph Loftus of the New York Times Washington bureau and Donald Farwell of the Bureau of National Affairs, Goldfinger commented on the Kennedy Administration's objective of reducing joblessness to a rate of 4 percent by mid-1963:

Goal Not Sure

"What we in the AFL-CIO are afraid of is that we may not achieve that limited goal. "We have to work hard to bring unemployment down."

"If we don't get an increase in the rate of economic growth, we will have to move much more rapidly than we have in the past towards a reduced workweek."

He cited as one approach the federation's proposal for a flexible standard workweek under the wage-hour law, which would maintain the 40-hour week during periods of prosperity and reduce the standard to something less—"perhaps down to 38 or 37 hours"—during times of high unemployment.

"A new machine poses the possibility of great advances, but it also poses some awful problems for human beings in terms of displacement, in terms of changing job classifications and all kinds of possible difficulties," he observed.

"I would say—and this is the position of the trade union movement generally — that automation can and should be a socially useful thing. We hope it will be, but it depends on whether we as human beings, as a society, adjust to the changes that automation makes necessary. And, thus far, we have not been doing a very good job in adjusting."

He added:

"It is our belief that we should be building more schools—more elementary and secondary schools, more college facilities — and also that we should be moving in the area of medical care, of hospital construction and so on. In other words, we should be using to a greater extent than we have been our great productive facilities for socially useful ends."

Pamphlets on Cancer Distributed by Unions

AFL-CIO unions have distributed 1.5 million educational pamphlets about cancer in an effort to save lives through early detection and treatment of the disease.

Michael Johnson, director of labor activities for the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation—an affiliate of the American Cancer Society—said the pamphlets have been ordered by international and local unions, auxiliaries, and even by union officials in other nations who have seen news stories in the American labor press.

The three pamphlets—Cancer Facts for Women, Cancer Facts for Men, and What Most People Don't Know About Cancer—may be ordered without charge from the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation, 521 West 57th St., New York 19, N. Y.

Johnson said the pamphlet distribution is part of the foundation's effort, with the American Cancer Society, to save the lives of an estimated 2.5 million workers who would otherwise needlessly succumb to cancer.

House Passes Jobless Retraining Bill

Two-Year Program Would Aid 400,000

A labor-backed program to retrain unemployed workers in skills designed to help them get new jobs moved close to final passage as the House voted 354-62 for a bill aimed at providing vocational or on-the-job training for more than 400,000 workers during the next two years. The program carried the Administration's "top priority" label.

The House bill must be reconciled in conference with a broader, four-year program passed by the Senate last year, but quick agreement on a compromise is expected.

To win support in the House, the bill's floor managers accepted a substitute version agreed on by both Democratic and Republican leaders, and introduced by Rep. Elmer J. Holland (D-Pa.), sponsor of the original measure. Only a small hard core of the conservative coalition that has blocked much of Pres. Kennedy's program opposed the measure on the rollcall vote.

In other congressional developments:

- The House Rules Committee put off action on appointment of conferees to meet with the Senate to agree on federal aid to colleges. Conservative members reportedly sought to obtain a pledge that House conferees would stand firm against a Senate provision for scholarship grants to 200,000 talented, needy students.
- The House Ways & Means Committee reached agreement on a tax revision program, scheduled for formal approval on Mar. 6.

House action on the retraining bill came nine months after Kennedy had asked a joint session of Congress to enact a program "to replace those skills made obsolete by automation and industrial change with the new skills which the new processes demand."

Although the Senate passed the Administration's four-year, $655 million program last August, the measure was blocked in the House Rules Committee until last month, even though the House Education & Labor Committee had pared the program down to two years and $263 million to win broader support.

Both bills give priority in training to unemployed workers—including workers in farm families with less than $1,200 annual income—but restrict training subsistence allowances to unemployed heads of households who have had at least three years of employment experience.

The Senate bill, but not the House version, makes the exception that 5 percent of the total training allowance fund can be earmarked for youths over 16 but under 22. The House bill limits the youth program to testing, counseling and referral.

Keyed to Benefits

Training allowances in both bills could not exceed the average weekly unemployment compensation benefit in the states, except that an individual who would have been entitled to unemployment benefits higher than the average if he were not in training can receive the higher amount. The maximum duration of payments is 52 weeks.

The four-year Senate program requires that states provide matching funds in the third and fourth years of the program. The House-passed bill requires matching state funds during the last six months of the two-year program.

One Republican-sponsored provision of the House-passed bill, not contained in the Senate measure, declares that selection of individuals for training and their placement "shall not be contingent upon . . . membership or nonmembership in a labor organization."

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS of service to the labor movement and the community by Business Manager Michael Sampson of Utility Workers Local 1-2 in New York were recognized at a testimonial dinner attended by 1,000 persons. Top Musicians To Lead AFM Student Group

East Lansing, Mich.—Six prominent musicians have agreed to conduct student orchestras at the annual Congress of Strings summer scholarship school sponsored by the Musicians at Michigan State University here.

The 100 youngsters, chosen in community auditions conducted by Musicians locals throughout the United States and Canada, will play under the batons of Mishel Piastro, former conductor of the Longines Symphonette; Erich Leinsdorf, music director of the Boston Symphony; John Barnett, musical director of the National Orchestral Association; Robert Shaw, director of the Robert Shaw Chorale; Josef Krips, conductor of the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra; and James Robertson, conductor of the Wichita Symphony.

In addition, the students—all between the ages of 15 and 22—will have prominent musicians from leading orchestras as permanent instructors. Dr. Paul Oberg, chairman of the University of Minnesota music department, will be dean of the special faculty.

The Congress of Strings was originated four years ago as a public service project by the Musicians to discover and encourage talented young players of stringed instruments.

Bank Offers NILE School Scholarships

Parkersburg, W. Va.—The Wood County Bank here is offering a $1,000 scholarship to one of three residential study institutes to be held at universities this summer under auspices of the National Institute of Labor Education.

Julius Stern, president of the bank, announced that the scholarship will go to a member of either the AFL-CIO Central Ohio Valley Union Council in Parkersburg or the Southeastern Ohio Labor Council in Marietta, Ohio.

The financial institution, which has a reputation in the area as "the working man's bank," also sponsors several other labor educational programs in the valley.

Clement Dowler, former business agent of Parkersburg, Local 9, Textile Workers Union of America, and ex-president of the Central Ohio Valley council, was one of 50 unionists who attended the first series of NILE institutes last summer. He is now a TWUA representative.

This year's institutes will be held from June 18 to Aug. 24 at Cornell University, the University of Michigan and the University of California at Berkeley. Applications to attend one of the institutes must be endorsed by the candidate's international union, his local, or by his state or district labor body and must be filed by March 31 with NILE, Room 310, 1730 K St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

Clayman Named To Funds' Board

New York—Jacob Clayman, administrative director of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., has been elected to the board of directors of United Community Funds & Councils of America, which serves 2,200 united funds, community chests and welfare councils.

Clayman has been active in the labor movement since 1943, when he was named general counsel of the Ohio State Council of Industrial Organizations. After that he served as secretary-treasurer of the former state Industrial Union Council until its merger in 1955, special assistant to the president of the Clothing Workers, and legislative representative for the Ohio State AFL-CIO.

During his Ohio service he was a volunteer worker for the United Fund of Franklin County (Columbus).

2 Eastern Cities Enact Strikebreaker Curbs

Newark, N. J., and Manchester, N. H., have become the nation's second and third cities to restrict the use of strikebreakers. Wilmington, Del., previously had enacted such an ordinance.

The drive for anti-strikebreaking laws has been pushed by unions in the printing trades and newspaper fields, where teams of professional strikebreakers have frequently been imported by employers as a union-busting weapon. Six states have enacted anti-strikebreaker laws and legislation is pending in a number of other legislatures.

Newark's new ordinance, adopted unanimously by the city council with the active backing of Mayor Leo P. Carlin (D), makes it unlawful for "any person, firm or corporation" to recruit workers to take the jobs of striking or locked-out employes.

Penalty for violation is a fine of not less than $100 or more than $1,000, with imprisonment at the discretion of the court for up to 30 days.

The Manchester ordinance, sponsored by Alderman Thomas Enright, a member of the Stereotypers, prohibits third parties to a labor dispute from recruiting strikebreakers.

In New York, meanwhile, the State AFL-CIO has renewed a major drive for anti-strikebreaker legislation in the wake of charges by the Typographical Union that strikebreakers have been imported to replace newly organized ITU members at two newspapers in the Utica area. Union members on the Herkimer Telegram and the Little Falls Times have been on strike since Jan. 10.

An anti-strikebreaker bill is reported close to final enactment in Alaska, where the Senate last year voted unanimously for passage. A strengthened bill has now passed the lower house, 38-2, and the measure is in conference.

SEG Pact Eases Welfare Eligibility

Hollywood, Calif. — Liberalized eligibility requirements for health and welfare benefits have been negotiated by the Screen Extras Guild.

Effective April 1, extras will be eligible for benefits under the SEG plan if their combined earnings in SEG and Screen Actors Guild jurisdictions total at least $1,000 a year. An extra who earns $1,000 exclusively in acting work during a qualifying period will continue to be eligible for benefits under the SAG plan.

By combining earnings for eligibility purposes, the new requirements will extend coverage for the first time to at least 125 extras who in the past have had some earnings under SEG and some under SAG, but not enough under either jurisdiction to qualify for either plan.

Potters Give $1,500 To Rutgers Institute

New Brunswick, N. J.—The Potters have contributed $1,500 to the building fund campaign of the labor unit of the Rutgers Institute of Management & Labor Relations. Union Pres. E. L. Wheatley said the gift is the maximum permitted by his union's constitution and bylaws.

Major Areas With 6% Idle Move Up in February

The number of major labor market areas with unemployment of 6 percent and over edged upward again in February, the government has reported.

The Labor Dept.'s monthly report on 150 major areas showed 62 areas with "substantial unemployment," compared to 61 in January and 60 in both November and December. The all-time high was 101 last spring; in January 1960, before the nation moved into recession, there were 31 such areas.

The report attributed four of the five reclassifications of major areas to midwinter cutbacks in seasonal industries. Baltimore, the exception, moved into the 6 to 8.9 percent jobless group mainly because of aircraft layoffs and a dip in shipbuilding.

A separate grouping of smaller areas had eight areas added and three removed, boosting the total to 204 smaller areas with "substantial unemployment." There were 107 such areas in the pre-recession January 1960.

UAW On Strike At Allis-Chalmers

Milwaukee—A walkout of 11,000 Auto Workers members at Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co. plants in six states started on schedule when a midnight contract deadline passed without an agreement.

Negotiations continued at a downtown hotel after a day's recess suggested by Federal Conciliator William Rose. The union hopes for an early settlement of issues still in dispute, UAW Vice Pres. Pat Greathouse said.

The main plant is at West Allis, Wis. Also affected are plants in LaCrosse, Wis., Gadsden, Ala., Cedar Rapids, Ia., Springfield, Ill., La Porte, Ind., and Pittsburgh, Pa.

Meany Says Workweek Cut 'Must' to Meet Need for Jobs

Labor Force Unchanged:

Jobless Rate 5.6%; Long-Term Idle Up

By Robert B. Cooney

The employment picture showed "further improvement" in February, the Labor Dept. has announced, as job gains rebounded from January's bad weather and short-term unemployment declined.

The labor force, however, indicated continued stagnancy in its failure across the past several months to increase over its size of a year earlier. The civilian labor force — those at work or actively seeking work—totaled 70.3 million in February, unchanged from a year ago.

The summary job report for February showed that unemployment declined by 120,000 over the month to 4.5 million. The seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment dropped to 5.6 percent from 5.8 percent; it was the lowest rate since July 1960. A year ago the jobless rate was 6.9 percent.

Long-Term Swell

The long-term unemployed—those jobless 15 weeks or longer—had their ranks swelled by 200,000 to 1.4 million, termed "the usual increase for these months." This group includes 700,000 persons seeking jobs but "out of work for more than half a year."

The long-term jobless total of 1.4 million matches the total hit in February 1959; it has been exceeded for the month only by the 1.6 million of 1961. Low for the month was the total of 246,000 in 1953.

The Administration views the 1.4 million long-term jobless total of February as "pretty high," in the words of Labor Dept. manpower expert Seymour Wolfbein.

The employment total for February jumped by 700,000 to 65.8 million, "showing better than seasonal gains following the unusually bad weather of the January survey week," the report said. Farm jobs, construction work and other outdoor activities fell sharply at that time.

2.2 Million on Part-Time

"Included among the employed in February," the report continued, "were 2.2 million non-farm workers on part-time for economic reasons, 100,000 more than in January but 1 million below the February 1961 level."

The failure of the labor force to expand in line with the continuing increase in the population first attracted attention a few months ago. The annual rise had been about 1 million a year in the late Fifties and this was expected to increase further in the 1960s.

The Labor Dept. is attempting to uncover specific reasons. Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg last December tentatively said that many people seem not to be actively seeking work because the job market has been tight.

He broke down the missing one million this way: older people at or nearing the retirement age took that option sooner than they otherwise might have; housewives and other supplemental wage earners did not enter the job market; the armed forces increase absorbed some younger jobseekers; the farm-to-city trend slowed down as city jobs proved unavailable.

SHORTER WORKWEEK is a "must" in any approach to the unemployment problem, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany stressed in an opening-day address to the 8th national legislative conference of the federation's Building & Construction Trades Dept. Meany is shown at the speaker's rostrum as he was greeted by Dept. Pres. C. J. Haggerty, right.

Crafts Push Legislative Program

By John M. Barry

The shorter workweek is a "must" if the nation is to provide jobs for millions of workers now unemployed and for millions more due to join the labor force in the Sixties, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the 8th national legislative conference of the federation's Building & Construction Trades Dept.

Terming unemployment "the No. One domestic problem of this nation," Meany said labor did not have the complete answer.

"But it is quite obvious," he declared, "that if we go on producing more and more with less and less people, then we must—positively must—reduce the workweek without any reduction in the income of the American worker."

Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the department criticized the Kennedy Administration's request for a stand-by public works program to combat "future" recessions as "too cautious an approach" to the unemployment problem. He said the nation must attack the problem "boldly and courageously, not wait to counterpunch."

With unemployment still hovering near the 5 million mark, Haggerty said, "the question is, are we going to put America back to work and how—by a wait-and-see, stand-by policy or by positive action now?

Goldberg Cites Gains

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg reviewed the Administration's record of winning improvements in the wage-hour law, temporary extension of unemployment insurance benefits and a manpower development and retraining measure. He predicted that by the end of the 87th Congress, "we will . . . have emerged with the most constructive body of social and labor legislation

Last Quarter Up 22%:

1961 Profit Reports Point to Record Year

Zooming corporate profits in the fourth quarter of 1961 may lift total profits for the year to a record-smashing level when final reports are in. Fourth-quarter reports alone reveal a soaring 22 percent increase over the same period a year ago—the sharpest increase for any fourth quarter in history with the exception of the Korean War period.

Despite chronically high unemployment throughout the year, 1961 profits thus may top the record of $46.8 billion chalked up in 1959. The President's Council of Economic Advisers estimated earlier that the profits figure would hit $46.1 billion, the second highest in history.

The Wall Street Journal's quarterly survey of 530 corporations, disclosing the 22 percent jump over the final three months of 1960, goes on to say:

"If their (the 530 corporations) gain was typical for all corporations in the United States, whose earnings in the fourth quarter were put by the government at an annual rate of $21.4 billion after taxes, the nationwide figure for the latest quarter would be a rate of $26.2 billion."

In before-tax figures this is estimated at $52.5 billion.

The zoom in profits is attributed by economists to sharply increased productivity as well as stepped-up production resulting in increased profit margins. Of 33 industries listed by the Wall Street Journal only four failed to show increases in profits over the fourth quarter of 1960.

As for 1962, the business paper says its survey "suggests profits in

U.S. Subsidy to Strikebound Airline Called 'Flagrant Abuse' of Privilege

The use of federal subsidies by Southern Airways to cover strikebreaking costs in its long dispute with the Air Line Pilots is "a particularly flagrant abuse" of the line's operating privileges, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has declared.

In a letter to Prof. Nathan P. Feinsinger, who is heading a government inquiry into federal policy questions involved in the strike, Meany commented:

"This employer has not only used federal funds for the recruitment, training and employment of strikebreakers, but has also demonstrated the most callous and arrogant disregard for federal statutes which impose upon him the responsibility to respect the rights of employes to organize and bargain collectively, to make and maintain agreements, and to maintain a safe and reliable service."

Rep. Frank Kowalski (D-Conn.) also wrote Feinsinger urging that the whole area of federal subsidies to struck firms be "carefully reappraised."

The Feinsinger hearings, now in recess, are expected to resume later in March. At a pre-hearing conference, Feinsinger said he would investigate all phases of the 21-month-long strike and government policy questions it raised with reference to the Railway Labor Act, which regulates collective bargaining in the airline industry.

Among the questions on the agenda outlined by Feinsinger was: "Should a local service carrier be permitted to use public funds such as subsidies to absorb the special costs of carrying on a labor dispute, including the cost of recruiting and training replacements for employes engaged in a lawful strike?"

Meany recalled that he had twice previously set forth, in letters to the Civil Aeronautics

Bus Strikebreaker Runs Down Woman

Miami, Fla. — Ronald F. King, 31, is still working as a strikebreaker in the walkout of the Street-Electric Railway & Motor Coach Employes against Miami's bus lines while awaiting an inquest into the death of Mrs. Mary Boudreau.

Mrs. Boudreau, 33, was struck while standing on the sidewalk by a bus driven by King on his third day at work for the struck company. She suffered a fractured skull and died a few days later.

UPP Marks 5th Birthday of Unification

Albany—The United Papermakers & Paperworkers, formed five years ago in the first merger of a former AFL union and a former CIO union, celebrated the anniversary by cutting a birthday cake and announcing the marriage had produced wage increases of more than a quarter billion dollars for the union's 140,000 members.

UPP Pres. Paul L. Phillips, cutting the cake in union headquarters here, recalled that the union was hailed as a "pioneer" at the unity convention. He deplored the fact that similar mergers of labor organizations had not followed.

"This is not true of management," said Phillips. "New mergers (of corporations) are being announced daily. As these huge firms grow ever larger, the problems of unions also mount, requiring an ever greater degree of unity and militancy of labor leaders and members."

Phillips and Executive Vice Pres. Harry D. Sayre said the UPP's success in winning wage increases was accomplished in spite of periods of depression in 1958 and 1960. During the same five years, UPP supported 76 authorized strikes and paid out $2 million in strike benefits.

Despite the benefit payments, the defense fund balance is well over $1 million, Sayre said.

4th Quarter Profits Soar; Record Near

the current three months may equal or exceed those of the fourth quarter and will show an even larger percentage gain from a year ago than that of the fourth quarter."

The CEA estimated in the President's Economic Report that profits for calendar 1962 would rise by $10.5 billion to reach $56.5 billion.

The trend in profits during 1961, when unemployment remained virtually unchanged at about 7 percent of the labor force, showed a first quarter decline of 22.4 percent from the previous year's first quarter; a second quarter decline of 3.7 percent; a third quarter gain of 9.3 percent; and a fourth quarter jump of 22.5 percent.

For the first three months of the current year, auto, steel and drug firms expect even larger gains than in 1961, the Journal says, and at least 10 industries expect sales and earnings to rise.

Jamaicans Assured On Immigration Policy

The United States can be expected to extend to Jamaica, when it attains full freedom next August, the same immigration policy that now holds for other independent Western Hemisphere countries, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany recently assured Jamaican officials in Kingston.

Immigration into the U.S. from free Western Hemisphere nations is not restricted by quotas. Jamaica has a population surplus.

Meany went to Jamaica as the guest of the government headed by Premier Norman Washington Manley. Manley is head of the Peoples' National Party which is supported by the National Workers Union of Jamaica, an affiliate of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers and of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Accompanied by Dir. Michael Ross of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs and Inter-American Rep. Serafino Romualdi, Meany discussed three major issues with Manley, Minister of Labor Jonathan Grant and Minister of Education Florizel Glasspole, formerly NWUJ leader.

These were immigration policy, the allocation of a sugar quota to help Jamaica dispose of some of its 70,000-ton surplus; and an increase in the number of British West Indies workers recruited for seasonal farm work in the U.S.

He discussed AFL-CIO help in training labor leaders with a NWUJ committee which included Pres. T. Kelly, Vice Pres. Michael Manley and Gen. Sec. George Skinner, and invited Skinner to Washington to establish contacts with Alliance for Progress officials.

He conferred also with the leader of the political opposition, Sir Alexander Bustamante, and his top aides.

At a press conference Meany declared the AFL-CIO fully supports the Kennedy Administration's policy toward Cuba, including the trade embargo, because of the Communist Castro regime.

He stressed the AFL-CIO's belief that every possible aid should be given to underdeveloped nations and said that if organized labor was interested in helping countries in Asia, it would be even more interested in U.S. assistance to "our neighbors" in the West Indies.

In answer to a question about the treatment of Jamaican and West Indian farm workers in the U.S., Meany said the AFL-CIO is dissatisfied with the conditions under which both West Indian and American farm labor has to work. He denied reports that American farm workers are better treated than those from Jamaica and the West Indies.

New Steel Talks Slated In Response to Kennedy

Both sides in steel industry contract talks—the Steelworkers and the management of 11 major firms—have agreed to the request of Pres. Kennedy that they resume their negotiations, suspended a week ago. The talks were scheduled to start again in Pittsburgh Mar. 14.

Efforts to reach an agreement on new contracts began Feb. 14, the earliest starting date in history. Present agreements, reached in Jan. 1960 after a 116-day strike, expire June 30.

USWA Pres. David J. McDonald had reported earlier that, after more than two weeks of "earnest effort," no understanding had been reached "on either the economic or the non-economic issues" of major importance.

Pres. Kennedy told a press conference Mar. 7 that he had requested both sides to resume collective bargaining and said that the temporary recess in negotiations might have enabled the negotiators to "reappraise their positions."

"The best way to achieve a desirable settlement in the public interest is through free and responsible collective bargaining," Kennedy said. "An early labor settlement consistent with price stability in steel would be in the public interest, as well as in the interest of the parties themselves."

Ontario Drive Set For Israel School

Toronto, Ont.—The newly-formed Ontario Histadrut Trade Union Council has embarked upon a campaign to raise $25,000 for the establishment of scholarships at the Afro-Asian Institute in Tel Aviv operated by Histadrut, the Israeli labor federation.

Pres. Claude Jodoin of the Canadian Labor Congress is honorary chairman of the council, with Pres. David Archer of the Ontario Federation of Labor as chairman and Canadian Dir. Larry Sefton of the Steelworkers co-chairman. Business Agent Al Hershkovitz of the Toronto Fur Workers Union is secretary.

The Afro-Asian Institute is a workers' college for the training of labor leadership in the newly-emerging African and Asian nations and offers semi-annual courses. Co-chairmen of its board of directors are Pres. George Meany of the AFL-CIO and E. Elath, formerly ambassador of Israel to the United Kingdom.

Split on Party Lines:

Kennedy Program Backed in Congress

The Joint Congressional Economic Committee has endorsed Pres. Kennedy's economic program as a method of closing the "large gap" between our "economic performance and our economic potential."

The nation's immediate goal, said the committee, "should be a reduction of unemployment to about 4 percent as soon as is practicable without inflation" and a longer-range goal in the Sixties of 3 percent.

The committee's report on the President's Economic Report specifically endorsed his proposals for strengthening the unemployment compensation program and stand-by legislation to authorize public works and reduce taxes.

The majority also supported in general the President's proposal to grant tax credit to industry for investments in new plants and equipment and called for prompt and favorable action on more funds for the U.S. Employment Service, creation of a Youth Conservation Corps and federal aid to education.

It noted that Congress had already acted favorably on two other measures—manpower retraining and amendment of the Welfare Plans Disclosure Act. Conference committees have reached agreement on both bills.

The report endorsed the President's new trade legislation but said it did not go far enough in its adjustment assistance provisions by failing to provide assistance to communities as well as to firms and workers.

The AFL-CIO has urged immediate action on public works and tax reduction rather than stand-by powers and has opposed the tax credit proposal. The federation's Executive Council at its recent meeting termed the Administration's program "overly timid" and called for a more "aggressive" program in light of the present "alarming" economic situation.

Party Division

Support of the President's program was along party lines with nine Democrats in the majority and six Republicans in the minority. Sen. J. William Fulbright (D-Ark.) did not participate in the report.

Sen. William Proxmire (D-Wis.) dissented from portions of the majority report, opposing stand-by legislation on tax cuts and public works as well as the tax credit for investment proposal. He differed also with the majority's views on the President's 1963 fiscal budget.

The Republican minority said the President's report was guilty of "downgrading of the contribution of the free enterprise system" in its claims for the role of the Administration in the recovery from the 1960-61 recession, and it said that the President and the majority of the committee "are fundamentally wrong" in their search for a solution to the unemployment problem.

The GOP members declared that the majority was "looking backward" for a solution to the unemployment problem with a program geared to expanding demand when the problem lay elsewhere. They stressed structural unemployment in the economy as a basic factor, and pointed to the failure in anticipated growth in the labor force and the "lost" 700,000 Americans who presumably left the labor force in the past year because of lack of job opportunities.

They opposed also the tax credit plan, urging major tax reform to "remove impediments to investment," and declared further that the President's proposal was "an uneconomic and costly giveaway."

The majority report expressed "particular dissatisfaction" with Federal Reserve Board monetary operations in the past year, declaring it has not permitted a sufficient expansion of the money supply and that it has "done little more than abandon 'bills only' in name only." The majority urged the FRB to make substantial shifts of government securities from short-term to long-term.

It urged also a lowering of the board's discount rate, with Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) noting that he would prefer to say at this time that the discount rate should not be raised. The discount rate affects interest rates generally; a lowering of the rate would drop current rates or keep them from rising.

The committee report noted that new trade legislation will not in itself solve the pressing balance-of-payments problem, and that "vigorous and immediate steps" must be taken to obtain "fair concessions" from the countries of Western Europe. It proposed that European nations enjoying surplus payments should increase aid to underdeveloped nations and that NATO nations should increase their contributions to the alliance.

It called also on the Dept. of Justice to increase its efforts to eliminate existing monopoly power, for a study of market domination by a few large companies in specific industries and for a larger federal role in proposed mergers.

In terms of the President's budget, the majority report questioned whether it "will not prove too restrictive," noting that by diverting funds from spending to potential savings it "may well choke off recovery before a high level of employment is reached."

The solution to the problem of high and continuing unemployment, the majority declared, requires "first and foremost" the creation of an expanded demand for goods and services sufficient to achieve full employment, and secondly an increase in education, skills and mobility of the labor force "to reduce the structural and fractional unemployment that will remain even when employment is high."

The report generally approved of the wage and price guidelines set out in the Council of Economic Advisers' report, declaring that "the availability of objective standards governing wage and price actions will facilitate mutual understanding and cooperation in removing inflationary barriers to economic growth."

Right to Strike Urged in Turkey

Istanbul—The tripartite Turkish Council of Labor, at its first meeting since 1954, recommended to the government ratification of the Intl. Labor Organization convention on freedom of association and removal of most restrictions on the right to strike.

The council acts as an advisory body to the government. Labor is represented on it by a delegation from Turk-Is, the Turkish trade union federation affiliated with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Under its recommendations, the restriction on the right to strike would be continued for employes of essential services affecting health and safety. The rights of civil service and public workers were to be made the subject of specific legislation.

The recommendations are being incorporated in a bill for presentation to Parliament.

New York Drivers Out:

'Arrogant' Bus Line Fought on Layoffs

By Eugene A. Kelly

New York—The Transport Workers called 6,700 busmen out on strike against the Fifth Avenue Coach Lines when a new management laid off 29 workers with long seniority, announced plans to lay off another 1,500 or more workers and canceled pension payments for some 900 retired employes.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner (D) promptly denounced the "arrogant action" of Harry Weinberg, new chairman of the bus company's board, and his associates for "deliberately precipitating" a strike to "blackjack" the city into allowing a fare rise.

The mayor asked the state legislature to permit the city to:

- Terminate the right of Fifth Avenue Coach Lines and a subsidiary, Surface Transit, Inc., to use city streets in Manhattan and the Bronx.
- Start condemnation proceedings to buy company equipment and real estate, and to run the lines through the city Transit Authority until a sale to another private owner.

The union said the strike was a "fight for survival" on its part. It set up picket lines and sent a caravan of 20 busloads of members to Albany to support Wagner's request for the seizure legislation.

Weinberg is a transit operator who has won control of city bus lines recently in Scranton, Honolulu, and Dallas. His attorney in the current dispute with Wagner and the union is Roy M. Cohn, one-time chief counsel of the Senate Investigating subcommittee under the late Sen. Joseph McCarthy (R-Wis.).

Weinberg and a group of stockholders won control of the company two weeks ago and started putting "economies" into effect in the face of a union warning against arbitrary action.

Members of the union's Local 100 went on strike when layoff slips were handed to 29 workers assigned to light-duty jobs for reasons of health. Senior man among them was Armand Catti, 62, who had 42 years of service and was within two years of pension age.

Five days after the walkout started, an agreement was reached with the Westchester Street Transportation Co., another subsidiary line. Some 300 strikers, assured that their pension rights were not in danger, returned to work on 27 routes with union approval.

Wagner issued a statement saying Weinberg, in addition to precipitating the strike, had "threatened drastic reductions in services to the public and obviously was engaged in a contrived campaign of rule or ruin."

The mayor said he was convinced the people of the city would "vastly prefer this temporary inconvenience to a series of strikes and crises" that would recur if the city attempted to deal with Weinberg.

LAYOFFS OF 29 long-service employes by the Fifth Avenue Coach Lines and stopping of all pension payments to former employes brought a strike of 6,400 Transport Workers and picket scenes. Among those ousted were Armand Catti, right, with 42 years of company service. Others pictured, from the left, TWU Sec.-Treas. Matthew Guinan, George Mayberry, 12-year employe, and Jay Stricker, 16 years.

Lyon Named To Rail Board By Kennedy

A. E. Lyon, executive secretary of the Railway Labor Executives' Association since 1945, has been appointed by Pres. Kennedy to the Railroad Retirement Board and unanimously confirmed by the Senate. Lyon replaces Horace Harper, who retired last month, as the labor member of the tripartite board.

The RLEA announced the election of Donald S. Beattie to succeed Lyon as executive secretary. Beattie, 40, has been research director of the Locomotive Engineers and headed the joint research committee of the five rail operating unions during recent hearings before the Presidential Railroad Commission.

As a member of the Railroad Retirement Board, Lyon will help administer the retirement act which he has played a key part in improving over the years.

He started his rail career in 1919 as a signal helper on the Southern Pacific, became general chairman on the line for the Railroad Signalmen in 1924 and rose to the presidency of the brotherhood in 1934.

Lyon served for five years as vice chairman of the RLEA before his election to the full-time post of executive secretary. He is also a member of the executive committee of the Intl. Transportworkers Federation.

Beattie, who started as a maintenance of way laborer on the Erie Railroad, worked successively as a fireman and a locomotive engineer. He is a graduate of Cornell University's School of Industrial & Labor Relations and has been his union's research director since 1951.

Meany Raps 'Subsidy' Of Air Strike Costs

Board and to Pres. Kennedy, the AFL-CIO position on subsidies to struck airlines. He noted that the federation's convention last December had reiterated "emphatic opposition" to federal subsidization "of assaults by management upon the rights of employes."

The federation, he said, "has been greatly concerned with the injury incurred by its affiliates and their members when the government extends financial support, by means of subsidies, to the strikebreaking activities and expenses of anti-labor employers who seek to deprive employes of the basic rights guaranteed to them under federal law. . . . I cannot believe that such a use of the taxpayers' money constitutes sound or enlightened public policy."

Meany expressed the hope that the Feinsinger hearings would produce "an effective remedy for these abuses" as well as a settlement of the Southern strike.

Partisan Role Hit

Kowalski told Feinberg that the Southern Airways situation was another instance of government participation in labor disputes, through subsidies, "in a very partisan manner." The continuation of the practice, he said, is "unthinkable."

The Connecticut congressman last fall revealed the claims of the United Aircraft Corp. in seeking reimbursement from the Navy for added labor costs incurred in hiring, training and paying overtime to strikebreakers during and after a Machinists' strike.

The ALPA struck Southern on June 5, 1960 after more than a year of negotiations and exhaustion of all procedures under the Railway Labor Act. Subsequently, an apparent settlement reached through the efforts of federal mediators fell through when the company insisted that the striking pilots forfeit seniority and grievance rights on their return to work.

Ireland, Turkey Aid New ILO Institute

Geneva—The governments of Ireland and Turkey have advised the Intl. Labor Organization that they will make contributions to the endowment fund of the ILO's new Intl. Institute for Labor Studies.

Raises Won For 23,000 At N. Y. Bell

New York—Wage increases for 23,641 plant employes of the New York Bell Telephone Co. have been negotiated by the Communications Workers in a contract-reopener agreement marked by numerous town and job upgradings.

The agreement—last of a round of 1961 CWA reopening negotiations that began last May—brought pay increases of $2 to $3 a week for plant craft workers and $1.50-$2.50 for clerical workers. Previously benefited by CWA wage reopeners were some 328,000 other Bell workers.

Other gains in the New York settlement included a cut in the number of wage zones from six to five, a reduction in differentials between wages paid in different zones and the upgrading of 98 towns in upstate areas.

The settlement is the largest cents-per-hour increase in Bell plants, and brings the basic New York City craft top rate to $136.50 a week, the CWA negotiators said. The contract with New York Bell plant, which came into the CWA in an NLRB election last year, calls for another wage reopener in a year.

CWA announced also that it has won bargaining rights for two groups of General Telephone Co. workers in Alabama and Georgia in elections conducted by the National Labor Relations Board. The elections involved 575 workers.

Nunn's UAW Show Back in Cincinnati

Cincinnati—The Auto Workers' radio program Eye Opener, featuring the commentary of Guy Nunn, will be carried again by Station WLW here after being off the air since last September.

The station's original decision to drop the commentary had led to sharp UAW protests. In Congress Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.) charged that the cancellation represented a "dangerous threat to freedom of communications."

A joint statement by the station and the UAW announced that the program, which is heard in a number of cities where UAW members live, will be carried by WLW from 6:15 to 6:45 a.m., daily. The announcement said that the arrangement results from "negotiations and careful analysis by the interested parties and will result, we believe, in serving the best interests of the community."

ILGWU Stoppage Ends Piecework 'Chiseling'

New York—A work stoppage by 25,000 union dressmakers has squelched "chiseling" on piecework rates by some 400 jobbers without serious interference with the production of spring styles in time for Easter shopping.

The dressmakers in "contract" shops in seven states stopped work Mar. 5 when employers failed to produce "settlement" sheets listing the piecework rate under the contract agreement between the Dressmakers Joint Council of the Ladies' Garment Workers and employer associations.

Within 24 hours, Joint Council Manager Charles S. Zimmerman said, 44 of the 80 tardy jobbers had settled the new rates for each garment and all but about 20 had complied with the contract by the second day. Some 11,000 workers returned to 180 shops after a day of being off the job.

There was no picketing, except for one day at one shop in Pennsylvania. Other shops affected are in New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Delaware.

The stoppage involved dress operators employed by some 80 jobbers who "farm out" work under contract to 400 shops scattered around New York and nearby states. Under the agreement with the union, contractors are required to pay piecework rates negotiated every season for every style of garment. The custom has been for settlements to be made by the jobber and the union in New York City.

Zimmerman had warned all associations Feb. 7 to notify their members that ILGWU workers are not obliged to work on garments where the piecework rate has not been worked out with the union.

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE to the community won the Alton, Ill., Junior Chamber of Commerce award for Buddy W. Davis, right, president of Steelworkers' Local 3643 and president of the Alton-Wood River Area United Fund. Chairman Robert Chappell of the award committee is shown presenting a plaque citing Davis for his work with the Red Cross, PTA, American Legion and other community groups.

AGREEMENT on new contract terms covering these workers at the West Allis, Wis., plant of the Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co. ended a strike of Auto Workers that began Feb. 26. Both national and local-issue agreements were ratified by UAW Local 248 at West Allis and Local 401 at LaCrosse, Wis., but negotiations continued on local issues at four other plants, with picket lines maintained, in the strike of 11,000 implement workers. Agreement was reached also at Springfield, Ill.

UAW, Allis-Chalmers Agree on National Pact

Milwaukee—The Auto Workers have reached an agreement with the Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co. on national terms of a new 32-month contract but picket lines were retained at several of the company's seven struck plants while negotiations continued on local issues.

The national agreement covers both wages and employment security—the latter including pensions, vacations, insurance, and supplemental unemployment benefits affecting about 11,000 workers. Improved arbitration procedures also were covered.

Two of the seven UAW locals which went on strike Feb. 26 ratified the national agreement and a second agreement affecting wages and local working conditions—Local 248 at West Allis, Wis., a suburb of Milwaukee, and Local 401 in La Crosse. The two plants reopened March 5. Third to settle was the local at Springfield, Ill.

Pensions Raised

The national agreement calls for wage hikes of 2.5 percent or six cents an hour, whichever is greater, starting this month, and identical raises on Jan. 1, 1963 and Dec. 1, 1963. Starting May 1, pension benefits will be increased from $2.50 a month to $2.80 for each year of service, and the increase will be applied to all employes who retired since the old contract expired Nov. 1, 1961.

The union and management also agreed to a 25 percent increase in separation pay, and improvements in vacations, health and life insurance with survivor options. SUB benefits were set at 62 percent of gross pay, and the maximum period for collecting benefits was raised from 39 weeks to 52.

Other plants involved in the strike and negotiations are in Gadsden, Ala., Pittsburgh, Pa. Cedar Rapids, Ia., and La Porte, Ind. The Terre Haute plant, also under UAW contract, will be closed this year and the union will negotiate a shutdown agreement.

OEIU Locals Chartered in Puerto Rico

San Juan, P. R.—The Office Employes have chartered two locals as the union's Puerto Rican organizing campaign, launched four months ago, yielded its first fruits.

The charters went to a group of about 100 steamship industry workers and to another made up of 165 clerks in miscellaneous trades. Employers include the Waterman Steamship Lines, with which a contract has been signed; Banco Obrero, Sea-Land Services and PRIDCO, known internationally as Fomento.

The charters were presented to Locals 392 and 395 at a meeting of the officers with OEIU Pres. Howard Coughlin in Ladies' Garment Workers Hall here. Coughlin lauded the role played in the organizing drive by AFL-CIO Reg. Dir. Agustin Benitez, who formerly was in charge of organizing Spanish-speaking workers in New York.

"Agustin Benitez has made and is making," said the OEIU president, "an important contribution to the cause of free trade unionism in Puerto Rico."

The Waterman contract includes wage increases which produced rates ranging from $62.50 to $125 for a 37.5-hour week; union shop and check-off clauses; 19 paid holidays; two weeks of vacation after one year, three weeks after five years and one month after 15 years; sick leave cumulative to 80 days a year; hospitalization, major medical and group life insurance; pensions; a Christmas bonus; job security and severance pay.

Offers Unsatisfactory:

New York Teachers Set Action Deadlines

New York—The United Federation of Teachers, bargaining agent for 40,000 teaching employes of the public schools, has set Mar. 14 as a deadline for current negotiations with Supt. John J. Theobald and the Board of Education.

Rejecting all current bargaining offers as "unsatisfactory," the union has called its delegate assembly to meet on that date for a recommendation to be made to a general membership meeting Mar. 21.

After that "anything can happen" if an acceptable first contract is not agreed to, union leaders said.

A negotiating committee headed by Pres. Charles Cogen has reported that the board is bargaining in good faith but that its wage offers have been unsatisfactory for these reasons:

- They are insufficient to meet the minimum needs of teaching employes.
- Neither the board nor Mayor Robert F. Wagner (D) has made any commitment that even if the union's demands are granted, the money will be available to meet them.

Two months of bargaining have produced an agreement between the union and school officials on non-salary items—improvements in working conditions and some "fringe" items—to be included in the new city budget. But the agreement does not cover the salary schedule to go into the budget if the mayor approves.

The Board of Education, at the request of the union, delayed presenting its budget request to the mayor while bargaining talks continued. The practice has been to finish drawing up the budget during the last week in March, and to make no changes after that except under extreme circumstances.

One of the UFT's 80 contract proposals was for a $68.8 million "down payment" on a new salary schedule. The superintendent first offered an increase costing $18 million, then raised it in successive steps to $25 million, less than half the UFT request.

After that the committee held a two-hour discussion with Board of Education members and learned that the board had set no limit on the salary "package," but received no acceptable offer. The union reported all offers have been "iffy"—if the state provides enough supplementation, if the mayor can see his way clear, if other factors are favorable.

The union salary committee made these points: The UFT will not settle for a mere promise of a budget request but wants a "hard money" figure; the "package" figure finally agreed on must have Wagner's approval; failure to reach an agreement will damage the school board's teacher recruiting campaign.

The UFT—Local 2 of the Teachers—won the right to bargain for all teaching employes after a struggle of more than two years' duration. The struggle included a short walkout in 1960, a successful referendum on whether the teachers favored collective bargaining, and another referendum last December in which the UFT got 60.5 percent of all votes cast. The vote was UFT 20,045, Teachers Bargaining Organization 9,770, the unaffiliated Teachers' Union 2,575, no union 662, void or blank 67.

Bargaining started Jan. 2, and more than 25 meetings have been held. The union wants an agreement that will provide a salary schedule ranging from $6,000 to $12,000 a year in 13 steps, and give every employe a raise of $500 this year. It also seeks improved teaching conditions, a training program, and other steps to make teaching in New York more rewarding.

Labor Film Singled Out For Teachers

The AFL-CIO film "Land of Promise" was cited as "film of the month" in the February issue of Social Education, a national teachers' magazine.

"This reviewer liked it," wrote William H. Hartley. "It has fire, spirit and a sense of conviction that this land of ours is a good one, worth working for and well worth improving. . .

"One reason we liked the film was for its enthusiasm for America. Part of this enthusiasm is transmitted by the stirring folk music which serves as a theme."

Although the film frankly "presents labor's point of view," Hartley noted, it does so openly; "high school and college students . . . will be stimulated to further study and discussion by this film."

"Land of Promise" was originally produced for Labor Day showing on television. It was seen on the ABC network in 1960 and an updated version was aired by many independent stations a year later. The 30-minute film, produced by Joel O'Brien Productions, Inc., can now be rented through the AFL-CIO Film Division.

Massachusetts, Alaska Raise Wage Floors

Massachusetts became the third state to match the federal government's $1.15-$1.25 minimum wage floor and Alaska moved further ahead of the nation by pegging its state minimum 50 cents above the federal level as governors of both states signed bills passed overwhelmingly by the legislatures.

The Massachusetts law boosts the state's statutory minimum from $1 to $1.15 as of May 3, and to $1.25 per hour on Sept. 3, 1963. Industry wage boards, as at present, are empowered to establish higher minimum wages in various fields.

The bill, signed by Gov. John A. Volpe (R), was passed by the House 219 to 3 and breezed through the Senate 34 to 2. It brought Massachusetts in line with Connecticut and Washington, which last year matched the federal government's two-step $1.25 wage floor.

The Alaska minimum wage bill, which had passed the House in the first session of the legislature last year, was approved by the Senate and signed by Gov. William Egan (D).

It requires employers to pay not less than 50 cents an hour above the federal minimum wage. Thus the previous state minimum of $1.50 an hour became $1.65 immediately and will advance to $1.75 when the federal minimum wage goes to $1.25. If the federal minimum should be again raised, the state wage floor would automatically be advanced to maintain the 50 cent differential.

Payton of TWUA Given New Post

Boyd E. Payton, former director of the Textile Workers Union of America for the Carolinas, has been reassigned as the union's Upper South director with headquarters in Room 323, Mills Bldg., 704 Seventeenth St., N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

Payton was among the TWUA leaders jailed in the course of the union's long strike at the Harriet-Henderson Mills in Henderson, N. C. He was paroled last August after Gov. Terry Sanford (D) commuted his sentence and the sentences of all other union officials and members still held after a court conviction depending heavily on testimony of a since-discredited witness.

FIRST PUERTO RICAN CHARTERS installed by the Office Workers were presented to officers of two locals at ceremonies in Ladies' Garment Workers Hall, San Juan. Left to right are OEIU Rep. Herbito Ortiz, Sec.-Treas. Mary Cuadra and Pres. Enrique Coto of Local 395, AFL-CIO Reg. Dir. Agustin Benitez, OEIU Pres. Howard Coughlin, and officers of Local 392: Pres. Rodriguez, Executive Board Members Betancourt and Rodriguez, Sec. Miguel Pecunia and Treas. Milton Carrillo Torres.

Meany Sees Workweek Cut as 'Must'

Underscores Nation's Job Needs At Building Trades Conference

since the great days of the New Deal."

He denied recently published reports that differences of views on some matters represented a "falling out" between the labor movement and the administration.

"You expect government to act like government," he commented, ". . . and we expect unions to act like unions."

House Speaker John W. McCormack (D-Mass.) told the more than 3,500 delegates to the conference that while he "strongly favored" proposed federal standards for unemployment compensation, "immediate consideration" must be given to extension of the temporary benefit program, due to expire in April, to avoid a gap that would mean "an awful lot of hardship."

Following the opening day addresses, the delegates, who came to the four-day meeting from all parts of the nation, were scheduled to press the department's legislative program in visits to their representatives and senators on Capitol Hill. Final day of the conference was set aside for reports and review.

'Real Threat' Cited

In stressing the need of a shorter workweek without reduction in pay, Meany noted that each of four recessions in the past decade had started from a higher base of unemployment than the previous one, leading to the continued jobless rate of 5.8 percent in January.

"Unless we make a rapid improvement in that figure, that is the base figure from which our next recession will probably start," he warned.

If the work force could not assimilate an average annual growth of 820,000 workers in the 1950s, he declared, "it is quite obvious that we will not assimilate 1,350,000"—the average estimated for the 1960s—"unless we take some radical measures."

"This is a real threat," the federation president asserted. "This is something we have got to meet."

He described as "a lot of nonsense" the arguments that a shorter workweek "would stand in the way of progress" and that "these things will take care of themselves in the long run."

"It is not a question now of progress," Meany said. "It is a question of maintaining a stable economy."

The recent growth of automation, he said, poses a much more difficult problem than did technological improvements in the past.

Automation in American industry has advanced further in the past five years than it did in the previous 100 years, he observed, citing the example of the basic steel industry where, Meany said, 10 percent fewer workers turn out 10 percent more steel than was the case five years ago.

"We are not opposed to machinery lifting the burden of human labor, making life a little better," Meany declared, ". . . but we are opposed to machinery when it imposes misery on thousands and hundreds of thousands of people by casting them permanently on the industrial scrap heap.

"So, when we start to find the answer, I am sure that we must find it in a shorter workweek. . . .

"I would like to see the workweek in America short enough so that it will provide full employment for all Americans who are able and willing to work. If this means 35, 34, 33, 30 hours or less, so be it."

Haggerty Comments

Haggerty, commenting on major aspects of the department's legislative program, said:

- Enactment of a federal school aid bill would help eliminate "split shifts" and "firetrap" school buildings, "revitalize our democratic way of life and reinforce our national defense program."
- The Anderson-King bill to provide health insurance for the aged through the social security system is an "inevitable" reform that would be a great boon to retired persons.
- Equal employment opportunity legislation is "absolutely necessary" to end discrimination in employment practices.
- Proposed amendments to the Davis-Bacon Act to include certain fringe benefits in determining prevailing wages for federal construction projects would protect workers and employers alike from "cutthroat competition of non-union contractors."
- The proposed amendment to the 8-hour day law would require time and one-half payments after 40 hours a week as well as after 8 hours a day and would "end the practice of unfair contractors working their crews 56 hours a week without overtime."
- The department intends to "press forward" its support of legislation to permit common situs picketing and to continue discussions with the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. to resolve differences over the measure.

McCormack predicted "no difficulty" in obtaining passage of an on-site picketing bill if labor unites behind it.

He also said that if the Anderson-King bill could attract two Republican votes on the House Ways & Means Committee, he was "confident" the committee would report the bill out. Even without GOP support, the speaker said, he was "optimistic" the committee would "get a bill out."

Regarding federal aid for public school construction, McCormack maintained his position favoring help for private schools also, but said he would support a bill providing public school construction funds even if it did not contain aid for private schools.

And So Have a Lot Of the Unemployed

Sen. Patrick V. McNamara (D-Mich.) told the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.'s legislative conference that some members of Congress "have about run out of patience" on the unemployment problem.

"Unless somebody comes up pretty soon with a better answer," McNamara declared, "we are all going to be for a shorter workweek. This is one way to get people back to work."

Goldberg Hits Talk of 'Falling Out' with Labor

People who think there has been a "falling out" between labor and the Kennedy Administration are dead wrong, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg told the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Legislative Conference.

Only people who "don't know the facts of life" would imagine there is a "falling out" just because federation Pres. George Meany "says on occasion that he doesn't agree with the Secretary of Labor" on certain points of view, Goldberg continued.

Only people "who don't understand the labor movement" would have the "peculiar notion" that there is a breach between labor and the Administration any time labor "asks that more be done than the Administration proposes" or even "speaks up in criticism" of some program the Administration has endorsed, he said, adding:

"Let me say very plainly to this audience what you know: that we in the Administration understand you expect government to act like government. . . . On the other hand, I will say for our Administration that we expect unions to act like unions."

The secretary spoke out after his no-strike admonition of Mar. 3 to a meeting of New York's United Federation of Teachers had been publicly challenged by the UFT's Pres. Charles Cogen.

His Building Trades speech also followed criticism by Meany of a recent Goldberg address before the Executives Club of Chicago, suggesting that in major contract negotiations the Administration might do more than mediate between a union and employers but also seek to "assert and define the national interest" in pushing for non-inflationary settlements through collective bargaining.

Meany at a news conference rejected the idea that the government should "assert a national policy," saying that this would be "infringing on the rights of free people in a free society" by telling "both sides what they should do."

Goldberg's speech before the New York teachers, praising the United Federation for winning collective bargaining rights, also declared that as public employes the UFT must settle disputes "by means other than strikes."

Receives Dewey Award

Receiving the John Dewey Award for his help to the UFT before he entered Kennedy's cabinet, Goldberg said the relation of the government to its employes' unions required that "there be no interruption of government service."

Cogen promptly responded from the floor that the UFT would "take seriously any advice" Goldberg might offer, but that in cases of "extreme urgency" the UFT reserved "the right to take whatever action we deem necessary."

The UFT was successfully established when a brief strike in 1960 resulted in mediation and city fact-finding that paved the way for collective bargaining and establishment of the union's right to represent the teachers. The UFT is now seeking a first contract.

In his speech before the Building Trades conference, Goldberg emphasized that the Administration did not "want a captive labor movement in the United States."

"We want a vigorous active labor movement, and we welcome the outspoken attitude of the labor movement because we believe strongly and sincerely in a free labor movement."

ONLY "AGGRESSIVE ACTION" by Pres. Kennedy in taking the issue to the people will bring the public support needed to push through social security health care for the aged, Sen. Lee Metcalf (D-Mont.) told a Rubber Workers' legislative institute in Washington, D. C. Without such Kennedy action, the chances are dim, he added. Thirty Rubber Workers attended the first of the union's three scheduled institutes.

Kennedy Push Needed On Bill, Senator Says

If Pres. Kennedy went to the people with an "all-out appeal," they would respond by effectively pressing Congress to adopt a bill providing social security health care for the aged, Sen. Lee Metcalf (D-Mont.) declared before a Rubber Workers' legislative institute.

Without such "aggressive action," Metcalf said, the prospect is that "nothing, or very little, will come of this high priority legislation." He warned the institute that the pending Anderson-King bill on health care, backed by the Administration and the AFL-CIO, "is stuck in committee."

Thirty Rubber Workers from New England to Alabama received briefings from Metcalf and several members of the House during the five-day institute. It was the first of three set by the Rubber Workers during the second session of the 87th Congress. A similar Canadian institute is being conducted March 11-16 in Toronto.

The institute members visited their home-state and home-district members of the House and Senate in addition to attending their briefing sessions.

Rep. Henry Gonzalez (D-Tex.), a freshman legislator and former organizer for the Ladies' Garment Workers told the Rubber Workers that "labor is in danger and that the key objective should be to organize the unorganized."

Gonzalez urged the students to dedicate themselves as "evangelists in bringing fellow workers into the union movement. If we can't win this fight in behalf of working people, we can't win the fight for freedom."

Rep. Albert Rains (D-Ala.) told the institute that 15 million Americans are still living in homes that "hogs shouldn't live in," and blamed private real estate interests who, he said, pin a "socialism" label on public housing programs.

The Alabama congressman, a ranking member of the House Banking Committee, also lashed extreme right-wing groups, declaring the battle against communism will be won "not by right-wingers but by liberal minded people."

Other speakers included Rep. Frank Kowalski (D-Conn.), Rep. Cleveland M. Bailey (D-W. Va.) on the unemployment problem and Victor Reuther, director of the Washington office of the Auto Workers.

SAG Warns Members On Set 'Misbehavior'

Hollywood, Calif.—The Screen Actors Guild has warned "a few" of its members they will be subject to trial under union procedures for misbehavior on television and movie film sets.

The warning appeared in an editorial in the union's official publication, Screen Actor.

"We are not discussing any case in which an actor has a legitimate career dispute with a producer," the editorial said. "We are talking about cases in which an actor doesn't show up for work on time, or takes two hours for lunch when he is only supposed to take one, or is busy on the telephone when the assistant director calls him for a take, or had a few too many nips out of the bottle, or has just been too busy to learn his dialogue."

SAG made it clear that only a few actors had been guilty of such conduct and said it was reluctant to publicize the situation in an editorial which also said:

"But complaints regarding this problem have increased to the point where something must be done. Interestingly, it is not only producers who are complaining. Actors themselves have expressed to the Guild their concern about this matter, for the actions of the minority reflect on the overwhelming majority who do credit to the profession."

The union said some producers had advised the Guild they would henceforth file charges with SAG against performers guilty of "overt, deliberate misbehavior on the sets." If that occurs, the editorial warned, such actors would be brought to trial before a board of SAG members.

February's Job Report

THE LABOR DEPT.'s latest report on unemployment carried a glimmer of optimism that the high tide of unemployment is continuing to recede. This is welcome news taken by itself. But when placed in the context of developments over the year and in relationship to developments after previous recessions, the report raises as many questions as it answers.

Briefly, the report notes a drop from 5.8 to 5.6 percent of the labor force unemployed and a drop from 4.7 million to 4.5 million in the actual number of unemployed as of mid-February.

But it shows also that the number of long-term unemployed increased over the previous month; that the number of part-time workers increased 100,000 over January; and that the total civilian labor force, while increasing by about 600,000 over January, is almost the same as it was 12 months ago.

This is the "case of the missing million." All projections on the growth of the labor force show an expected increase of about 1 million persons from February 1961 to February 1962. For the past few months there has been no change in the civilian labor force figure on a 12-month comparison basis. Where are these new workers?

Labor Sec. Goldberg has candidly admitted this is something of a mystery and announced a study would be made to determine the whereabouts of the missing addition to the work force. The study presumably is still under way, but Goldberg had indicated previously that earlier retirement, a drop in farm workers and other factors, including a 300,000 increase in the Armed Forces might have something to do with the case.

Pending the results of the department's study, the simple fact remains that an expected million persons are not in the labor force—defined as working or actively seeking work—and therefore not counted. It must be presumed that they are not in the labor force because they have little or no expectancy of finding employment.

If this group were counted as in the labor force and distributed among the employed and the unemployed, the percentage of joblessness would be much higher.

There is also the question of how fast the nation is pulling out of the 1960-61 recession in terms of unemployment. A look at the record reveals that the 5.6 percent figure for February is the highest unemployment rate for any postwar recession 12 months after the low point of the recession. Twelve months after the end of the 1957-58 recession the jobless percentage was 5.2; after the 1954-55 recession it was 4.3 percent; after the 1949 recession it was 4.1 percent.

Add this to the increase in the number of long-term unemployed and the chronically high rate of unemployment that has plagued the nation for the past several years becomes clearer.

THERE IS NO INVOLVED PROBLEM when it comes to analyzing corporate profit figures; they're moving up, zooming to new highs, and on the basis of incomplete but strongly indicative reports, 1961 may set a new all-time mark.

That's for 1961. The first three months of 1962, according to the authoritative Wall Street Journal, will show an even sharper increase, and there is every indication that the $10.5 billion increase in profits for 1962 anticipated by the Administration will come to pass. For this same period the Administration hopes to bring the unemployment rate down to 5 percent.

The February job report holds a warming ray or two but it will take a great deal more heat to get rid of the chilly grip of unemployment on the nation's economy.

Becu Declares:

An Enemy Who Smiles While He Subverts Is More Dangerous

(The following is excerpted from an address by Omer Becu, general secretary of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, to a meeting of the New York City AFL-CIO Central Labor Council.)

TODAY THE FREE trade unions are confronted by an enemy, perhaps even more dangerous than the Nazi-Fascist armies which sought to impose their dictatorship over the free world.

I say that this is a more dangerous enemy because he knows how to smile while he subverts, how to look pleasant while he explodes nuclear bombs, how to promise peace while he threatens war and engages in undeclared wars and how to speak in the sweet accents of freedom while he blights that freedom wherever he is.

For us in the free trade union movement, Communist totalitarianism is the grave menace we have known almost from its inception. We have understood the gravity of this menace because free trade unions have been the target of international communism from the day Lenin took power. By every tactic, stratagem and maneuver, they sought to create a power base in every country of the world by subverting the free workers and their trade unions.

Perhaps as important as the Polaris submarine, or the deterrent significance of your thermonuclear armory or even the heroic flight into space of Col. Glenn is the fact that the American labor movement understands that free trade unionism can never compromise with totalitarianism—whether Communist or fascist—without suffering irreparable injury. A democratic government may necessarily engage in summit conferences, in negotiations, in all kinds of arrangements with Moscow. In the maintenance of peace, there is no reason why such confrontation should be excluded from diplomacy.

But a free trade union movement would imperil its moral reason for existence were it to deal with totalitarian labor fronts which afflict millions of workers from East Berlin to Peking.

That is why the ICFTU has steadily refused to engage in so-called cultural exchanges with Moscow, with Belgrade, with Madrid or with any government which enslaves workers and trade unions. For us it would be a betrayal of these millions of workers behind the Iron Curtain who cannot be brainwashed but who await a day when they will be free again.

I am thinking of the workers in East Germany who in 1953 rose up against Communist tyranny, the workers of Poznan in Poland, the workers in Hungary, and who can say where else, who risked lives and freedom in an attempt to break their Communist chains. It is little known that one of the first things the workers of Budapest did during the glorious days of the Hungarian revolution in 1956 was to apply for membership in the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

Moscow knows that if ever it permitted a free election in its vast imperialist empire, it would be the end of that empire. It knows it so well that when the workers of East Germany began voting for freedom with their feet, Moscow had to build this inhuman monstrosity, a wall, to cage them.

THAT IS WHY THE ICFTU has decided to hold its seventh world congress in free Berlin next July, to demonstrate our solidarity with the persecuted peoples behind this wall and behind the Iron Curtain. We want free trade unionists from all the world to see the documented record of what totalitarianism means while its propagandists tell us that Moscow is busy "liberalizing" itself.

In struggling against totalitarianism, we are also aware of the sins in our own backyard. We must face the fact honestly and uncompromisingly that Angola and South Africa are evils we ought to be able to do something about. The free trade union movement has from its inception fought colonialism. We are pledged to fight this evil in our midst until the colonial peoples are liberated. And one of the most effective ways of ensuring that the freedom from colonialism will not be fictitious is by helping the struggling trade unions in these less developed countries to stand on their own feet.

The free trade union movement insists that helping the developing nations embark on the road to political and economic maturity does not exclude free institutions and particularly the free trade union movement. In fact, the surest way of preventing the post-colonial growth of a people is by continuing colonial oppression under the guise of independence, but this time under a native dictator. There has been far too much admiration for strongmen in the new states of Asia and Africa and too little sympathy for their victims.

Morgan Says:

Kennedy Nuclear Test Decision Exposes Irony of Modern Man

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m. EST.)

WHEN PRES. KENNEDY announced we would resume nuclear testing in the atmosphere my wife and I happened to be in a bird sanctuary off the Gulf Coast of Florida. Although the reception on my radio was not good—the President's voice wavered between a twangy southern rock and roll crooner on one side and a propaganda program in unctuous Spanish from the Cuban revolution on the other—it was not the most inappropriate setting in which to listen to his heavy, reluctant message.

Morgan

There was, for one thing, the accidental symbolism in the sound of the President's calm but sad New England accent trying to insert some notes of reason between the madness of jukebox music and the florid phrases of Castro's pitchman in Havana. And there we ourselves were in that sanctuary comprised of the small islands of Sanibel and Captiva, curiously juxtaposed between the wildlife of nature and the wild frantic life of what we choose to call civilization.

Now on that warm evening through the sputtering radio came the numbing news that we must step back onto man's fiendish escalator of self-destruction. It had to come because when all the other explanations are peeled away the basic fact remains that mankind has not yet learned to tame its own destructiveness any better than—or rather, as well as—it has learned to deal with the ferocity of natural storms.

Indeed the deeper we probe into the earth, the farther we soar into space and the more we learn of the mysteries of the universe, the more sophisticated, so-called, our knowledge becomes of systems of warfare to destroy entire populations. This is the towering irony of humanity as we hurtle on through the 20th Century.

Pres. Kennedy grasped the cutting edge of the irony when he said how exceedingly he regretted the necessity of balancing the hazards of radioactive fall-out from resumed atmospheric tests to even one additional individual's health "against the hazards to hundreds of millions of lives which would be created by any relative decline in our nuclear strength."

Nobody is more keenly or bitterly aware than the President of how perilous is the security given by nuclear strength or of how much more imperiled that security becomes if the nuclear powers continue the endless spiral of the arms race. It is an endless spiral because, under the circumstances, neither side wants to settle for parity; only superiority will do. And so the race continues. Yet out of this whirling insanity flashes a tiny, weak gleam of hope. "The fact," as Mr. Kennedy said, "that both sides have decided to resume testing only emphasizes the need for new agreement, not new argument."

THERE WILL BE new argument and already there is the strident harangue of counter-propaganda. But behind the bluster there is still reason to believe that the Soviet leaders do not want to blow up the planet any more than we do, that whereas the hydrogen bomb, according to the happy augury of the scientists, may no longer be the ultimate but only the penultimate weapon, the Soviets may be willing to settle for that as ghastly enough of a threat to civilization if we are.

The rub comes in how to settle on that and then on what terms to disarm from there down. For us this may be the hardest operation of all but we must prepare ourselves for it now or we will surely muff the chance at a beginning on disarmament if that chance comes.

Awful as the threat of nuclear war is to contemplate we still find it easier to think in terms of warfare than in any other terms. This does not mean we should disarm alone or go it alone on a test moratorium. The folly of either is obvious. The President made the only decision he could have made under the circumstances: to test but keep talking.

In the talking we may have to give some ground from old concepts. London dispatches indicated the U.S. and Britain may go to the Geneva disarmament conference with a less rigid position on a system for inspection and control of nuclear tests partly because new techniques have developed long-range detection devices making on-the-spot inspection less vital. This presumably could ease Soviet fears that inspection teams would be used for political espionage.

The Administration may fear a hue and cry, especially from some congressmen against anything less than "rigid" inspection and control as too risky. It is risky. But we must remember that the riskiest course of all is the continued escalation of the nuclear arms race itself.

Washington Reports:

Congress Making First Move In Decade to Ban Bias on Job

"IF A MAN CAN'T GET A JOB on an equal basis with his fellow men, and if he is unable to obtain promotions on the basis of merit alone, then this type of discrimination affects him more directly and more acutely than any other denial of civil rights," Rep. Charles E. Goodell (R-N.Y.) asserted on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.) described his federal fair employment practices bill as "the first attempt in roughly 10 years, on the part of the legislative branch, to do anything about securing what has become known as fair employment opportunities. By that we mean the opportunity to seek a job without being discriminated against because of age, race, religion, color, national origin or ancestry."

Goodell said that the commission to be set up if the bill passes would attempt "to keep track of discrimination in promotion. We think this is equally important as preventing discrimination in getting a job."

Roosevelt pointed out that discrimination in promotion is one of the factors holding the earning power of Negroes below that of white workers. Although 22 states have FEP laws, federal legislation is necessary to cover interstate commerce, he said.

"As an example, the New York state agency went after the airlines to see that they employed stewardesses without regard to color," Roosevelt reported. "They succeeded in one instance in getting one Negro stewardess hired on one airline. She isn't working on that job anymore. She got tired of being the one example. And New York has not been able to enforce the law in regard to any of the other lines because they say they are in interstate commerce. The federal government has to take jurisdiction."

GOODELL SAID testimony showed that many employers would welcome the law. It would enable them to say: "I have to do this [hire Negroes and promote them on merit] because this is the law, and if I don't comply, I'm going to have all sorts of repercussions descend on me."

Roosevelt declared the law would affect unions as well as management.

"It specifically refers to apprenticeship programs," he said. "The bill would prohibit any kind of discrimination within a union—either in membership or in any practices in which the union has a voice in influencing employment. And the unions have supported this bill."

Both congressmen hoped the bill will be cleared by the House Rules Committee and win strong support from the Administration. "If the bill gets to the floor, I think it has an excellent chance of passing," Roosevelt asserted.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

YEARS AFTER the AFL-CIO and its predecessor federations began urging Congress to provide for the strictest protection of the billions of dollars due to workers under employe welfare and pension plans, a bill to provide exactly that protection has neared the point of passage. It may be worth while to recapitulate what delayed the measure.

Senate subcommittee hearings—first under the late Republican Sen. Ives of New York and then under Democratic Sen. Douglas of Illinois—began in 1954 to lay bare the skullduggery, waste and actual theft to which welfare and pension plan money was exposed.

The swift expansion of such programs, largely as a result of union contract demands for protection of workers against the natural hazards of sickness and old age, is a relatively late development. By the time anyone realized the temptations such accumulations of money involved, what loopholes for self-enrichment were opened, what dangers were created for the careless or inexperienced or incompetent, the problem was a big one.

Douglas and Ives moved from exposing the evils to the drafting of legislation designed to protect the full interest of the workers in the benefits designed for them.

THE AFL-CIO took the viewpoint at once that what was needed was a federal law requiring complete financial reports to the government, so that responsible officials could examine the reports and uncover anything improper or inadequate in the integrity of the welfare plans.

So did Senators Douglas and Ives, making the move a bipartisan one in the political area, and they sponsored a bill on which hearings were held, and the legislation was then redrafted to take account of wise suggestions.

Yet suddenly opposition developed. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers tried to get exemption from the reporting requirements of all pension and welfare plans administered solely by employers. The insurance industry lobbied to get the bill watered down.

Ranking union officials gave full support to Senators Douglas and Ives, who were joined in 1958 by then Sen. Kennedy of Massachusetts as a co-sponsor of the measure, and the bill finally cleared the Senate on an 83-to-0 roll call.

Then the lobbying attacks began all over again in the House.

The insurance companies, the NAM and the CofC intensified their drive to reduce coverage. The House Labor Committee delayed hearings for weeks, until the adjournment of Congress in an election year was in sight.

THE BILL was finally passed—but it had been so compromised in House committee that it was little more than a gesture.

Criminal penalties had been removed. The Secretary of Labor, designated as the responsible government official to receive reports, was deprived of authority to regulate the kind of reports. He was denied the authority to initiate investigations, to take timely and effective action to punish violators.

Former Pres. Eisenhower when he signed the measure said he did so with reluctance, because the bill was so weak, and he served notice that he would demand a strengthened law.

It has taken nearly four years and a new President, whose attitude toward the program is just what Eisenhower's was, to get action. A joint Senate-House conference committee has worked out a strong version of separate bills passed by each house, final approval is assured and Mr. Kennedy will sign it. We are at last back to where we would have been—where labor wanted protection of welfare and pension money to be—had the original Douglas-Kennedy-Ives bill been passed.

Isn't it a strange thing that there was such violent and prolonged opposition to a simple measure protecting the rights of workers to pension and welfare money due to them as deferred wages?

How to Buy:

Door-to-Door Salesmen Mulct Workers with Inflated Prices

By Sidney Margolius

DOOR-TO-DOOR installment selling of a wide variety of goods from religious articles to chord organs has become big business. Some 3,000 firms now have about 1.5 million salespeople out selling everything from cosmetics to home organs. Often the chief customers are modest-income working people. The prices they pay for goods bought this way often are two and three times that charged by stores for the same items.

Take the new cap-type hair dryers which have a hood and hose to supply hot and cool air. Heavy TV advertising has made such hair dryers currently the biggest sellers of any small appliance, and the door-to-door installment sellers have latched on to them as their chief current promotion. The canvassers charge anywhere from $19.95 to $24.95 for the same or similar hair dryers that stores sell for $10 to $12. To help them get this high price, they package the hair dryers in suitcase or hatbox-type carrying cases so they look more expensive.

The same high markups are charged for many other goods sold by house-to-house canvassers. Moderate-income people are generally the chief targets because they are easygoing buyers and most sympathetic to salesmen who come to the door. Too, the cost is disguised by the installment terms. The salesmen emphasize that the item costs "so much a week."

The salesmen also use what are known in the trade as door openers and account openers. Sometimes the door openers are free samples of cosmetics or housewares. But the account openers most widely used by installment door-to-door firms are religious articles. These often are elaborately-framed pictures or plaques. Sometimes they have an electric light over a reproduction of a Biblical scene or figure, or may be offered with a Bible as a "free" premium or part of the package. The door-to-door sellers charge from $10 to $30 for such pictures and plaques, and some firms report they are among their biggest sellers. Another big door-to-door seller is electric clocks framed with religious pictures for $25.

Not only are some of these "account openers" themselves high priced, but once you open an account with a door-to-door installment firm, its salesmen will be after you to buy many other goods.

Among other widely-sold door-to-door lines are vacuum cleaners ($70 cleaners are sold for $130 and some models run as high as $220); stainless-steel cookware (which canvassers find they can sell at a higher markup than aluminum); radio and phonograph equipment; various electric appliances and dinnerware sets.

Door-to-door firms especially push melamine (plastic) dishes. They often get $59.95 for a 45-piece service of melamine. You can buy such services at regular stores for $29.95 in solid colors. The canvassers charge as much as $69 for a 53-piece service of Bavarian china. Retail stores sell such sets for $30-$35.

In general, door-to-door firms mark up their goods 2.5 to 3 times the wholesale price. If they pay $6.65 for a set of cheap dishes, they charge $16.95 to $19.95. The salesmen get 25 percent commission, and collection and bad-debt costs are reported to take another big bite of 30 percent. Thus, about half of the price you pay goes for just selling the merchandise to you and collecting the payments.

In comparison to the margin of 60 to 67 percent of your dollar taken by door-to-door firms, ordinary retailers take 22 to 40 percent. Some of the more conservative door-to-door sellers selling cosmetics, toiletries and housewares take 55 percent, which is still more than many of the conventional retailers charge for goods of similar value.

From Soup to Nonsense:

Dr. Jekyll Has Nothing on Kids In Quick Shift of Personality

By Jane Goodsell

EXPERIENCE DOESN'T necessarily improve a parent's job proficiency and technical know-how. I, for instance, have been a mother for quite some time, and I still can't tie a sash that isn't lopsided, and I'm a failure at removing slivers from fingers and toes.

Still, my years of experience haven't been entirely in vain. I now realize that it's impossible to understand my children because, as soon as I think I have them figured out, they turn into somebody else.

Take my first-born, Ann, for example. I had her typed as a serious, earnest little girl with a passion for order and efficiency. I had no reason to think she wouldn't stay that way.

So it came as quite a shock when she turned into a flibberty-gibbet who lost her shoes and forgot her lunch and didn't do her homework. In fact, it came as such a shock that I went right on thinking of her as an earnest little girl who, for some reason or other, wasn't acting like herself. She was probably maladjusted and it must, somehow, be my fault.

Now I know better. I realize that children stop acting like themselves all of a sudden, and there isn't any reason why. Or maybe there are warning signs that a more observant parent would notice, but I'm continually getting caught by surprise.

Take my second-born, Katie. One day she was a little chatterbox of a tomboy, who never combed her hair and never stopped talking. Her passion in life was playing kick-the-can in the street. The next day (I swear it happened overnight) she was a full-fledged teenager who spent hours closeted in her room putting up her hair. She quit talking except on the telephone, and she answered me with uh-huhs.

THESE TRANSFORMATIONS are hard to get used to. We adults are stable creatures who change slowly, if at all. This may or may not be an advantage, but it isn't wise to assume that all change is for the better.

Take my third-born, Molly. I had her typed as the easy-to-get-along-with child who did what Mommy said. She was affectionate, amiable and eager to please. Imagine my shock when she turned into an obstinate, tyrannical little demon who said "no" on principle, and swore like a top sergeant.

Then, just as I was getting used to her that way and trying to toughen my own personality to cope with hers, she switched roles again. This time she turned into an elfin little creature who wafted through the house on tippy-toe, pretending she was a fairy princess and singing imaginative little songs.

What it takes to be a parent is flexibility. Enough flexibility to watch, without batting an eyelash, as Dr. Jekyll turns into Mr. Hyde, who becomes Little Eva, who becomes Betty Crocker, who becomes Tuesday Weld, who turns into . . . well, there's no telling who I might be living with tomorrow.

A RED CROSS case worker, John S. Owens, consults with Mrs. Mary Ruth Taylor and her son, Sherman, on Red Cross plans to help them recover from the ravages of Hurricane Carla.

'Doing the Job of Mercy:'

Red Cross Campaign Endorsed by Meany

AFL-CIO PRES. George Meany has extended the "heartfelt endorsement" of the federation to the 1962 campaign of the American National Red Cross.

"This has been a good year for relations between our organizations," said Meany in a letter to Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther, ARC president. "More AFL-CIO men and women than ever before are working with their Red Cross chapters, through our community services program."

Meany cited the importance of such Red Cross services as blood banking, first aid, safety, and home nursing, then added:

"Of increasing interest to us in the labor movement is the role of the Red Cross in the international field. We are glad to know that, through this mechanism, America can help victims of the Congolese disorders; the Angola refugees; the stricken in Morocco; and in the hundreds of other places where the world's people are in want and need."

He said the AFL-CIO extends its "heartfelt endorsement to the Red Cross without stint and with the knowledge that all of us are the Red Cross and all of us are doing the job of mercy together." He also urged central bodies to invite local Red Cross representatives to attend their March meetings to report on their programs.

Meany is serving as National Fund vice chairman during the March Red Cross campaign. AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Wm. F. Schnitzler and Vice-Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky are on the national board of governors.

New milestones in the development of Red Cross-AFL-CIO relations were highlighted in the annual labor-Red Cross report of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities.

Leo Perlis, CSA director, said trade unionists are now serving all four area offices of Red Cross as liaison with AFL-CIO CSA.

"With complete coverage in these offices and at the national level," he pointed out, "we stepped up our work in year-round program development."

The most dramatic example of labor-Red Cross cooperation came when Hurricane Carla, the major disaster of the year, swept the Texas coast. Even before the storm hit, Red Cross and AFL-CIO community services committees held day-long disaster workshops training over 1,000 AFL-CIO members in disaster relief.

When 300,000 Texans left their coastal homes in the largest mass evacuation in the nation's history, unionists helped to accomplish the exodus without panic or hardship to a single person. After the storm hit, CSC representatives worked with Red Cross in the $6 million job of helping those in need.

Here are other highlights of labor-Red Cross cooperation during the past year:

- Over 50 Red Cross chapters developed blood programs as a direct result of union activity and support. A typical example is Lorain, Ohio, where an eight-year union drive resulted in a Red Cross blood program for all of Lorain county.
- Seven regional blood conferences, jointly sponsored by the AFL-CIO Community Services Committee and Red Cross, were held across the country for the improvement and expansion of the blood program.
- An encouraging increase in direct involvement of trade unionists in Red Cross first aid training was noted in the report.
- The labor press received special mention from Red Cross leadership for its "excellent coverage" of newsworthy union-Red Cross events.

Labor's Economic Review:

Capital Investment Budget Held Vital for U. S. Fiscal Planning

The housewife trying to stretch a paycheck has—and needs—only one type of budget, a simple listing of planned expenses against the amount of money available.

The federal government, with multi-billion dollar expenditures, income and investments, needs a more sophisticated system of bookkeeping to reflect with accuracy the nation's fiscal position.

It needs, but doesn't have, a budget system which makes the necessary distinction between expenditures which represent the "housekeeping" costs of operating the government and providing for the national defense, and those expenses which are in the nature of capital investments—whose dividends will contribute to the wealth of the nation and the future income of government.

An article in the February issue of the American Federationist, AFL-CIO monthly magazine, examines the federal budget and explains why there is a growing demand for a separate "capital budget."

Prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research for the Labor's Economic Review feature of the magazine, the article tells why the apparently technical question of budget preparation has become a major political issue.

Without any differentiation between ordinary expenses and capital spending, the obsession with a "balanced budget" can stifle programs which would contribute to the nation's economic growth and more than repay the initial cost over the long run. The Federationist article notes:

"Failure to use the potential of a modern national budget strengthens the position of individuals and groups which oppose federal spending for economic growth and stability and who have been, in the main, successful for more than a decade in stopping or watering down vitally needed programs in the public sector. Their most effective rallying cries are those of fiscal irresponsibility, deficit spending, unbalanced budget or crushing national debt."

Anyone who has attempted to interpret the mammoth document known as the annual federal budget is aware that it is an almost impossible task to separate the figures representing capital expenditures from current expense items.

The Federationist article points out that Pres. Franklin D. Roosevelt first proposed a capital budget in 1940, that the first Hoover Commission report in 1949 recommended a separate capital budget, that the 1960 Democratic Party platform called for this budget reform and that capital budget bills have been sponsored by the four Democratic members of Oregon's congressional delegation—Senators Wayne Morse and Maurine Neuberger and Representatives Al Ullman and Edith Green.

Despite the Democratic platform pledge, the Treasury Dept. has hedged, notifying Congress that it plans a study of the issue "as soon as more pressing requirements permit" and asking that Congress defer action.

"This footdragging," the article declares, "has delayed but will not derail a push in the next Congress to enact a sound, workable capital budget bill."

The capital budget, conservative critics nothwithstanding, is no radical innovation in governmental or private business circles. Some 16 states employ to some degree capital budget classifications, as do most of the nation's largest cities. Private firms customarily differentiate between investment and current expense items in order to determine assets, liabilities and corporate indebtedness. A number of foreign countries have long used capital budgets to give more accurate pictures of their financial condition.

The AFL-CIO analysis makes this point:

"A capital budget approach which separates government management of assets from disbursement of funds for operating expenses will provide the executive with the means of directing national resources, both human and natural, to meet the many unmet needs for public investment.

"Equally important, it will provide a fiscal book of accounts capable of acting as a guide to formulation of sound and progressive monetary and taxation policies."

20 Canadian Unions In White Collar Drive

Ottawa, Ont.—The Canadian union movement has launched a massive campaign to recruit 500,000 new members among white collar workers. Its goal is to bring collective bargaining to the growing number of workers in office buildings and service industries.

Twenty major unions affiliated with the Canadian Labor Congress met here to plan the campaign.

A steering committee was appointed to work out preliminary strategy. The committee includes: Mike Rygus, Canadian vice-president of the Machinists; Burris Ormsby, co-director of the White Collar Department of the Steelworkers; William Lowe of the Office Employes; David Wade of the Retail Clerks.

A CLC executive member will be appointed later.

A special agency within the CLC Dept. of Organization will also be set up to assist in directing the general campaign.

The Ottawa meeting agreed that the campaign should not be an overnight blitz but a slow experimental process of developing new methods of approach and communication with the white collar workers.

To succeed, said one spokesman, the union movement must examine its old techniques and time-hallowed traditions and develop a brighter public image with trained, sophisticated organizers. A study of the attitudes and ambitions of white collar workers will also be undertaken.

After the preliminary committee reports, tentatively at the CLC convention in April, a formal committee of all the unions in the field will be organized.

Automation and technological change have had great impact on the make-up of the Canadian labor force, said one committee spokesman. However, only 75,000 of 540,000 white collar workers are organized, according to a government survey of 20,000 employes.

Many unions represent some office and technical workers, but never before in Canada have they decided to coordinate their organizational efforts in a general campaign for members among office workers, sales personnel, technicians and professional workers.

The new goals include workers in trade, finance, insurance, transportation and some segments of the service industries such as teachers, nurses, government employes, as well as the clerical work force of the manufacturing industries.

Fired IBEW Strikers Win Jobless Benefits

Harrisburg, Pa.—The Pennsylvania Supreme Court has reversed a lower court and upheld the claim of a group of workers who had been denied unemployment compensation on the ground they were discharged because of an illegal strike.

The decision upheld the State Bureau of Employment Security and the Unemployment Compensation Board of Review, both of which had found that the claimants, members of Philadelphia Local 2005 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, had not been discharged for joining in the walk-out and therefore were eligible for benefits.

At the same time Justice Herbert B. Cohen, in an opinion for the Supreme Court, sharply criticized the Superior Court for not following the principle that findings of the Board of Review, if supported by the evidence, are conclusive. The findings, he asserted, in fact, were "well supported by the evidence contained in the record."

The case grew out of the discharge of two employes by the Progress Manufacturing Co., which had a contract containing no-strike and arbitration clauses with Local 2005. The entire force struck Oct. 17, 1958. The discharges were reduced to suspensions, and the firm indicated it would arbitrate if the employes would return by Oct. 20. Only a few reported on that date, and the company rejected a union suggestion that the suspended workers be reinstated pending arbitration.

On Oct. 21 the plant ceased operations. Three days later all employes received two company notices—one that each was suspended because of participation in the walkout, the other instructing that an enclosed card be signed and returned if the employe was interested in going back to work. All employes returned the cards. Recalls began Oct. 28 and by Nov. 4 had grown to 750. On Nov. 10 the rest—the claimants in the jobless aid case—received notices of discharge.

Participation in an illegal work stoppage in Pennsylvania disqualifies an unemployment compensation claimant, hence the stress on the reason for discharge.

The lower court took an "unrealistic" view in determining that the claimants were discharged for participating in the strike, Cohen said in his opinion. He explained:

"The company suspended all employes indiscriminately for the illegal work stoppage and then indulged in a procedure of evaluating the qualifications, ability and work record to determine who should be retained and who should be discharged.

"It was this valuation and not the illegal work stoppage that determined the discharge."

Football Game Halts As Political Protest

Coimbra, Portugal—Rival football teams from Coimbra and Lexoes stopped play in the middle of a game here in protest against the arrest by political police of 14 students who had been charged with anti-state activities.

Rail Unions to Huddle; Long Negotiations Seen

Chicago—Rail operating unions have begun a series of strategy sessions in preparation for what one union president predicted would be a long period of "hard-nosed negotiations" over work rules, jobs and wages.

Pres. H. E. Gilbert of the Locomotive Firemen made the statement to nearly 300 top union officers and staff members called together to discuss the union's position in the wake of a presidential commission's recommendations which would abolish the jobs of most of the union's members. The commission report has been rejected by all five operating brotherhoods.

Rail management officials proposed that negotiations begin on Mar. 20, but union officials indicated they will suggest a later date, and set Mar. 21 as the date for their own first joint strategy session.

"We intend to protect the right of our members to do the work as long as it is there," Gilbert declared. Declaring that talk of a strike is "premature," he said the union will seek "a peaceful equitable settlement" through negotiations.

The four other operating unions—the Trainmen, Switchmen, Locomotive Engineers and Conductors—have all scheduled meetings of their officers and chairmen to discuss their procedures.

Meanwhile, in other developments:

- Pres. Kennedy appointed a three-member Emergency Board to investigate a wage dispute between 11 unions representing 600,000 non-operating employes and the nation's railroads.

The unions have asked a 25-cent hourly wage increase and six months' advance notice of abolition of jobs or cuts in the work force. Management has proposed wage cuts for laborers and semi-skilled workers and no increase for other crafts.

- The Locomotive Engineers added their formal dissent to those previously voiced by operating unions to the presidential commission's report.

A. F. Zimmerman, the union's representative on the commission, sent Pres. Kennedy a statement denouncing the majority recommendations as "vicious and brutal." He said they would result in "lower wages for most employes, longer hours and a poorer, less reliable, less efficient service to the public."

The rail operating unions emphasized that the presidential commission report was not binding on the parties and Pres. Kennedy pointed this out also in a statement issued after receipt of the report. The President expressed the hope that negotiations between the parties will resolve issues in dispute.

Steel Fabricators Accept Basic Pact

Hamilton, Ont. — Employes of nine fabricating plants of the Steel Co. of Canada in Ontario and Quebec have accepted the terms of the three-year contract which recently gave 9,000 members of Steelworkers Local 1005 at the company's basic steel plant here a 21-cents-an-hour package of wage, pension, insurance and medical care benefits.

BRT Asks Cabooses Fit For Humans

Cleveland, Ohio—A caboose is a combination office and "home away from home" and should have a few more comforts than a cattle car, members of the Railroad Trainmen have testified at a hearing held here by the National Mediation Board.

Many cabooses used every day by railroaders are so uncomfortable and so unsafe, BRT members on New York Central Lines-East and NYC-West charged, that they asked BRT Pres. W. P. Kennedy to set a date for a walkout. Kennedy picked Feb. 16 but the mediation board delayed it for at least 60 days and assigned Mediator Arthur J. Glover to hear the facts and make a recommendation.

BRT witnesses told Glover that many cabooses are rickety antiques with kerosene lights, battered steps and handrails, poor springs, draughty windows, and soot-covered furniture. They lack protection against lurches, jerks and sudden stops of long-train, high-speed equipment pulled by fast Diesel locomotives, crew members testified.

Union general chairmen and two vice presidents—W. J. Weil and Q. C. Gabriel—asked for:

- Steel cabooses on every freight train.
- Safety belts, hand stanchions and shatterproof glass.
- Screens, storm windows, electric markers and overhead lights; electric refrigerators to keep food from spoiling.

Witnesses said the railroad put some steel cabooses into service 15 years ago, but they did not begin to fill the need and already are out of date on today's long, fast freights.

Supreme Court Rules:

U.S. Labor Law Held Binding in State Suits

State courts must apply federal labor law when deciding suits over violations of labor-management contracts, the Supreme Court has specifically ruled.

The decision was the latest in a series clarifying the high court's finding in its 1957 Lincoln Mills case that the Taft-Hartley Act required federal courts to fashion a body of federal labor law for the enforcement of union-management contrast.

Two weeks ago, in the Dowd Box case, the court ruled that its Lincoln Mills decision did not bar state court proceedings over violations of such contracts.

In a new case, involving a suit by Lucas Flour Co. of Seattle, Wash., against a local of the unaffiliated Teamsters, the court now confirms the implication in its Dowd decision "that state courts should apply federal law in exercising jurisdiction over litigation" brought under the Taft-Hartley Act because of alleged contract violations.

Particularly significant from labor's point of view, according to union attorneys, is that with federal law controlling, the decisions of state courts in such suits are clearly subject to review by the Supreme Court.

Lucas Flour sued the Teamsters, seeking damages for business losses incurred as a result of a strike by the union over a dismissal. The company argued that the strike violated the contract in that the dispute was subject to binding arbitration under terms of the agreement. A trial court awarded damages of $6,501.60 and the Supreme Court of Washington affirmed the judgment.

Justice Potter Stewart's opinion on behalf of the U.S. Supreme Court held that the state supreme court was in error when it applied state law in reaching the decision, but said the decision itself was correct because federal law, too, would have found a contract violation in the strike.

Justice Hugo Black dissented, arguing that the contract arbitration clause did not in fact compel arbitration of the disputed firing and that the union thus was free to strike over the issue.

On the question of which law—state or federal—governed in the suit, Justice Stewart wrote:

"It was apparently the theory of the Washington court that, although Lincoln Mills requires the federal courts to fashion, from the policy of our national labor laws, a body of federal law for the enforcement of collective bargaining agreements, nonetheless the courts of the state remain free to apply local rules when called upon to enforce such agreements.

"This view cannot be accepted. The dimensions . . . [of Taft-Hartley] require the conclusion that substantive principles of federal labor law must be paramount in the area covered by the statute. Comprehensiveness is inherent in the process by which that law is to be formulated under the mandate of Lincoln Mills, requiring issues raised in suits of a kind covered by Section 301 to be decided according to the precepts of federal labor policy. . . .

"The possibility that individual contract terms might have different meanings under state and federal law would inevitably exert a disruptive influence upon both the negotiation and administration of collective agreements. . . .

"The ordering and adjusting of competing interests through a process of free and voluntary collective bargaining is the keystone of the federal scheme to promote industrial peace. State law which frustrates the effort of Congress to stimulate the smooth functioning of that process thus strikes at the very core of federal labor policy."

On the question of whether the Teamsters strike was indeed a contract violation, as a matter of federal labor law, the opinion said:

"The collective bargaining contract expressly imposed upon both parties the duty of submitting the dispute in question to final and biding arbitration. In a consistent course of decisions, the Courts of Appeals of at least five federal circuits have held that a strike to settle a dispute which a collective bargaining agreement provides shall be settled exclusively and finally by compulsory arbitration constitutes a violation of the agreement.

"The National Labor Relations Board has reached the same conclusion [in the W. L. Mead case]. We approve that doctrine. To hold otherwise would do violence to accepted principles of traditional contract law. Even more in point, a contrary view would be completely at odds with the basic policy of national labor legislation to promote the arbitral process as a substitute for economic warfare."

2,000 Hear Meany Pledge Support:

Letter Carriers Salary Rally Sparks 'Operation Catch Up'

By David L. Perlman

More than 2,000 Letter Carriers at a three-day salary conference greeted with cheers and a brass band speakers who supported their current pay-raise drive and heard with friendly skepticism government officials who defended what the union has termed the Administration's "trickle-down" pay "reform" proposal.

The Letter Carriers, meeting in Washington, D. C., also tramped through a driving snowstorm to knock on the doors of congressmen and senators from their home states.

The loudest cheers went to:

- AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany when he pledged labor's "full support" to the pay drive, which the union has dubbed Operation Catch Up, and when he termed low salaries paid postal workers "a source of shame" to the nation.
- Letter Carriers Pres. William C. Doherty, who said postal workers "don't want to wait until 1965" and need "to get away from the caboose on the economic train." The Kennedy "reform" proposal would give most postal workers pay increases of approximately 7.5 percent beginning in 1963 and spread across three years.
- Chairman Olin D. Johnston (D.S.C.) of the Senate Post Office & Civil Service Committee and Rep. James H. Morrison (D-La.), the first of 49 congressmen to sponsor the union's bill for an immediate raise of more than 14 percent.

The delegates warmly welcomed Administration spokesmen including Postmaster Gen. J. Edward Day, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg and Civil Service Commission Chairman John W. Macy, Jr., and applauded the Administration's improved employe-management relations policies for government workers.

They were polite but cool to official explanations of the Administration pay program and the conference vigorously reaffirmed the union's Catch Up program. The resolution was drafted by a committee made up of one delegate from each of the 47 states represented.

Declaring that present wage scales are "from two to four years behind increases in pay in outside industry," the resolution said the Administration's proposed increase is "much too small" and is based on an "arbitrary and capricious" definition of "comparability" with employes in Grade 5 of the classified civil service.

Kennedy's "Wisdom" Praised

Pres. Kennedy's "wisdom and foresight" in taking the initiative toward a pay increase were praised, but the amount proposed was termed "far short" of what is needed to maintain high standards of government service. In some cases, the union declared, the increase for letter carriers would amount to only $25 a year after six years.

Meany, in his keynote address, said he has "no disagreement" with recommendations for substantial increases for high-ranking government employes made by the Presidential Pay Panel on which he served.

"Indeed I applaud them," he stated. "But I dissent most vigorously from those recommendations which do not provide an adequate increase for postal workers and lower-paid classified employes."

There is no alternative to "moonlighting"—the holding of a second job by a worker—"when he can't earn enough in his first job," the federation president warned.

The government, he said, should pay wages "that set an example for private industry." It would be cheaper in the long run, the AFL-CIO president said, "to pay good wages and keep good people."

Goldberg, introduced by Doherty as the "best qualified" secretary of labor the nation has had, praised the union for being "gracious enough to invite management to come in and talk to you."

He said the rally demonstrated the "depth of conviction" of the union members in their pay demands and their support of the position taken by their leaders.

Rally Union's Biggest

Doherty called the rally the biggest ever sponsored by the union. Speaking of its political effect on Congress, he noted that "every person in this hall"—all working letter carriers—"knows how to ring doorbells and knock on doors."

The conference was the first of a series of government union mass legislative rallies scheduled for this spring, including one set by the Postal Clerks.

LETTER CARRIER Edward Kline, who walked 325 miles from Cuyahoga Falls, O., to the outskirts of Washington, D. C., to dramatize Operation Catch Up, his union's pay raise campaign, is introduced to delegates to the Letter Carriers' salary conference by Pres. William C. Doherty. Union members in towns and cities along the way were hosts to Kline during his 10-day hike.

'Work' Forces Seen Fighting Co-ops Next

Oklahoma City—Attempts to outlaw the union shop in Oklahoma will be followed by attacks on farm co-ops and marketing agreements, a state Democratic leader warned here.

Sam Battles, a former state Democratic Party chairman, urged Oklahoma Democrats to fight an initiative petition being circulated in an attempt to place a so-called "right-to-work" constitutional amendment on the ballot in the November elections.

"This proposal is opposed to every social and political reform the Democratic Party stands for," Battles declared. "They attack labor now, next in line will be farm co-ops, milk producers associations, soil conservation districts and the Rural Electrification Administration."

Battles charged that Oklahoma Republican leaders, who have endorsed "right-to-work," are "being used by the National Association of Manufacturers and John Birch Society extremists."

"The one and only motive" of the "right-to-work" sponsors, Battles charged, is "to make more money for the big industrialists by taking it away from Oklahoma's workers."

Kennedy Trade Plans Called Spur on Jobs

Pres. Kennedy's trade expansion proposals would benefit 8 to 10 workers whose jobs depend on exports for every worker injured by a resulting increase in imports, AFL-CIO Economist Bert Seidman declared on Labor News Conference, the federation's public service radio program broadcast weekly by the Mutual network.

Seidman noted that a recent Labor Dept. study had found that the jobs of 3.1 million American workers depend directly on exports. On the other hand, he said, "somewhere in the neighborhood of 400,000 workers may have lost their jobs from the increase in imports since 1954."

The value of goods exported over the past seven years rose by $7.2 billion, he said, while the value of imports went up $4.5 billion. Even this obvious favorable factor doesn't tell the whole story, observed Seidman.

"In the first place, imports create jobs in the United States for workers who transport the imports, for workers who are engaged in the marketing of imports or in the processing of these imports," he pointed out. "Secondly, there are many imports—such as coffee, bananas, some metal products and others—which are not competitive with any production in the United States."

Acknowledging that some unions dissent from the AFL-CIO stand in favor of the President's trade program, Seidman commented that their view "is in the minority" and is not shared "by the overwhelming number of unions or members of the AFL-CIO."

The federation and most of its affiliates, he said, support trade expansion "from the standpoint of the needs of the labor movement as a whole and, more important, from the standpoint of the needs of the country as a whole."

He emphasized, however, in response to questions from Lee Cohn of the Washington Evening Star and John King of the New York Journal of Commerce, that the AFL-CIO regards the trade adjustment features outlined in the President's proposals as "an integral part of the overall program." These would provide income allowances for workers and aid for businesses adversely affected by a rise in imports.

He said, too, that the higher productivity of American workers in relation to labor in other countries would help maintain high wages in U.S. industry and still leave the nation in a position to compete effectively

Nevertheless he called for "hard negotiations" with the European Common Market countries to persuade them to open up their markets to Japan and the less developed countries, which have in the past relied on the United States as a prime customer for their goods.

LABOR MINSTREL Joe Glazer enthralls a group of Washington area children with his folk singing and guitar playing at a benefit for children of migratory farm workers. The concert was sponsored by the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, Workers Education Local 189 of the Teachers, and the National Consumers League. Glazer, former education director for the Rubber Workers, is a labor information officer with the U.S. Information Agency.

Board Revives Former Rule on Truck Drivers

The automatic severance of truck drivers from plant-wide bargaining units, on petition of the unaffiliated Teamsters or any other union, will no longer be the policy of the National Labor Relations Board, the board has decided in a 3-2 decision.

The board majority voted, over the objection of members Boyd Leedom and Philip Ray Rodgers, to return to the policy in effect several years ago of severing from a plant group only units which are "sufficiently distinct functionally to warrant separate representation."

Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and members Gerald A. Brown and John H. Fanning voted to dismiss the petition of Teamsters Local 7 for a unit of truck drivers and shipping department employes, or "any other unit deemed appropriate," at the plant of the Kalamazoo, Mich., Paper Box Corp. The ruling means that Local 518, Pulp, Sulphite & Paper Mill Workers, will continue to represent all plant employes, as it has since 1945.

The three board members, affirming an earlier intermediate ruling by Hearing Officer Iris H. Meyer, concluded that two drivers at the paper box plant spend about half their time as drivers but also do production and shipping work and exchange duties with other workers.

Asserting that the previous policy of the board was not consistent with the purpose of the Taft-Hartley Act, the board voted to change the current rule in such cases and to consider each application on the basis of work performed and not on job titles.

Welfare Reports, Retraining:

Conferees Agree on 2 Key Kennedy Bills

Two major Kennedy Administration legislative proposals moved close to final passage as House-Senate conference committees reached agreement on a compromise worker-retraining bill and a compromise bill to stiffen the financial reports required of employe welfare plan administrators.

The House was scheduled to act first on the welfare plan bill and the Senate to act first on the manpower development and retraining program. Both measures were assured of approval in both houses and Pres. Kennedy's signature would make them law.

In other actions in Congress:

● The House Ways & Means Committee neared final approval of an Administration-sponsored measure to make major reforms in the nation's welfare system by placing greater emphasis on rehabilitation rather than relief.

The committee before formal action approved an amendment —not requested by Kennedy—to raise by $160 million a year the federal contribution to states for aid to the disabled, blind and aged.

Total cost of the program was estimated at $326 million a year. Health, Education and Welfare Sec. Abraham Ribicoff had told the committee that the Administration's own rehabilitation program would raise welfare costs in early years but decrease them thereafter.

● The Senate Post Office Committee opened hearings on a House-passed bill to raise postal rates. Committee Chairman Olin Johnston (D-S. C.) indicated that the bill would be modified and that it would not be approved until salary increases for postal workers were taken up.

The bill drastically tightening the 1958 law requiring reports to the government on the finances of employe welfare and pension plans was strongly backed by the AFL-CIO as well as recommended by the Administration.

The 1958 law, heavily watered down in the House before passage, required administrators of welfare plans to file reports with the Labor Dept. but gave the government almost no power to deal with abuses or uncover them.

The new bill provides for reports and enforcement similar to those offered in the original measure sponsored in 1958 by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) and pushed through the Senate by Kennedy, then chairman of a labor subcommittee.

It will allow the Secretary of Labor to prescribe reporting forms, require fully-detailed reports, investigate failures to comply with the law and enforce the requirements in court.

It establishes federal criminal penalties for embezzlement from employe welfare plans, for making false statements in reports to the government and for offering or accepting bribes or kickbacks.

Knocked out in the compromise bill was a House-passed amendment that would have barred Labor Dept. employes who are members of AFL-CIO unions from working in the office supervising welfare plans. A substitute was approved to prevent a member of a union from supervising reports filed on a welfare plan benefiting other members of the same union.

Sen. Pat McNamara (D-Mich.) was sponsor of the bill in the Senate, Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.) its sponsor in the House.

The manpower development and retraining bill, a measure high on the list of Administration priorities, sets up a three-year program under which the federal government assumes a direct responsibility for the retraining of jobless workers who have lost employment chances either because of shifts in industry or the obsolescence of their skills.

The AFL-CIO gave full support to the program.

The federal government will pay training allowances and some expenses to an estimated 1 million jobless workers. Payments will be equivalent to each state's weekly unemployment compensation benefit.

Rules for Trainees

In most cases, workers to be retrained must be heads of families 21 years of age or older and must have been unemployed for three years. But 5 percent of the money —estimated at a total of $435 million—is reserved for training those 19 and 20 years old who cannot get jobs because they quit school prematurely.

The bill directs the Labor Dept. to study the impact of automation on jobs and devise programs for training and retraining procedures under the measure. The program will be wholly financed by the federal government the first two years; in the third year, states must put in matching funds.

The bill was sponsored by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) and Rep. Elmer J. Holland (D-Pa.).

Meany on Planning Group For White House Parley

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has been appointed to a subcommittee of the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy to plan a tripartite White House conference on the national economy.

Other members of the group are Under Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, chairman; Under Sec. of Commerce Edward Gudeman; Elliott V. Bell, publisher of Business Week; Dr. George W. Taylor of the Wharton School of Finance.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg said the subcommittee already has held its first meeting and hopes to complete arrangements for the conference, including a date and agenda, by the time the President's Advisory Committee next meets, Apr. 3 and 4. At that meeting, Goldberg said, the full committee also expects to complete action on the report of its subcommittee dealing with "free and responsible collective bargaining and industrial peace."

Purpose of the White House National Economic Conference, approved by Pres. Kennedy last month, is to bring together leading representatives of labor, management and the public to exchange views in an effort to reach "the broadest possible understanding."

Canadian Legislator Bolts NDP

Ottawa, Ont.—Hazen Argue, who was beaten last summer for the post of national leader of the New Democratic Party but told the founding convention "I will never let you down," has bolted to the Liberal Party.

Argue, chosen leader of the NDP caucus in Parliament, moved his seat to a position between the Liberals and the Conservatives. Bert Herridge, representing the Kootenays in British Columbia, was elected his successor for the NDP.

Meantime, his former constitutents and supporters attacked him. The executive committee of the Assiniboia district in Saskatchewan, which he has represented in Parliament, has asked him to resign. His next-door neighbor in Ottawa, Executive Vice Pres. William Dodge of the Canadian Labor Congress, charged him with "political opportunism."

Argue quit the NDP with a charge that it is dominated by a small labor clique, an allegation that other party leaders—both labor and non-labor—have denied.

Douglas Fisher, NDP member of Parliament from Port Arthur, Ont., said in the House of Commons that Argue had received $5,000 from the Co-Operative Commonwealth Federation, out of which the NDP grew, and that most of it was union money. Between 1958 and 1961, Fisher added, he was "at the heart" of the CCF and CLC leaders who worked at forming the NPD.

"In all that time and at all those meetings," Fisher said on the floor of Parliament, "other members of this committee cannot remember a single substantial objection raised by [him] about labor representation, labor affiliation, or labor finance in the party."

Argue, backed by Socialists, in his campaign for the NDP leadership, was defeated at the convention by Thomas C. Douglas, then premier of Saskatchewan.

Knowles a Candidate For House Nomination

Ottawa, Ont.—Executive Vice Pres. Stanley Knowles of the Canadian Labor Congress has announced his candidacy for the New Democratic Party nomination for Parliament from Winnipeg (Man.) North Center, which he had represented for 16 years as a member of the Co-Operative Commonwealth Federation.

Washington Talks Sway Prize Essayists' Plans

Two college students whose thoughtful comments on youth's role in U.S. foreign policy won top awards in the Edward P. Morgan Essay Contest are taking a new look at their plans after meeting with Pres. Kennedy and top leaders in government, public affairs and labor.

Carol M. Burns, who was considering going to journalism school after her graduation from Reed College at Portland, Ore., now thinks she will seek instead an immediate job in the news field and use her $1,350 graduate scholarship prize for advanced study at a later date.

She made her decision after being the guest of Morgan at a dinner attended by New York Times Washington Correspondent James Reston and Assistant Sec. of State Harlan Cleveland, a former newspaperman.

Gerald T. Bongard, a junior at the College of St. Thomas in St. Paul, Minn., had planned to teach philosophy. But that was before he met George C. McGhee, the State Dept.'s under secretary for political affairs.

"Have you considered going into the foreign service?" McGhee asked him.

Bongard hadn't. But by the time he left McGhee's office, he was considering it very seriously.

The nationwide essay contest was conducted by the ABC radio network, which carries Morgan's daily news commentaries. Network stations contributed to the scholarship awards and the AFL-CIO, which sponsors the Morgan program, gave $500.

Highlight for the two winners was their meeting with Pres. Kennedy at the White House—a two-way conversation in which the President expressed satisfaction that there was less talk these days about "apathy" towards world affairs and government on the part of young people.

Gifts from Kennedy

Kennedy gave each winner an autographed copy of his book To Turn the Tide and in addition signed a copy of Profiles of Courage which Bongard brought with him to the White House.

On the way out, the two students had an unscheduled chat with Vice Pres. Johnson.

Earlier the youngsters had visited the AFL-CIO building and met with Pres. George Meany. Their luncheon companions at the Capitol were Senators Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.), Eugene J. McCarthy (D-Minn.), Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash.), Warren G. Magnuson (D-Wash.) and Maurine B. Neuberger (D-Ore.). U.S. Information Agency Dir. Edward R. Murrow made an unscheduled stop at their table.

They met, also, with Peace Corps Dir. R. Sargent Shriver and with representatives from their home areas, including Rep. Joseph E. Karth (D-Minn.), Rep. Julia B. Hansen (D-Wash.), and Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.), plus Senate GOP Leader Everett M. Dirksen (Ill.) and Sen. Foreign Relations Chairman J. William Fulbright (D-Ark.), both judges in the contest. The third judge was Chester Bowles, special assistant to the secretary of state.

Highlight of their New York visit was a meeting with Ambassador to the UN Adlai E. Stevenson and other members of the U.S. mission to the United Nations.

'Token' Pay Hike Labeled 'Gimmick'

A charge that a small wage increase announced by southern nonunion textile mills was a device designed to "fend off union organization" has been made by Nicholas Zonarich, organizational director for the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.

The increase announced by some employers was about 5 percent. It was the third in four years given after the Textile Workers Union of America and the IUD had distributed close to 1 million organizing pamphlets outside southern mills and had run full page ads in mill city newspapers.

Zonarich called the increase "substandard" and only "a small down payment on what the southern industrial worker" is really owed.

Fast Jobless Pay Reform 'Essential', Kennedy Says

Jobs Rise Shows Gain In Factories

The Labor Dept. singled out factory job gains and a pickup in the workweek as "the outstanding features" in what the department called a "sharply improved" job situation in February.

A week earlier, the summary job figures showed a gain in employment—partly a rebound from January's bad weather which cut down outdoor work—and a decline in short-term unemployment.

The detailed job report showed that factory employment, rising over the month by nearly 100,000 on an adjusted basis to a total of 16.5 million, returned to a level a little better than December's. The factory sector nevertheless lagged behind in job recovery from the 1960-61 recession.

The factory workweek, which fell in January, rose by 18 minutes to 40 hours in February, highest for the month since 1957, the report said.

The Labor Dept. report observed that the 1.2 million job loss during the recession had been recovered in terms of total figures. Pinned down to specific sectors, areas like finance and service and government at all levels grew throughout the recession and continue to do so.

The report threw this light on the factory sector:

"Of the major industries which experienced employment cutbacks during the recession, only trade has regained its May 1960 level.

"Manufacturing is about 450,000 jobs shy of that point even after regaining about 600,000 jobs during the recovery period; in construction, mining and transportation, employment has continued to drop even during the general recovery period."

The job total in construction, mining and transportation was reported as 100,000 below that of May 1960. When manufacturing is included, the report added, "the unrecovered job losses since the Spring of 1960 total 900,000." The gain of over 1 million in other sectors offsets this loss as far as total figures are concerned.

As reported in the earlier summary report, unemployment declined in February by 120,000 to 4.5 million. The seasonally adjusted jobless rate dropped to 5.6 percent from 5.8 percent, the lowest point since July 1960.

The detailed report showed a rise of 250,000 on non-farm payrolls to a total of 54.7 million for February. This represented a return to the pre-recession peak.

New York Bus Seizure Is Delayed

New York—The strike by 6,700 Transport Workers against the Fifth Avenue Coach Lines entered its fourth week as Republican leaders in the state senate postponed action on legislation to permit city seizure and operation of the bus company.

The senate delay on the bills, two of which have been passed by the assembly, meant that resumption of service on the line may be put off until Wednesday, Mar. 21.

The city Transit Authority, which would operate the buses under the legislative package proposed by Mayor Robert F. Wagner (D), has said it will take at least 48 hours after final action on the bills before it can start operations again.

IN A WHITE HOUSE VISIT, former Rep. Aime Forand (D-R. I.) gets Pres. Kennedy's pledge to speak May 20 in New York City at a mass rally of the National Council of Senior Citizens. Forand, chairman of the council, was sponsor in the last Congress of a bill to establish social security health care for the aged. The council, swelling in membership to the hundreds of thousands, is backing the Anderson-King bill now pending in the House Ways & Means Committee.

Rep. King in Rebuttal:

AMA Blasted for 'Scare Technique'

Rep. Cecil R. King (D-Calif.) has charged the American Medical Association with engaging in "a scare technique" and "a calculated attempt to distort the meaning" of the Anderson-King bill, designed to provide health insurance for the aged through the social security system.

In a point-by-point rebuttal of AMA testimony opposing the bill before the House Ways & Means Committee, King condemned as "ridiculous" and "irresponsible" the organization's contention that the measure would be a step toward socialized medicine.

[Pres. Kennedy told his Mar. 14 news conference that the Administration will make an all-out drive for passage of the Anderson-King bill this year.

Asked if his acceptance of an invitation to address a New York rally on behalf of the health care bill is "part of an all-out Administration effort," Kennedy replied:

"That is correct."

He predicted that the issue will "definitely" come to a vote in the Senate and is "hopeful" of House action before the end of the session.]

"The core of the principal 'philosophical' argument that the AMA tries to make . . . is that this bill is part of some master plan that somebody (unnamed) or some group or groups (unnamed) has devised with the aim of setting up a socialized system of medicine in the United States," said King, who is co-sponsor of the measure with Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.M.).

"It little matters what villains the AMA has in mind," the California congressman continued, "for this bill is no more a part of a plan to establish socialized medicine than were the disability benefit provisions of the law, which the Congress wisely enacted in spite of the cries of wolf that were heard far and wide from AMA representatives."

Before inserting his response to the AMA criticism into the record, King reviewed for the House the history of the organization's opposition to other social security and welfare advances, recalling that in 1939 the Journal of the AMA attacked the principles of old age and unemployment insurance as "a weakening of national caliber, a definite step toward either communism or totalitarianism."

AMA Record Cited

He recited, also, the record of the AMA's stands against disability insurance under social security, federal grants for maternal and child welfare programs, elimination of the means test in the crippled children's program and even—during their early years—voluntary health insurance plans such as Blue Cross.

This history, King declared, "is the proper setting in which to consider the association's present op-

Prods Congress on Long-Range Plan

Calling permanent improvement of the unemployment compensation system "essential" to the nation's prosperity, Pres. Kennedy has renewed a request to Congress for speedy action on the program.

In an "especially urgent" message, Kennedy warned that jobless workers face "hardship and suffering" unless Congress acts. The Administration's McCarthy-King bill, a top item on the AFL-CIO's legislative program, was sent to Congress last June, and has been stalled in committee ever since.

Kennedy said that permanent improvement, rather than another "stopgap" measure, is necessary to replace the expiring program of temporary extension of unemployment benefits approved last year.

After Mar. 31, the President emphasized, no new applications for extended benefits can be accepted from jobless workers who have used up their regular state benefits.

A similar warning was sounded by the AFL-CIO Executive Council in a Feb. 23 statement which declared that hundreds of thousands of long-jobless workers face "disaster" this spring unless Congress acts.

Kennedy, throwing White House weight into the drive for permanent legislation, said "wider coverage, extended benefit periods and increased benefit amounts" are needed as a matter of equity and as a long-term "stabilizing" factor in the economy.

Payments 'Often Too Low'

Benefits now paid under state unemployment compensation laws, Kennedy said, "are often too low in relation to lost wages to enable the worker to meet his basic and non-deferrable expenses."

The Administration bill, awaiting action in the House Ways & Means Committee, would:

- Provide incentives to states to

Labor Asks Changes in Davis Act

Labor and the Administration have asked Congress to amend the 31-year-old Davis-Bacon Act to include fringe benefits in setting prevailing wage rates for government-financed construction, and to amend the 70-year-old 8-Hour-Day Law to require payment of overtime rates after 40 hours a week.

Both proposals were strongly endorsed by the AFL-CIO in testimony before a House Labor subcommittee, headed by Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.), sponsor of the two bills.

AFL-CIO Legislative Rep. Andrew J. Biemiller told the subcommittee that since the enactment in 1931 of the Davis-Bacon Act, which applies only to money wages, there has been a "dramatic growth" in fringe benefits such as health, welfare, pension and insurance plans.

Employers who do not provide fringe benefits, and thus have a lower labor cost, are given a competitive advantage over "fair" employers, Biemiller noted. Like-

House Tax Bill Backed Pending Senate Revision

The AFL-CIO has urged the House to support the tax bill reported out by the House Ways & Means Committee so that "further improvements" can be made in the Senate to produce a "balanced tax bill."

Federation Pres. George Meany announced that the AFL-CIO Executive Committee had called for passage of the bill after a detailed examination of the changes made in the measure in committee in the past two weeks.

The statement declared that actions to improve "the foreign income tax provisions of the bill encourage us to believe that similar improvements in other aspects of the bill will be made in the Senate."

It added, however, that the request for support by the House "does not in any way imply that we are satisfied with the bill. . . . During the course of the Senate committee hearings and before the final vote by the Senate we will seek to insure that the unfavorable balance in the bill is reversed."

After the Senate has acted and a conference committee has put together a final bill "the AFL-CIO will carefully re-examine" the measure "to determine whether the good outweighs the bad by enough to warrant our support," the statement said.

The bill, reported by the Ways & Means Committee by an 18 to 7 vote after nearly a year of hearings and meetings, will close some tax loopholes, partially improve others

SAFETY was the topic that engrossed more than 3,000 delegates to the eighth national conference of the President's Conference on Occupational Safety in Washington, D. C. Here delegates from unions are addressed by George T. Brown, deputy director of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Standards and former assistant to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

Safety Conference Asks More Labor-Management Cooperation

More labor participation and more labor-management cooperation are essential to save human lives and limbs, the President's Conference on Occupational Safety has concluded.

More than 3,000 delegates, including 250 representatives of union organizations, attended the eighth national conference in Washington, D. C. After three days of reports and discussions these major facts stood out:

- The accident rate for workers in manufacturing has been dropping steadily since that sector of the economy began receiving the most attention from labor, management and government.
- Accidents in the non-manufacturing sector are increasing. The accidental death toll among farm workers—the least unionized group of workers—is the highest of any American occupation.

This year's conference had more labor participation than ever before, according to Executive Sec. John D. Connors of the AFL-CIO Committee on Occupational Safety, an assistant to federation Pres. George Meany. Major papers were read by officers of six international unions.

Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson welcomed the delegates in the name of the President, and Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg delivered the keynote address. Among the conclusions listed in the delegates' report to Pres. Kennedy, compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, were these:

Construction: This industry is the largest employer of labor in the nation, having passed agriculture as an employer in the late Forties.

The duration of most contracts is insufficient to enable even the safety-minded contractor to train his work force adequately in safety practices.

A panel of three experts, including Vice Pres. Finlay C. Allan of the Carpenters, concluded that advanced planning for safety before the start of construction must originate with top management; safety education at all levels must include apprenticeship training; many unions now participate in joint safety committees; in some states little or no safety legislation exists.

Railroads, Stevedoring: A panel which included Joseph Leonard, safety director of the Longshoremen, and Al H. Chesser of the Railroad Trainmen, who is chairman also of the Railway Labor Executives' Association's safety committee, said adequate training of workers must accompany the advances made in the handling of materials in the transportation industries.

The group recommended more research on design and operational factors; more fact-finding on accident causes, controls and methods; more labor-management cooperation; more definitive laws and regulations.

Public Employment: One of the panelists was Pres. Arnold S. Zander of the State, County & Municipal Employes. Accidents have risen to a "shockingly high level" in this field, it was reported—10 percent higher in federal service since 1950, 76 percent higher in state and local government service.

Among the recommendations were these: a stepped-up process of collecting and analyzing accident statistics; development of a master plan for accident prevention like those in the California state and Cleveland city governments; development of safety training programs.

"Participation of employes and of organized labor can make a great contribution to successful safety programs at all levels of government," the delegates said.

5 Other Sections

Other workshops dealt with safety research, agriculture, trades and services, off-the-job safety, and the health professions. Vice Pres. P. L. Siemiller of the Machinists was a panelist in the workshop on off-the-job safety.

Vice Pres. Al E. Brown of the Papermakers & Paperworkers summed up conference findings with this safety formula: cooperation, joint effort and joint planning at all levels.

AFL-CIO Wins Reversal Of Tax Ruling on Unions

The Internal Revenue Service has revoked a 1958 ruling that had threatened the tax-exempt status of unions which pay sickness, death and other welfare benefits as a matter of membership right.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, in a letter reporting the IRS action to presidents of federation affiliates, said the service's 1958 ruling had posed a "serious threat" to tax exemption of unions with established systems of such benefits in consideration of union dues and other payments.

He recalled that IRS had contended such benefits bore no relation to the purpose of a labor union and were designed to improve the conditions of individual members, not union members as a group in relation to employment.

This ruling, Meany declared, "was unfairly grounded upon a narrow and erroneous concept of labor organizations and the reasons that brought about their tax-exempt status under the Internal Revenue Code."

Revocation of the ruling, he reported, came after the AFL-CIO through its general counsel, J. Albert Woll, filed an opposing brief urging that the ruling be withdrawn. Additional information on the subject, Meany said, is available from Woll's office.

NLRB Files Test of Texas 'R-T-W' Law

A test of whether Texas' so-called "right-to-work" law bars an exclusive union "hiring hall" arrangement permitted under federal law has been initiated by Gen. Counsel Stuart Rothman of the National Labor Relations Board.

Rothman has issued a complaint against the Houston, Tex., chapter of the Associated General Contractors of America alleging that the employer group violated the Taft-Hartley Act when it refused to bargain with Hod Carriers Local 18 on the union's request for the hiring hall arrangement.

Although the union's proposed clause specifically stated that union membership or nonmembership would not be a factor in supplying workers for job vacancies, the AGC chapter refused to discuss the proposal, insisting that the state's "work" law made such a clause illegal.

On this basis the management group won an injunction from a state court against a strike over the issue. The local then filed an unfair practice charge with the NLRB.

Question Raised

Rothman said the union's charge has raised the question of whether a non-discriminatory hiring hall, which the Supreme Court has ruled to be a mandatory subject of collective bargaining, would nevertheless be outlawed by virtue of the Texas "right-to-work" law.

He noted that the NLRB already has ruled that such a hiring arrangement is not an "agreement requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment."

Year-Round Attack Urged:

Hit Social Evils at Root, Meany Advises

San Francisco—Hundreds of thousands of volunteers who raise funds for social welfare agencies each year should be "enlisted" for the duration against the causes of social problems, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the national conference of the United Community Funds & Councils of America.

"We muster an army every year, and we demobilize it after a month or two," Meany declared.

The AFL-CIO president's address was read to the conference by Thomas L. Pitts, executive secretary-treasurer of the California State AFL-CIO. AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, who heads the federation's Community Services Committee, was program chairman for the conference, which brought together more than 1,000 community leaders from the United States and Canada.

Meany told the conference that more money and more staff is not the entire answer to "the long waiting lists at mental health clinics, family agencies and child welfare services."

"Social problems have social causes," he emphasized. "In order to attack the causes, instead of simply trying to prescribe for their results, there must be continuing full-time, coordinated effort on a community-wide scale."

Meany cited the AFL-CIO program of union counseling on health and welfare problems as one means of year-around participation in community social programs.

United Fund organizations, he declared, should seek out and train for all-year voluntary work:

- "People who want to understand the juvenile delinquent, the criminal, the parents who neglect their children.
- "People who want to provide help, not punishment, for troubled individuals.
- "People who want to prevent such tragedies from ever happening."

'Eliminate Distress'

The joint goal of labor and social agencies, Meany said, is "service that seeks to eliminate the sources of human distress, not merely to relieve it."

He warned that too often agencies set up to deal with social problems "get to be preoccupied with the operations of the agency rather than the problems that made the agency necessary."

The United Fund, he said, is "an indispensable piece of machinery. But it takes human hands to make it work; the hands of informed, involved, committed people, not just to raise money but to make sure that the money serves its purpose."

Union Veterans Honored For Public Housing Role

Two veteran trade unionists were among 10 persons honored as "architects of public housing" at the 31st annual meeting of the National Housing Conference in Washington, D. C.

Presented scrolls at a banquet ceremony commemorating the 25th anniversary of the Housing Act of 1937 were Boris Shishkin, AFL-CIO civil rights director and secretary of the federation's Housing Committee, and John Edelman, Washington representative for the Textile Workers Union of America.

Other recipients were Leon Keyserling, Catherine Bauer Wurster, Ernest J. Bohn, Oscar Stonoroff, Alfred Kastner, Lee F. Johnson, Laureen Winlack and Marion B. Howden.

In a major address to the conference, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther set forth a broad program to alleviate the nation's housing ills. He urged:

- Mobilization of public support for Pres. Kennedy's proposed Cabinet-level Dept. of Urban Affairs & Housing, recently rejected by Congress.
- Efforts to reverse the population trend away from the cities, which he acknowledged had been stimulated in part by the automobile.
- Federal support of research programs in the area of housing needs and problems.
- Establishment of new metropolitan geographical units to broaden the tax base and help end "the decay" of central cities.
- "A more rational, socially responsible land utilization policy in order to get rid of land speculation."

Terre Haute Gets Church-Labor Unit

Terre Haute, Ind.—Members of the Ministerial Association here and the Vigo County AFL-CIO voted to sponsor a Religion & Labor Fellowship after hearing the nationwide program explained by Charles C. Webber, AFL-CIO representative for religious relations.

After addressing separate meetings of the two groups, Webber met with 12 area clergymen and nine union representatives at a luncheon to launch the program.

Formal invitations to the fellowship's first meeting have been sent out by the Rev. Tom McCracken, president of the Ministerial Association, and County AFL-CIO Pres. Burton Mains.

Walter L. Mitchell Named IUD Officer

Walter L Mitchell, president of the Chemical Workers, has been named a vice president of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. At a recent meeting at Miami Beach, Mitchell was chosen to fill a vacancy on the IUD executive committee.

Bottle Blowers Gain Job Transfer Rights

Miami, Fla. — Production and maintenance workers in the glass container industry have been guaranteed intercompany job transfer rights in cases of layoffs or plant closing under a nationwide contract negotiated here by the Glass Bottle Blowers.

The three-year agreement, first industrywide contract covering the 32,000 production and maintenance workers, follows the pattern set in earlier negotiations covering 8,000 skilled machine operators.

GBBA Pres. Lee W. Minton said the contract also provides wage increases and improvements in pension and welfare benefits.

Strikers Challenge 'Sale':

Referandum Due In Miami Bus Deal

Miami, Fla.—Striking Dade County bus drivers have apparently gained the first step in their campaign to overturn the county's so-called "purchase" of privately-operated transit lines through what AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has called a "fantastic financial scheme."

County Attorney Darrey Davis, at a meeting of the Dade County Metropolitan Transit Authority (Metro), publicly acknowledged that examination so far of the 25,000 petition signatures obtained by the strikers indicated the issue would be forced to a referendum. He said the vote probably will be held on May 8, the county's first primary day.

Sale of financier William D. Pawley's Miami Transit and Miami Beach Railways companies to the county was the underlying cause of the walkout, Jan. 29, by 750 members of Local 1267, Street, Electric & Motor Coach Employes.

With agreement from the county commissioners to take over the lines and pay $7.7 million in 5 percent tax-free municipal bonds, Pawley refused to bargain with the union when its contract expired last Nov. 10, the strikers charged.

When the county announced its take-over of the bus lines on Feb. 9, it invited the strikers to return to work under civil service "working rules" which, the local points out, exempt such basic grievances as dismissals and reductions in pay from any consideration. The county has refused to bargain with the union on the claim that state law prohibits it from doing so.

Strikebreakers Hired

With the ranks of the strikers firm, union spokesmen recalled, the county then launched an all-out campaign to break the strike and began a crash program to "train" strikebreakers hired as drivers.

John M. Elliott, international president of the union, termed the county's actions "shocking."

"Never in history has a political entity which is subject to restrictive control of a private party played such a sorry role in a strike against that private party," Elliott declared.

He pointed out that the county had given Pawley nearly twice the book value of the bus properties, but that the financier still retains effective control of the lines. Under the trust agreement, Elliott noted, Pawley retains the right to approve the trustee, co-trustee, consulting engineers, management officials and even the certified public accountants hired to audit the books.

Meanwhile, the union president continued, "Pawley will sit back and collect his 5 percent tax-free interest over the next 15 years with none of the risks of running an operation in private enterprise."

Termed 'Fantastic Deal'

It was this arrangement that Meany, addressing a giant rally Feb. 20 in support of the bus strikers, described as "the most fantastic financial scheme I have ever heard of."

"I would call it a 'deal' rather than a 'sale,'" Meany declared. "It is a bold and cynical plan to give Mr. Pawley all of the gravy and none of the risks."

Meanwhile, Local 1267 is pressing a public boycott of the bus lines, which has also been stimulated by a rash of accidents involving buses driven by strikebreakers. Instead of the normal two to four weeks of training, a local spokesman observed, Metro has been giving the strikebreakers three days of indoctrination.

The bus accidents, which the local says have risen to as many as 12 a day, include one fatality. Mrs. Mary Boudreau, 33, was struck by a bus while standing on the sidewalk and died a few days later. The strikebreaking driver of the bus, Ronald King, 31, was back on the job the next day.

"DON'T BUY SEARS" campaign is pressed by three members of the Retail Clerks at a San Francisco outlet of the chain. RCIA has urged union members to repledge their support of the boycott, now nearly two years old, until Sears gives meaningful recognition to the right of its employes to join unions and agrees to negotiate in good faith where the union has been designated bargaining representative.

Job Transfer Rights Won in Autolite Pact

Toledo—A transfer clause permitting Electric Autolite Co. workers to "follow the job" to a new location with all rights intact is a feature of a three-year agreement between the company and the Auto Workers.

The agreement, reached 25 minutes before a strike deadline, covers 5,000 office, clerical and production workers in 16 units of Autolite plants in eight states and the province of Ontario. It represents a new high mark in job security, according to UAW Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey, who headed the union negotiating committee at the finish.

The transfer clause permits a worker to move to any organized or unorganized company plant if his job is transferred. The clause acquired more than average importance because of recent reports that the Toledo plant may be moved, the union said.

Other improvements in the contract are wage increases of four cents an hour each year, and better insurance, pension, and supplemental unemployment benefits.

Autolite produces spark plugs for the auto, aircraft and marine industries. Main plants are at Toledo and Fosteria, O., Syracuse and Niagara Falls, N. Y., Bay City, Mich., and Sarnia, Ont.

Denver Metal Trades Defeat Rival Raid

Denver — The Denver Metal Trades Council beat back a raid by District 50 of the unaffiliated Mine Workers and won a National Labor Relations Board election among 1,481 eligible employes at the Rocky Flats, Colo., plant of the Atomic Energy Commission, operated by the Dow Chemical Co.

The NLRB tally of votes was Metal Trades Council 826; Mine Workers 540; no union 33, void 1, challenged 1.

their supporters, accused the state GOP leaders of "dragging their feet" on the condemnation bills. He told the overflow gathering of nearly 4,000 at Manhattan Center that the union bus drivers would be better off under city operation of the Fifth Avenue Lines than under the present management of Harry Weinberg.

Support for the strikers was pledged at the rally by Louis Hollander, chairman of the State AFL-CIO executive council, and Harry Van Arsdale, president of the City Central Labor Council.

TWU Sec.-Treas. Matthew Guinan led a demonstration of some 3,000 union members the next day, picketing the New York City office of Gov. Nelson Rockefeller in protest over the legislative delay.

Fifth Avenue Coach Lines serves all of the Bronx, most of Manhattan and parts of Queens.

Pensions Cancelled

TWU members struck the company when new management under Weinberg laid off 29 workers with long seniority, said it planned to lay off 1,500 more and canceled pension payments for some 900 retired workers.

Mayor Wagner quickly initiated condemnation proceedings, charging that the company had provoked the strike to "blackjack" the city into approving an increase in the 15-cent fare.

Meanwhile, the company, through its general counsel, Roy M. Cohn, filed a $37.5 million damage suit against the TWU and Quill charging that the union had "wrongfully, wilfully and wickedly" struck in violation of its contract. Union officials respond that management itself abrogated the contract through the layoffs and denial of pension payments.

House Tax Bill Backed Pending Senate Revision

and "completely ignores" additional areas, the AFL-CIO said.

The federation estimated that if the bill is enacted as reported it will result in a net revenue loss to the Treasury of $750 million.

A major feature of the measure is a tax credit to reduce business tax bills by as much as 8 percent of what they spend for new equipment. The statement noted that "the AFL-CIO has never supported this proposal" and that the committee's version of the President's plan provides even greater leeway for business.

The measure includes some new restrictions on what business expenses are eligible for tax reductions, provides for a 20 percent tax withholding on dividends and some kinds of interest income, stiffens tax treatment of overseas earnings by U.S. corporations and would increase taxes on savings and loan associations.

The recent meeting of the AFL-CIO Executive Council withheld decision on the tentative committee bill pending further meetings on the foreign income tax provisions. A number of changes were made by the committee in line with AFL-CIO proposals.

Originally the bill provided that all income earned overseas would be deferred for tax purposes unless reinvested. The committee changed this so that all income would be subject to immediate taxation unless reinvested in an underdeveloped nation, or by a manufacturing subsidiary in itself.

The federation's statement urged that these two exemptions be removed but that the bill provide for continued exemption of income earned by a foreign subsidiary only in a less-developed country.

The federation's statement said also it will urge the Senate to improve the bill by repealing the dividend credit and exclusion provision added to the tax code in 1954, by strengthening the expense account provision through returning to Pres. Kennedy's original proposal and by removing the provision which makes lobbying expenses deductible.

Short of repealing the investment tax credit, the AFL-CIO called for a duration of three to four years and restricting the credit to industries directly involved in international trade.

Before voting to report the measure, the Ways & Means Committee defeated on party line votes of 15 to 10 Republican attempts to eliminate the dividend and withholding section, the provision for tax treatment of overseas operations of U.S. firms and to substitute increased tax deductions for depreciation in place of the investment credit.

The measure is before the House Rules Committee where it is expected to be granted a traditional closed rule given all tax measures which will bar floor amendments and allow only a vote to recommit the bill to committee.

Mediator Denounces Hotel Management

Toronto, Canada—City Controller Herbert Orliffe, a mediator for 25 years, has abandoned his efforts to settle the 11-month Royal York Hotel strike with a ringing denunciation of a management that does not want to end the walkout.

"I cannot help but feel that management could, if it really desired to, end this strike by taking back all the strikers subject, of course, to showing cause in respect to any individual it refused to take back," wrote the mediator.

The hotel, owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway, has offered to rehire 50 percent of the remaining 485 strikers over 13 months. It would select the strikers it would rehire and when they would return to work.

Controller Orliffe maintained that no person with any faith in democratic principles would accept a position which he described as "a complete blacklisting without stating whom or why."

He said refusal to rehire strikers without giving any reason was contrary to British justice and he suggested the hotel agree to arbitrate the rehirings of persons it objects to.

"If you cannot substantiate your position, surely in all justice you should accept them back into employment," he wrote.

He said a hopeless situation had been produced by the management position of protecting strikebreakers and the Hotel & Restaurant employes union's "principle of humanity" in refusing to abandon fellow workers.

The hotel once accepted a proposal of Ontario Labor Minister William K. Warrender that it rehire 90 percent of the strikers, but the strikers rejected this, too, and the hotel reverted to its 50 percent offer.

Strike Started Last April

The union's 1,188 Royal York members struck Apr. 24, 1961 for a 2.5-cent wage increase. The hotel, with 500 strikers eventually returning to work and 600 strikebreakers recruited through CPR facilities, continued to operate.

However, five other CPR hotels have been served with wage demands identical to those at the Royal York by the Canadian Brotherhood of Rail, Transport and General Workers. The union also served contract demands on six Canadian National Railways hotels and one that is jointly owned by CPR and CNR.

Porters Seek 40-Hour Week On Railroads

New York—The Sleeping Car Porters have asked the Pullman Co. and railroads operating their own sleeping cars for a 40-hour workweek or a 173-hour month, which the union estimates will provides jobs for approximately 700 furloughed long-service workers.

At present Pullman porters and attendants work a basic 205-hour month and do not receive overtime pay until after 240 hours.

Union Pres. A. Philip Randolph said discontinuance of passenger trains, mergers and other consolidations have resulted in an approximately 50 percent cut in the work force. Many laid-off porters, he said, "cannot look forward to ever working on the railroads again."

Randolph said the union also will seek to negotiate a job stabilization rule providing that reductions resulting from technological change will be accomplished only through "normal attrition" and not layoffs, and providing job and pay protection for workers whose jobs are affected by mergers.

'Ev and Charlie'

IT IS DIFFICULT to believe that Republican members of Congress support the callous, partisanship-at-any-price leadership of Sen. Everett M. Dirksen and Rep. Charles Halleck on health care for the aged through social security.

Their response to Pres. Kennedy's message asking for legislation at this session of Congress was a brusque, cold reply that the measure would not be adopted.

This sort of performance may be fine for the routines of the "Ev and Charlie" show; it is hardly the posture of responsible leadership facing up to one of the major domestic problems of our day.

There are a number of Republicans on the Hill who show a great concern for the problem of providing medical care for our older citizens and they are investigating a number of approaches.

There is a heartening trend also of conservative members of both parties toward the social security financing approach, especially after an examination of the essential failure of the Kerr-Mills legislation.

Against this thoughtful re-examination by legislators and a growing demand throughout the nation for action, the "Ev and Charlie" performance strikes a sour note of blatant, unreasoning opposition.

Metcalf Nails a Lie

THE "BIG LIE" TECHNIQUE is the mark of the demagogue and the dictator. It relies on complete fabrication of a statement or spurious document and a repeated, insistent emphasis of the single point.

This technique has made a new appearance in the United States recently with the rise of the radical right. The technique follows classic lines—fabricate a statement, attribute it to a world figure, and use it to defeat a liberal program.

Sen. Lee Metcalf (D-Mont.) has exposed the latest application of the "big lie" that has been cropping up in mail on Capitol Hill. Extreme rightists have been sending letters containing a supposed statement by Nikita Khrushchev that goes like this:

"We cannot expect the Americans to jump from capitalism to communism, but we can assist their elected leaders in giving Americans small doses of socialism, until they suddenly awake to find they have communism."

Metcalf's investigations have turned up overwhelming evidence that the statement is a complete and absolute fake. The Library of Congress told the senator an intensive search of Soviet records unearthed no such quotation. He received the same answer from the Senate Internal Security Committee.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation replied to his inquiry that there was no record that the quotation was authentic. The Central Intelligence Agency said "to the best of our knowledge, we believe the quotation is spurious."

Metcalf reported his findings to the Senate, concluding that the whole business was "a lie used to perpetrate a greater lie," that Americans who stand for liberal programs are Communists. He continued:

"I say that whoever created this quotation and those who, knowing it to be spurious, nevertheless disseminate it, are cut from the same cloth as Communists and Fascists."

Sen. Metcalf has performed an outstanding public service in exposing this latest manifestation of neo-fascism inherent in the radical right in America. It should serve as a warning to the nation that to achieve its destructive ends, the extreme rightists will use the "big lie," the phony quote and any other vile weapon that can be used to undermine democracy and freedom.

NCWC Booklet Shows:

Hysteria of Far Right 'Crusades' Effectively Aids Communists

(The following is excerpted from the booklet Communism: Threat to Freedom, published by the National Catholic Welfare Conference):

COMPARED WITH THEIR ACTIVITIES and influence 20 years ago, Communists today are weak and impotent. Yet in the 1960's strong reaction against domestic communism is sweeping the land. Well-financed and attended crusades, which would have been manna from heaven in 1946, are increasingly evident. Speakers and writers for such groups are vigorously fighting problems that were mostly solved by 1950.

In many parts of the country, hysteria and suspicion are becoming increasingly evident. A virulent form of disunity is weakening us in the world struggle against communism, and performing this disservice in the name of militant anti-communism. Many Americans are confused and bewildered by the whole trend.

Their basic problem is frustration and even fear. They have seen the Soviet Union apparently gaining in its struggle to communize the world. Those who would have Americans concentrate on a minor threat of domestic subversion and ignore subversion and Communist pressures in Europe, Asia, Africa and Latin America are misleading the American people. Whatever their motives, they are effectively aiding the Communist cause.

They are most effective when they can quote "experts" to bolster their cause. There are three types of "experts" whose credentials should be scrutinized with care. They are former agents of the FBI, former informants for the FBI, and persons who have had first-hand contact with the Communist Party, either as members or victims.

Many of the more vocal anti-Communist groups have connected communism with social philosophies they find unpopular. Many, for example, use the argument expressed by a former high government official in late 1961. It runs this way: liberalism is the same as the welfare state. The welfare state is socialism. And the Communists say that they are Socialists. Hence, liberalism is communism.

THIS STATEMENT is bad logic and worse history. As logic, it would make the encyclical of Pope John XXIII, Mater et Magistra (Christianity and Social Progress), a defense of communism. The encyclical advocates or does not reprove many specific items rejected by extremist groups (the use of the income tax to equalize burdens, aid to underdeveloped nations, government action to smooth out economic change, social insurance, aid to agriculture, housing subsidies, etc.).

The violent and bitter struggle for racial equality in the United States has often prompted charges that Communists were behind these activities.

Actually it is an amazing fact that the Communists have had little success among the Negroes.

In fact, Negro leaders and the overwhelming majority of Negro people have rejected Communist influence and have insisted that they are true Americans. Whenever Communist influence is detected by the NAACP or CORE it is promptly removed.

Protestant churches, especially the National Council of Churches, have also been a target for attack. Behind these attacks one usually finds opposition to the "social Gospel" or to alleged modernist trends in organized Protestantism. Communist influence among the Protestant clergy today is virtually nonexistent.

Groups opposed to the United Nations often use alleged Communist infiltration or even control as a weapon in attacking this organization. Some of these opponents are basically isolationist and using the Communist charge as a handy weapon.

The labor movement and certain labor leaders have also been the targets of special pleaders. Yet the former Congress of Industrial Organizations wing of the labor movement expelled its Communist unions well before the general public became excited about the problem.

Offenses charged to Communist infiltration also include fluoridation of water, promoting mental health and organized peddling of smut. Yet our organized dental profession supports fluoridation of water. The medical profession endorses sound mental health programs. And organized pornography is a commercial venture.

The menace of communism is much too real and much too worldwide for the American people to tolerate and support distortions such as those outlined above. Simple honesty and respect for truth should be adequate reasons for avoiding these efforts. But they are more than dishonest, they are also divisive.

If carried far enough, these movements would paralyze American diplomacy. When every discussion with the Communist powers is considered a sign of weakness or even treason, then we are left with only two stark alternatives: surrender or war. Common sense should tell us we should seek some middle course between these extremes.

Morgan Says:

Nature Won't Stay Unspoiled Without Louder Public Outcry

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

IF THE GENERAL PUBLIC can stop messing up the landscape with pop bottles, empty beer cans, candy wrappers, orange peels and other assorted valuables long enough to listen, it should pay more attention to the special message on conservation which Pres. Kennedy sent Congress. What he said, in effect, was that we must protect our natural resources not only for ourselves but from ourselves.

Morgan

In the mass, let's face it, we are a nation of squanderers. We waste more things in this country than most other nations have at hand to use. American ingenuity has made the U.S.A. a paradise of packaged merchandise and we have promptly strewn the packaging from border to border and coast to coast.

Blessed with more riches than perhaps any other people in human history, we have greedily consumed this largesse and wantonly discarded the unused excess. How many factories, in the past, have despoiled how many rivers? How many forests have been destroyed by fires sparked by carelessness or gutted by unscrupulous lumbering practices? How much has the motor car befouled our very atmosphere and scarred the landscape with asphalt and the vulgar, hideous and unending helter-skelter of outdoor advertising signs?

Fortunately, the forces of conservation, public and private, have been waging for generations a relentless fight to save the country from its own inhabitants. The battle is by no means won but there have been some hopeful developments of late and the President's far-sighted message is only one. The state of Pennsylvania, for example, has embarked on a $70 million program to conserve its recreational and other natural resources amidst the pressures of a bulging population, and even some industries are responding positively to it.

But in Indiana the situation is reversed. Despite the specific endorsement of the White House—reviewed by the President at his Mar. 7 news conference—the support of some 100,000 public-spirited Hoosiers, including steel workers, auto workers, other trade unionists and members of conservation groups, efforts to save the Indiana dunes along Lake Michigan from commercial exploitation are being defeated. Why? Because a powerful band of Indiana politicians and businessmen thinks the construction of two steel mills and a harbor in the area is more important than preserving the fast-disappearing outdoors for millions of citizens crowded into the megalopolis of Chicago.

In Florida, the fascinating inhabitants of the beautiful Everglades National Park are about to have their natural rhythm of existence disrupted by the proposed establishment of a rocket engine plant and testing site near Homestead, Fla., just a few miles from the eastern boundary of the park. Nothing definite has been settled yet and there is fierce competition for government contracts but so far Aerojet-General Corp. seems to have the inside track, with an option on 75,000 acres of land in the area.

THE NATIONAL PARK SERVICE is worried not only over what the rocket booms would do to the Everglades' alligators, crocodiles, deer, otter, snowy egrets, blue herons, white ibises, roseate spoonbills and other exotic creatures. It is worried too about losing the park's already critically scarce natural water supply by seepage and drainage of roads and canals.

Aerojet spokesmen scoff at these dangers as exaggerated, declare that sheep graze placidly at one of their California test sites and that seagulls have become veritable pests around the launching pads at Cape Canaveral. Interestingly, however, there has been no major public discussion of the issue and rangers are only partly mollified though they have had some "reassuring" talks with Aerojet.

Still, it is a little hard to imagine how the roar of rocket engines producing up to five million pounds of thrust compared to the 800,000 pounds that put Col. Glenn in orbit, or how the smells and water pollutants generated on such a site could contribute much to the improvement of Everglades National Park or the comfort of its customers, the public.

It may be correctly argued that in this dizzy age rocket engines are more important than a bird's nest. But it was one of the major implications of the President's conservation message that a much more careful balance must be struck between our industrial and other needs and the needs of a bursting population to refresh itself on the unspoiled areas of nature that continue to shrink. It is in this frame that the Florida, Indiana and similar dilemmas elsewhere should be settled, but they won't be unless there is a louder, angrier public outcry for conservation than there has been in the past.

Washington Reports:

Foreign Aid Praised for Its Role In Helping Keep World at Peace

WHILE OUR FOREIGN AID program often is disappointing and "we fret about it, nevertheless we have to keep in mind that our world has been kept at peace, and that these developing countries—most of them—are going forward as democracies with some hope for the future."

Rep. Henry S. Reuss (D-Wis.) made this comment as he and Rep. James G. Fulton (R-Pa.) discussed the 1962 foreign aid program on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

Pres. Kennedy is asking increased foreign aid this year, for a total of $4.8 billion, which includes military assistance and supporting assistance to countries in which U.S. defenses are based, the congressman emphasized.

The increased amount, said Reuss, "is due to our additional responsibilities in Latin America, with its Alliance for Progress program," and to the proposed expansion of the Peace Corps.

Fulton pointed out that although there was widespread criticism of the Peace Corps when it was started in 1961, "some of the critics of last year are today the strongest supporters. We began with 50 teachers in Ghana and will have 5,200 volunteers on board by the end of August 1963. I think the Peace Corps has been a wonderful example of how Americans can help our poor friends and neighbors."

Reuss, who went on a study mission to Latin America last year, said that he found the Food for Peace and the Peace Corps programs were doing remarkably well.

"THE FOOD FOR PEACE people were giving powdered milk to kids up in the Andes mountains who had never had an adequate diet," he reported. "Child mortality is frightfully high there and you had the feeling that in this aid we were showing, in a most tangible way, the very best about our country.

"In Chile, the Peace Corps in action was an inspiring sight. Here were young Americans, most of them just out of college, in their early twenties, living in the impoverished countryside with the Chilean peasants."

Fulton pointed out that much of the Food for Peace comes from our surplus farm stocks, and that with this food "we can't use, we assume our responsibilities to starving families in India."

He said that the Alliance for Progress program will be carried out through the various nations of the hemisphere working "in cooperation as we did in the Marshall Plan."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

CONGRESS AND THE COUNTRY are now moving into what will undoubtedly be one of the two or three major battles of this session—the battle over Pres. Kennedy's proposal for a bold new trade policy designed to expand exports while accepting whatever additional imports are required through international free world tariff-cutting.

The tariff is the oldest political issue in American history. It goes back to Alexander Hamilton's effort to build up "infant industries" by protective tariffs in the face of the American farmer's need to export food and fibers.

We have seen, as recently as 1930, how the high-tariff witch-doctors tried to restore prosperity after the great stock market crash by building up tariff walls in the Hawley-Smoot Act, and we saw the consequences.

More than 1,000 economists warned Pres. Hoover that the Hawley-Smoot bill would bring world-wide retaliations, that the effect would be deadening on our export industries, that there would be no restoration of prosperity and jobs but merely a deepening of our economic troubles. Hoover signed the bill—and the warnings of the economists were vindicated.

Hawley-Smoot made the tariffs on foreign goods so high that many were virtually excluded—and the retaliations came tumbling fast after each other. The dislocation of normal channels of world trade was followed by major bank failures, by spreading international joblessness. Historians do not agree on the precise incident which sparked the economic collapse of the western world, but they agree unanimously that Hawley-Smoot high-tariff mumbo-jumbo was a total failure as a cure for United States recession.

OUR TARIFFS have gradually been cut, since 1934, through Reciprocal Trade Act agreements. Now new factors have arisen—the expanding economic unity of western Europe, the necessity for developing nations to find markets for goods they can manufacture during the transitional period when they inevitably produce "soft" goods such as textiles rather than heavy goods such as steel.

A stream of Kennedy Administration officials already have testified in favor of the President's proposal for the "bold" new trade policy—a program allowing gradual but very substantial international reduction of tariffs between the United States and other countries.

The European Economic Community (the Common Market of six western nations) soon will move toward a huge tariff-free trading area with a population bigger than ours and an integrated economy growing faster than ours.

Great Britain and other western nations are moving toward association with the Common Market countries. We face an economic competition for our export trade such as we have never faced before.

LABOR SEC. Arthur J. Goldberg spelled out before the House Ways & Means Committee the effect of the Common Market on American workers and their jobs unless we establish a cooperative policy of mutual tariff-cutting.

Despite nonsensical charges that American manufactures have been priced out of the world market, we actually sell billions of dollars more in exports than we accept in imports.

If we cut off all imports, Goldberg said, the equivalent value of production here would require 800,000 to 900,000 jobs—but the same number of jobs, or more, already are supported by imports of such products as coffee and tin this country does not produce at all or in quantity.

Our export trade supports some 3.1 million jobs directly, in farms and factories, in production, transportation and marketing. "We can hardly expect our friends overseas to remain good customers for American exports if we decided to cut off their exports to us," he observed. And to improve our balance of payments position, we need to sell more.

Industries and workers individually injured by reduced tariffs have a right to expect assistance in meeting problems created by national policy. Such assistance is provided in the President's program.

FOREIGN AID is necessary today because "we are no longer an isolationist nation," and the new nations are democracies with a hope for the future, Rep. James G. Fulton (R-Pa.), left, and Rep. Henry S. Reuss (D-Wis.) agreed on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

Health Bill Co-Author Rebuts 'Socialized Medicine' Scare

position to health insurance for the aged."

The congressman's rebuttal went into specific detail to refute a number of charges against the bill. To the AMA's intimation that the financial plight of the elderly was being exaggerated, King cited Census Bureau figures showing that about half of all persons over 65 have annual incomes of less than $1,000.

To the suggestion that proponents of the plan had underestimated costs, he responded with an analysis by Robert J. Myers, chief actuary of the Social Security Administration, showing that the AMA had used the wrong figures in reaching its conclusion.

King fired his strongest volleys at AMA contentions that the bill would lead to federal control of hospitals and to loss of individual freedom for patients and doctors.

He noted that a section of the bill giving the secretary of health, education and welfare authority to set "such other conditions" as necessary for health and safety of patients had been described by the AMA as "the means by which federal officials can regiment and control all providers of the services covered."

"How strange this argument," King commented. "I cannot believe that the individual doctors this association claims to represent have the same feelings about the conditions in the bill—the conditions that preclude participation by institutions that are fire-traps or present other serious hazards to the safety or health of their patients."

Standards Seen 'Reasonable'

King noted that Dr. Frank S. Groner, president of the American Hospital Association, had agreed in testimony that the bill provided "reasonable" standards for hospital participation, as the AHA had advocated. The congressman recalled that the AMA had cited no instance of federal regimentation of the health professions under other programs, such as the Food & Drug Act and water pollution safeguards.

"What reason is there to assume that the government would now quite suddenly adopt arbitrary methods?" he asked. "I can only believe that the AMA is deliberately trying to frighten the uninitiated and the uninformed."

As for the charge that the federal government is seeking to encroach on personal freedom, King retorted that the bill actually preserves individual freedom "not only for physicians but also for hospital administrators, for nursing home proprietors and managers, for the aged who would benefit from this bill, and for the individual members of what we call the public.

"I would take no credit from the physicians of this country," he continued. "They have my highest respect and my deepest gratitude.

"It is preposterous, however, to suggest that provisions that would enable people to prepay, through the accepted social security system, some of the costs of the health care that they will need in old age might impede, or in some way interfere with, the efficiency of the medical profession.

"The physician in this country is a well-trained, highly skilled, humane expert in medical care. He does not, I believe, profess to be an expert in economics or insurance, though the AMA representatives pose as such experts. He does not look upon himself as a Solomon whose business it is to advise people how they should go about paying their medical bills, though the AMA does.

"He does not always share the views of the AMA; however, because he may fear AMA sanctions" he sometimes must ask that his position not be made public."

Keep Letters Coming, Building Trades Urged

Amendments to improve both the Davis-Bacon Act and the Eight-Hour Law stand a good chance of enactment by Congress if local union members are loud and firm in their demands for the changes, delegates were told at the 8th national legislative conference of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.

Andrew J. Biemiller, the federation's legislative director, said he had "high hopes" for passage of bills to include fringe benefits in prevailing wage determinations under Davis-Bacon and to add a 40-hour weekly limit to the Eight-Hour Law.

Biemiller added, however, that continuing communication between union members and their representatives and senators "after you get back home" will play an important part in the success of these and other aspects of the department's legislative program.

Building Trades Pres. C. J. Haggerty also urged the 3,500 delegates to translate the encouragement they found in Washington into grass roots campaigns directed to their congressmen "who listen very carefully to your pleas and your remarks."

Sen. Thomas A. Kuchel (R-Calif.) congratulated the building trades on their voluntary no-strike pledge in missile site construction and declared that this expression gives the federal government the responsibility of bringing Davis-Bacon up to date to wipe out inequities.

"I simply do not agree with those who fear that if we open up Davis-Bacon in order to bring it into conformity with the industrial relations practices of the second half of the Twentieth Century we jeopardize the whole prevailing wage concept," said the senator, a co-sponsor of the amendment with Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.).

Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N.J.) called for "a real push" to win enactment of federal standards of unemployment compensation as provided in the McCarthy-King bill, which he has co-sponsored in the Senate.

The measure, he said, is particularly important to industrial states like New Jersey.

"We have been losing far too many industries, far too many jobs, because in other parts of the country low standards have made it possible to go there at a cheaper rate," Case declared.

Rep. Frank Thompson (D-N.J.) suggested that the delegates not only "look their congressmen in the eye and put them on the spot" but that they check voting records and bring direct political pressure to "insure the election of people who support the programs you want."

Nelson H. Cruikshank, director of social security for the federation, has described the piece as "an encyclopedia of use to anyone involved in the fight for health care for the aged."

In First 10 Months:

Redevelopment Aid Given 82 Projects

The Area Redevelopment Administration so far has approved federal expenditures of $8.2 million for projects creating 4,688 new jobs and providing training and subsistence for 6,100 unemployed workers, ARA Administrator William L. Batt, Jr., announced at a Washington press conference.

In a full-scale review of the agency's first 10 months of operations, Batt reported that locally conceived plans for economic improvements had been received from 475 areas (including 18 Indian reservations)—more than half of those eligible for federal aid—of which ARA has approved 343.

All told, 852 areas and 49 Indian reservations now are eligible for assistance under the act as rural depressed areas or urban centers of chronic unemployment. They have 18 percent of the labor force, but 27 percent of the unemployed in the country, and their rate of joblessness averages 8.3 percent against 5.6 percent nationally.

The 82 specific projects approved as of the first week in March, Batt said, include nine industrial loans involving 1,663 new jobs and seven public facility loans and grants which will create employment for 2,925 workers.

Also included in the total are 49 training and retraining projects which "in a very real sense" will mean employment for the workers involved, the ARA administrator observed.

He estimated that the agency would approve an additional 100 projects and commit the remaining bulk of its $170 million budget by the end of the fiscal year.

Projects Under Way

Now being processed through ARA's "pipeline" are projects involving 38,000 more jobs, Batt reported. In addition, he said, 260 more projects are being developed at the local level and 331 others have been referred to various federal agencies for handling under existing programs.

Asked about criticisms that the ARA has been slow in getting projects under way, Batt acknowledged that there had been delays, but said the agency was "exploring every means" of speeding up procedures in its own offices and in other agencies administering various services under the ARA program.

He noted, too, that action on eligible projects depends to a great extent on local initiative in drawing up overall economic development plans and securing community participation and financing.

On the whole, however, local response to the program has been "measuring up very well" and has covered a broad national area, Batt commented.

"We take a long hard look at everything," he said, "because every project we approve now sets a precedent."

He reported that ARA so far has rejected about 50 proposed projects involving some $24 million because they were incompatible with the employment-building purposes of the act, did not provide adequate local participation, or involved a company's shift of operations from one area to another, aid for which is specifically barred under the act.

Batt announced also that the ARA's 25-member National Public Advisory Committee had recommended at a recent meeting that the training aspects of the program be directed primarily toward local development of skills required for proposed new industries.

This, he said, is an effort to mesh the training activities with those authorized under the three-year manpower development and retraining program recently passed by Congress, where the emphasis is expected to be on supplying skills to meet shortages already existing in communities.

Maximum expenditure for training authorized under the ARA is about $14 million a year, whereas the much broader manpower development bill carries an authorization of $485 million across three years.

Roy Reuther to Head Registration Drive

The AFL-CIO's special 1962 register-and-vote campaign will be directed by Roy Reuther, director of the Auto Workers' Citizenship Dept. and administrative assistant to UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

The selection of Roy Reuther to head the registration and voting drive, launched by the AFL-CIO Executive Council last month, was announced by James L. McDevitt, director of the federation's Committee on Political Education.

Reuther will be on leave of absence from his UAW duties in order to head the AFL-CIO's concentrated 1962 campaign to overcome traditional off-year election apathy by stimulating registration and voting among union members, their families and their friends.

The nonpartisan drive will be financed by $250,000 in AFL-CIO funds plus requested contributions by federation affiliates of 3 cents per member and further contributions by state and city central bodies.

McDevitt pointed out that labor's registration drive of 1960, initiated only about two months before the election that year, resulted in a sharp increase in the number of registered voters.

More than 20 million Americans of voting age failed to register, nevertheless, and more than 37 million failed to go to the polls, McDevitt pointed out.

In the face of an historical drop-off in voting in off-year elections, the AFL-CIO register-and-vote campaign will be concentrated primarily in areas across the nation where union members live.

Registration lists will be checked and personal visits, posters, sound trucks and other informational devices will be used to reach non-registered citizens of voting age. A new COPE film, People and Politics, has been prepared in three segments that can be used separately or as a unit.

The November elections involve the entire U.S. House of Representatives, 37 members of the 100-member Senate and more than two-thirds of the state's 50 governors, as well as thousands of members of state legislatures and hundreds of thousands of local officials.

Reuther has been active in the labor movement since 1927 and has had extensive experience in political education and election campaign activities.

Report from the Caribbean:

Free Labor Seen Victor Over Dominican Republic Leftists

Democratic trade unionists in the Dominican Republic are winning "a clear victory" in a struggle with pro-Castro leftists for control of the island country's labor movement, Andrew C. McLellan, associate inter-American representative for the AFL-CIO, reported on his recent return from the Caribbean.

Evidence of the victory, he said, is shown in the rapid disintegration of the Frente Obrero Unido Pro - Sindicatos Autonomos (FOUPSA), which lifted hopes for a free trade union movement following its establishment in the post-Trujillo period but later was captured by left-wing extremists.

By contrast, the Bloque de FOUPSA Libre (BFL), established last month at a national assembly of democratic unionists, has burgeoned to a membership of some 70,000 and is now the dominant labor center in the republic, McLellan reported.

The shift in Dominican labor sentiment away from the extreme left is exemplified, he said, in a recent decision by 13 unions in San Francisco de Macoris to leave FOUPSA and affiliate with BFL.

The struggle for trade union democracy began, McLellan said, when Augusto Rodriguez Guerrero was ousted as FOUPSA president by a secret meeting of the organization's executive engineered by General Sec. Sanchez Cordova just as Rodriguez was moving to replace Cordova, whom he considered to be pro-Communist.

The 5,000-member chauffeurs' union led by Robinson Ruiz Lopez, and other trade unionists allied with them, then organized the first national assembly of the BFL on Feb. 11 with more than 100 delegates representing all regions of the republic, McLellan reported.

Violent Campaign Launched

The statement of democratic principles adopted by the assembly had a strong appeal for responsible elements of the country, he said, but in the period following the meeting a violent campaign was launched against the Bloque by the Communist apparatus.

In street fights and demonstrations over the next week, staged chiefly by students, McLellan recalled, Rodriguez and another labor leader were injured, the U.S. flag was burned and coffins labeled "McLellan" and "Somerford" were borne by a mob to the U.S. embassy. Fred Somerford is labor reporting officer for the U.S. consulate general. He and McLellan both were accused by the leftists of interfering in Dominican labor affairs and McLellan was attacked as "a capitalist lackey."

The AFL-CIO representative had been in the island for several months administering federation aid supplied to FOUPSA in its early stages and helping to set up a trade union education program to overcome the years of denial under Dictator Rafael Trujillo.

The turning point, McLellan observed, came in a dramatic manifesto issued by Bloque leaders which lamented the street violence, cited the threat of anarchy and appealed to the consciences of responsible Dominicans. If democracy was being denied to the trade union movement, the communique asked, what chance had a viable, effective democratic government of taking root in the republic?

The choice confronting the Dominican people was underscored, McLellan noted, when supporters of the Cuban Communist dictator, Fidel Castro, destroyed the country's sugar cane fields by fire, causing a loss of some $3 million to the Dominican economy. The cane fields had been taken over by the government following the assassination of Trujillo, and their destruction meant severe hardships for workers whose income depended on the sugar crop.

These incidents, McLellan said, led to growing acceptance of the Bloque as "the true spokesman for free trade unionism in the Dominican Republic" and a parallel rejection of extreme elements in FOUPSA and "the entire Communist apparatus."

Legal Recognition Due

He noted that the secretary of labor already has advised Bloque leaders that he would grant legal recognition to the organization, necessary under Dominican laws for a union group to function effectively.

Perhaps the most significant sign of the Bloque's success to date, McLellan noted, is the "positive program" of trade union education launched with the joint support of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT) and a number of international trade secretariats which have assigned representatives to aid the developing labor movement in the republic.

"The program," McLellan said, "is proof that teamwork between an organization like ORIT and the ITS missions can be highly effective."

Two regional labor education programs already have opened, he noted, under the direction of Jose Marmolejo, a Dominican trained at the University of Puerto Rico Labor Institute, and two others are planned as soon as additional technicians can be recruited.

"The importance of the program," McLellan said, "must be viewed in the light of 32 years of experience under Trujillo, when no one was allowed to learn anything. We have natural leaders in the Dominican Republic who do not have sufficient background and orientation to conduct a meeting. But all that is being changed."

ILO Re-elects Morse, Votes Budget Boost

Geneva, Switzerland—David A. Morse of the United States was re-elected to a new six-year term as director general of the Intl. Labor Organization by the ILO's Governing Body at a meeting here.

The vote was unanimous, 37 to 0, with three abstentions. The Soviet Union and Rumanian delegates abstained without explanation. The delegate from Ghana abstained with the statement that he was lacking in instructions from his government.

Morse's re-election came after he had withdrawn a previous notice that he would retire to resume life as a private citizen in the U.S. A former under secretary of labor in the Truman Administration, Morse has served as the ILO's director general for a decade and will now continue in a term expiring in 1968.

Highlights of the lively four-day ILO session, participated in by 20 government delegates and 10 each representing workers and employers, included:

- Adoption of a report calling on Portugal to remove "vestiges" of forced labor in her African territories.
- Approval of a $13.6 million budget for 1963.
- A start toward the setting up of an advanced training center for industrial workers in Italy.
- An eight-hour warning strike by the ILO's 1,000-strong headquarters staff, resulting in a pledge of salary increases, unspecified in amount but retroactive to Jan. 1.

The worker delegates pressed hard to get an immediate pay increase for the ILO staff, which was sought by the union for about half its members — the typists, stenographers, maintenance workers, telephone operators and other low-ranked categories.

Their effort was blocked by employers in alliance with a majority of government delegates. Morse himself backed the 12-to-18 percent increases demanded as equitable and sound."

Irked by having already been put off for over a year, the staff staged its one-day strike in a bid to get immediate action.

The employer and some government delegates attacked the staff for having held up the session by the work stoppages. But Rudy Faupl, U.S. worker delegate and a member of the Governing Body replied:

"I thank God that this is an organization whose employes have the right to strike and have the courage to exercise that right when they feel that they have no other way of redress."

Retroactivity Voted

When voting to decide at its next session in May the size of the pay increase to be given, the Governing Body specified that the new pay scale would be retroactive to the start of the year.

Morse's re-election assures a continuing of direction in the ILO, which he has headed without interruption since 1948.

Morse was given the go-ahead signal on the project for an international training center to develop the skills of industrial workers who cannot get the necessary instruction at home.

Milan, the big industrial city in northern Italy, has offered to pay the cost of converting for the center the Palace of Labor that was one of the features of the International Labor Exhibition held there last year.

The "vestiges" of forced labor were found by a three-man committee of jurists that the ILO appointed to investigate a complaint by Ghana against Portugal.

Vigorous Action Asked

After an on-the-spot survey and several hearings, the committee called in its outspoken 390-page report for more vigorous governmental action in Portuguese Africa to guarantee the effectiveness of anti-slave labor legislation.

The committee generally cleared the Portuguese government of any intention not to live up to its ILO pledges. Nevertheless the investigators said that better government labor inspection and other services were needed to assure that the recruitment of workers for private companies did not border on forced labor methods.

Both Ghana and Portugal accepted the Committee's report.

AMENDMENT OF DAVIS-BACON Act to include value of fringe benefits in determining area prevailing wages for federally-financed construction was urged by AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, right. He is shown discussing the measure with House Labor Subcommittee Chairman James Roosevelt (D-Calif.), sponsor of the labor-backed bill.

Updating of Davis-Bacon Urged at House Hearing

wise, he said, "local building tradesmen who have elected to take wage increases in the form of benefit programs in order to provide for their families" are deprived of work.

The Roosevelt subcommittee also heard these witnesses:

- Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. pointed out that approximately 10 percent of the construction worker's "real wages" are now in the form of fringe benefits. He noted that a growing number of states with prevailing wage laws now require the value of fringe benefits to be included in determining area wage scales.
- Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg declared that amendments to the two laws are "long overdue" and have the "wholehearted support" of the Administration.

He said legislation to protect prevailing wage conditions "cannot be effective" unless it includes fringe benefits. "Otherwise, the evils which Congress sought to overcome when it passed the Davis-Bacon Act may again become commonplace."

- A U.S. Chamber of Commerce spokesman, Lee E. Knack, appearing in opposition, flatly advocated repeal of both Davis-Bacon and the 8-Hour Law. The CofC also demanded a congressional investigation of the Labor Dept.'s administration of Davis-Bacon and said that if the law isn't repealed then the prevailing wage rates set by the Secretary of Labor should be made subject to judicial review.

Biemiller pointed out that the Davis-Bacon Act was designed "to protect prevailing living standards of building tradesmen and to prevent disturbance of the local economy." Its original sponsors were both Republicans, he noted, and "the principle of the law has been extended under both Democratic and Republican Administrations."

Until the cost of fringe benefits is included in prevailing wage determinations, the AFL-CIO spokesman declared, "we are increasingly likely to return to the unconscionable conditions" which Davis-Bacon was designed to correct.

"Contractors who do not have welfare programs for their employes can come into a local area and, simply because their labor costs are lower, undercut already established fair employers who do contribute to these programs for their employes."

Goldberg and Labor Dept. Solicitor Charles Donahue both attacked the CofC proposal for judicial review of the department's wage determinations, labeling such a system "unworkable." The department has to process 46,000 determinations a year, they pointed out, and if the rates were subject to court review no contractor would know how to bid.

Haggerty said that because of the absence of a 40-hour ceiling under the 8-Hour Day Law "there has arisen in many areas an unfair practice under which contractors have worked building tradesmen eight hours a day, seven days a week, for a total of 56 hours a week without paying overtime."

The bill sponsored by Roosevelt, Haggerty said, would "plug this glaring loophole in the present law."

TWUA Says 12 Companies Broke T-H Act

Charges that 12 South Carolina firms have violated the Taft-Hartley Act by refusing to allow their 12,000 unorganized workers to communicate with union representatives have been filed with the National Labor Relations Board by the Textile Workers Union of America.

Named in the TWUA complaint filed with the NLRB office in Winston-Salem, N. C., were the Abney Mills, Amerotron Co., Burlington Industries, Cone Mills, Deering-Milliken, Maverick Mills (White Horse division), Mayfair Mills, Riegel Textile Corp., Spring Mills, J. P. Stevens & Co., United Merchants & Manufacturers, and Wellman Combing Co.

H. S. Williams, TWUA regional director, said workers have a qualified right under T-H to receive pro-union communications while on company property. Under South Carolina law, it is illegal to distribute communications on or at the entrance to public highways. The union for that reason wrote letters to each of the 12 companies asking permission to communicate with the workers on company property.

When the request was denied, Williams filed the charges. The companies' refusal, he said, was in violation of the federal law. Williams called the South Carolina statute "another restriction on workers' rights."

First Major Bill Passed:

New Retraining Law Signed by President

A massive retraining program, aimed at equipping a million jobless workers with new skills, has swept through final passage in Congress and was promptly signed into law by Pres. Kennedy.

The labor-backed measure, which carried the Administration's "top priority" label, was the first major legislation passed by Congress this year. It marked the first large-scale federal government effort to salvage manpower lost to the nation through automation, technological changes and inadequate education.

The three-year program—a compromise between a Senate-passed four-year measure and the two-year bill voted by the House—goes into effect July 1.

Unemployed heads of households will be the chief beneficiaries of the $435 million in federal retraining funds and the matching state funds required in the third year of the program.

If found qualified for retraining in skills for which there is a demand, they will be eligible for up to a year of school or on-the-job training and for subsistence payments based on the level of unemployment benefits in their states. Lesser amounts would be paid to on-the-job trainees who earn wages and additional subsistence and transportation allowances are authorized for persons required to live away from home while in training.

Up to 5 percent of the retraining appropriation may be used for youths of 19-21, whose subsistence allowances would be limited to $20 a week.

In other major congressional developments:

● The House voted final approval of strengthening amendments to the Welfare & Pension Plan Disclosure Act after rejecting a GOP effort to recommit the bill because a conference committee had deleted a clause which would have barred Labor Dept. employes administering the program from belonging to AFL-CIO-affiliated unions. The recommittal move was rejected, 217-182. Quick Senate approval was expected.

● House hearings opened on the Administration's trade bill to give the President broad new tariff-cutting powers in return for tariff cuts abroad on U. S. goods. Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg told the Ways & Means Committee that foreign trade now provides employment for four million Americans and that every additional $1 billion in exports would create about 150,000 new jobs. AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany was scheduled to testify Mar. 19 as the first public witness for the bill.

● Pres. Kennedy asked Congress to appropriate $4.88 billion for economic and military foreign aid, including $660 million in loans for social and economic development in Latin America under the Alliance for Progress program. The amount was nearly $1 billion more than Congress appropriated last year.

● The first skirmish on civil rights was scheduled in the Senate as Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) bypassed the Judiciary Committee to force a vote on a constitutional amendment abolishing poll taxes in federal elections. While a halfhearted filibuster was possible a similar proposal won Senate approval by a 72-16 vote in 1960.

A bipartisan liberal effort is expected to seek to ban the poll tax by statute rather than constitutional amendment.

In another move, three Democratic and three Republican senators joined in sponsoring bills to carry out recommendations of the Civil Rights Commission on voting rights, education, housing, employment and administration of justice.

Meanwhile a House Judiciary subcommittee is holding hearings on both a poll tax constitutional amendment and the Administration's bill to abolish "unreasonable" literacy tests which have been used to restrict voting rights.

● The House defeated through recommittal a bill to expand its size to 438 so as to accommodate the three seats awarded Hawaii and Alaska without cutting down the representation of other states.

● Federal aid for medical education—a labor-backed Administration proposal—was approved by the House Interstate Commerce Committee. The committee substituted a student loan fund for a scholarship grant provision, but provided that half the amount of the loan need not be repaid if the student goes into the public health field or sets up practice in an area where no doctors are available.

● A Senate vote to authorize the United States to purchase $100 million of 25-year United Nations bonds was postponed in the face of a Republican move to substitute a short-term loan.

● A bill to curb patent monopolies on prescription drugs, license drug manufacturers and require tests of the efficiency of new drugs was sidetracked by the Senate Judiciary Committee. The bill, by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.), was the outgrowth of a two-year investigation into drug prices and had won 3-2 subcommittee approval.

Advisory Unit Supports Kennedy Trade Program

A public advisory group on U.S. tariff negotiations has given a strong endorsement to Pres. Kennedy's proposed new trade legislation, declaring that America must "continue to move forward boldly to reduce further barriers to trade among the free nations."

The public advisers, representing labor, industry and agriculture, were named to counsel with the U.S. delegation to the recent international tariff conference at Geneva, Switzerland. Members of the advisory group included AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller; AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, head of the Clothing Workers, and Bert Seidman, economist with the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research.

In their report to Pres. Kennedy, the advisers praised the negotiating skill of the U.S. delegation and said the agreements reached "should help to open further foreign markets" for the U.S.

They emphasized that "broader powers" must now be given to the President in order to remove trade barriers within the free world, specifically with the European Common Market.

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE Award is given AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, right, on behalf of the Arthritis and Rheumatism Foundation by Gen. George C. Kenney, foundation president, Schnitzler, a member of both national and District of Columbia ARF boards, was praised for "outstanding service and support in the fight against the nation's number one crippling disease."

More Funds Urged for Wage Cheat Crackdown

The AFL-CIO has asked Congress to vote more money than the Administration has requested to crack down on "chiseling" employers who pay their workers less than the federal minimum wage.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler told a House Appropriations subcommittee that the Administration's request for an increase of $500,000 in the budget for the Labor Dept.'s wage-hour and public contracts division was "unduly conservative."

He pointed out that last year's rise in the minimum wage and extension of coverage had made the enforcement job "substantially larger and more complex."

Schnitzler also asked the subcommittee, headed by Rep. John E. Fogarty (D-R. I.), to go above the Administration's request in appropriating money for apprenticeship training and for technical assistance and information programs of the Bureau of Labor-Management Reports.

In the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare budget, handled in the same money bill, the AFL-CIO asked for above-budget appropriations for hospital and nursing home construction. Noting that Congress last year appropriated more than the amount the Administration had requested for the National Institutes of Health, Schnitzler said he hoped that "once again this committee will exercise its leadership in this direction."

Labor, he said, has "consistently taken the position that the only legitimate limitation of appropriations for medical research should be the availability of professional resources to use such funds productively."

Schnitzler praised the "sound and constructive" progress made by the two departments and by the National Labor Relations Board during the past year, but emphasized that "more adequate and aggressive" government programs are needed in many areas of "important human needs."

Backs Food & Drug Increase

He strongly endorsed an Administration-requested 31 percent increase for the Food & Drug Administration as a "minimum" and said the agency should get all the funds it needs "to assure the safety and cleanliness of the nation's supply of food, drugs and cosmetics."

He termed the Labor Dept.'s budget estimates "modest and eminently reasonable" and warned that the problem of obsolete job skills "threatens to become more acute in the future as the rising rate of automation collides with the estimated increasing rate of growth of the labor force."

In supporting a requested $1.13 million increase in the NLRB budget, Schnitzler pointed to a rising case load and said the labor board's success in speeding decisions on representation and unfair labor practice cases has encouraged a greater use of the board's services.

Jobless Pay Bill 'Urgent,' Kennedy Says

raise their jobless benefit ceilings by steps to two-thirds of the statewide average weekly wage.

● Extend coverage to an additional three million workers.

● Establish a permanent federal program of up to 13 weeks of additional benefits for those who have exhausted state benefits, with eligibility requirements lowered during periods of high unemployment.

● Finance the program by taxing employers on the first $4,800 of a worker's annual earnings as contrasted with the present $3,000 ceiling.

Kennedy estimated that 150,000 workers will exhaust their state benefits in April and that the exhaustion rate is expected to exceed 100,000 a month during most of the remainder of the year.

"We cannot abdicate our responsibility to these workers," the President declared, stating that many of them are jobless because of automation or other technological developments.

Noting that despite a "heartening decline" in unemployment, there were still more than 4.5 million jobless workers "who need help" in February, Kennedy declared:

"The serious crisis which compelled congressional action last year has not abated for these workers, but the protection provided by the law will shortly expire unless Congress acts."

He termed the McCarthy-King bill a "vital part" of the Administration's program "to assure sustained prosperity and to strengthen our manpower base."

Member-Hero Wins BLFE Safety Award

A 27-year-old locomotive fireman, who risked his own life to rescue a four-year-old boy from the path of a moving freight train, will receive his union's annual safety award at a banquet in Washington, D. C., on Mar. 27.

Richard J. Hansel, employed by the Pennsylvania-Reading Seashore Lines, was named Locomotive Fireman of 1961 by a panel of judges including Interstate Commerce Commission Chairman Rupert L. Murphy, National Safety Council Pres. Howard Pyle, Cleveland Press Editor Louis B. Seltzer, Canadian Labor Congress Pres. Claude Jodoin, and Pres. H. E. Gilbert of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen.

Hansel's alertness and bravery saved the life of Johnny Keane, who was playing on the Penn-Reading tracks in Pennsgrove, N. J., on Nov. 16, 1961, and froze with fear when a 57-car freight train came roaring down at him.

The engineer set the emergency brakes, hoping to stop the train. When Hansel saw that the train could not be stopped in time, he jumped from the locomotive cab, stumbled momentarily as he hit the ground, and then raced ahead of the slowing train.

Hansel, who had played high school football, threw a flying tackle which carried both the child and himself to safety as the train rolled by.

Winner of the BLFE's monthly safety award in December, Hansel will receive $500 as winner of the union's fourth annual award and have his name engraved on the D. B. Robertson trophy, named after the late president of the union.

Civil Rights Unit Reviews '62 Program

The AFL-CIO Civil Rights Committee, in a day-long meeting in Washington, moved forward on a wide front to implement the policy and program adopted by the AFL-CIO convention in December.

In highlights of the meeting, the committee:

● Discussed plans to create additional civil rights advisory regional groups on the West Coast and in the New England and Rocky Mountain states areas.

● Furthered plans for a conference of union officers and staff to coordinate and strengthen civil rights activities of affiliated unions.

● Received a briefing from Assistant Labor Sec. Jerry R. Holleman on the work of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity. Holleman is executive vice-chairman of the group.

● Welcomed Laborers' Vice Pres. Robert E. Powell as the newest member of the committee.

The committee, under the chairmanship of AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, also continued its processing of cases on the compliance docket and reviewed the advances flowing from expanded apprenticeship programs in California and New York.

Kennedy's Trade Program Given Solid Labor Backing

City Seizes 5th Avenue Bus Lines

New York—Some 5,600 striking Transport Workers have returned to their jobs on bus routes of the Fifth Avenue Coach Lines seized by the city under State Supreme Court condemnation orders. But the union has intensified picketing of company installations not involved in the seizure and employing the remaining 1,100 strikers.

The city acted promptly to take over the bus line's properties after Supreme Court Justice Peter A. Quinn issued the condemnation orders Mar. 21. Enabling resolutions had been passed 36 hours earlier by the state legislature.

Before issuing the orders, Judge Quinn denied a company bid to block the condemnation as unconstitutional.

The Transit Authority said it hoped to have service completely restored by Saturday, Mar. 24. It had already set up a special division to operate the bus lines, as authorized in one of the state legislature's three resolutions.

The city takes over 38 of Fifth Avenue's 48 Manhattan routes, plus all of the operations of a subsidiary corporation, Surface Transit, Inc., which covers the entire Bronx and part of Manhattan.

Maintenance Workers First Back

Maintenance employes were the first to return to work on the seized routes. They were followed by operating personnel as the buses became available for service.

Rights' Plan Advocated:

End of Voting Curbs Backed by AFL-CIO

Administration proposals to abolish unreasonable literacy tests and poll taxes as qualifications for voting have been endorsed by the AFL-CIO before a House Judiciary subcommittee with the specific warning that elimination of voting restrictions "cannot and must not be a substitute" for broad and effective legislation to "eliminate discrimination and segregation in the fields of education, jobs and housing."

The federation position, presented by Legislative Rep. Kenneth A. Meiklejohn, was stated to the House as the Senate moved through a torrent of oratory toward a vote on a constitutional amendment to abolish poll taxes—now imposed by five states—as a requirement for voting in federal elections.

More than two-thirds of the Senate members have co-sponsored the poll tax amendment of Sen. Spessard L. Holland (D-Fla.), assuring passage whenever hard-core opponents end their filibuster and permit a vote.

A sharper, more closely contested battle is expected next month, when Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) has promised to bring to the floor the Administration's bill to eliminate state literacy tests for voting rights for persons with a sixth-grade education. That bill also would permit Spanish-

Strikebreaker Curbs Stalled in New York

Albany, N. Y.—A bill to keep professional strikebreakers out of New York State has passed the lower house of the legislature, 82-34, but the bill remained blocked in Senate committee as the session headed into its final week.

A large delegation of Typographical Union members came to Albany to seek the votes needed to pry the bill out of the Republican-controlled committee, and the State AFL-CIO called for a statewide telegram and letter campaign directed at Senate leaders, committee members and Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R). The governor has not taken any position on the issue.

The legislation, similar to curbs imposed by a number of other states, has bipartisan sponsorship. It was backed in the Assembly by 59 Democrats and 23 Republicans. Thirty-four Republicans opposed the measure, with 33 absent.

The bill prohibits third parties to a labor dispute from furnishing strikebreakers and prevents companies involved in labor disputes from replacing strikers with "any person who customarily and repeatedly offers himself for employment" as a strikebreaker.

A state committee which investigated the use of professional strikebreakers by newspaper publishers had urged protective legislation in a 1959 report. The need for action has been further spotlighted, State AFL-CIO officials said, by the use of "imported strikebreakers" at two Herkimer County newspapers.

Readjustment Aid Termed 'Essential'

Strong support for the Kennedy Administration's trade expansion program has been given by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany who at the same time urged modifications to strengthen the bill's trade adjustment features.

Meany was the first public witness before the House Ways & Means Committee, which is conducting four-week hearings on the bill giving the President broad powers to negotiate multilateral tariff reductions, including gradual elimination of some tariffs, in an effort to expand U.S. exports.

Kennedy's program, Meany declared, meets the need for "a fundamental revision of our country's trade policy" that will bring labor and the nation as a whole "far more than we lose."

He emphasized that labor's support for the program is inextricably tied to the trade adjustment features of the Administration bill. These are designed to ease the adverse effects of increased imports on workers, farmers and businessmen.

"We regard these two features of the bill—trade liberalization and the safeguards against injury, especially adjustment assistance—as inseparable," Meany asserted. "We would not support additional safeguards without trade liberalization; and we would not support trade liberalization without the additional safeguards."

He called attention specifically to two features labor regards as "imperative"—readjustment allowances and retraining for workers displaced by a rise in imports. Both, he said, represent "the very minimum that could be suggested."

Sets 65 Percent Allowance

The bill provides a maximum of 78 weeks training and allowances of up to 65 percent of a worker's average weekly wage or 65 percent of the average weekly wage in manufacturing, whichever is lower.

In addition, the AFL-CIO president urged that the bill be changed to:

- Give additional protection to part-time workers by eliminating the ceiling on their combined earnings and allowances, now set at 75 percent of their previous average earnings.
- Provide earlier retirement for older workers affected by imports as a substitute for the "pitifully inadequate" provision of 13 additional weeks of allowances for workers over 60 not in training. Retirement benefits, Meany said, should be payable "preferably at age 55" and should be equal to the social security payment the worker would be eligible for at 65, even if this means separate financing.
- Remove the 90 percent limit on loan guarantees to business firms hard-pressed by import com-

Board Hits Sperry on T-H Charge

Lake Success, N. Y.—Federal mediators pressed for a settlement of a week-long strike by engineers and technicians at the Sperry Gyroscope Co., hampered by management's refusal to recognize the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers as bargaining representative.

Sperry clung to its position despite a unanimous ruling by the National Labor Relations Board, issued the day the strike for a new contract began, that the company had violated the Taft-Hartley Act by sponsoring a decertification petition among the engineers.

The NLRB upheld and broadened a trial examiner's finding that Sperry instigated the decertification move after the unaffiliated Engineers Association, representing 3,500 employes at 11 plants, had voted to affiliate with the IUE in May 1960. The EA subsequently was chartered as IUE Local 445.

Moreover, the NLRB found that the leader of the decertification attempt was a supervisor and that by acting through him, Sperry had committed a further violation of the federal labor law by directly

New Sessions Held On Steel Contracts

Pittsburgh — Representatives of the Steelwokers headed by Pres. David J. McDonald and spokesmen for 11 major basic steel producers resumed negotiations here this week in an effort to reach agreement on a new contract well in advance of a June 30 deadline.

One evening meeting was held and a subcommittee was set up but developments in the negotiations were not made public. Industry negotiators are headed by R. Conrad Cooper, U.S. Steel Corp. executive vice president for personnel.

Minton Hails 'New Concept' In Bottle Pact

Miami, Fla.—Pres. Lee W. Minton of the Glass Bottle Blowers has hailed the union's new contract with the glass container industry as opening the door "to an important new concept" of collective bargaining.

A major feature of the new three-year agreement, which covers 32,000 production workers in 61 plants, is an industry-wide job security clause that gives employes laid off because of plant closings or production cutbacks a first chance at openings in other plants throughout the country.

Minton said the provision represents a "breakthrough" for production workers. It parallels an earlier agreement covering some 8,000 skilled machine operators.

The contract settlement, reached after three weeks of negotiations with the Glass Container Manufacturing Institute, also provides 3.5 percent annual increases in wages and fringe benefits for each of the agreement's three years.

The new job security clause will enable a displaced worker to retain all seniority and fringe benefit rights if he fills a vacancy in another plant owned by the same employer elsewhere in the country. If the employer has no vacancies in other plants, the displaced worker will be given preferential hiring consideration by other firms.

The contract also provides that companies unable to fill job vacancies will ask the union to refer applicants.

The Wives of Windsor Help Picket Chrysler

Windsor, Ont.—Members of the auxiliary of Auto Workers Local 444 joined their husbands on the picket line in zero weather at the Chrysler Corp. of Canada plant here to hearten them in their strike against a proposed work speedup.

Failure to agree on work standards has blocked a new contract and settlement of the walkout, now in its fifth week. The company has sent letters to the 3,000 hourly workers asserting it had offered the union a "package" similar to that the UAW had negotiated with Ford and General Motors, but UAW Canadian Dir. George Burt declared that Chrysler failed to meet rest period standards of the other agreements.

Meany Salutes Unions On Algerian Cease-Fire

The cease-fire in Algeria was hailed as "the first step toward a resounding victory of the ideal of self-discrimination and independence" by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in a cable to the General Union of Algerian Workers (UGTA).

"This achievement will be a shining light and an encouragement to others," he declared. "It will accelerate the freedom movement there where workers are still oppressed, and the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions will do everything in its power for it to succeed."

UGTA Gen. Sec. Ali Yahai replied that Algerian workers were "very impressed" by the message.

"Thank you for your constant solidarity," he added. "We are assured of your support for the strict carrying out of the agreement and the realization of total independence for Algeria."

The Algerian labor movement had been in the forefront of the struggle for liberty and many of its members gave their lives to the cause of freedom during the seven-year struggle. Meany looked behind the rejoicing to pay tribute to them.

"The workers of the U.S.A. greet the Algerian trade union federation, UGTA, and pay homage to the innumerable martyrs who have died and suffered for the cause of Algerian freedom, and recall the part played by the UGTA in this struggle," he said in the cable.

"Their sacrifices have not been in vain. The free workers of the world have stood by their side in the past and will continue to do so in the future."

D.C. Jobless Pay Hiked To 50% Average Wage

A major overhaul of the District of Columbia's unemployment insurance program won quick acceptance by Congress following sudden agreement on the measure in a House-Senate conference committee.

With White House approval deemed certain, the bill will bring the first improvement since 1954 in benefits for jobless workers in the nation's capital. If Pres. Kennedy signs the measure before the end of March, it will become effective Apr. 1.

Key provision of the conference agreement, taken from the Senate bill sponsored by Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.), would increase the maximum weekly benefit to 50 percent of the average weekly wage in the District, with provision for annual adjustment.

This would raise the ceiling immediately to $47 a week, against the present $30 maximum, which matches the Arkansas benefit as the lowest in the nation.

The compromise measure also would increase the maximum duration of benefits to 34 weeks, up from 26. The present law sets a limit on total benefits of one-third of a jobless worker's base-period wages up to 26 weeks. The conference committee's formula meshes provisions of the House and Senate bills to set a ceiling of one-half of base-period wages up to 34 weeks.

J. C. Turner, president of the Washington AFL-CIO Central Labor Council, expressed gratification that the conferees had agreed on a flexible weekly maximum, adjustable annually to the average wage level. Eight states now have similar percentage ceilings, strongly advocated by the AFL-CIO.

"This kind of automatic adjustment," Turner said, "will give protection to the District's unemployed without depending on repeated requests to Congress to increase benefits."

Turner and AFL-CIO representatives have been pressing for improvements in the D.C. unemployment insurance law for several years.

In another significant area, the conferees rejected a provision of the House bill, backed by Washington employers, which would have denied benefits to workers disqualified for quitting their jobs, misconduct, or refusal of suitable work. Instead, the compromise retains present provisions denying benefits for four to nine weeks after the act leading to disqualification.

Textile Agreement Workable, ACWA Told

The recently-negotiated international agreement on cotton textile and apparel imports is "workable" despite some "serious shortcomings," Clothing Workers Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky has reported to his union's executive board.

Potofsky praised Pres. Kennedy for efforts to safeguard the textile industry and said he was encouraged by the Administration's "apparent determination" to administer the agreement "strictly."

Kennedy Proposals on Voting Curbs Backed

speaking Americans to qualify on the basis of literacy in that language—a provision aimed at disqualifications now required by law in New York.

Meiklejohn, testifying for AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, declared in the federation's statement to the House subcommittee that the literacy test bill must be considered "against the background of wholesale denial of voting rights to minority groups."

Noting that the House has pending both a bill to abolish arbitrary literacy tests by law and a constitutional amendment to carry out the same purpose, the statement declared that the AFL-CIO "definitely prefers" legislation.

"We see no legal necessity for resort to the device of a constitutional amendment to abolish or limit discriminatory literacy tests for voters in federal elections," it emphasized.

Testifying in support of the poll tax constitutional amendment, the AFL-CIO termed poll taxes and property qualifications "anachronisms" and declared:

"Our form of government requires the widest possible availability of the right of suffrage for all citizens, without discrimination of any kind whatsoever."

Elimination of the poll tax alone without additional civil rights legislation, however, "would amount to only a small step," the AFL-CIO declared.

Meanwhile in a new move in the civil rights area, Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy asked Congress to toughen federal laws against police brutality.

The Justice Dept. proposal, based on recommendations of the Civil Rights Commission, would make it a federal crime for state and local police officers to use beatings or "summary punishment" in an effort to force confessions.

The present maximum punishment of a year in jail and a $1,000 fine for an official who violates a citizen's civil rights would be raised to five years and a $5,000 fine if the victim is actually injured and a life sentence if the victim dies.

Kennedy Signs Bill:

Fund Safeguards Given New 'Teeth'

The AFL-CIO's long campaign to put "teeth" into a 1958 law safeguarding employe pension and welfare plans climaxed in victory when Pres. Kennedy signed sweeping amendments to the statute, hailing them as an "extremely important" protection for millions of workers and their families.

The new program gives greater enforcement and investigative powers to the Secretary of Labor and sets stiff criminal penalties for refusal to report fraud and embezzlement.

Final passage—by voice vote in the Senate and by a 284-108 vote in the House—came after House conservatives were defeated in an effort to take a "backdoor" slap at the President's recent order on recognition of government employe unions.

When the bill had first come up in the House, Rep. John M. Ashbrook (R-O.) succeeded in tacking on an amendment which would have barred Labor Dept. employes administering the act from belonging to any union affiliated with the AFL-CIO. With only a sparse attendance on the floor, the Ashbrook amendment carried 106-79.

House-Senate conferees knocked out this restriction and substituted language designed to eliminate any actual conflict of interest without restricting union membership. A conservative effort to upset the conference report and retain the Ashbrook amendment failed in the House on a 218-182 rollcall.

Goldberg Pledges Enforcement

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg hailed final passage of the measure and pledged "immediate steps" for "vigorous and impartial enforcement" of the strengthened law.

The amended law, which applies to welfare plans and funds administered by employers, by unions or jointly, gives the Secretary of Labor authority to prescribe reporting forms to be used by administrators. Previously use of a standard form was optional which, the AFL-CIO told Congress, made it easier for an administrator "who decided to withhold some of the information . . . to escape detection."

The Secretary of Labor is given subpoena power to investigate a fund for "reasonable cause" and to seek a civil injunction against misuse of a fund. Criminal penalties of up to three years in prison and a $10,000 fine are provided under the amendments for offering, accepting or soliciting bribes or kickbacks, and up to five years imprisonment for embezzling or making false statements in reports.

A 13-member advisory council is set up, to include representatives from labor, management, the insurance and investment fields and the general public.

Annual reports will normally be required only from plans involving 100 or more participants—the present cutoff is 25—but the Secretary of Labor may require reports from smaller plans. Bonding requirements are set at 10 percent of funds handled, with a $1,000 minimum and $500,000 normal maximum.

The new language brings the disclosure law close to the original labor-backed measure—of which then-Sen. Kennedy was a co-sponsor—which passed the Senate without opposition in 1958 but was drastically weakened in the House.

Panel to Study Dispute at TWA

New York—Pres. Kennedy has invoked emergency fact-finding procedures under the Railway Labor Act to block a strike by the Flight Engineers against Trans World Airlines, which the union had scheduled for Mar. 21.

Members of the three-member emergency panel created to investigate the dispute during a 60-day "cooling off" period were to be announced later.

Meanwhile, the union continued negotiations with Pan American World Airways here, but authorized its members on the line to strike any time after 7 a.m., Mar. 23. The government's emergency authority already had been exhausted in the Pan Am bargaining, a union spokesman said. Sitting in on the talks were Francis A. O'Neill, Jr., a member of the National Mediation Board, and Prof. Nathan P. Feinsinger, a presidential adviser on airline labor matters.

Issues in both disputes involve flight crew complements on jet aircraft, wages and other working conditions.

New York City Seizes 5th Avenue Bus Lines

hattan routes, but the city has announced plans to set up competing service by Apr. 2. It has pledged, in any event, to restore the remaining strikers to the payroll by that date.

The TWU struck the Fifth Avenue line when, under the new management of Harry Weinberg, the company fired 29 long-service employes, announced plans to cut 1,500 more from the work force and stopped pension payments to 900 retired members of the union.

Accusing Weinberg of deliberately provoking the walkout in an effort to wring from the city an increase in the bus fare from 15 cents to 20 cents, Mayor Robert F. Wagner pressed quickly for state action to permit a city take-over.

Wagner told Weinberg he was "through" as far as New York was concerned and should "abandon any hope" of further transit operations in the city.

Weinberg, who won control of the company a litle more than a month ago, had argued the layoffs and pension cutbacks were dictated because the firm faced a $6.6 million loss this year unless it was allowed to boost fares.

Accountants for the city, however, said the company's books indicated a profit of $781,000 for the year under the present fare if Fifth Avenue had maintained operations.

Through its counsel, Roy M. Cohn, a director of the firm, Fifth Avenue has brought suit for $37.5 million in damages against the TWU, charging that the strike violated its contract. Union spokesmen, however, say the contract was abrogated by the dismissals and denial of the pension payments set forth in the agreement.

TWO Pres. Michael Quill has announced the union will take court action to force Fifth Avenue to amortize pension benefits for employes now retired and to reimburse union members for the estimated $800,000 a week in wages lost during the walkout. The city has guaranteed the pension payments during the litigation.

Long Aluminum Strike:

Broken Pledge Puts Pickets on 3 Shifts

Sheffield, Ala.—Three shifts of pickets are keeping a grim vigil around the closed plant of one of the country's least-aptly named employers, the Union Aluminum Co., in a determined effort to force the management to live up to a promise made in 1945.

The pickets are members of the Aluminum Workers. They have maintained their sometimes icy rounds since Nov. 16, with the collapse of negotiations for a first contract based on a National Labor Relations Board election victory seven months earlier.

Not a single strikebreaker has crossed the line since then, and not an aluminum window has come out of the plant of the country's largest manufacturer of that popular piece of home equipment. The firm's products, which are marketed nationally under the UALCO brand name, have been placed on the unfair list and the AWIU is asking for financial help to see the struggle through to victory.

The story really goes back to 1945, when some business agents for unions in what was then the AFL Intl. Council of Aluminum Workers, driving through Sheffield, spotted a handful of men making aluminum windows by hand in an old warehouse.

They went to see the owner, William King, and talked to him about union representation for his employes. He said he was just out of the service, had started operations on borrowed money and if the union "will just give me a chance to get on my feet, I'll be glad to work out a contract with you."

In 1948, when he moved to a modern aluminum building occupying half a city block and had 50 employes, using modern equipment, they thought he had got on his feet.

'Forgot' His Promise

So Pres. Claude Mitchell of AWIU Local 200 in Sheffield went to see him and reminded him of his 1945 promise. King replied that he wanted no union in his plant.

When the union started an organizing drive, the company responded with firings. Enough signatures were obtained for an NLRB vote but the firm's tactics prevailed and the election was narrowly lost. The union filed unfair labor charges and succeeded in winning several thousand dollars in back pay for four fired members.

The Iron Workers tried to organize the plant, and suffered a like fate. The AWIU went back in 1956 and the story was the same as in 1948.

By 1958 the firm had so prospered that it had some 350 employes who worked in five buildings at wages so low they asked the union to come in. A third election was lost.

But this time the union stayed on the scene—partly out of justice to the fair employers it had under contract who were paying standard wages. A campaign began to gather force in 1960 and an election was held in April 1961—and this time the AWIU won by four votes. The margin stood up under employer assault, and although only 292 employes had cast ballots, 304 workers signed union cards and paid dues.

The strike followed weeks of unsuccessful bargaining.

Stahl Cites Low Pay

"These employes have suffered for 15 years under the most deplorable sweatshop conditions imaginable," said AWIU Pres. Eddie R. Stahl.

"They have not had an increase in pay since 1955 except when the company was forced to raise the pay of several employes in order to comply with the minimum wage law.

"As of Oct. 23 (1961) company records show that 30 employes were receiving only $1.15 an hour and some 225 employes were receiving $1.33 an hour, and some few leadmen received the magnificent sum of $1.40 and $1.50 an hour."

Many of the more than 300 strikers are destitute or close to it. The AWIU executive board has asked all AWIU locals to send 50 cents a member to help. Gifts may be sent to the Aluminum Workers Local Strike Fund, c/o Claude Mitchell, 501 Alabama Ave., Sheffield, Ala.

METROPOLITAN LIFE Insurance agents, backed up by members of the Insurance Workers with other insurance firms, demonstrate before Metropolitan's home office on New York City's Madison Ave. in protest against what union's Local 5 calls company "stalling tactics" in negotiations. Pres. Mortimer Gellis says agents are determined to win "living wage" or strike when contract expires Mar. 31.

Rail Unions Take Strike Votes As Work Rule Talks Resume

Members of four rail operating unions have been asked to arm their negotiators with strike authority as unions and management prepared to resume direct negotiations on work rules and pay on April. 2.

Meetings of general chairmen of the Trainmen, Locomotive Firemen, Conductors and Locomotive Engineers, rejecting a Presidential Rail Commission's recommendations, have scheduled nationwide strike votes. The fifth operating union, the Switchmen, termed the commission recommendations "not acceptable" in present form and said the union's negotiators already have strike authority.

Heads of the five unions, at a meeting in Cleveland, agreed to management proposals for resumption of direct negotiations next month. They made it clear that they do not consider the negotiations limited to the presidential commission's report.

The commission's recommendations would eliminate the jobs of most locomotive firemen, make sweeping changes in existing pay and mileage rules, and require arbitration of a wide range of disputes, including future crew changes resulting from technological developments. Its proposals offer cushioning effects in terms of extended severance and retraining pay.

A joint letter to the management negotiators said the unions are prepared to resume talks on the basis of the original proposals of both unions and management—dating back to 1959.

The five union chiefs said they will personally head the negotiating team.

Meanwhile, in Chicago, a Presidential Emergency Board continued hearings on the demand of nonoperating unions for a 25-cent wage increase and a job stabilization program. Railroad management has countered with proposals for wage cuts for some groups of workers.

'Horse & Buggy' Management

In testimony before the emergency board, Pres. George M. Harrison of the Railway Clerks declared that railroad management is "still back in the horse and buggy days." He said rail executives "lack the will and the desire and the imagination to do a modern up-to-date industrial relations job."

Chairman G. E. Leighty of the Railway Labor Executives' Association, who heads the "non-ops" negotiating committee, cited drastic slashes in rail employment in recent years and charged that employes "have been treated pretty much as machines" with no consideration for their welfare.

Michael Fox, president of the AFL-CIO Railway Employes Dept., said that while technological changes have reduced employment, they have also "greatly increased the responsibility of the employes retained."

Sperry Decertification Move Held T-H Breach

participating in a move to oust the union.

The board ordered the company to halt these activities and to post copies of the order in its plants for 60 days.

Sperry has petitioned the board for a representation election among the engineers, but the NLRB decision in the unfair practice case expressly prohibits such a vote until the company complies with the "cease and desist" order and the 60-day period for posting copies of the order has expired.

Meanwhile, Federal Mediation Dir. William E. Simkin called company and union officials to Washington for separate talks in an effort to solve the dispute.

IUE Pres. James B. Carey, who is participating directly in the meetings, said the NLRB ruling against Sperry was "a complete vindication" of the union's position and substantiated its view that "the present cessation of vital defense production at Sperry is entirely the result of the company's union-busting activity."

Prior to the strike, Carey offered to extend bargaining 10 days beyond the Mar. 14 expiration of the existing contract and to undertake "intense negotiations" under the auspices of federal mediators. He offered, further, to make any resulting agreement contingent on a settlement of the representation question raised by management.

Sperry, however, rejected the offer, persisting in its challenge of the union's bargaining rights.

In response to questions from Carey, NLRB representatives at the mediation sessions in Washington said there was no question as far as the board is concerned that the Engineers Association is the recognized bargaining representative for Sperry's engineering and technical employes.

The board spokesmen also agreed that nothing now stands in the way of negotiations between the company and the union.

Two other IUE locals, representing production and clerical workers, have refused to cross the engineers' picket lines at the Sperry plants.

UAW's Lee Named Postal Service Aide

Wichita—Malcolm R. Lee, regional director here for the Auto Workers and chairman of the county Democratic committee, has been named assistant to the new director of the Wichita regional post office, in charge of employe relations for 21,500 postal employes in Kansas, Oklahoma and Nebraska.

MORE JOBS, NOT LESS, are likely to result from the Kennedy Administration's trade expansion program, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the House Ways & Means Committee. Meany, shown here with Andrew J. Biemiller, the federation's legislative director, was the first non-government witness at hearings on the President's bill, sponsored by Rep. Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.), committee chairman.

Perlis Hits Apathy on 'False' Welfare Charges

Waterbury, Conn.—Attacks on public assistance programs are not so serious as "the silence of our decent but indifferent citizens" in the face of such attacks, Leo Perlis, AFL-CIO director of Community Services Activities, told the Rotary Club here.

The widely-publicized assaults on welfare programs spreading out of incidents in Newburgh, N. Y., Perlis continued, are not so serious as "the apologies of our decent but frightened professional social welfare people."

Followed Critic

Perlis spoke here just a week after an address to the same group by Joseph McD. Mitchell, city manager of Newburgh and a principal critic of welfare programs.

The AFL-CIO spokesman was authorized at the recent federation Executive Council meeting to organize "truth squads" of qualified speakers to address community-wide meetings in areas where public assistance programs have been "irresponsibly and falsely attacked."

Discussing the principle underlying public assistance laws as well as the need for changes to emphasize rehabilitation, Perlis told the Rotary Club:

"I am for both relief and rehabilitation. I say it is the state's responsibility to people in need to meet their need on the basis of need, regardless of the cause of that need."

For some people, he continued, relief and public assistance must be provided "now and until the end of their days, without ifs, ands, buts and apologies."

In every state, Perlis declared, these are basic needs:

- A single category of general assistance—"with federal aid and federal standards."
- A public relief program and a public works program, "separate but cooperating with one another."
- A state director of public welfare of cabinet rank and the establishment of citizen's advisory committees.
- "The deeply felt conviction that we are our brother's keeper."

S. H. Dalrymple Dies; 1st URW President

Sherman H. Dalrymple, founding president of the Rubber Workers and a one-time vice president of the former CIO, died in his apartment in Downey, Calif., on Mar. 16. He was 73.

The "sincere condolences" of the AFL-CIO were sent the family by Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler.

A native of Walton, W. Va., who had served with the Marines in Europe during World War I, Dalrymple first became interested in trade unionism while working in the oil fields of his native state.

At the B. F. Goodrich Tire & Rubber Co. plant in Akron, Ohio, in the early 1930s, he helped organize FLU No. 18319. When the union became URW Local 5, he became its first president, and at the first URW international convention in 1935 was elected president, at the same time serving as CIO vice president.

He traveled widely in this country and Canada on organizing campaigns, and while attempting to unionize Goodrich employes in Gadsden, Ala., in 1936, he was attacked and beaten so badly that months in a hospital were required for his recovery.

Retired in 1945

He retired as URW president and CIO vice president in 1945. Active in the fight to rid the CIO of Communist influence, he was chairman of its Social Security Committee and a member of its Organizing and Legislative committees. During World War II he was a member of the Labor Policy Advisory Committee of the National Defense Advisory Commission.

Surviving are a sister, Mrs. Ethel Grady of Spencer, W. Va.; a niece, Mrs. Wanda Smith of Akron, and a stepdaughter, Mrs. Helen L. Canfield of El Monte, Calif. Funeral services were held in Whittier, Calif.

Job Adjustments 'Inseparable':

Meany Gives Strong Support To Kennedy Trade Program

petition, or increase it to no less than 97 percent.

- Set the maximum interest rate on such loans no higher than "the lowest unsubsidized rate that represents the cost of money to the government," usually less than 3.5 percent as opposed to the 4 percent specified in the bill.

"With these changes, we believe the trade adjustment assistance program will comprise a workable and invaluable adjunct to a liberalized trade program," Meany observed.

He expressed the belief that the cost of the assistance program "will not reach vast proportions" and noted that a similar program adopted by the European Common Market countries had been used only sparingly despite drastic tariff reductions.

Meany also recommended that the trade bill include provisions to promote international fair labor standards as a "key consideration" in tariff negotiations. He suggested the possibility of obtaining commitments in the course of negotiations and of establishing review and complaint procedures through the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

A statement by Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who also testified before the committee, renewed the appeal that assistance provisions of the bill be improved for those who "might otherwise suffer hardship in the course of readjustment to new conditions" and that the measure include "a clear policy" supporting the negotiation of international fair labor standards.

Agreements leading to better labor conditions in other countries, Reuther said, would result in higher living standards throughout the free world, thus broadening the market for both U.S. and foreign-made goods.

He, too, urged special consideration for older workers displaced from their jobs as a consequence of rising imports. In addition, he called for an increase in the ceiling on benefits and their duration when "suitable job opportunities are not available."

With such improvements, the bill would have "the wholehearted support" of the Auto Workers, Reuther said.

The bill as a whole, Meany said, if "properly implemented, will offer to American enterprise a far greater opportunity to expand its markets around the world; and it therefore holds out the prospect of more jobs for American workers, as well."

He noted that the measure is "very similar" to the trade program outlined in a resolution of the 1961 AFL-CIO convention.

"It is significant, I think, that some representatives of the unions that have been under the greatest pressure from imports, such as the textile unions, rose to support this resolution," Meany observed. "They felt that if this kind of program had been undertaken some years ago, many of the difficulties they have faced could have been avoided."

Reciprocal Program Praised

He recalled that the AFL-CIO had in the past repeatedly urged continuation of the existing reciprocal trade program. He praised that program for its accomplishments, but declared:

"It is no longer enough for Congress to extend, to amend and to patch up the reciprocal trade legislation that has been on the books since 1934. Times have changed, the world has changed, and this country's trade policy must be changed to meet these new conditions."

The concept of "no injury" on which the reciprocal trade program was based, he observed, did not realistically recognize that imports do take jobs away from American workers and injure some businesses, "even though the loss may be small in comparison to the compensating benefits."

Meany noted that, in contrast, the present Administration bill "honestly accepts what has always been true" and attempts to offset the adverse effects of imports through its trade adjustment features. For this reason, he said, labor supports the measure "with special enthusiasm."

If instead of expanding trade, "we built a Chinese wall around ourselves," he continued, the United States would lose $5 billion a year in business, representing the difference between the $15 billion worth of goods currently being imported and the $20 billion exported.

Cites 10-1 Job Ratio

There are 10 jobs in this country related to exports for every job that might be lost because of our imports, he noted, citing Labor Dept. statistics showing that 4 million jobs depend on trade, against the best available compilation of 400,000 adversely affected by imports.

Labor does not contend that doubling foreign trade would wipe out unemployment, Meany observed.

"But we do say—and the figures prove—that a healthy increase in foreign trade, accompanied by the safeguards in this bill, and with the additional terms we have recommended, would mean more employment, not less," he declared.

As for the charge that U.S. labor is pricing itself out of the market, "obviously we are not," Meany pointed out, "when we can sell 59 percent more goods to western Europe than we buy from there; when we can sell 73 percent more in Japan than we buy; when we can outsell, around the world, every other exporting country."

While American wages are high, so is the productivity of American workers, he observed, and unit labor costs are lower here than in almost any other country.

"I have no apology to make for high wages in the United States; those high wages are based on performance, and every progressive employer knows it," he declared.

Wage Gap Closing

Meany noted, moreover, that workers in other countries are closing the wage gap with American labor, partly through the help the AFL-CIO has given their unions.

"We did not undertake the task of helping these unions in order to protect the competitive position of the United States," he commented, "but rather in keeping with our belief that free, democratic unions are an integral part of a democratic society. If the result is an elevation of wage standards throughout the free world, we are happy on that basis alone."

In response to questioning, Meany said higher wages are particularly needed in Latin America. Unless standards are improved there, "I am afraid we will lose the workers to communism," he observed.

He said that "under no circumstances" would he favor expanded trade with Soviet-bloc countries under the Administration bill, declaring that anyone who thought the United States could benefit from increased trade or cultural exchanges with the Soviet Union was "living in a fool's paradise."

Concluding his formal presentation, Meany said the trade expansion program would enable the United States to meet its responsibilities "in the struggle for the preservation of human freedom" and help it demonstrate that "man's stake in the free way of life is for his material benefit as well as his spiritual salvation."

Heller Hits Ancient Labor Cost Canard

New York—"No shibboleth in economics is harder to down than the idea that high-priced American labor cannot compete with low-priced foreign labor," Walter W. Heller, chairman of Pres. Kennedy's Council of Economic Advisers, observed in a lecture at New York University.

"It is not wages per hour, but labor costs per unit of output, that determine our ability to compete," Heller emphasized.

"We are not pricing ourselves out of world markets," he declared, pointing out that the United States sells $20 billion worth of goods abroad each year.

Beirne, Doherty Visit West Berlin

AFL-CIO Vice Presidents Joseph A. Beirne and William C. Doherty were scheduled to visit West Berlin Mar. 24-25 and convey to the people of the city the AFL-CIO's determination that West Berlin "shall remain free."

The federation vice presidents were to stop in West Berlin en route to Frankfurt for the executive committee meeting of the Postal, Telegraph and Telephone Intl.

Federation Pres. George Meany, in a letter to Willi Richter, head of the West German trade union movement, wrote that Beirne and Doherty will take the opportunity to see the situation in West Berlin first hand, "including the wall of shame that has been erected to cut off access from East Berlin to free Berlin."

Doherty is president of the National Association of Letter Carriers and Beirne heads the Communications Workers of America. Both unions play active roles in the PTTI.

College Buys Books In Name of AFL-CIO

Newark, N. J.—The Newark College of Engineering is purchasing a number of labor books for its library in appreciation of the AFL-CIO's program of providing speakers for its student body.

Robert Kiehl, chairman of the college's Dept. of Professional Development and Industrial Relations, has written Federation Pres. George Meany that each book will contain a plate showing the AFL-CIO as donor of the volume.

The library program grew out of a talk by Bertram Gottlieb, industrial engineer in the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, to the college's 325 senior engineering students. His talk covered an evaluation of the industrial engineering profession.

Text of Meany's Trade Act Testimony

The following is excerpted from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany's testimony before the House Ways & Means Committee in support of the Kennedy Administration's proposed Trade Expansion Act of 1962:

MR. CHAIRMAN, we support the program this bill [H.R. 9900] would establish. And we support the bill itself, with certain modifications.

We believe the time has come for a fundamental revision of our country's trade policy. It is no longer enough for Congress to extend, to amend and to patch up the reciprocal trade legislation that has been on the books since 1934. Times have changed, the world has changed, and this country's trade policy must be changed to meet these new conditions.

There is widespread misunderstanding of the real meaning of free trade—or to put it more precisely, freer trade. Contrary to what is charged by the opposition, no one is suggesting that we should let all sorts of foreign goods, in any quantity whatever, come pouring into the United States, with no restrictions and safeguards of any kind. Certainly there is nothing in the bill you are now considering that would bring about any such result.

This program, properly implemented, will offer to American private enterprise a far greater opportunity to expand its markets around the world; and it therefore holds out the prospect of more jobs for American workers, as well.

It is true that one objective of the bill is to reduce tariffs. But that is part of a larger objective—to stimulate trade in general, exports as well as imports.

In this legislation there are safeguards at every stage. We have the Tariff Commission reporting on the probable effects of tariff reductions before they are even negotiated. We have the specific injunction against further reductions on goods now protected under the "escape clause" of the old law . . . the step-by-step application of new tariff reductions, generally over a five-year period . . . "extraordinary relief"—in effect, the old escape clause in a new form . . . a national security provision, taken intact from the old law . . . presidential discretion, coupled with statutory limitations, to make sure we won't be stuck with a bad bargain.

And we have trade adjustment assistance.

In some respects H.R. 9900 represents a more conservative approach than the old reciprocal trade law—even though it is potentially more liberal in terms of trade expansion. The old law was founded upon a very appealing concept—the concept of "no injury."

Now I am not, by any measure, belittling the achievements of the reciprocal trade program.

LET ME ALSO point out that the blind adherence to this respected theory of "no injury" has handicapped the United States in developing a truly realistic attitude toward the question of foreign trade.

Yes, imports do take jobs away from American workers—even though the loss may be small in comparison to the compensating benefits.

Yes, imports do bring about the contraction or collapse of certain business enterprises, even though many more may be destroyed by other forces.

Because the present bill honestly accepts what has always been true, we support it with special enthusiasm. We, and the nation, as a whole, will gain far more than we lose.

Currently, this country is importing $15 billion worth of goods a year, and exporting $20 billion worth of goods a year. In short, if we built a Chinese wall around ourselves, we would lose $5 billion a year in business.

What's more, we need the things we import. Maybe we don't need Volkswagens. Maybe we don't need Italian shoes. But we do need manganese, tin, bauxite and other raw materials. We enjoy having coffee, bananas and dates. To get what we need and what we enjoy, we have to open up our own markets to other products.

But as I said before, these decisions are not painless. The unemployed shoe worker in Massachusetts, the jobless auto worker in Michigan, may find little consolation in the principle that free trade is good for the country.

That is why a trade adjustment assistance program is absolutely essential to a successful foreign trade policy. And as we have said repeatedly, it is indispensable to our support of that policy.

ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE would accomplish three significant things. It would promote the national interest in expanded trade. It would safeguard the interests of companies and workers who might otherwise suffer from lower tariffs on the products they make. And it would strengthen both our domestic economy and our world competitive position by helping companies and workers to increase their efficiency, either in their present field or a new one.

Trade adjustment assistance is a positive approach to the problems—the injuries—that imports cause. In our opinion, it is preferable by any standard to the negative and futile approach of high tariff barriers.

We call your attention specifically to two provisions affecting workers which we consider to be imperative. They are:

- The readjustment allowance of 65 percent of a worker's average weekly wage, or 65 percent of the average weekly wage in manufacturing—whichever is lower—is not really adequate. It is certainly the very minimum that could be suggested.

However, we think that additional protection should be provided to part-time workers. The bill currently limits allowances to part-time workers, setting a ceiling on their combined earnings and allowances amounting to 75 percent of their previous average earnings. In our opinion, the combination of part-time earnings and allowances should be permitted to equal a worker's average wage in the past.

- In some instances the 78-week limit on the duration of training allowances may prove too restrictive. A training program that really prepares workers for jobs in new, technologically advanced industries cannot always be completed in a year and a half. Therefore, we would consider that the 78-week limitation is an irreducible figure.

In one area, we feel the bill drastically needs improvement. I refer to the provision for 13 additional weeks of readjustment allowance for workers over 60 who are not in training. This provision is pitifully inadequate. We would urge instead that older workers affected by imports be eligible for earlier retirement, preferably beginning at age 55. Workers who retire should receive at age 55 or whenever they retire the equivalent of the social security payment they would have received if they retired at 65.

We also believe improvements are needed in the assistance available to business firms affected by imports. Specifically, we suggest the following changes.

- The bill limits guarantees on loans to a maximum of 90 percent of the required capital. This means that firms hard-pressed by import competition will somehow have to put up the other 10 percent. We believe this is unrealistic and that the guarantee should be a full 100 percent. However, if the committee feels it is desirable to require a company to put up something, it should be a token amount such as 2 percent or 3 percent.
- The minimum interest rate on loans should not be higher than the lowest unsubsidized rate that represents the cost of money to the government. I understand this is usually less than 3.5 percent rather than the 4 percent specified in the bill.

With these changes, we believe the trade adjustment assistance program will comprise a workable and invaluable adjunct to a liberalized trade program. Let me say again that we regard these two features—trade liberalization and the safeguards against injury, especially adjustment assistance—as inseparable. We would not support additional safeguards without trade liberalization, and we would not support trade liberalization without the additional safeguards.

As you have heard from Sec. of Labor Goldberg, at least 4 million jobs depend on trade, directly or indirectly. According to the best figures we can compile, no more than 400,000 jobs have been adversely affected by the goods coming into this country.

LET ME NOW SAY something about wages. There is no question that American wages are the best in the world. As president of the AFL-CIO, I make that statement with pride.

Our American wages are the highest in the world because our American workers are the most productive in the world. And because we have the most productive workers, the unit labor cost is lower in the United States than in almost any other country.

We can compete with anyone, because we have the skill and the know-how to do it. I have no apology to make for high wages; those high wages are based on performance, and every progressive employer knows it.

Obviously we are not, as the saying goes, "pricing ourselves out of the world market" when we can sell 59 percent more goods to Western Europe than we buy from there; when we can sell 73 percent more in Japan than we buy; when we can outsell, around the world, every other exporting country.

Moreover, all the evidence indicates that the wage gap itself is narrowing, and will continue to narrow. As other free countries achieve prosperity, their labor movements press with increasing vigor for a greater share for workers. We in the AFL-CIO have had a part in helping these unions to take their proper part in their respective countries, and we are sure they will fulfill their proper functions.

We have an immediate interest in promoting the principle of international fair labor standards. We are motivated, not so much by the threat of low wages to this country's competitive position—for as I have indicated, we are perfectly able to compete—but by our dedication to abolishing the exploitation of workers everywhere on earth.

We recommend, therefore, that the pending bill include provisions that improvement of labor standards should be a key consideration in tariff negotiations, and that establishment of international machinery to improve fair labor standards in world trade should be a major objective of the United States.

I WILL NOW CONCLUDE with this observation. Our country has, whether we willed it or not, become the leader in the struggle for the preservation of human freedom. That leadership imposes upon us obligations our forefathers never envisioned.

In this struggle the economic well-being of the free nations, our own included, is of paramount importance. We must demonstrate that man's stake in the free way of life is for his material benefit as well as his spiritual salvation.

If an expanded trade program meant nothing but problems for the United States, yet promised a stronger surge of freedom elsewhere, we would still have to consider it seriously.

Fortunately, in our view we are are not faced with such a desperate choice. We believe we can have more trade and more prosperity; more trade and more jobs. This won't come about automatically, but it can come about if we work at it. And the way to work at it, we think, is the bill before you, with the improvements we have proposed today.

We commend this program to you and we trust that for the security of the United States and the strengh of the democratic cause, you will give this measure your approval.

The Choice on Trade

THE KENNEDY ADMINISTRATION'S trade program, now in the hearing stage before the House Ways & Means Committee, presents the nation with a basic choice: increase foreign trade and add new vitality to the American economy or weaken the nation's economic and political posture at home and abroad.

The decision of the 87th Congress, when it votes on a new trade law later this year, will affect the daily life of every citizen. As the congressional hearings continue, it is important that the basic issue not be lost in the complexities and emotions that have historically accompanied debate on tariffs and trade.

America's leadership of the free world hinges to a large extent on the economic strength and relationships of the nations dedicated to freedom. A high tariff wall between the United States and the European Common Market, for example, would weaken both by restricting the trade between them, thus lowering the economic growth rate and the resistance to the infection of recessions.

The Kennedy Administration program is designed to expand trade and provide more jobs in the United States as well as to continue close economic relationships among free world nations. But while accomplishing this end, the trade program will no doubt result in some hardships on American plants, communities and workers. This is why the AFL-CIO is strongly committed to the trade adjustment provisions of the Administration's bill, why they should be broadened, and why it has made clear that without these provisions it cannot support the measure.

The trade adjustment program, in addition to aiding those injured by tariff reductions, will have the direct effect of increasing efficiency in plants grown lax in the shadow of protective tariffs, and where necessary redirect a plant and its workers into a new product line that will be efficient and competitive.

These are the issues confronting Congress and the nation as varied groups present their views to the Ways & Means Committee. These issues must be kept in focus so that an expanded trade program will emerge from this congressional session as a major weapon to maintain the economic strength and freedom of the free world.

The Soiled Record

THE FAIR CAMPAIGN PRACTICES Committee has completed its report on the 1960 presidential election and turned up a shocking assortment of hate-mongering material.

About 1,000 different pieces of anti-Catholic material were printed and distributed during the campaign—millions of booklets, letters, leaflets and general broadsides.

The committee found that about one-third of these argued the question of church and state and ended up opposing Pres. Kennedy. These pieces attempted to state a position honestly and rationally from their own point of view.

The other two-thirds, however, ran the gamut of half-truths, biases and prejudices, with 25 percent of this group containing outright lies.

The committee described 5 percent of the material as "vile," the kind that was unsigned and unidentified despite legal requirements. This "literature" was dirty and vicious and aped the line of anti-Catholic material used by the Communists.

It is to the nation's sorrow that there were men in America—they do not deserve to be called Americans—who would write, print and pay for the distribution of this filth. They have soiled in a very real sense our national institutions.

More Trade Means More Jobs

Jewish Committee Declares:

We Need Knowledge, Strength, But Extremists Preach Fear

The following statement on the ultra-right was adopted by the executive board of the American Jewish Committee at a recent meeting.

A NATION'S STRENGTH is measured not only by its military power, natural resources and wealth, but above all by the quality of its citizens. Americans have usually enjoyed high morale, growing out of traditional American optimism, a conviction that decency and right will ultimately prevail in the world. This optimism is now challenged by the threat of nuclear destruction and the growing might of the Soviet Union.

Most Americans have responded to these world problems with courage and intelligence. They are prepared to live for an indefinite time in political tension and uncertainty, steering a course between war, which would mean universal destruction, and surrender to Soviet pressure, which would mean national suicide. Americans have responded warmly to the President's call: ". . . ask not what your country can do for you—ask what you can do for your country."

But there are some who preach fear and despair. They are unwilling to accept the responsibilities of mature citizens to carry the burdens of free world leadership. They are not conservatives, responsibly concerned to preserve what is good in the old and reject what is bad in the new. There is no evidence that these men are prepared to make the sacrifices Pres. Eisenhower described in his farewell address: ". . . those which enable us to carry forward steadily, surely and without complaint the burdens of a prolonged and complex struggle—with liberty the stake."

We recognize the right of all citizens to be heard on any issue. But the extreme rightists, no less than the Communists, go beyond this prerogative; they sow fear and dissension, spreading distrust of friend and neighbor. Ultra-rightists cry "Communist" at everyone and everything they disagree with—be it support of the United Nations, economic aid to undeveloped nations or the Supreme Court of the United States. One extreme rightist has gone so far as to assert that "Dwight Eisenhower is a dedicated, conscious agent of the Communist conspiracy."

These extremists are not confined to any political party or group, or to any geographical area. It was Pres. Eisenhower himself who described them as "super-patriots." Eisenhower stated: "We need patriotism honestly practiced by all of us, and we don't need these people that are more patriotic than you or anybody else." Pres. Kennedy said of them that "they do not trust the people. They find treason in our finest churches, in our highest court and even in the treatment of our water."

INDISCRIMINATE NAME-CALLING and smearing of public officials, private citizens and even religious leaders are weapons long used by the Communists, past masters of the strategy of infiltration, capture and subversion. The purpose is to replace our rules of fair play and our free exchange of ideas with secrecy and subterfuge. Indeed, some of the extreme rightists boast of it.

In customary Communist style, they pack meetings and outnumber, outshout and outlast their opponents; they create disguised front organizations to snare the innocent and trap the unwary; they are relentless in defamation and harassment. Do these men think that taking a leaf from the Communist book will preserve our liberties? Do they think that the corruption of America's civic morality helps defend what we most cherish?

In times like these, we need conscientious citizens, eager to keep informed and ready to understand the increasingly complex affairs of our national and international situation. We need open minds, free discussion and vigorous debate. Our way of life demands the best civic education and the most responsible community action.

The American people should be given the opportunity to learn from all—Republicans, Democrats, independents, liberals and conservatives. Honest debate informs, educates and invigorates us. We need knowledge and strength for the great tasks before us, dedication to the preservation of freedom and democratic processes.

Morgan Says:

The Far Promise of Peace Is A Little Nearer Now in Algeria

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

PEACE IS STILL a far promise in Algeria but the awful uncertainties ahead should not be allowed to stunt the greatness of the achievement of a cease-fire. Senseless and savage as the war has been, sane and courageous men on both sides have finally reached a truce that should be a new beginning for both France and the sprawling North African country she can no longer hold.

Morgan

Perhaps it would not be improper to salute and say a silent prayer for the men and women, French and Algerian, who must now risk their lives to see that the cease-fire works. The loneliest job of all will belong to a tall, dark Frenchman, Christian Fouchet, who has been named high commissioner, representing the highest authority in Algeria in the interim period.

Frenchmen who know him describe him as a man of great personal courage and a Gaullist of absolute loyalty to the President—qualities that will be taxed to the utmost in an atmosphere where too much brutal bravado has been disguised as courage and loyalties shredded by terror.

These weeks may well be the worst and most dangerous as the hydrophobic Secret Army Organization, already beaten, tries to intensify its madness in desperate hope that de Gaulle and the cease-fire both can be overturned. A number of high officials and influential civilians from de Gaulle down have been marked for assassination by the outlawed OAS.

There is, of course, a narrow chance that the terrorists could reverse their fortunes with another coup, should major defections in the armed forces develop, but the likelihood seems to be that the terrorists will be a party to their own undoing.

Even though they still dominate areas of Algeria, notably the western city of Oran, the very extremes of their brutality, blackmail and cold-blooded murders have goaded both French and Algerian nationalist officials with the realization that they must hasten a peace to avoid anarchy. The fact that the Moslem population has not been stampeded into mass counter-violence so far is considered a hopeful sign.

One wonders what lessons there are to be learned from the monstrous futility of nearly seven and a half years of war in Algeria. Apart from the painful picture of the killing and the suffering, one's imagination boggles at the constructive things that might have been done with the equivalent of the more than a billion dollars a year which these hostilities have cost France.

SEVEN BILLION DOLLARS can still buy a good quantity of the good things of life and much more than that may have to be spent now before Algeria can enjoy a viable economy. In a moving little book about the realities of Algeria, sociologist Germaine Tillion wrote four years ago of the shocking conditions of the Algerian masses in an area as big as Alaska and Texas combined.

"Algeria is as impoverished as it is immense," she said, "and there are enormous disparities in the people's level of development. The inhabitants number between nine and ten million of whom the majority (just over eight million) subscribe to the Moslem religion, whereas the rest (just over one million) do not. . . . With its outdated methods of cultivation, the country is capable of feeding (only) between two and three million people." So here is a land which should have been receiving massive infusions of aid and which instead has been at war for almost a decade.

One lesson of Algeria then must be the blind extravagance of man's hatred for man. For at the bottom of the trouble lie the pride and prejudice of the million Europeans, Frenchmen who are not really French, the colons who have settled the best land and, for the most part, prospered but who have refused to see the passionate handwriting of nationalism on the walls of Africa and Asia. The Algerians (Nationalists) for their part have been both impatient and cruel and the scene became one of the belated death agonies of colonialism—the minority with the technical advantages of education, skills and wealth clashing with a majority who both resented their superiority and wanted the advantages they had.

The emergence of a new national order is never painless but in the case of Algeria, with its acrid mixture of racial hatreds, a French army trying to recapture lost glories, the rivalries and ruthlessness which have brought a major suppression of civil liberties to metropolitan France itself, this experience has been—and still is—excruciating. It seemed utterly hopeless—almost—of solution.

Now there is hope and the far promise of peace is a little nearer and if this can happen in the human wasteland of Algeria, men of goodwill can take heart in the face of the seemingly insoluble problems that confront them everywhere.

Washington Reports:

Atomic Experts Think Russians Tested Anti-Missile Missile

"OUR EVALUATION of the Russian nuclear tests indicates that they were testing an anti-missile missile device of some sort. There is no way to pinpoint how good it might be or what actually it might be. But they are working on it, and working on it very seriously."

So warned Rep. Melvin Price (D-Ill.), member of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy, in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations. On the program with Price was Rep. Alvin E. O'Konski (R-Wis.).

Price said the United States has not had such tests yet, "but I am hopeful that in the series of tests soon to come we will test what we now have in the way of plans for such a missile."

"It's been said—authoritatively and I think very correctly—that no one yet knows how good an anti-missile missile can be produced, but we do know that whoever produces one first will have a tremendous edge and will have scored a great technological break-through."

O'Konski said that protesters who have been demonstrating in front of the White House and elsewhere against U.S. renewal of atomic tests are "misguided."

They are "sincere people, but they don't realize that we have to carry on tests in the interests of survival. They don't know that we have no choice but to keep ahead," he declared.

O'Konski thought the demonstrators are a small minority, "but this is a free country and we can't prevent their expressing free speech."

NEITHER PARTICIPANT was hopeful that the Soviet Union would accept Pres. Kennedy's proposal of a nuclear test ban treaty that would eliminate the necessity of U.S. renewal of tests.

Price reported that he was one of a group of congressional leaders of both parties who met with the President before his report to the people on the necessity of test renewal.

"We were briefed on what he was going to say, and there was complete agreement among us with the President," asserted Price.

O'Konski declared himself of the opinion that the Soviet offer to cooperate with the U.S. in outer space projects indicates that we are "ahead of them in this field." Both feared that the Soviet offer was "tied to what they believe will be of advantage to them."

"We suggested outer space cooperation several years ago," Price recalled. "I think that if we expect much from their offer now we will be disappointed."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

SOMETHING APPROACHING a full-blown southern filibuster shaped up on the Senate floor as debate moved into its eighth day on the proposed constitutional amendment to abolish the poll tax. Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana invoked day-and-night sessions and threatened Saturday sessions. Yet a filibuster on a poll tax amendment is spurious on its face.

Sponsor of the amendment is Sen. Spessard Holland of Florida, ordinarily a recognized card-carrying member of the southern bloc that now is needling him. Indeed, in the past Virginia's dedicated states' righter, Sen. Harry F. Byrd, has been a co-sponsor of the Holland amendment. He says he has now changed his mind, but it is unlikely that anything other than a tactical issue is involved.

The thing on which the southerners would really stand and fight would be a bill to abolish the poll tax by simple statute, rather than the cumbersome machinery of constitutional amendment. A serious filibuster may come, a little later, on the bill Mansfield has promised to compel a presumption of literacy for voting purposes, in every state, for adults who can show a sixth-grade education.

The principle the southerners seek to save, on such matters, is the pretense that Congress lacks the power to lay down reasonable voting standards in federal elections. They want to salvage and sustain a doctrine that only the separate states can constitutionally set registration and voting rules—and that if the federal government is to act, it must do so through constitutional amendment.

MOST CONSTITUTIONAL LAWYERS disagree with his dogma. More than 20 years ago the Supreme Court upheld the conviction of Louisiana vote thieves in a Democratic primary election involving federal offices. They were prosecuted and convicted for violation of federal statutes asserting the equal rights of citizens, and their skulldruggery at the ballot boxes was held a punishable violation of equal rights in elections.

Encouraged by this decision, the House on several occasions passed bills to abolish the poll tax by simple statute. Each was blocked in the Senate by a filibuster or the threat of a filibuster, on the plea of the southerners and some allies that the Supreme Court was wrong in the Louisiana case and that the poll tax could be outlawed only through the amendment process—requiring a two-thirds vote of each house and ratification by three-fourths of the states.

There are 11 states of the old Confederacy. If their legislatures declined to approve such an amendment, only three more states would be needed for them to defeat a poll tax proposal even after Congress had acted.

THE POLL TAX is an archaic device, used now in only five states, that is as unjustified a restriction on voting rights as the property qualification familiar in the early days of the nation. We are a modern democracy and the expanding tradition of modern democracy in all western countries is to recognize the unqualified right of law-abiding citizens to an equal voice in choosing their government.

Abolition of the tax through a constitutional amendment would probably establish no precedent—despite southern hopes—that Congress could regulate federal elections in the states in no other way. The thinking of the Supreme Court seems to move in the opposite direction.

There are literacy rules in many states that are applied restrictively to check, discourage or prevent voting by Negro citizens. A New York requirement that a citizen must be able to read and write in English barred many thousands of Puerto Ricans, fluent in Spanish and well-informed on public affairs by Spanish-language newspapers, from voting in New York City in 1960. New York law in this instance is more restrictive than Louisiana's rule, which recognizes literacy in Spanish or French as well as in English.

The civil rights battles of the 1962 Congress have barely begun, despite the Senate southern poll tax filibuster.

RUSSIAN PROGRESS in nuclear weapons forced the U.S. to plan to resume its own tests, Rep. Alvin O'Konski (R-Wis.), left, and Rep. Melvin Price (D-Ill.), member of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, declared in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

How to Buy:

23-Inch TV for $170, Thin-Wall Refrigerators Make News

By Sidney Margolius

THE BUYS of the month are televison sets and refrigerators. Manufacturers have broken through with more price reductions on TV sets, and are making available deluxe refrigerators of the new thin-wall type for under $200 for the first time.

But the problem of the month, requiring careful shopping with Easter ahead, is shoes. This is a family's biggest clothing expense. Shoe prices have climbed for almost a year, in comparison to other clothing costs which are almost exactly the same this year as last.

There is helpful news for car seekers. Used car prices are receding from recent very-high tags as heavy sales of 1962 models increase dealers' stock of trade-ins. Prices of tires also have been reduced this spring.

Here are tips on buying family needs this month.

SHOES: One of the most important factors in buying shoes is proper fit, not only for comfort and foot health, but for longer wear.

It's vital that you insist on broad-toe shoes, especially for youngsters despite the dubious narrow-toe style which has appeared even in children's shoes.

Some moderate-price mass-volume stores which offer good values do not always take the time, or have the trained personnel, to fit shoes carefully and properly. You need to know how to check fit yourself, especially since children often aren't much help in informing you how well shoes fit.

But the most expensive shoes are not necessarily a good choice for children either. Some families buy costly shoes and then bring in the children for new shoes only twice a year. Children should be fitted three or four times a year. Expensive shoes often have special fitting features, like special arches, which may be necessary for children with problem feet but usually are not for most youngsters.

Shoes, whether for children or adults, should conform to the natural shape of the foot. You need a half-inch of space beyond the toes of a correctly-rounded broad-toe shoe (even more for the pointy styles, which usually require a half-size larger), and a quarter-inch of space at the sides. The broadest part of the shoe should come at the end of the little toe. When your child tries out new shoes, observe whether the heel seat grips his heel snugly and without slipping—but also without binding.

Usually a "combination last" is best for providing adequate toe room but a snug heel fit.

IN JUDGING QUALITY of shoes, which does not necessarily depend on price, look for high-grade calfskin, preferably. You can tell good-quality leather by examining it to see if it is firm but soft and pliable, and closely grained. Bend the leather back to observe the grain.

Look also for a genuine leather sock lining (the strip of material cemented inside the shoe), and for a slightly-flexible toe box and heel counter (the stiffening material used at the toe and the back of the shoe to support the outer leather). The toe box and counter should give a little when you press it, but immediately resume its shape.

In having shoes repaired, note whether the repairer uses wood lasts as is necessary for good repair. Poor repair can decrease a shoe by as much as half a size.

TV, REFRIGERATORS: Motorola has startled the television industry by bringing out a 23-inch set with a list price of $170. This is $30 less than the manufacturer's previous price. Since the usual retail discounts bring down the cost to $140 or less, this is the lowest price at which this size set has been made available.

Earlier this year several leading manufacturers reduced prices of 19-inch TV sets to new low list prices of $140—$115 or less after discounts.

The new thin-wall refrigerators, which are becoming available at lower prices this year, use foamed insulation to provide greater capacity with the same exterior dimensions.

FOOD: Pork is cheaper this year; beef is still reasonable (relatively) but going up, and lamb is more expensive. But the real food buys are turkey and eggs. Storage holdings of turkey are at a record high level. Prices of eggs have been low all year and April is the flush month, with prices lowest of the year. Thus eggs are really this spring's food bargain, usable in many ways to stretch higher-cost meat.

ILGWU Editor Looks Back:

Triangle Fire Tale Is Story of Horror

"I SAW A SCENE I hope I never see again. Dozens of girls were hanging from the ledges. Others, their dresses on fire, were leaping from the windows.

The speaker was New York Police Capt. Dominick Henry, described as "a man inured to suffering by years of police work in a tough, two-fisted era." He was recalling the Triangle fire which in 1911 snuffed out the lives of 146 Triangle employes, most of them young women.

A storm of protests over the needless tragedy swept the nation, leading eventually to a major sweatshop reform.

Many of the facts relating to the Triangle Shirtwaist fire are familiar but it has remained for a labor editor to present the fire through the eyes and emotions of those caught up in it.

The book, The Triangle Fire, by Leon Stein, editor of Justice, publication of the Ladies' Garment Workers, has just been released ($4.50, J. J. Lippincott, New York).

Stein reconstructed the story of the fire from interviews with survivors, exhaustive research of newspaper files, and testimony in various court cases that grew out of the tragedy. He brings back to life the mad panic, the frightening last moments of the girls and men who either jumped to their deaths in panic or were consumed by fire on the eighth and ninth floors of their loft factory.

Stein recaptured the spine-tingling horror felt by witnesses:

"The crowd watched one girl on the ledge inch away from the window through which she had climbed as the flames licked after her. As deliberately as though she were standing before her own mirror at home, she removed her wide brimmed hat and sent it sailing through the air. Then slowly, carefully, she opened her handbag.

"Out of it she extracted a few bills and a handful of coins—her pay. These she flung into space. The bills floated slowly downward. The coins hit the cobblestones, ringing as she jumped."

Who was to blame? The Triangle owners, the Asch Building owner, the fire inspectors, the State Labor Dept.? Stein recounts the case for and against each but, above all, he somehow reaches in to bring forth the misery and anguish of the survivors, the victims and their friends and relatives and the cries of protest that leaped across the land.

There was a lack of sprinklers . . . blocked exits to the fire escapes . . . the inability of even the most powerful fire hoses to reach above the sixth floor . . . the heroism of the elevator operators who could not make their final ascent.

A factory commission of nine members was established. For four years it held public hearings, investigations to try to avoid a repetition of this horror. A member of the commission, who 20 years later was to become Secretary of Labor, was Frances E. Perkins.

"Out of that terrible espisode," she said, "came a self-examination of stricken conscience in which the people of this state saw for the first time the individual worth and value of each of those 146 people who fell or were burned in that great fire. And we saw, too, the great human value of every individual who was injured in an accident by a machine.

"There was a stricken conscience of public guilt and we felt that we had been wrong, that something was wrong with that building which we had accepted or the tragedy would never have happened. Moved by this sense of stricken guilt, we banded ourselves together to find a way by law to prevent this kind of disaster."

The Wedding Stories Will Say 'Sweethearts from Childhood'

By Jane Goodsell

THE COURSE of true love:

First Grade: "Billy Smith is the worst boy in the whole class. He can't even add two and two, and he talks all during rest period."

Second Grade: "Billy Smith had to stay after school today for throwing spitballs. He's a very bad boy."

Third Grade: "My dress is all dirty because Billy Smith tripped me and made me fall down at recess. I hate him!"

Fourth Grade: "Billy Smith can wiggle his ears."

Fifth Grade: "Billy Smith talked back to the teacher and he had to go to the principal's office. The teacher says he's a bad influence on the whole class."

Sixth Grade: "Guess who Susie Hogan likes? Billy Smith! Can you imagine! He's much littler than she is, and his ears stick out."

Seventh Grade: "Billy Smith gave Margie Carpenter a box of candy for Valentine's Day. Margie Carpenter of all people! Why, she's the dumbest girl in the whole seventh grade. All she ever does is run after boys!

Eighth Grade: "Billy Smith took Nancy Adams to a movie, and he put his arm around her. I don't see how she can stand him. He wears braces on his teeth, and his shoes are always untied."

Ninth Grade: "Half the girls in the freshman class have a crush on Bill Smith. Personally, I can't understand what they see in him. He's a terrible show-off and just because he's on junior varsity, he thinks he's a big shot."

Tenth Grade: "Getting elected president of the sophomore class was the worst thing that could have happened to Bill Smith. He always was conceited, and now he acts like everybody ought to bow down to him or something."

ELEVENTH GRADE: "Bill Smith walked home from school with me, and he asked me to go to the junior prom with him. If he thinks I'm going to fall for him like all the other girls just because he's on the football team and a member of Dukes, he's got another think coming. Anyway, I'll bet he only asked me because he and Susie Anderson had a fight, and he wants to make her jealous. He's so juvenile!"

Twelfth Grade: "Imagine me going steady with the captain of the football team, president of the student body and absolutely the neatest boy in the whole school, Bill Smith!"

In Labor's Economic Review:

New Policies Urged To Spur Recovery

Unless the federal government abandons "inadequate" economic programs and comes up with new policies and measures, the post-recession pickup "will probably begin to run out of steam by the spring or summer," AFL-CIO economists have predicted.

Employment and unemployment have improved "very slowly—much more slowly than in upturns from previous postwar recessions," they note, and add:

"A slower pace of upturn in the second half of the year will leave unemployment at high levels—after only very slow improvements since the recession low-point. There is a danger that high unemployment will persist through the year and into 1963."

These views are emphasized in Labor's Economic Review, a feature of the current AFL-CIO American Federationist, prepared by the Dept. of Research.

The study points out that in the 11 months after the recession hit bottom in February 1961, employment increased only eight-tenths of 1 percent. In the same period after the low point of the 1958 recession, jobs went up 2.6 percent; after the 1954 recession, they rose 4.4 percent; and after the 1949 recession the upturn was 3.9 percent.

Employment's counterpart—unemployment—likewise has declined at a slower rate than after other postwar recessions, the researchers observe.

In the 11 months following the low point in February 1961, joblessness declined only 16.3 percent,

In the 11 months after the 1958 recession low point, unemployment dropped 21.5 percent; after the 1954 recession, 30.3 percent; and following the 1949 recession, 41.5 percent.

Production Pickup Rapid

Production, on the other hand, "has increased at a relatively rapid pace" between the recession low point in the first quarter of 1961 and the final quarter of the year, Labor's Economic Review points out.

In addition, there has been an "extraordinary rise" in productivity—output per man-hour—as a "unique feature" of recovery from the latest recession.

"During the pickup from the 1960-1961 recession," the Federationist article declares, "manufacturing employment has . . . picked up very slowly. But this time there have been rapid productivity advances in other parts of the economy as well. Job opportunities in other parts of the economy, outside of manufacturing, have likewise increased at a very slow pace or, as in construction, have continued to decline. Only employment in state and local governments has risen somewhat more rapidly than in the past."

The jump in productivity means that unit costs have been declining, and with prices relatively stable "profit margins on each sales dollar have been widening," the economists report, and since sales also have risen, "business profits have been shooting up."

A federal program to reinforce the fight for full recovery from the recession, the article says, should include:

- Enactment of Pres. Kennedy's request for stand-by public works programs and its immediate application to the present situation.
- Enactment of a modified form of his proposal for stand-by authority to cut income taxes during periods of recession.
- Enactment of his proposed reforms in the unemployment insurance system.
- Adoption of comprehensive programs of federal aid for education, urban redevelopment and housing.
- Substantial improvements in wages, salaries and fringe benefits to provide the basis for growing consumer markets.
- Development of procedures, through collective bargaining and legislation, to reduce working hours as automation spreads.

CLC Rakes Prime Minister for Ignoring Canadian Labor Views

Ottawa, Canada—Prime Minister John Diefenbaker and his Conservative cabinet have been bluntly accused of deliberately ignoring the voice and views of organized labor on national issues.

The charge was placed before the cabinet by a strong 250-member delegation from the Canadian Labor Congress in its annual presentation of its views to the government.

"Time after time," said the CLC, "on the question of appointments to royal commissions and to consultative and other bodies, organized labor has been either completely by-passed or the selection of trade union representatives has been such as to lead to no other conclusion than that it was based on political considerations."

The Congress said it does not pretend to be neutral in its outlook, holding views on many issues that affect its members or are a matter of public interest—just as any other interest group. The brief added:

"Our grievance is that, while you have shown every willingness to recognize and to call upon other interest groups, you have shown no such willingness where organized labor is concerned."

The brief, delivered by CLC Pres. Claude Jodoin, said organized labor was ignored—not even consulted — in appointments to the Royal Commission on Health Services and to the special committee of inquiry on unemployment insurance.

"This act of omission on your part drove home to us better than anything else the fact that the opinions of the Canadian Labor Congress and of organized labor in general are of little or no significance to you in the determination of your policies," it asserted.

No Need for Labor

When the CLC complained, it was told "in very peremptory language" that there was no need for a labor representative on the special inquiry committee on unemployment insurance and that such a representative would inject sectional interest into its work.

"Presumably there is no sectional interest involved when the medical, dental and nursing professions are represented on the Royal Commission on Health Services," said Jodoin, adding:

"We cannot help but conclude that the failure to consult labor for nominees to various commissions, boards and agencies and the appointments made without consultation (such as certain appointments to the National Productivity Council) indicate a deliberate policy of by-passing the CLC wherever possible."

The brief suggested that the government's attitude might be related to the CLC action in helping found the New Democratic Party.

"If this is so, it is hardly a plausible reason. The Congress has no apologies to make for its actions, which followed convention decisions. It has every right to take such action."

To make the record clear, the brief added: "The Congress is not, nor does it intend to become, an affiliate of any political party."

In reply, Labor Minister Michael Starr, speaking for Diefenbaker and the cabinet, said the government—and only the government—had the right to say who is appointed to public office.

Claims 49 Named

"The government cannot bind itself to accept all CLC recommendations and only CLC recommendations," he said, claiming that at least 49 appointments from labor ranks had been made since 1957 to federal agencies.

The 12,000-word CLC presentation to the government spelled out the views of labor on a wide range of topics, including the economic situation, social security, labor legislation, broadcasting, immigration, taxation, housing and international issues.

On the economic situation, it said unemployment remains very heavy. "Even with the upturn in production, it remains true that our economy is just not growing fast enough to provide jobs for all the people who are looking for them."

Planning Aids Growth, IUD Study Declares

Free world nations which have used economic planning to stimulate their economies have achieved a growth rate substantially higher than the United States and Canada, according to a study made by the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.

During the 1953-1960 period, the European Common Market countries showed a growth rate of 45 percent and Japan's economy grew 77 percent, as compared with 22 percent in Canada and 19 percent in the United States, the study showed.

On a per capita basis, U.S. output grew only 6 percent over the seven years, Canada's only 1 percent, while the Common Market had a per capita growth of 36 percent and Japan 63 percent.

During this same period, unemployment rates in most European nations dropped sharply—in Germany from 7.5 to 1.2 percent—while joblessness rose from 2.9 percent in 1953 to 5.6 percent in 1960 in the United States and from 2.6 percent to 7 percent in Canada.

The IUD study found that the U.S. "needs to take some lessons from Western Europe" on the management of its economy. It found these nations far more willing to use fiscal policy as a weapon against recession and economic stagnation and to incur budget deficits when needed to spur the economy.

"National economic planning has been employed successfully in these countries to help set forth the nation's needs, to help avoid the waste of the nation's human and industrial resources, and to assist the private economy in realizing its full potential," the IUD declared.

Newsman Named to Commission on Women

Roger Sheldon, a former chairman of the Labor Press unit of the Washington Newspaper Guild, has been appointed information officer for the recently-established President's Commission on the Status of Women, Executive Sec. Katherine Ellickson has announced.

A graduate of Louisiana State University, Sheldon has been a magazine editor and writer with Merkle Press, Inc., which specalizes in labor publications.

ABC Network Wins Praise on Essay Contest

The ABC radio network "in encouraging young people to think through their role in foreign policy, is performing a fine public service," Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (D-Mont.) commented in a letter praising the network for the Edward P. Morgan Essay Contest which emphasized the role of youth in governmental affairs.

Morgan is sponsored by the AFL-CIO each week-day evening in a news and commentary program which originates usually from Washington at 7 p. m. Eastern time.

The two winning essays in the contest, selected from 1,000 entries, were written by Carol Burns, senior at Reed College, Portland, Ore., and Gerald Bongard, junior at the College of St. Thomas, St. Paul, Minn.

Sen. Warren G. Magnuson (D-Wash.) said in an address on the Senate floor that "the topic selected for this year's competition, 'Youth's Role in U.S. Foreign Policy,' is particularly apt and provocative in this age of young people and young nations."

Congratulatory letters came from Vice Pres. Johnson; Sec. Abraham Ribicoff of the Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare; Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn.), and Sen. Jacob Javits (R-N.Y.),

NEW YORK LABOR'S Miss Union Maid—Ruby Gordon of the Hotel & Restaurant Employes Local 6—poses for photographers aboard the Santa Rosa, cruise ship in which she will visit countries such as the West Indies, Jamaica, Venezuela and Haiti. Miss Gordon won her title in the annual contest sponsored by the Greater New York Union Label & Service Trades Council. She is a waitress at the Waldorf-Astoria.

Key House Rollcall on Welfare Plan Act

Here is the rollcall vote by which the House turned down a conservative drive to attach an anti-labor amendment to the new Welfare & Pension Plan Disclosure Act. The amendment would have barred Labor Department employes administering the program from belonging to unions affiliated with the AFL-CIO. The motion was defeated 218-182. Democrats voted 176-56 against the anti-labor proposal; Republicans favored it, 126-42.

On labor's scoreboard, a vote for recommittal was a wrong vote (W), while a vote against recommittal was a right vote (R). Other symbols: PR—paired right; PW—paired wrong; A—absent and not voting. Numerals denote districts; AL—at large; NV—not voting.

Advisory Council Created:

Kennedy Asks Legislation On Consumer 'Bill of Rights'

Pres. Kennedy has proposed to Congress a "bill of rights" for American consumers and has asked for major new legislation dealing with drugs, food, cosmetics, business mergers, television sets and interest rates.

He announced a directive, in line with a campaign pledge, for creation of a Consumers' Advisory Council to assist the President's Council of Economic Advisers, and a directive requiring a special assistant for consumer liaison in every government agency dealing with matters affecting the buying public.

In a message to Congress, and in a summary recorded for television and radio broadcast, the President said the consumer should have:

- "The right to safety—to be protected against the marketing of goods which are hazardous to health or life.
- "The right to be informed—to be protected against fraudulent, deceitful, or grossly misleading information, advertising, labeling, or other practices, and to be given the facts he needs to make an informed choice.
- "The right to choose—to be assured, wherever possible, access to a variety of products and services at competitive prices. . . .
- "The right to be heard—to be assured that consumer interests will receive full and sympathetic consideration in the formulation of government policy, and fair and expeditious treatment in its administrative tribunals."

Many of the President's proposals are contained in bills presently before Congress, including drug legislation sponsored by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) and the "truth in lending" bill by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.).

Kennedy said consumers and physicians should have "assurance from an impartial scientific source" that any drug on the market is "safe and effective" and that the accompanying promotional material "tells the full story—its bad effects as well as its good."

Prescription drugs, he said, should be identified by a simple common name so that the purchaser can buy those he needs "at the lowest competitive price."

Declaring that thousands of women have suffered injuries to their eyes, skin and hair because of "untested or inadequately tested beauty aids," the President said legislation is needed to require that cosmetics be "tested and proved safe" before marketing.

He said the "incomplete" inspection of meat, now restricted to meat products moving across state lines, is "a threat to human health."

In other areas, the President:

- Urged enactment of the Douglas "truth in lending bill" to require full disclosure to installment buyers of the actual amounts of credit charges. He suggested that the program be put under the Federal Trade Commission, rather than under the Federal Reserve Board, as the bill now proposes.
- Backed legislation to require manufacturers of television sets to equip all new receivers for both very high frequency (VHF) and ultra-high frequency (UHF) channels so as to encourage development of "an effective and genuinely competitive nationwide television service, with adequate provision for local outlets and educational stations."
- Urged strengthening of anti-monopoly laws, including a requirement for advance notice of contemplated business mergers, and asked that the FTC be empowered to issue temporary cease-and-desist orders against allegedly unfair competition pending final decisions.
- Promised recommendations on "truth in packaging" legislation to be developed in cooperation with a congressional subcommittee headed by Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.), which has been investigating misleading packaging and labeling.

The President also announced that he has directed the Post Office Dept. to undertake a pilot program of displaying government consumer protection pamphlets at 100 selected post offices to give them wider distribution.

MAYOR JAMES H. J. TATE of Philadelphia signs his name at the top of the first petition in the Philadelphia COPE campaign for 300,000 signatures urging Congress to pass the Anderson-King bill providing health aid for the aged under social security. House Beats GOP Move To Slash Welfare Bill

The House has passed and sent to the Senate a labor-backed Administration bill providing greater rehabilitation help for public welfare recipients and continuing the temporary program of grants to dependent children whose fathers are unemployed. The bill also provides added federal funds to train social workers and to set up child care centers for working mothers.

House passage on a 369-69 rollcall vote came after defeat of a Republican-sponsored recommittal motion on an almost straight party-line division of 232-155. (See House rollcall on page 10.)

The Republicans sought through recommittal to eliminate an increase in the maximum federal share of state grants to the aged, blind and disabled from the present $66 to $70 a month. The $4 increase had been added to the original Administration bill by the House Ways & Means Committee.

States could use the added federal money either to increase welfare payments or to reduce the amount paid from state funds. Old age assistance payments currently range from a monthly average of $34.47 in Mississippi to $116.93 in Connecticut.

The House-passed bill fell short of labor and Administration goals in two areas:

- The committee bill, considered by the House under a "gag" no-amendment rule, omitted an Administration provision prohibiting states from imposing a residence requirement of more than one year for public assistance beneficiaries and providing a federal "bonus" for states which completely eliminate residence requirements.

The House bill, however, includes tighter standards along lines suggested by the AFL-CIO on the type of work to which welfare recipients could be assigned as part of the rehabilitation process.

In addition to specifying that persons on welfare rolls cannot be used to displace regular employes or do work which would normally be performed by them, the bill requires that employment be on projects of a type which "has not normally been undertaken in the past by the state or community.

AFL-CIO testimony supporting the Administration bill declared that the emphasis on useful rehabilitation represents a "thoughtfully constructive approach" which contrasts with the "misguided efforts" of those claiming "simple, short-cut solutions" to "complex social problems."

- While the Administration had sought to make permanent the expiring one-year program of aid to children of unemployed fathers, the committee version extended the program for five years.

Swiss Labor Story —No Strikes in '61

Geneva—Switzerland's labor and management set an unbeatable record in 1961 when not a single strike was recorded—an achievement union members attribute to the strength of their labor movement.

The previous low mark was reached in 1957, when 71 employes of three firms struck for a total of 740 hours. The high for the last 16 years was established in 1946, when 15,000 workers in 443 enterprises walked out for about 185,000 hours.

Religious, Civic Groups Join Union Rap at NBC

Chicago—Sharp criticism levied by the Television & Radio Artists against program policies of Chicago's NBC television station has been backed by similar complaints from religious and civic groups at Federal Communications Commission hearings here.

AFTRA's Chicago local charged that Station WNBQ has done "an insufferably bad job" in serving the community, drastically reducing local, live programs. Raymond Jones, executive secretary of the local, said the NBC network, by taking all available good viewing time for programs originating in New York and California, "has specialized in killing shows, moving them out of Chicago, stifling local talent and cultural development."

The radio and television director for the Chicago Catholic archdiocese, John S. Banahan, said public service religious programs on the NBC station were broadcast "from the smallest, most inadequate studio in Chicago" with but a single camera and no floor director.

"Such primitive production is not the result of poverty," he said, but is caused by "lack of concern" for this type of public service programming.

The hearings are an inquiry into efforts made by Chicago television stations to determine the "needs and interests" of area residents.

Typical of criticism levied at network control of the bulk of Chicago's television fare was the statement of Robert Ahrens, director of the city's Adult Education Council, that "a table and a microphone at 8:30 a.m. on Sunday will no longer do" to serve local educational and cultural interests.

The AFTRA spokesmen, Jones and Attorney Sanford I. Wolff, noted that the union has asked FCC hearings on the renewal of licenses of the Chicago NBC affiliates. Since AFTRA's action, Jones said, NBC "began to show signs of life" and increased live programs originating in Chicago.

He pointed out, however, that a comparison made in January of a week's programming by the four television stations showed WNBQ with only 7 percent local live broadcasts compared with 12 percent, 17 percent and 26 percent for the other stations.

Jones charged that NBC spent less than any other commercial TV station in Chicago for performing talent during 1961 and employs fewer people than the other stations. This, he asserted, enables the network station to "increase already swollen profits."

The other television stations and networks are "not ideal," Jones emphasized, but "they look so much better because NBC is so outrageously bad."

Labor Attacks Plan Favoring Space Contractors on Patents

Any inventions made by a contractor during the lifetime of an agreement with the federal government should be patented in the name of the United States, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller has told the House Subcommittee on Science & Astronautics.

Biemiller testified against proposed amendments to the Aeronautics & Space Act which would establish a rule that patents growing out of NASA research and development would belong to the private contractor unless the national security or the general welfare were found to require otherwise.

He pointed out that under both the Space Act and the Atomic Energy Act, the federal government has held the patents and the contractor "receives a non-exclusive, royalty-free license, and the patent is available for use by other concerns through cross-licensing."

"This policy has been effective," he said, "in preventing monopolization by private business of invention and patent rights arising from government contracts in atomic energy and space programs. At the same time, progress in development has proceeded rapidly through the use of private contracts in accordance with this policy."

Biemiller declared enactment of the proposed changes would "substantially weaken competition" in the field and would consequently "inhibit the rate of technological advance."

If exclusive patent rights were given contractors in addition to the "great advantage" derived from the experience in space research, he asserted, "the field would become virtually inaccessible to future competition."

"The AFL-CIO believes that public money obligated to achieve a national goal should be directed toward attaining that goal, toward enlarging and strengthening the boundaries of free private enterprise, and toward the diffusion of the social and economic fruits of the program among the people as a whole in the widest possible degree," he added. "Public money should not be used as a foundation for private monopoly."

International Labor Training Parley Set

Workers Education Local 189 of the Teachers in cooperation with American University is sponsor of a two-day conference on international labor training Apr. 7 and 8 at the university in Washington, D. C.

The conference will deal with the role of labor in sensitive world areas and the standards for selecting and training students to visit the United States. Participants will include the Dept. of Intl. Affairs and the Dept. of Education of the AFL-CIO and representatives of unions, the government and universities.

Funds Still Needed:

Labor Dept. Projects Set on Job Training

The Labor Dept. plans a top-priority project to get the newly-enacted manpower retraining program into full swing by this summer, pending actual appropriations by Congress.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg named a veteran career official, Dr. Seymour L. Wolfbein, to direct the retraining planning. Wolfbein heads the Labor Dept. Office of Automation & Manpower and has had a key role in the retraining programs carried out under the Area Redevelopment Act.

The new manpower act authorizes $5 million for planning purposes for the balance of the present fiscal year, with a $100 million authorization, starting July 1, for the first year of the three-year program. These are maximum figures and actual funds available will depend on a separate appropriation bill.

Named to head retraining program

Wolfbein said he does not consider the new program "a magic wand" for the pressing probiem of long-unemployed workers whose jobs have disappeared through automation, technological changes or plant closings, but as "the best answer we've had so far."

His job will be to survey and link up areas in which job openings can be expected for unemployed workers with the aptitude and willingness to train for these jobs.

He anticipates plenty of willing applicants, he indicated. In the area redevelopment program, there have seldom been less than two or three applicants for every training opportunity, he pointed out.

Once job opportunities are identified and applicants lined up, the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare has the responsibility for contracting with the states to provide training at either public or private vocational schools.

Still to be named is a National Advisory Committee—a 10-member group from labor, management, agriculture, education and the public. In addition the bill recommends establishment of labor-management-public committees "on a plant, community, regional or industry base" to advise and assist on local training programs.

Albany—The New York State Committee on Political Education has split the state into subdivisions for a statewide drive to register union members, their families and their friends and to "beat the gerrymander" enacted by the Republican-controlled legislature.

"This will be our answer to the gerrymandering of congressional districts New York has undergone—the most outrageous act of debasing our citizens' vote in the history of the state," said State COPE Chairman Louis Hollander. "We must get out everyone who isn't registered and get him to register."

The gerrymandering job done on the voters, Hollander charged, will bring about "a heavy reactionary Republican representation in Congress," which he said is contrary to the wishes and interests of New York's people. State AFL-CIO leaders are convinced that this can be blocked only if the voters themselves can be induced to register and vote.

A series of regional and subregional preparatory meetings has been held and one congressional district has been organized. Hollander, COPE Sec. Harold J. Garno and Mrs. Betty Doto, women's activities director for the state COPE, attended all.

The organized congressional district is the new 33rd, composed of Chemung, Tompkins, Tioga and Broome Counties. Seventy union representatives attended the organization session in Machinists' Hall, Ithaca. First steps were taken to set up a women's subcommittee and an operating subcommittee was organized which expects to get off to a start at a meeting Apr. 3 in the Binghamton Labor Temple.

A similar meeting will be held in April in Jamestown for the new 38th Dist., which embraces Chautauqua, Cattaraugus, Allegany, Steuben and Schuyler Counties. Next on schedule are Nassau and Suffolk Counties on Long Island, where area unions will form a subregional COPE committee to organize the registration drive.

IBEW Affirms Strike Ban at Missile Bases

Pres. Gordon M. Freeman of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers has directed all international vice presidents to "take all steps necessary" to see that the "vital work" of union members at missile bases "goes forward . . . without interruption."

His telegram was based on newspaper reports that some IBEW members at a missile base in the Cheyenne, Wyo., area have been threatening to stop work in a dispute over wages in a contract under negotiation.

"As the international president I have made a commitment that there shall be no stoppages of the nature reportedly threatened in the news story from Cheyenne," he said. "This commitment I entend to keep."

The IBEW, he also said, "is standing by its commitment to the government that there will be no unauthorized strikes or stoppages of this character" at missile bases.

"Please see that this is made clear to anyone inside or outside of the brotherhood who raises any question on this report," he said in his telegram to the vice presidents.

"Unfortunately, recent legislation has given some people the idea that they are no longer subject to the discipline of the international brotherhood and its constitution. A District Court decision attempting to stay the power of the international office to deal with an unauthorized strike shows further how this legislation may be interpreted. Despite these attempts to disrupt the necessary constitutional discipline of the brotherhood, your international president is determined that it shall be upheld."

Peace Corps Seeks Craftsmen for Africa

The Peace Corps is looking for building trades mechanics for projects in two of the new African nations, Gabon and Somalia, it has announced.

Gabon, in West Africa, has requested brick and stone masons, cement and concrete finishers, roofers, carpenters, sheet metal workers and construction vehicle mechanics to help in a high-priority school building program.

Peace Corps volunteers, working with local labor, not only will help construct buildings for education but will teach their skills to Gabonese nationals and promote sanitary living standards. The U.S. agency plans to assign teams of 10 Americans and 20 to 30 Gabonese to build units consisting of a three-class school and three houses for teachers. Teams will move from site to site as each unit is completed.

Somalia, on the African east coast, was created from former British and Italian colonies. It seeks general construction workers, civil engineers, draftsmen and city planners for a United Nation's low cost housing project in Mogadiscio. The 2 million inhabitants are largely nomadic, and it is felt that the development of housing will assist in stabilizing the population and create job opportunities.

Volunteers will live under camp conditions, much of the time in tents, in most of the areas where they will work, the Peace Corps stated. Leave may be taken in Libreville, where permanent quarters for this purpose will be rented.

Peace Corps volunteers must be at least 18 years old and U.S. citizens. They are paid $75 for each month of service, a total of $1,800, at the end of a two-year tour of duty. They receive allowances for food, housing, transportation, medical care, clothing and other expenses.

Application forms are available at all post offices or by writing to the Peace Corps, Washington 25, D. C.

Kentucky Lifts Limits On Jobless Benefits

Louisville—The Kentucky legislature raised the state's ceiling on unemployment and workmen's compensation benefits, passed a congressional redistricting bill and strengthened the state's prevailing wage law in the final weeks before adjournment.

One casualty of the session was a labor-backed anti-strikebreaker bill which had passed the House, 70-3. It died in the Senate Rules Committee.

The legislature raised maximum unemployment benefits from $37 to $40 a week in a bill backed by the state AFL-CIO but opposed by employer groups. Eligibility requirements were tightened by a denial of benefits to workers voluntarily quitting their jobs until after an intervening period of employment. The workmen's compensation ceiling was raised from $36 to $38 a week.

The redistricting bill, required by the loss of one of the state's eight congressional seats as a result of the 1960 census apportionment, combines the districts of two veteran Democrats, Rep. Brent Spence and Rep. Frank Chelf. It passed the House 81-13 and won 31-6 approval in the Senate.

Spence, liberal 87-year-old chairman of the House Banking & Currency Committee, represents the more populous industrialized northern section of the state, including Covington and Newport. Chelf's south central district is largely rural.

Left untouched in the redistricting was the state's most populous congressional district, metropolitan Louisville. Its 611,000 population puts it more than 40 percent above the average for the state. The district is rated marginal—represented by Democrat Frank W. Burke since 1958, but Republican from 1946 until 1958.

Louis Hollander Picked For Page One Award

New York—Louis Hollander, chairman of the executive committee of the New York State AFL-CIO, was announced as the recipient of a 1962 Page One award of the Newspaper Guild of New York.

Hollander was honored for "half a century of devoted service to the labor movement and the community." Archibald MacLeish, retiring Harvard professor and former Librarian of Congress, was chosen for the public affairs award and writer Upton Sinclair for the award in letters. The honors will be bestowed at the guild's Page One Ball in the Hotel Astor Apr. 27.

Meany Urges Observance Of Armed Forces Day

Officers of national and international unions, state and local central bodies and directly affiliated local unions have been urged by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to take the "fullest possible" part in Armed Forces Day observances May 12-20, and to encourage union members to attend.

In letters sent to all affiliates, Meany said Armed Forces Day falls on May 19 this year, and during the period of May 12 to May 20 there will be "open house" observances at military installations.

As Americans, he said, we are "keenly aware of the vital need for a strong, modern defense establishment," and as civilians we can "contribute to the high morale of the men in uniform by demonstrating our appreciation of their services."

Kennedy Works Program Urgent Need, Meany Says

Agreement Hopes High:

Steelworkers Meet On Pact Progress

Pittsburgh—Members of the Steelworkers executive board and the Wage-Policy Committee have been called to weekend meetings in Pittsburgh to receive reports on progress toward the framework of a new contract.

The call was issued by USWA Pres. David J. McDonald, who also summoned to Pittsburgh the approximately 450 members of the bargaining committees representing 11 individual basic steel producers. The USWA executive board and Wage-Policy Committee were to meet Mar. 31, the full-scale negotiating committees on Apr. 1.

Top negotiators headed by McDonald and R. Conrad Cooper, an executive vice president of U.S. Steel, had indicated earlier they were making progress toward an understanding on national issues. Company-by-company negotiations are scheduled to begin Apr. 2.

Union spokesmen stressed that no agreement had been concluded and that a conclusion was not possible until the Wage-Policy Committee acted on any tentative proposal and then, company-by-company agreements were reached.

Cooper said the negotiations had reached the point "where we have defined the outlines of an area in which we hope and believe that it may be possible to work out an agreement."

"However," he emphasized, "no agreement has been concluded. "Ahead of us now is the difficult task of working out such an agreement."

This view was borne out by the fact that negotiators met for three hours that night and scheduled a full day of bargaining the next day.

House OK's Tax Bill, 219 to 196

The House of Representatives gave Pres. Kennedy a smashing victory when it approved the first major tax revision bill since 1954 after first killing a Republican motion to send the measure back to committee.

The bill, passed on a rollcall of 219 to 196, went through a few hours after the President called on all House members who believe "in spreading the tax burden fairly" to support the Administration-backed measure.

The vote followed two days of intensive debate and maneuvers and sent the bill to the Senate, where Finance Committee hearings are scheduled next week.

The Administration's victory was signaled when the House rejected the motion to recommit, which included instructions to strip from the measure a tax investment credit program and a provision to withhold taxes on interest and dividend

Ribicoff on Kerr-Mills:

Present Health Aid Called Inadequate

By John M. Barry

An analysis clearly implying that the Kerr-Mills Act has proved inadequate as a substitute for a social security health plan has been sent to the House Ways & Means Committee by Health, Education & Welfare Sec. Abraham Ribicoff.

In a letter to Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.), Ribicoff declared that to rely solely on existing public assistance legislation, including Kerr-Mills, "would not only fail to cover many aged persons in need, but would also be very costly in general revenues."

"The legislation could, and in my judgment should, be a supplement to the type of protection which would be afforded under the Administration's proposals for health insurance for the aged through social security," Ribicoff said.

The Ways & Means Committee already has held hearings on the social security health care plan, as embodied in bills sponsored by Rep. Cecil R. King (D-Calif.) and Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N. Mex.).

House Unit Told Jobs Still Lag

By David L. Perlman

Pres. Kennedy's new program for immediate public works construction is urgently needed to prevent the nation's recovery from recession from "sputtering to a halt," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has told Congress.

The recession "is still with us," the federation president emphasized in testimony before the House Public Works Committee.

He told the committee that the country stands in need of two Administration proposals—a stand-by $2 billion program to be triggered when economic indicators signal a future recession, and an immediate $600 million program channeled into areas of existing heavy unemployment.

Kennedy proposed the $600 million program, an addition to the previously requested stand-by authorization, in a letter acknowledging that the nation's economic performance during the past two months "has fallen below expectations."

He wrote the House committee and its Senate counterpart that programs to relieve "prolonged large-scale unemployment in hundreds of communities . . . should not be de-

Food Rises Boost CPI To New High

Paced by an unseasonal rise in food prices, the government's consumer price index moved to a record high in February, ending a four-month period of virtually no change.

Average prices paid by consumers, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics reported, showed a three-tenths of 1 percent increase to a new high of 104.8. The sharpest increase was six-tenths of 1 percent in food prices.

The new index means that goods and services that cost $10 in the 1957-59 base period moved to $10.80 in February, compared to $10.50 in January. The previous high was $10.60 in September 1961.

UAW Offers Plan to Transfer Production Workers to Offices

Detroit—A seven-point program aimed at spurring a shift of blue-collar workers to white-collar jobs has been laid before the heads of 20 major firms in the automobile, aircraft and agricultural implement fields by the Auto Workers.

In a letter explaining the proposal, UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther called it "workable" and declared it is "morally right, financially advantageous and socially desirable."

"It is a means of meeting your company's responsibilities to your workers that at the same time opens the road to substantial reductions in cost," he wrote. "It contributes toward the national objective of upgrading the labor force and improving the occupational adaptability of workers."

The program has its roots in the steady drop of industrial production jobs and the parallel increase—in most cases—of office and technicians' jobs.

To carry it out, the union suggested:

- That each company declare, as a matter of policy, that qualified production workers will be given preference over non-employes in filling white-collar vacancies.
- That all production employes, whether at work or on layoff, be offered an opportunity to apply for white-collar jobs in which they are interested. ("It would be helpful, in this connection, if information could be given to your production workers advising them of the quali-

Study Shows Present Health Aid Inadequate

Security, with headquarters in Washington.

The committee of 27 doctors, with Dr. Caldwell B. Esselstyn as spokesman, was part of a larger group of physicians which visited Pres. Kennedy Mar. 27 to express support of his health care program and its use of the social security system "as the most practical and sound method of financing health benefits for the great majority of the aged."

Esselstyn, who is president of the Group Health Association of America and medical director of the Rip Van Winkle Clinic, Hudson, N.Y., said 75 percent of the group of 41 doctors signing the statement to the President were members of the American Medical Association, which has campaigned vigorously against the Anderson-King Bill.

In the group were two Nobel prize winners, Dr. Arthur Kornberg and Dr. Dickinson Richards, and a 1959 winner of the AMA's distinguished service award, Dr. Michael E. DeBakey.

Among other signers were Dr. Benjamin Spock, professor of child development at Western Reserve University, whose book on infant and child care is a stand-by for young mothers; Dr. William A. Sawyer of the University of Rochester School of Medicine, medical consultant to the Machinists; and Dr. Frederick D. Mott, executive director of the Community Health Association, Detroit, which the Auto Workers helped establish.

The group includes members of both major political parties and represents general practitioners, scientists, health administrators, educators and specialists in many fields.

Esselstyn's announcement of the formation of the Physicians Committee said that under existing legislation, "all but the extremely wealthy still live under the constant fear that unpreventable and unpredictable medical disaster will strike and destroy them financially."

Report Based on Study

"It is the consensus of the members of the Physicians Committee, based on their deep and intimate knowledge of medical care problems," the statement continued, "that health care for the aged through social security is the most sound and practical method of financing health benefits for this group of elder Americans, whose number is growing at a rate of 3,000 a day.

"It will be our objective to enlist broad support from physicians for these basic tenets, and to acquaint the public with our views."

Ribicoff's letter to Mills accompanied an 83-page report on the first year of experience under the Kerr-Mills Act, based on a study by the Bureau of Family Services.

The act, which became effective Oct. 1, 1960, increased federal funds allotted to states for medical care services under their existing old-age assistance programs (OAA) and authorized a new program of medical assistance for the aged (MAA) to cover persons unable to pay their own medical bills but with incomes too high to qualify them for relief.

The bureau's study shows that fewer than 1 percent of the nation's aged are receiving medical care under MAA, yet the cost of the program is expected to reach an annual rate of $215 million by the end of this fiscal year.

By last October, the study found, only 21 jurisdictions—19 states plus Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands—had established MAA programs, with wide variation in the kind, duration and amount of service provided.

Only six states gave some care in all five major areas: hospitalization, nursing home care, physicians' services, prescribed drugs and dental care.

Payments under the program last October were at an annual rate of $164 million and were being made to 66,000 persons in 16 states.

Fired Workers Get $150,000 In Puerto Rico

The National Labor Relations Board has approved a back pay settlement of $150,000 by a Puerto Rico newspaper to 87 employes discharged unlawfully five years ago for engaging in union activities.

By consent of the parties, the owners of Editorial El Imparcial, Inc. and Distribuidora Expreso, Inc., a subsidiary, will make a down payment of $50,000 and the balance in monthly installments of $5,000 each.

The company and its subsidiary publish one of Puerto Rico's largest newspapers at Santurce, and distribute it all over the island. Involved in the five-year labor dispute was Graphic Arts Local 1959 of the Longshoremen. The union won an NLRB representation election among printshop employes and drivers, and struck Feb. 6, 1957, when no contract settlement was reached. Management fired 92 employes and later refused the union's unconditional offer to return to work.

The dispute has been marked by these developments: June 9, 1959, the NLRB ordered management to reinstate the employes and give them lost pay; May 3, 1960, the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the board order; Feb. 23, 1962, the parties agreed on back pay terms; Mar. 13, the board approved the terms.

TWUA to File Appeal of Darlington Mill Ruling

The Textile Workers Union of America has announced it will appeal to the National Labor Relations Board from Trial Examiner Lloyd Buchanan's dismissal of reopened charges against Deering, Milliken Inc.

The union had sought to make both the company and its chief stockholder, Roger Milliken, responsible for lost wages it claims are due employes of the Darlington Manufacturing Co., Darlington, S. C., which was closed in October 1956 after a TWUA victory in a labor board representation election. Buchanan held that Deering, Milliken was not responsible for Darlington.

"We are not surprised that the trial examiner has not reversed himself," a union spokesman said. "We had not expected that he would. After all, this is only a skirmish in a continuing battle which we fully expect to win.

"We will file exceptions to this finding because we do not agree with them. And it is our hope that in due course and at long last, the NLRB will reverse the trial examiner and hold the Deering, Milliken Co. responsible for the injustices which have been done to the Darlington workers."

The TWUA has been arguing since 1957 that under NLRB rules and past practices it is illegal to keep out of the case the responsible persons and the responsible corporation. The union spokesman said Milliken "forced the decision to liquidate the Darlington subsidiary" simple to evade its obligation to bargain with the union, and that he and the holding company should be forced to give back pay to the dismissed workers.

Earlier Ruling Strengthened:

Publicity Pickets Upheld by NLRB

By Eugene A. Kelly

The National Labor Relations Board has ruled, for the second time in recent months, that a union does not lose the protection of the labor law's publicity proviso when it peacefully pickets and handbills a business firm it wants to organize.

A board panel voted 2-1 to dismiss a complaint issued against Retail Clerks Local 1265, Dept. & Specialty Store Employes Union, on a charge brought by the Oakland G. R. Kinney Co. that the union illegally picketed a chain shoe store in the San Francisco area after losing an NLRB election there Apr. 18, 1960.

The majority of Board Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Member John H. Fanning set aside the election result and dismissed the complaint against the union. Member Boyd Leedom dissented, as he had in the earlier Crown Cafeteria case which upheld picketing when signs and handbills are truthful and picketing is peaceful.

The decision told how three union business agents went to the store in mid-1959 and "asked permission of the manager to talk to the employes about joining the union." The request was refused then and again on Feb. 3, 1960.

The agents told the manager they would tell the public the store was non-union. The next day, Kinney received a letter from Local 1265 saying "we do not claim to represent a majority" of store employes at the time and stating that the union would not seek to discuss a contract "unless a majority of your employes voluntarily . . . designate the union" as their bargaining representative.

Two pickets appeared Feb. 5, 1960, carrying leaflets and signs saying "This store does not operate under AFL-CIO union conditions. Please do not patronize."

The leafets asked the public not to patronize Kinney, the decision stated. Picketing did not interfere with deliveries and did not induce anyone to refuse to perform services for Kinney.

Management filed an unfair labor practice charge and a petition for a representation election. On Apr. 18, 1960, the NLRB regional director conducted an expedited election in which all nine store employers voted non-union but the picketing was continued.

McCulloch and Fanning disagreed with a trial examiner who said he found no evidence that the picketing had organization, recognition or bargaining as an objective.

They said that though the picketing had organization or bargaining as an objective, it did not violate the law because publicity proviso picketing is permissible and not subject to an expedited election procedure unless it has the effect of inducing stoppages of deliveries or services.

Because there were no such stoppages, the election was improperly directed and held and the picketing that followed it was not prohibited by the law, the two panel members ruled.

Furniture Firm Mum On Bid to Strike Parley

Jamestown, N. Y.—Striking Furniture Workers at the Jamestown Sterling Corp. have agreed to a state mediation official's request to resume negotiations in the 6-month-old dispute.

Management, however, so far has failed to respond to the offer by Mediation Board Chairman Joseph F. Finnegan to arrange a meeting between the parties.

Jamestown Sterling last month boycotted a special Mediation Board hearing on the strike after first agreeing to appear, and subsequently rejected the special panel's recommendations for a 17-month contract to settle the walkout.

The firm's 140 workers struck last Oct. 2 in an attempt to win an initial contract. The UFWA had previously been certified as bargaining representative following a secret-ballot election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board.

UFWA attorneys, meanwhile, said they would appeal to the NLRB general counsel the refusal of the board's regional office in Buffalo to issue a complaint on union charges of unfair labor practices. The UFWA had accused management of refusing to bargain in good faith when, among other things, it limited contract talks to two hours a week.

No date has been set for a hearing on an NLRB complaint against the union charging it with mass picketing.

A State Supreme Court hearing on the company's latest attempt to limit picketing through an injunction has been postponed to Apr. 2.

In a parallel development, workers at a Warren, Pa., furniture plant owned by the same company rejected UFWA representation in an NLRB vote on Mar. 19.

Morale of the Jamestown strikers remained high and was bolstered by a rally of 107 local unions to underscore labor support for the furniture plant pickets.

The Jamestown Area AFL-CIO Council has added the struck firm to its unfair list in support of a UFWA bid for a nationwide consumer boycott of Jamestown Sterling's products. The union has launched an information campaign to apprise furniture retailers of the issues in the strike.

Canada's Jobless Total 9.1 Percent

Ottawa, Ont.—Unemployment in Canada rose by 38,000 to 583,000 in February, or 9.1 percent of the labor force, the Dominion Bureau of Labor Statistics reported.

The total was 136,000 below the postwar peak of 719,000 in February 1961 but would have been higher had there been a normal increase in the labor force during the previous year instead of the actual 1 percent rise between February 1961 and February 1962.

Meantime, Sec.-Treas. Donald MacDonald of the Canadian Labor Congress charged before a meeting of the Toronto & District Labor Council that the government was continuing to demonstrate a combination of "callousness and stupidity" in its attitude on mass unemployment.

5th Ave. Line Repulsed:

State Job Service Bars Aid in Walkout

New York—With most striking Transport Workers back on the job and city operation approaching full service, the struck Fifth Avenue Coach Lines abandoned plans to run buses driven by strikebreakers under the few franchises remaining to it after city seizure of its major Bronx and Manhattan routes.

The company's decision followed a rebuff from the State Employment Service and a demonstration by some 2,000 TWU members at Fifth Avenue's main garage.

Management of the bus firm, most of whose property was seized in condemnation actions Mar. 21, had announced it would ask the Employment Service to supply strikebreakers for operation of 10 routes not involved in the seizure.

State Industrial Commissioner Martin P. Catherwood promptly sent a telegram to company officials declaring "it is long established policy that the Employment Service does not make referrals to strikebound companies, and no exception will be made in the case of Fifth Avenue Coach Lines."

The company then attempted to recruit strikebreakers through newspaper advertisements and said it would go ahead with plans to resume service on the 10 routes, starting Mar. 27.

On that day, however, union members—with some 500 policemen standing by—crowded sidewalks and stores in the neighborhood of the company's main garage as pickets patrolled the entrance. Any resistance would be "passive," a union spokesman said, with pickets prepared to prevent a single bus from rolling by lying down in the streets if necessary.

Not a strikebreaker appeared.

Meanwhile, the city began to provide bus service along some of the routes retained by Fifth Avenue under "perpetual franchise," declaring that the franchises were not "exclusive."

As city operation, under a subsidiary of the Transit Authority, moved toward a peak, the company said it was dropping plans for court action to bar extension of service and would concentrate on claims for damages and compensation for the seized property.

An attorney for the bus line set the value of the condemned assets "in the neighborhood of $100 million." City officials, however, say about $20 million would be a reasonable price based on the New York Stock Exchange's quotation of $21 for a share of the company's stock, with 882,000 shares outstanding.

All but about 300 of the 6,700 TWU members who struck the firm four weeks ago were back on the job under Transit Authority operation. The city said it hoped to return the rest to the payroll by Apr. 2.

The strike was called when the new head of the company, Harry Weinberg, fired 29 senior employes, threatened to lay off 1,500 more and stopped pension payments to 900 retired workers. Mayor Robert F. Wagner (D), accusing Weinberg of provoking the strike to force a 5-cent fare increase from the city, promptly moved for a city takeover.

The city has agreed to abide by all terms of the TWU contract with Fifth Avenue, to return all workers to their jobs—including those originally dismissed—and to cover pension obligations while litigation over pensions is pending against the company.

Top Ohio Court Frees $1 Million Jobless Pay

Columbus, O.—A unanimous Ohio Supreme Court decision has cleared the way for some 26,000 workers to collect more than $1 million in withheld unemployment compensation payments.

The money has been due them since 1959, when the state legislature raised maximum weekly benefits $9 a week. Payment of the added amount to persons already on the compensation rolls had been blocked by Ohio employers who contended that the increase should go only to workers who qualified for benefits after the effective date of the law.

The Supreme Court upheld the position of the state compensation board and the Ohio AFL-CIO, which entered the case in a "friend of the court" role, that no issue of retroactivity was involved since the increase in benefits would apply only to the weeks of payments after the law went into effect. Two lower state courts had previously rendered similar decisions.

State AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Elmer F. Cope hailed the decision as "a very significant victory" and expressed hope that the withheld payments would be "speedily" made to the workers involved. In addition to an increase in the maximum benefit from $33 to $42, the 1959 law also raised payments for persons drawing less than the maximum compensation.

The test cases which held up the payments for more than two years had been brought by the Youngstown Steel Tank Co. and General Industries Co. They had contested the constitutionality of the recomputed payments on the ground that it was a "retroactive" change.

State Body Sets 7 Scholarships

San Francisco — The California AFL-CIO is conducting its 12th annual scholarship program, under which seven $500 awards will be made on the basis of competitive examinations to students graduating in June from California high schools.

Literature has been sent to more than 800 public and private high schools and to all affiliates of the state labor federation. The winners will be free to choose any accredited four-year or junior college.

Four of the scholarships are offered in cooperation with affiliates —the Roderick Mackenzie Scholarship of Los Angeles Painters District Council No. 36, and the awards of the Los Angeles Building & Construction Trades Council, Los Angeles County District Council of Carpenters, and California Legislative Board of the Railroad Trainmen.

West Coast Mediation Breaks Down

San Francisco — American flag shipping out of West Coast ports was at a virtual standstill as some 12,000 members of three AFL-CIO affiliates went into the third week of a walkout to enforce demands for a new contract to replace an agreement that expired last Oct. 1.

Involved are members of the Seamen's Union of the Pacific, Marine Firemen, Cooks & Stewards, and shipping firms represented by the Pacific Maritime Association. An estimated 50 ships were kept in port by picket lines.

Two arbitration proposals were turned down by the union, which had a third under consideration. Bargaining, resumed at the urging of Under Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, broke down and Deputy Dir. Robert H. Moore of the U.S. Conciliation & Mediation Service, citing the "futility of future meetings," returned to Washington.

The PMA has offered a package it claims represents an 11.8 percent increase. The unions rejected it, said SUP Sec.-Treas. Morris Weisberger, because the employers had given more to other unions.

The strikers in answer to a request by the Military Sea Transportation Service, have withdrawn picket lines from ships loading cargo for the armed forces abroad.

At issue in the walkout are wages, overtime payment, pensions, manning, work rules, unemployment benefits and other items.

Auto Workers Blast GM Jobless Aid Attack

Detroit, Mich.—Auto Workers Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock has labeled as "pure nonsense and pure propaganda" the charge by a General Motors official that the union tried to finance strike benefits last year out of state unemployment compensation funds.

Woodcock, who heads the union's GM department, flatly denied in a letter to GM Vice Pres. Louis G. Seaton that UAW strikes over local issues in the fall of 1961 had any connection with bargaining over national issues, which he noted had been resolved a few days before the final local settlements.

Seaton, in a letter to Colin L. Smith, manager of the Michigan Employers' Unemployment Compensation Bureau, had urged legislation to overturn the so-called Ford-Canton decision of the State Supreme Court. Seaton claimed that the effect was to allow the union in 1961 to use jobless insurance benefits as a collective bargaining weapon.

In the Ford decision, which grew out of a 1958 strike at Canton, O., the court ruled that workers idled when other Ford plants closed were entitled to jobless benefits under Michigan law since the work stoppage was beyond their control.

Woodcock scoffed at Seaton's contention that claims by GM workers similarly idled last fall could exceed $1.3 million. He noted that less than $50,000 in benefits was paid as a result of the Ford-Canton decision, despite a company prediction that the amount would be more than $1 million.

He accused employers, "with General Motors as their most forceful spokesman," of sabotaging an earlier effort to provide safeguards against misuse of jobless insurance.

"One complaint, which your letter echoes," Woodcock continued, "is that the law as supported by the Ford-Canton decision is unique to Michigan. On the contrary, only four states—Texas, Virginia, North Carolina and Georgia—prohibit payment of benefits under the circumstances covered by the . . . decision. Generally, where disqualification of workers is concerned, Michigan has the most restrictive law of all the states."

BCW Ex-Officer Indicted by Jury

A former secretary-treasurer of the Bakery & Confectionery Workers, which was expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 after findings of corrupt domination, has been indicted on charges of stealing $35,000 from the union and embezzling another $17,300 in an attempt to make up the shortage.

The federal grand jury indictment charged Peter H. Olson on 23 counts, including making false entries in union records, causing others to do so, criminal conspiracy, theft and embezzlement.

Olson served as secretary-treasurer of the union from March 1958 until March 1961, when he was suspended by the BCW executive board. He faces a maximum penalty if convicted of 59 years in prison and $110,000 in fines.

IUE Ends Walkout at Sperry Co. As Firm Extends Pact Pending Vote

Lake Success, N. Y.—Engineers and technicians have ended a 12-day strike at 11 Long Island plants of the Sperry Gyroscope Co. after winning an extension of their contract pending a representation election May 28.

Terms of the settlement were worked out in Washington by representatives of the company and the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, with the aid of Federal Mediation Dir. William E. Simkin.

The engineers, members of IUE Local 445, struck Sperry Mar. 15 when the company refused to extend the expiring contract and refused to bargain, challenging the IUE's right to represent the 3,400 employes in the unit.

On the same day, the National Labor Relations Board issued a unanimous decision holding Sperry guilty of violating the Taft-Hartley Act in sponsoring a decertification petition among the engineers and taking a direct part in the effort to oust the union.

The board ordered the company to post "cease and desist" notices at its plants for 60 days and barred for the duration of that period an election sought by management to determine the union's bargaining rights.

The settlement terms also include management agreement to refrain from "captive audience" speeches to employes prior to the NLRB vote. Sperry in addition has agreed that any contract negotiated following the election will be retroactive to Mar. 15 and will terminate June 1, 1964, the expiration date of its contracts with two other IUE locals representing production and clerical employes.

Management has pledged that there will be no discrimination or reprisals against the strikers or against other IUE members who refused to cross the engineers' picket lines.

Both parties agreed to drop all law suits and counter suits. The chief pending court action was a company bid for a federal injunction barring its employes, as members of the Engineers Association, from affiliating with IUE. The EA, then unaffiliated, voted in 1960 to join the AFL-CIO union.

A federal judge found that a clause in the EA contract imposing limitations on its right to affiliate with other organizations amounted to a "yellow dog" contract that denied workers their rights under the law. Sperry had appealed this decision.

Doherty, Beirne in Berlin:

Reds' Wall Scored as Symbol of Failure

The wall that splits free Berlin from Communist Berlin was bitterly denounced by AFL-CIO Vice Presidents William C. Doherty and Joseph A. Beirne in addresses to a trade union conference in that city which they attended as representatives of organized American workers.

Doherty characterized it as "that abomination which free men everywhere call 'The Wall of Shame,'" and "this iniquitous wall which winds like a serpent through the heart of your wonderful city." He commented upon the strong psychological reaction visitors feel when viewing it for the first time.

Construction of the wall, Doherty maintained, "was the greatest admission of ideological failure in the history of mankind" because before it was built "thoughtful people every day could see for themselves the dramatic contrast between the abundant life in the free world and the gray misery that existed in the totalitarian state."

"The Soviets are so blinded by their own perverse ideology that they fail to realize—or they refuse to realize—that their rigidity and their dogmatism must lead inescapably, in the realm of human affairs, to complete failure," he said. "The wall is the classic symbol of that failure."

Beirne declared that the "ugly wall that twists through the streets of this city like a vicious serpent . . . is indeed a monument to an ugly truth."

"Only by repression, by police methods, by the symbol of that prison can the Communist masters of East Germany maintain even the semblance of government," he said.

'Confession of Weakness'

"If the wall is an affliction of this spirited city, remember that it is even more a confession of weakness and failure on the part of the frightened men who ordered that it be built.

"Despite the wall, Berlin lives. With each passing month, with each year, you have grown in the esteem of your friends throughout the free world."

Beirne and Doherty brought greetings from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and the members of the AFL-CIO, and again expressed American labor's determination to support the German stand on Berlin.

"We salute your bravery and your determination to maintain the bright glow of freedom that emanates from this democratic lighthouse surrounded by a black sea of Communist totalitarian dictatorship," said Beirne.

". . . We assure you, the people of Berlin, that America's workers, and indeed the entire American people, stand shoulder-to-shoulder with you in your struggle for human decency, for the liberty that is the hallmark of civilization everywhere."

The labor movement's thinking, Doherty said, closely parallels that of Pres. Kennedy.

"We insist," he said, "that the fate of Berlin cannot be divorced from the fate of free Europe and—indeed—from the fate of the entire free world. We are firmly convinced that if we collapse before the threat of Soviet aggression, the whole edifice of western unity will collapse with us. We shall not permit this to happen.

"We are seeking to take the initiative in the struggle for a free and unified Germany. We insist that any peace treaty for a free Germany should be based—strictly and absolutely—on the principle of political self-determination by the German people."

UAW Offers to Switch Blue Collars For White

fications, job descriptions, salaries, etc., for each category of white-collar work.")

- "That such applicants be given the same pre-hiring screening and tests normally given to other applicants for similar work."
- That a permanent file of applicants who successfully pass the screening or tests be maintained for implementing the preferential employment policy.
- That production worker applicants who do not immediately qualify for white-collar jobs be offered aptitude tests to determine whether they have the necessary potential.
- "That applicants whose aptitude tests indicate ability to perform white-collar work be offered the opportunity to train for (such) jobs which you expect to have available."
- That workers who successfully complete such training be added to the permanent file of applicants for white-collar jobs.

Reuther told the employers that the U.S. Employment Service was willing to cooperate in giving aptitude tests to the extent its resources permit. He suggested that many public school systems would be willing to follow the Detroit system in offering cooperation in a training program.

The program is one way, he wrote, to "minimize human hardships and dislocations associated with technological and economic change." Solution of the problem of technological employment, he added, "of course" lies ultimately "in a vigorously growing economy which creates new job opportunities rapidly enough to replace jobs destroyed by automation and other technological advances and to absorb the additions to the national labor force."

The displacement problem of blue-collar workers nevertheless would have been sharply reduced in recent years "had systematic and farsighted provision been made for the transfer of qualified blue-collar workers to openings in white-collar occupations," he declared.

"We recognize, of course, that not every production worker can or would want to fill a white-collar job," Reuther continued. "But a rapidly increasing proportion of production workers could be shifted without difficulty into white-collar work, while others could be prepared to do so with a modest retraining effort.

"Ability to do white-collar work is largely a matter of education and training. As educational levels of the population as a whole rise, blue-collar workers in increasing numbers are able to meet the educational requirements for white-collar work."

"Routine clerical work can certainly be done by most production workers who have successfully completed high school as well as by others who have not. The operation of office machinery can certainly be taught within reasonable time and with reasonable effort to production workers who have the same educational attainments as others now hired to run such machines.

"We are fully aware that the salaries paid on some white-collar jobs may not be attractive to production workers. However, many production workers could presently qualify or could be trained without difficulty for white-collar jobs that pay enough to be attractive."

Reuther reminded the industry leaders that every production worker shifted into a white-collar job "means one less worker in danger of displacement" by technological advance and "one less worker on the SUB rolls."

Job Prospects Seen Better For Graduates

Students completing college this year will find job prospects better than a year ago, Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg told graduates in an open letter congratulating them on receiving their degrees.

Preliminary estimates indicate, he said, that with some 425,000 men and women receiving bachelor's degres and more than 90,000 earning higher degrees, this year may set a record surpassing that of 1950, when World War II veterans inflated college enrollments.

In his letter, Goldberg briefly discussed job prospects in many fields, listing possible opportunities in specific areas, probable starting salaries, and the qualifications demanded.

"Production, earnings and employment have all climbed to new record levels in recent months, while unemployment has gone down," he said. "The remainder of 1962 promises further improvement in the economy."

"One should not conclude, however, that the supply of graduates is so limited that everyone can choose among several offers. As in the past, the demand for graduates varies according to the field of specialization."

Pan Am Talks Resumed by Engineers

New York—The Flight Engineers have resumed negotiations with Pan American World Airways for a new contract in response to an appeal from Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg to postpone a strike the union had set for Mar. 23.

Also involved in the talks, being conducted by Under Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, are spokesmen for the Air Line Pilots.

A key issue in the 21-month-old dispute is the crew complement for Pan Am's jet airliners. The company has been using three pilots and a flight engineer since 1958 and now wants to cut back to the minimum of two pilots and an engineer required by federal regulations.

ALPA wants the third man in the cockpit to be a pilot qualified as an engineer. The Flight Engineers charge that this threatens the survival of their union, which has resisted government recommendations that it merge with the ALPA.

Other airlines also are involved in the crew complement dispute.

In talks preceding the strike deadline, FEIA agreed to a 5 percent pay increase for the period June 1, 1960, to June 1, 1961, and on accommodations for members laying over away from home.

1,000 IAM Youth Seek Scholarships

More than 1,000 members of Machinists' families have applied for five college scholarships offered by the union and its lodges, state councils and ladies' auxiliaries.

That adds up to 204 candidates for each scholarship and demonstrates, IAM Pres. Al Hayes said, the need for legislation on the state, provincial and national level to keep down college costs and provide financial aid. It is a waste of talent, he said, and an injustice "when children with ability cannot go to college for financial reasons."

Scholarship winners will be chosen by a five-man committee of educators. Each scholarship will bring the winner $1,000 a year toward the cost of education at any accredited college or university of the student's choice.

3 From CWA Help Guiana Union Leaders

Three representatives of the Communications Workers are in British Guiana to participate in a series of seminars to prepare workers to protect their unions from the left wing leadership that has taken over the country.

Vice Pres. Ray Hackney, in charge of international affairs for the union, will teach organizing, strike matters, including defense fund problems and rules, and trade union administration. Former Pres. Ron Smith of CWA Local 7470, Lincoln, Neb., who is doing field work in connection with study for a master's degree at Cornell University, will teach other union subjects, including grievance procedures.

Thomas Adair, CWA counsel in Atlanta, will study British Guiana's labor legislation in preparation for making recommendations to the unions there.

The seminars are being held at the request of unions affiliated with the Postal, Telegraph & Telephone Intl. Other international trade secretariats are holding similar meetings with their British Guiana affiliates.

OFFICIAL INVITATION to opening day ceremonies of AFL-CIO Union-Industries Show in Portland (Ore.) Memorial Coliseum on May 25 is extended by Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis (left) of AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept. and accepted by Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.). The department stages the show in a different U.S. city each year to highlight the outstanding quality of union-made products and union-provided services.

Apathy Seen Off-Year Election Threat

Voters Can Reverse Old 'Law', Tyler Says

If all elections were decided on the basis of past performance charts, the congressional contests this November would be all over but the shouting. The Republicans—as the party out of White House power—would pick up seats in the House of Representatives. The Democratic majority would be slimmer and more conservative.

The party out of power has gained House seats in 14 of the 15 "off-year" congressional elections held since the turn of the century. And congressional redistricting since the 1960 census—largely engineered by conservative, rural-dominated legislatures—seems likely to help the anti-Administration coalition this year.

These are the hard facts faced by Gus Tyler, the Ladies' Garment Workers veteran political education director, in an analysis appearing in the AFL-CIO American Federationist and now available in reprint form.

Tyler does not underestimate the obstacles, but he argues strongly that the electorate has full power to break the so-called "iron law" of midterm voting as it did in 1934 in a powerful mandate for Franklin D. Roosevelt's New Deal.

Tyler sees three major factors determining the "personality" of the next Congress:

- The mood of the voters—whether Pres. Kennedy's present popularity remains high in November.
- The effect of "midterm apathy."
- The impact of congressional redistricting resulting from the 1960 census.

He notes that the "voter mood" continues to favor Kennedy and points out:

Results Confirmed Polls

"The upcurve for the President recorded in public opinion polls seems confirmed by the results of the local elections of November 1961.

"Although such limited contests are often determined by special issues and personalities, they sometimes serve as a minor index, especially if the parties choose to make the contest a referendum on national issues. In three of these local contests—for mayor in New York, governor in New Jersey and congressman in Texas—the Republican Party decided to convert the local campaign into a national plebiscite. In all three of these, the GOP threw in Ike and the prestige of the party. And in all three, the Republicans lost to liberal Democrats."

Tyler points out, however, that whether Kennedy's stock remains high by this November "will depend on a number of unpredictables, especially the highly explosive international situation."

Tyler uses the two charts reproduced on this page to illustrate how the total voter turnout decreases from presidential years to midterm congressional election years and how this affects the midterm results.

The chart at the top of the page shows that, on the average, only three-quarters as many voters participate in midterm elections as compared to the previous presidential election.

The other chart illustrates the "off-year phenomenon"—the almost unvarying loss of congressional strength by the party in control of the presidency. Tyler adds:

"In this century this loss, in terms of percentage of House seats, has been as high as 18 percent in 1938—the election which put an end to the really active phase of the New Deal. The average loss has been 9 percent. A 9 percent loss of seats by the Democrats in 1962 would mean a Republican gain of 39 seats. This would still leave the Democrats with a paper-thin majority of 11 seats, but would put the Republican-Southern Democratic conservative coalition in overwhelming control."

The reason for this "curious loss of seats by the party in the White House," Tyler declares, is "voter apathy." He says:

"Of the millions who stay away from the polls because they do not understand the importance of the congressional election, most are habitually pro-Administration.

"With their 'man' in the White House, Administration backers feel that all will go well without their votes, while the bitter critics of the Administration turn out to register their protest and to increase the congressional opposition to the President. Ironically, it is the faithful pro-Administration voter who, consequently, strengthens the power of the party he opposes—by a simple failure to vote.

"The one exception to this midterm rule—1934—is highly instructive and could point the way this year.

THE VOTING GAP IN OFF-YEAR ELECTIONS

"In that midterm election, FDR saw the strength of his party rise instead of fall on the 'Hill.' The reason? The unusually lively interest of the voters in the opening years of Roosevelt.

"Still hot with the steam of the 'peaceful revolution' of 1932, the New Deal voters turned out in great numbers in 1934 to provide a vote of confidence in FDR and to give added power to his program. Because 1934 was a non-apathetic year for the New Deal backers, they upset predictions and broke the iron law of midterm voting.

"In the story of this 'exception' lies a moral: there is nothing inevitable about the midterm rule. If the voters who back the Kennedy Administration really turn out for the vote this November, liberal strength can rise rather than fall this year in the House.

"The midterm rule does not apply with the same force to the Senate as it does to the House for the simple reason that the entire Senate is not elected at one time. Only one-third of the seats are up for contest in any one election year, plus, of course, contests to fill any vacancies."

37 Senate Contests

"This year there will be contests for 37 senate seats. Among the 63 senators not up for re-election in 1962 (that is, those who will automatically sit in the next Congress), 43 are Democrats and 20 are Republicans. Of the seats to be contested this year, 21 are currently controlled by the Democrats and 16 are controlled by the GOP.

"Thus, to retain control of the Senate, the Democrats need only retain 8 of their 21 contested seats. Since 7 of these 21 Democratic seats are located in the one-party states of the South, and at least another 7 are in northern and border states considered reasonably safe for the Democrats, the party's continued control of the Senate is not in jeopardy. However, should enough northern Democratic Senate seats fall to Republicans, it would enable the conservative coalition to take firm control. The Senate has been just about evenly divided between liberals and conservatives since the election of 1958.

"Actually, the prospects are that the political complexion of the Senate will not be altered substantially for while there are about 7 Democratic seats which must be considered 'doubtful' there are roughly an equal number of Republican-held seats which are vulnerable to Democratic challenges."

Tyler notes that the 1962 election "will be the first since the census of 1960 and will be based on the new allotment of seats to the states in the House of Representatives." He continued:

"Under the new apportionment, the states that will gain seats are California (8), Florida (4), Arizona (1), Hawaii (1), Maryland (1), Michigan (1), New Jersey (1), Ohio (1) and Texas (1).

"The states that will lose seats are Pennsylvania (3), Arkansas (2), Massachusetts (2), New York (2), Alabama (1), Illinois (1), Iowa (1), Kansas (1), Kentucky (1), Maine (1), Minnesota (1), Mississippi (1), Missouri (1), Nebraska (1), North Carolina (1) and West Virginia (1).

"In those states where changes will take place in the number of seats to be filled, state legislatures have the power to redefine congressional district boundaries. This provides a first-rate opportunity for state legislatures to carve up districts in such a manner as to create congressional delegations in the political image of the state legislature.

"This impact of the action of state legislatures on the character of our national legislature can be seen most clearly by what has happened in the two most populous states: New York and California.

"In New York, the Republican-controlled legislature has redrawn the state's congressional district lines in such a way that, given the same voting pattern in 1962 as in 1960, the present 22-21 Democratic margin in the New York congressional delegation will be converted into a GOP margin of at least 25-16. In other words, even with no change in the way the electorate votes, the shifting of district lines will convert a 1-seat Democratic majority into a Republican majority of 9 or more!

"In California, where the Democrats took control of the state legislature after a long period of GOP control, the worm has turned—vigorously. At present, the state's congressional delegation is composed of 16 Democrats and 14 Republicans. The redrawn lines are expected to produce a Democratic majority of at least 25 to 13. Thus the Democrats will be able to control all 8 of the newly created California seats and will take at least one of the old seats away from the GOP.

"In most of the other states which have redistricted, only one seat will be affected and in only a few of these will one party clearly benefit. In Pennsylvania, each party apparently will lose one seat and a battle between two incumbent congressmen will determine which party loses an additional seat. Republicans are expected to benefit in Illinois, Iowa and Kansas, while Democrats should gain slightly in Minnesota, New Jersey and North Carolina.

Conservative Gain Seen

"In Florida, the second biggest gainer of seats (4), while the effect in Democrat vs. Republican terms will probably be to change a 6-seat Democratic advantage into an 8- or 10-seat Democratic advantage, the more important effect will be in liberal-conservative terms. The probable effect will be to add three or four new conservatives, either Democratic or Republican.

"The overall national effect of the redistricting, from what is thus far known, will probably be as follows: neither party—as a party—will gain appreciably. The new GOP advantage in New York will just about offset the added Democratic seats in California. However, there should be a not inconsequential overall gain for the conservative coalition, for the new Republican advantage in New York, added to the new conservative seats in Florida and elsewhere, will probably not be offset by enough new liberal seats to redress the balance."

Tyler also points out that if the "millions who do not habitually come to the polls" should use their voting power it would be possible to "ungerrymander the gerrymander" in a number of districts. He adds:

"The districts are carved to produce predictable results, based on the way in which people have voted in the past, including the non-voting voter.

LOSS OF SEATS IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES IN "OFF-YEAR" CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS BY PARTY IN CONTROL OF WHITE HOUSE 1902-1962

The Doors Are Opened

THE UNITED STATES Supreme Court decision in the Tennessee reapportionment case is a major turning point in constitutional law. In essence the court has held that when citizens are frustrated in their attempts to obtain fair representation in state legislatures, they can turn to the federal courts for relief.

Historically the courts have refused to take this position, contending that the problems of districting and representation in state legislatures is a problem to be solved by citizens through political action—the election or defeat of candidates on the issue of fair representation in the policy-making bodies of the states.

The Supreme Court has found in the Tennessee case, however, that the political structure can become so solidly frozen because of unfair representation that the most intensive efforts of citizens to correct the situation are doomed to failure.

The decision said the federal courts had the power and the duty to consider the constitutionality of state legislative apportionments and that some state districting could be so unfair as to violate the constitutional provision that no state shall deny to any person "the equal protection of the laws."

The effect is to open the doors of every federal court to citizens whose basic representation rights have been violated by rural area gerrymandering and control of most of the nation's state legislatures. It will give the 70 percent of the nation's population now living in urban areas a new weapon in the battle to have the full weight of their votes counted in state legislatures rather than nullified by the preponderance of rural representatives.

THE PATTERN of future action may be determined in the next few months by decisions in the half dozen cases now before the courts. A number of state legislatures, loath to correct their own inequities, may be spurred to action rather than have the courts determine what constitutes fair representation.

The Supreme Court's decision does not affect congressional districts which are drawn by the same state legislatures that have flouted democratic principles in planning legislative district lines, resulting in under-representation for urban areas. A change in the complexion of state legislatures may have a direct effect on congressional districting. But there is no need to wait for this development; Congress has the power to set standards for the districts of its own members. A bill to this effect has been introduced in recent years but has never reached a vote in the House of Representatives.

Congress can take a long step toward correcting the inequities that have developed over the years by quickly passing the measure introduced by Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N. Y.) calling for geographically compact congressional districts of reasonably equal population enforceable by the federal courts.

With citizen groups attacking malapportionment in the state legislatures through the federal courts and Congress redressing similar evils through legislation, the nation can give new vitality to our system of representational democracy by assuring every voter that his choice of a representative for the state house or Congress will have the same weight and effect as that of every other voter and that all groups and interests in the nation will be fairly represented at the critical level of policy-making and decision.

Clearing the Way

Scandals Shake Confidence:

Corruption in Business World Brings Call For Housecleaning

DISCLOSURES OF WRONGDOING by concerns and officials affiliated with the stock exchanges are coming thick and fast. But these are only the most recent of financial malpractices that have been brought out for public airing.

There were the conflict of interest cases at Chrysler Corp. and Prudential Life, where high officials were forced to resign because of profiting personally from deals in which they should have been acting to protect the interest of the stockholder. Then there were the scandals in which high officials of the electrical manufacturing companies went to jail because of price fixing.

A Securities and Exchange Commission investigation in the past year has brought wholesale resignations of top officers of the American Stock Exchange and the expulsion of three brokers from membership. More recently Sutro Brothers, a New York Stock Exchange member, has been alleged by the SEC to have violated margin requirements and other regulations.

The SEC is currently investigating other aspects of the New York Stock Exchange including so-called "hot issues." A "hot issue" is one that jumps in price after a public offering. The SEC is asking about 50 corporations to detail all recent public relations dealings with financial writers, securities analysts and brokers with the objective of learning more about promotional campaigns to influence stock prices. In particular, the agency wants to know if false or misleading information has been circulated in an effort to manipulate stock market prices.

IN ADDITION, the SEC has sent questionnaires to 5,700 brokers to ascertain if there is, as some observers feel, widespread wrongdoing in the dealings in the unregulated over-the-counter markets. Transactions in over-the-counter trading take place in the offices of brokers, not in the regulated markets of the stock exchanges.

The recent indictment by a federal grand jury of the chairman of the board of governors of the New York Stock Exchange and his resignation from the board have contributed to growing public concern over the present state of the securities markets.

The disclosures by the SEC of wrongdoing by financial and business dealers is sowing a widespread distrust among the investing public of our financial and business leadership. More evidence of financial manipulations on a broad scale are coming to light every day. The very scope of the investigations in which the SEC is now engaged suggests that even greater evidence of financial manipulation will be brought to light in the future.

It appears that some business leaders in the more responsible positions have used their inside knowledge of finance for personal gain at the expense of stockholders and investors. In short, the "fast buck" has become all too frequently the hallmark of American business practice.

The wholesale investigations in which the SEC has embarked indicate that it is time for responsible American business men to speak up and clean out the counting houses before the entire edifice becomes hopelessly corrupt. (PAI)

Buying Power Makes U.S. Go

(The following is excerpted from a speech by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to the annual safety awards dinner of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen.)

We cannot maintain our way of life if we pay attention only to those who cut coupons, those who manage and are paid to manage, those who invest. We have no quarrel with the system itself. We have no quarrel with the system which gives investors a return for risk capital. We have no quarrel with the overall system of profit.

But we say that into that system goes the labor of mind and of heart and of hand of those at the bottom of the economic ladder. We say that those at the bottom of the economic ladder have a right to a fair share of whatever wealth is produced under this democratic society, under this so-called profit system or investment system or anything else that you want to call it—capitalistic or not.

We have an interest in maintaining this way of life. And it cannot be maintained if we are going to be just concerned with the profits of those who clip coupons, of the investment return for those who invest, or paying those who manage. It must be concerned with the great mass at the bottom of the economic ladder who must provide the mass purchasing power which keeps this dynamic economy of ours going and without which the economy will fail.

Morgan Says:

The Communists Misjudge the Resilience of a Free Society

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p.m. EST.)

WE AMERICANS, who pride ourselves on the fact that we have never lost a war, sometimes unaccountably act as if we were convinced we can never win anything off the battlefield, especially against the Communists. We keep telling ourselves, in a kind of hypnotic ritual, how many millions of people and square miles have been swept behind the Iron Curtain since World War II. Khrushchev boasts that he will bury us—in Cold War competition—and our reflex is to double up our fists instead of compete. Castro wags his beard and we want to bomb Havana.

Morgan

There is no doubt that we are locked in a global struggle. It is an exhausting exercise, fraying our nerves and taxing our strength. The enemy has undeniably made great gains and we must admit the possibility that in the end we might lose the fight to preserve the civilization of the open society against totalitarianism. But then again we may well win.

Communism is not invincible. There is something about the resilience, the energy, the ingenuity of the free human spirit flourishing in open societies which the Communists simply do not understand. They repeatedly misjudge it. They thought France and Italy would be virtual pushovers for communism in the mid-40s. They were so wrong. They continue to make mistakes, though they learn some by them too.

This is a perspective that many of us have been missing. Recently it was intelligently illuminated by a leading backstage member of the New Frontier, Walt Whitman Rostow. In a speech at Purdue University on American strategy, Rostow, who now heads the State Dept.'s policy planning commission, discussed some major Communist mistakes and how they have affected Communist thinking.

"Until very recently," he said, "the Communists believed that the United States was something of a special case . . . the fortunate democratic island-continent with much land and a few people, permitted to enjoy— . . . for a time—a special favored destiny. They looked to Europe and Japan as more vulnerable regions subject to Communist takeover in the fairly near future. (But) . . . advanced democratic societies have learned to avoid protracted phases of severe unemployment and . . . the American pattern of development . . . is the general pattern. The trend toward the Americanization of standards of living in western Europe and Japan, and the vitality of democratic capitalism in the past decade, is a major setback to the Communist image of history, to their idealogy, and to their plans."

"The returns," Rostow conceded, "are not yet in; but a sober and cautious assessment . . . shows this: where the Communists have had power in underdeveloped areas—in China, in North Korea, North Viet Nam and in Cuba—they have done an unimpressive job technically, quite aside from the inhumanity of a police state.

"The most striking fact about the mood in Asia," he went on, "when I went out there with Gen. Maxwell Taylor last fall, was the loss by the Communists of their power to attract by example in either North Viet Nam or in China. The Communist states are drab and hungry. In particular, the Chinese Communists have demonstrated that the most powerful control machine ever mounted in an underdeveloped country is incapable of forcing men to grow enough food; and their agricultural crisis has compounded into a general crisis of industrial production.

"Meanwhile India and certain other . . . nations have begun to demonstrate that real momentum and steady progress can be obtained in an underdeveloped area by mobilizing the energies and loyalities of the people by consent and normal human incentives."

Then Rostow put his finger on what seems to me the Communists' Achilles heel. "It appears to be a technical fact," he said, "that the most powerful system of control is an inadequate substitute for the incentives and commitment of the individual citizen, once he can be engaged."

HE PREDICTED the Communist offensive in the have-not areas would fail because we can honestly align our policy with their powerful drive for independence and in the end the Communists cannot.

And the diffusion of power, dramatized by the deep struggle between Moscow and Peiping, is causing, Rostow believes, the slow fragmentation of the Communist bloc.

The bloc is not going to dry up and blow away but it has its cracks which may come as a surprise to the radical right, convinced as it is that our own walls are tumbling down.

Washington Reports:

Wide Misuse of 'Literacy' Tests Called Denial of Voters' Rights

LITERACY TESTS and other restrictions have been misused to deny thousands of Negroes and other citizens the right to vote, Rep Emanuel Celler (D-N. Y.) and Rep. Seymour Halpern (R-N. Y.) charged in interviews on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 stations.

"Macon County, Ala., for instance, has a non-white population of 83.5 percent, yet only 8.4 percent of the non-white population has registered to vote," Halpern reported, quoting from findings of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights.

"In 1960, in Bullock County, Ala., although Negroes outnumbered whites by 2 to 1, only five Negroes were registered. No Negroes at all were registered to vote in Lowndes and Wilcox counties in Alabama, although the Negroes there are 80 percent of the total population."

Halpern quoted from findings also in Florida, Georgia and elsewhere, noting that Negroes are able to vote in cities like Atlanta and in southern Florida.

Celler has introduced a bill that would prohibit the "arbitrary use of illiteracy tests to deny the right to vote to citizens of the U.S." Both Celler's bill and a companion bill sponsored by Halpern would make anyone who has completed the sixth grade of public or private school eligible to vote in national elections.

"In my opinion," remarked Celler, "intelligence should be the test for voting qualifications, not language. Language is a conduit of intelligence and knowledge. Intelligence can be conveyed in English, Swedish, Gaelic or what have you. Many citizens in my own state of New York have been denied the right to vote because of race or national origin. I speak of Negroes as well as Puerto Ricans."

HALPERN SAID that in North Carolina, as an example, the state constitution says that "every person presenting himself for registration shall be able to read and write any section of the Constitution in the English language."

He said that in Franklin County, N. C., "nine Negroes, including one graduate and three others who had finished one or more grades of high school, said that in addition to reading parts of the U.S. and state constitutions, they were asked to define words like 'habeas corpus,' who created the world, and what 'create' meant. They were told their answers did not satisfy."

Celler said he is of the opinion that the people of the nation are "becoming imbued with the idea that we must advance in civil rights." He said he expected the members of Congress to be urged by their constituents to pass this and other civil rights legislation.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE WOODS WERE FULL of commentators, immediately after the Supreme Court's decision in the Tennessee reapportionment case, speculating on the putative effects.

Some respected observers viewed with alarm. Lawyers were generally astonished to discover that a 1946 decision in an Illinois congressional reapportionment case, which they believed had established a clear rule that the court would not accept such issues, actually meant the opposite—at least according to the majority opinion of Mr. Justice Brennan.

This singular fact probably was not so astonishing to Mr. Justice Frankfurter, who wrote what had seemed the controlling opinion in the 1946 case, even though he protested with vehemence against the six-member majority which overrode him in the Tennessee decision.

The court actually said just one thing this year—that when and if by extraordinary abuse of power a state legislature persistently upgrades rural voters and downgrades city and suburban voters, the latter have a right to a federal court decision on whether their federal constitutional rights are denied.

The presumed effect will be to compel—by court decision or by voluntary self-reform in the legislatures—a restoration of some approach to equity in the representation allotted urban voters.

THERE IS NOTHING in the decision to suggest that the federal district courts, to which the responsibility of fashioning remedies has been passed, will necessarily rush to substitute themselves as the new dictators of exactly what state legislative districts should be established.

If a court holds that an existing districting system is so "arbitrary and capricious" that its existence deprives city and suburban voters of "equal protection of the laws," the judicial remedy may be simply to declare the districts illegal and leave it to the legislature to draw new ones that are more nearly equitable.

The rural gerrymander has grown increasingly abusive and arbitrary so that in perhaps 40 of the 50 states serious inequities can be cited. In Tennessee, for example, urban and suburban counties with 45 percent of the population have only 24 percent of membership of the lower house and 25 percent of the upper house in the state legislature.

The state legislatures in turn draw congressional district lines, and city and suburban voters are deprived of "at least" 30 seats in the House of Representatives, according to a six-year-old estimate by Sen. Douglas of Illinois.

The rural areas have 30 more seats than their population entitles them to—and this single fact gives a base to the conservative Republican-southern Democratic coalition that often rules the House.

THE BRENNAN OPINION, in any case, brings vindication to the late Justice Wiley Rutledge, who cast the deciding vote in 1946 when the court turned down the Illinois citizens asking relief from unfairly divided congressional districts.

Rutledge's opinion was one of the most baffling of the past quarter-century. It occupied less than a page, following lengthy opinions explaining why the other members split three to three on accepting the case.

Frankfurter and two colleagues were against accepting; Black, Douglas and the late Justice Murphy favored asserting jurisdiction. The Rutledge opinion clearly expressed agreement with Black but he cast his vote with Frankfurter, thus postponing until later the day of reckoning.

Mr. Justice Brennan's opinion in the Tennessee case interpreted Rutledge's reasoning with what seems great accuracy: he simply said that because of the "shortness of time" before the next election, the court "may properly, and should, decline to exercise its jurisdiction."

Sixteen years later the court did what a supposed "shortness of time" kept it from doing in 1946. And that is vindication also for an ingenious Chicago lawyer named Urban Lavery, who developed the legal basis for the attack on the Illinois congressional districting law and was deprived of victory only by a freak of timing.

A MAN'S COLOR or failure to speak English, if fluent in another language, should not bar him from the right to vote, Rep. Seymour Halpern (R-N.Y.), left, and Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.) asserted on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People.

Banks, Finance Firms in Drive To Beat 'Truth-in-Lending' Bill

By Sidney Margolius

BANKS AND FINANCE companies are putting on a campaign to beat the "truth-in-lending" bill which Sen. Paul Douglas (D-Ill.) and 21 other senators have been urging Congress to enact for over two years now. The Consumer Bankers Association has been warning lenders that consumers will be frightened off if they are told how much they really pay for loans and installment credit. And don't refer to it as the "truth-in-lending" bill, the association advises bankers.

The huge First National City Bank of New York has just put out a broadside asserting it would be extremely difficult for lenders to tell us borrowers the exact simple annual interest rate on loans or installment purchases, as the truth-in-lending bill would require.

This seems fantastic, since the banks have no trouble figuring the true rate on the interest they pay us on our savings. If a bank can figure out the interest on a savings account at an annual rate of 3.5 percent, it should have no trouble figuring out the finance charge on a loan at a true annual interest rate of say, 11 percent.

The proposed law would not tell lenders how much they could charge. It would merely require that they tell the true charge in terms of simple annual interest. At present, lenders use a variety of methods, none, except for mortgages and insurance loans, the true annual rate.

As the accompanying chart shows, true rates are generally double the commonly-used discount rate. For example, if a bank says it is charging $6 per $100 for a loan the true annual rate is approximately 12 percent.

If the credit fee is stated as a monthly charge, as it often is by retailers, credit unions and small-loan companies, then you simply multiply the monthly rate by 12 to get the annual rate.

Borrowers sometimes find this hard to believe. For example, one reader writes that he paid just $6.50 on a loan repaid in 12 installments. He is convinced this is 6.5 percent. But what he doesn't realize is that his average debt during those 12 months was about half the original amount. All you need do is take his original debt of $100 and his final-month debt of $8.33, add them together and divide by two. His average debt during that period thus was $54.17. You then divide the average debt of $54.17 into the credit fee of $6.50, and presto, the true rate is 12 percent.

IF CONGRESS would pass the truth-in-lending bill, American families could save millions of dollars a year in interest payments. This department finds unnecessary interest payments to be the single largest source of money waste in the families we interview and hear from all over the country.

Alcoholism Winning Recognition as Disease

More and more health insurance organizations are recognizing alcoholism as a disease, according to a study of 50 such groups recently completed by AFL-CIO Community Service Activities.

The study involved queries to 50 insurance companies, unions, Blue Cross-Blue Shield units, state disability compensation officials, and community non-profit organizations. Out of the total of 46 responses, 37 provide some form of coverage for alcoholism.

Here is the breakdown: Of 18 Blue Cross-Blue Shield organizations, 17 do provide some form of coverage for alcoholism, and one does not; of 12 union insurance plans, six do, six do not; of nine community plans, seven do, two do not; all four state disability insurance plans provide some benefits; all three commercial carriers provide some coverage.

"While there are still some variations in coverage, some semantic confusions, and some actuarial hesitations, the trend is overwhelmingly in the direction of recognition of alcoholism as a disease by those who provide insurance coverage," the study said.

Based on Consumer Survey:

Auto Demand Rising, But No 'Boom' Seen

INDICATIONS ARE that consumer demand for durable goods will be high during the next six to nine months, but will not reach boom proportions. Demand should be high for automobiles, less for housing and appliances.

These findings are based on a national cross-section of over 2,000 spending units in the Michigan Survey Research Center's 1962 Survey of Consumer Finances. The survey supplies one of the quarterly measures of consumer attitudes collected by SRC. Interviews were conducted in January and February.

"The new survey justifies the conclusion that consumers on the whole will be both able and willing to purchase durable goods at a high rate during the months to come," reported survey directors George Katona, Eva Mueller and Charles Lininger.

"Some findings suggest caution in appraising the prospects for further increases in the rate of spending, but there are no findings that would point to an impending downturn. The next quarterly survey, to be conducted in April and May, may shed more light on the crucial question about the length of the period of prosperity."

American concern about international conflict and unemployment has not disappeared. With many people, inclinations to spend cautiously and to add to savings persist. On the other hand, people on the whole are confident and the proportion of people with income gains, achieved and prospective, has increased.

"New data from the 1962 Survey of Consumer Finances indicate that the distribution of personal income by size has remained favorable for large purchases," the U-M researchers report. "The proportion of spending units falling into brackets above $7,500 was larger in 1961 than in 1959."

Intentions to buy houses for owner occupancy early in 1962 were somewhat less frequent than at the beginning of any of the preceding three years. Intentions to undertake improvements, additions and repairs to homes (over $50), particularly low a year ago, rose this year to 1959-60 levels.

Intentions to purchase furniture or large household appliances dropped sharply from early 1960 to early 1961. These buying plans have recovered somewhat over a year ago, but have not regained the frequency of two and three years ago.

Expressed intentions to buy new cars showed a pronounced increase in frequency from early 1961 to early 1962, and appear to be at their highest since early 1955. Intentions to buy used cars also are more frequent than a year ago.

From Soup to Nonsense:

The Life First Graders Live Is a Scandal to the Jaybirds

By Jane Goodsell

IF YOU'RE SHOCKED by the moral standards of Hollywood and the shenanigans of high Roman society in "La Dolce Vita," you ought to hear what goes on in the first grade at Molly's school. There's a hotbed of romance if I ever saw one.

Personally, I think those people at the Kinsey Institute should lay off the grownups for a while and do some investigating among six-year-olds. Heaven knows, they're willing enough to talk about their affairs. They not only talk, they write it on the blackboard in big block letters.

I didn't realize what was going on (I guess a mother is always the last to know) until Molly announced quite casually after school one afternoon: "Johnny kissed me today."

"Kissed you!" I gasped. "Where?"

"On my cheek. Where'd you think?"

"I mean where were you when he kissed you? Not in class, I hope."

"Of course not," said Molly. "During recess. That's when everybody kisses."

"Good heavens!" I said. "Is that what you do during recess? I thought you played games. Jumped rope and played hopscotch. Things like that."

"Oh, we got tired of that," said Molly. "Can I have another cookie? Now we run around and chase each other."

"Oh," I said, handing her a cookie. "Johnny chased you and when he caught you, he kissed you. Is that it?"

"Yep," said Molly, "but I had to pay him a penny."

"Why don't you chase him, and make him give you a penny? It would be cheaper that way."

"Oh Mommy!" said Molly. "You don't make any sense. Besides, I don't just kiss Johnny. I kiss Mike and Billy and Lance and—oh, lots of other boys."

"MOLLY," I SAID, hardly knowing where to begin, "I really don't think that's a nice way for little boys and girls to act. Running around kissin each other, and that sort of thing."

"Why not?"

"We-ell, I don't know—I mean—I can't believe all the children behave like that."

"All except Susan," said Molly. "She has a cold. She has to stay inside during recess."

"Does Mary?" I asked. "She seems like such a sweet, shy little girl."

"Mary loves Arthur. She wrote it on the blackboard today."

"Wrote what?"

"Oh Mommy, you don't listen! She wrote 'I Love Arthur' on the blackboard. She spelled 'Arthur' wrong, and she crossed her t's crooked."

My head was reeling. "I hope you don't write things like that on the blackboard."

"Why should I?" said Molly. "I don't love Arthur. I love Mike. Day before yesterday I loved Kenneth."

"Who did you love yesterday?"

"Oh, I can't remember," said Molly. "I'm going out to play. 'Bye!"

"It says, in case of malfunction . . . Kick the panel twice!"

Sen. Gore on Foreign Profits:

Postage-Stamp Land Is U.S. Tax Haven

The biggest industry in the biggest town in Liechtenstein is postage stamp engraving and the population of the principality is only 15,000, but the little sovereignty sandwiched between Austria and Switzerland is the foreign headquarters for some of the largest American-owned corporation subsidiaries.

Sen. Albert Gore (D-Tenn.), who wants tax legislation now before Congress to require American-owned companies to pay U.S. taxes on their foreign profits, cites Liechtenstein as "among the more popular tax havens." Others, he told the Senate in a recent speech, include the Bahamas, Panama, Switzerland, Liberia, Bermuda, the Netherlands, Venezuela and Monaco. These are nations which have either a light tax or no tax at all on corporations whose earnings come from outside their country.

Gore told the Senate that tax haven abuses have resulted in both dollars and jobs being lost to the United States and in tax losses both for the United States and for many of the nations in which U.S. firms actually do business.

Among the case histories cited by Gore were these:

- An American electrical equipment company which sells its products to many foreign markets conducted its sales from the U.S. until 1957, paying full U.S. taxes on its profits. In that year it set up a Venezuela subsidiary which, at least on paper, handled foreign sales. In practice, the sales were made the same way as before and the subsidiary had only one employe in Venezuela. The U.S. firm sold its products to the Venezuela firm at a very small markup and the Venezuela subsidiary then resold the products at a high markup to the real customer, thus retaining the lion's share of the profits—untaxed in Venezuela.
- Two corporations were set up to make a motion picture, one in the United States and one in Liechtenstein. Both were controlled by the same stockholders. Most of the cost of production was charged to the U.S. firm, which handled the distribution of the picture in the United States and Canada. Thus its profits, subject to U.S. taxation, were proportionately lower than the untaxed profits of the Liechtenstein corporation which distributed the film everywhere else in the world.
- A U.S. drug manufacturer in 1956 formed a Swiss patent holding company. Patent and license agreements with foreign firms were negotiated in the name of this "dummy" Swiss subsidiary. As a result, Gore said, "this Swiss tax haven subsidiary now collects anywhere from $100,000 to $500,000 each year from foreign corporations."
- A domestic corporation sets up a foreign subsidiary in a tax haven country and finances it with a large interest-free loan. The parent company borrows the money for the loan and deducts the interest from its taxable U.S. earnings. When the loans are repaid, they do not result in additional taxes on the U.S. firm, as would have been the case if the subsidiary had been set up through stock subscriptions and the money returned in dividends.

Describing pending House tax legislation as "a step in the right direction" toward closing "foreign tax haven" loopholes, Gore expressed the hope that the Senate "will completely repeal" existing tax provisions that give "preferential treatment to foreign income."

Major Tax Revision Heads for Showdown Vote in House

income similar to the current withholding program on wages and salaries.

That vote showed 225 Democrats and not one Republican against the motion and 163 Republicans and 27 Democrats favoring it.

The House had previously defeated a Republican move to open the measure up to piecemeal amendment on the House floor after the measure had cleared the House Rules Committee under a closed rule. On this rollcall, too, not one Republican broke with House GOP Leader Charles A. Halleck (Ind.). This vote showed 224 Democrats against the effort to split up the bill, 164 Republicans and 20 Democrats in favor.

As the bill reached the House floor for debate, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller sent letters to all members urging them to vote for the measure and against efforts to recommit or to open the bill to amendments.

Kennedy told his weekly press conference that if the bill is killed "we will have lost a most valuable opportunity to find jobs for the college and high school graduates who will be seeking those jobs in June . . . We will lose our best hope of modernizing our machinery and our equipment . . . we will be abandoning our efforts to close those foreign tax havens that drain our jobs and dollars away from our shores and we will be permitting $630 million a year in taxes due from stockholders and bondholders to go uncollected."

He added: "I hope that every member of the House of Representatives who believes in spreading the tax burden fairly, who wants to improve our balance of payments position, who wants this country to grow with new equipment and new jobs will support this bill as the best means of achieving these goals today."

And in a thrust at the Republicans, the President said, "I find great difficulty in understanding the position of any political party which makes it a matter of party objective to defeat this bill at this most important time."

The measure would grant business firms a tax credit for investment in new equipment, would restrict tax deductible business expenses, provide for a 20 percent tax withholding on dividends and interest income, and stiffen tax treatment of overseas earnings by U.S. corporations.

As finally revised by the Ways & Means Committee the tax loss from the business credit is estimated to be balanced by additional revenue from other provisions in the measure.

The investment tax credit proposal, to which the AFL-CIO is opposed, would have allowed an 8 percent deduction by businesses investing in new equipment and machinery with the figure dropping to 4 percent for utilities. These were the bill's provisions when the committee reported the measure Mar. 12.

Indications of opposition from conservative forces to the revenue loss from the investment credit led the committee to scale down the allowable deductions to 7 and 3 percent with dollar limits on credits that could be claimed in a single year.

In his letter to House members, Biemiller said there "are many features of the bill which deserve strong support." He termed the dividend and interest withholding provision "a substantial step forward" and said the bill also "makes substantial progress toward closing the tax loophole on the income earned abroad. This is an essential step if we are to eliminate tax incentives which result directly in the export of American jobs."

The AFL-CIO, he added, is "unhappy with the investment credit proposal in the bill" but it is preferable to the "accelerated depreciation provision" which Republicans originally said they would include in their motion to recommit.

Business Investment Tax Credit Termed Expensive New 'Loophole'

The Kennedy Administration's proposed tax credit for business investment would be a "windfall" for America's largest corporations without accomplishing its purpose of stimulating greater industrial activity, asserts an article in the March issue of the American Federationist, the AFL-CIO's monthly magazine.

"Today, the kind of spur business needs most is the durable stimulus of rising family spendable income, which lower income taxes for the middle and lower brackets could now help provide," the article declares. It was prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research as its Economic Trend & Outlook feature.

The magazine applauds the President's program for making a start toward closing tax loopholes but points out that through the investment tax credit, which would allow businesses to deduct from their tax payment part of the cost of new plant and equipment, Congress would be substituting a new tax loophole in the place of old ones."

Moreover, the article notes, the House Ways & Means Committee has reshaped the tax credit proposal to lengthen the list of "free riders," including public utilities, and to provide the credit even to businesses not increasing their investment.

Meanwhile, however, the prospect of a heavy revenue loss had caused the Ways & Means Committee to revise the tax bill before House action. The committee revisions in the tax credit, however, affected only the amount, not the basic form.

The AFL-CIO economists find that corporation investment patterns in recent years show that business doesn't need the tax credit to get funds for investment, and what's more, probably will not increase its investment if the credit is passed.

It points out that from 1946 through 1961, U. S. corporations invested $374 billion in new plant and equipment, but that their internally generated funds available for investment—retained profits and depreciation set-asides—amounted to 96 percent of that amount.

As an example, it cites four big corporations—Westinghouse, General Electric, Ford and General Motors—which together accumulated more than $5.1 billion in investable funds from 1957 through 1960, but actually spent less than $3 billion on new plant and equipment.

Had the tax credit been on the books during this period, Economic Trends points out, "Ford and General Motors alone would have enjoyed over $100 million more in profits after taxes."

Opposition of business spokesmen to the tax credit idea stems not from any desire to reject "this lush multi-billion dollar bonanza out of hand," the article suggests, but from a preference to bargain with the government for further increases in depreciation allowances, "which they cherish even more."

Flaherty Named by IATSE Top Board

Boston—George J. Flaherty, Hollywood, Fla., representative of the Theatrical Stage Employes for eight years, has been elected an IATSE vice president by the union's executive board. He succeeds the late Carl G. Cooper.

Flaherty is president of Studio Projectionists Local 165 and a member of Stage Employes Local 33, Los Angeles.

ICFTU to Continue Algerian Backing

Brussels—The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions will continue to support the General Union of Algerian Workers as it helps to build a free, democratic nation, ICFTU Gen. Sec. Omer Becu said in welcoming the French-Algerian cease-fire agreement.

"The martyrs of the liberation struggle will never be forgotten by the free workers of the world," he said, "nor will the countless losses in human lives and the suffering and misery which this war has caused be forgotten by them."

Conclusion of the agreement, he said, was "a source of overwhelming joy and relief for the international free trade union movement."

6-Week Vacation Sought By West Canada Loggers

Vancouver, B. C.—The Woodworkers in contract negotiations covering 28,000 workers in British Columbia, are seeking a six-week vacation after five years.

The goal, Regional Pres. Joe Morris said, is to create more employment. He said the union's proposal, made to the 152 companies with which the union bargains, is a substitute for a shorter workweek.

Workers with less than five years' service, who presently have a two-week vacation, would receive five weeks off with pay under the IWA proposal. Those with longer service presently receive three weeks.

In addition to the extended vacations, the union also is asking a 25-cent hourly wage increase. The present basic wage for loggers is $1.92 an hour.

Labor, Church Seek Council In St. Louis

St. Louis—A first step toward broader cooperation between the churches and organized labor was taken here when 67 ministers, priests, rabbis and a representative of the Ethical Society were guests at a "get-acquainted" dinner sponsored by the St. Louis Labor Council.

The principal speaker was Rev. Charles C. Webber, AFL-CIO representative for religious relations, who later spoke at a council meeting and on both occasions suggested formation of a local Religion & Labor Council.

Council Sec.-Treas. Oscar A. Ehrhardt said the purpose of the dinner meeting was to help create a better understanding and eventual liaison between religion and labor in areas of mutual interest. Every major issue, he indicated, is basically a moral and theological issue.

Webber said that if the U.S. applied the same imagination to solving social and economic problems as it has to scientific problems, "we could raise the standards of living of all our people and promote justice and good will." He urged union members to become active members of their churches and to let their pastors know they are trade unionists.

Council Pres. Joseph P. Clark presided. Pres. John I. Rollings of the State AFL-CIO expressed the hope that permanent contacts might result from the dinner. Several clergymen also spoke.

At the council meeting, Webber emphasized labor's four-point program for progress—organization of the unorganized, political action, information and educational programs, and dynamic community service programs.

Metropolitan Agents Vote To Keep Union

Philadelphia — Pennsylvania agents of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. retained the Insurance Workers as their bargaining agent by a 5-2 vote in the face of a company challenge to the union's status.

With about 2,050 agents in the state, more than 2,000 voted, with the count as tallied in the National Labor Relations Board regional office here showing 1,403 for the union, 575 opposed, 22 challenged and 3 voided.

The company attack was the second beaten back by the union which has represented Metropolitan's Pennsylvania agents for 17 years. In 1954 the company questioned the union's majority, but the IWIU won an NLRB election by a small margin.

Representatives of the Pennsylvania agents have now joined union negotiators for New York, New Jersey and Missouri agents at joint bargaining sessions in New York City. The four IWIU units have separate but identical contracts.

Coughlin Named by Arbitration Group

New York — Pres. Howard Coughlin of the Office Employes is one of 10 new members elected to the board of directors of the American Arbitration Association at its annual meeting.

Among the others chosen are Pres. James M. Nabrit, Jr., of Howard University, Washington, and Vice Chancellor Thomas H. Elliott of Washington University, St. Louis.

LABOR'S SUPPORT of equal-pay-for women bill was emphasized in House Labor subcommittee testimony by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, shown here with Rep. Herbert Zelenko (D-N.Y.), subcommittee chairman and a sponsor of the Administration bill.

More Concern for City Urged on Farm Groups

An AFL-CIO spokesman has warned leaders of farm groups that organized labor's support for their legislative programs is not a one-way street and could be endangered by a lack of concern among rural legislators for the problems of city dwellers.

Frank Fernbach, an economist for the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, recalled in a radio interview that labor has supported progressive farm legislation—such as price supports, conservation measures, crop insurance and rural cooperatives—"for as long as I can remember."

"Our record is outstanding in these terms," he declared. "I think it will continue."

He added, however, that labor would be happier if "there was a little more reciprocity on the part of the rural legislators in an effort to understand the problems of city people."

"I would be less than honest," he continued, "if I did not say the almost universal rural opposition to the creation of a Dept. of Urban Affairs is harmful to what should be mutual interest in each other's problems."

A member of Agriculture Sec. Orville L. Freeman's Advisory Committee on Rural Area Development, Fernbach was interviewed by Charles Bailey, Washington correspondent for the Minneapolis Star-Tribune, and Bernard Brenner, radio farm editor for United Press Intl., on Labor News Conference, AFL-CIO public service program broadcast by the Mutual network.

Farm Bill Backed

The AFL-CIO economist said labor generally would support the "broad outlines" of the Kennedy Administration's farm bill, now before Congress. The three basic objectives of the measure, he said, are to balance agricultural production with consumer needs, at home and abroad; to make effective use of millions of acres of unneeded crop land by opening them up, for example, to recreational facilities; and to "attack the extreme rural poverty which exists."

As citizens, Fernbach observed, trade unionists have a big stake in farm prosperity to assure ample production of food and fiber not only for American consumption but as "weapons in the battle against totalitarian systems."

He saw no conflict of interest between labor's support of programs to raise the living standards and conditions of farm workers and the possibility that those programs would lead to higher prices for trade unionists as consumers.

"There are millions of people who work on our food before it reaches our tables—farm proprietors, hired farm workers, distributors, processors and sellers," Fernbach pointed out. "This entire group has, until recently, been at the lower end of the totem pole in terms of American incomes. We seek a fair share in the American standard of living for them.

"I don't think we should ask for cut-rate prices at the grocery store based upon sweatshop wage incomes of those who produce and work hard."

He added, however, that it should be possible through "the tremendous increase in agricultural efficiency" to provide a decent return for farm families and at the same time keep prices reasonably in balance.

On the other hand, he noted, the rapid strides in farm productivity, which have cut the number of farms in the United States from 5.5 million in 1950 to about 3.5 million today, have also contributed to one of the major problems confronting rural America: how to provide livelihoods for those who choose to remain in rural areas despite diminishing job opportunities and for the millions of farm youths looking increasingly for their futures to the cities where unemployment already is high.

One approach, Fernbach said, is the establishment of new industries in rural areas to exploit native natural resources, a goal of the Area Redevelopment Act.

The solution, Fernbach suggested, can be found only by mounting an overall program "for effective economic and job expansion here in the United States."

Upholsterers Win 11 Cents in 10 Plants

Philadelphia—The Upholsterers and the Kroehler Mfg. Co. have agreed to wage increases totaling 11 cents per hour in three steps for all covered workers at plants in 10 cities—Naperville and Kankakee, Ill.; Binghamton, N. Y.; Dallas, Tex.; Inglewood and Fremont, Calif.; Shreveport, La.; Cleveland and Xenia, O., and Charlotte, N. C.

Negotiations under a wage reopening clause brought this agreed settlement: 5 cents an hour retroactive to Jan. 2, 1962; an additional 3 cents next Oct. 1, and another 3 cents Apr. 1, 1963, UIU Pres. Sal B. Hoffmann said.

Schnitzler Hits 'Double Standard':

Ban on Lower Pay For Women Backed

Federal legislation is needed to end the "double standard" of pay for men and women doing the same work, the AFL-CIO has declared in testimony before a House Labor subcommittee.

Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler said the federation's support of equal pay for women legislation is based both on "individual justice" and on "concern for the maintenance of wage standards for men and women alike."

Endorsing an Administration bill introduced by Rep. Herbert Zelenko (D-N. Y.), the subcommittee chairman, and Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.), Schnitzler cited an AFL-CIO research study which showed that the difference in earnings between men and women is lowest in states which have equal pay laws.

Management and government surveys, he noted, show widespread differences in pay scales in both business and industry, with one-third of 1,900 companies queried by the National Office Management Association in 1961 reporting a "double standard pay scale" for men and women office workers.

Labor's support of equal pay legislation was emphasized also in testimony by James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. and presilent of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; Pres. George M. Harrison of the Railway Clerks, and representatives of the Hotel & Restaurant Employes, the Retail Clerks, Textile Workers Union of America, and the Meat Cutters.

The subcommittee also heard:

- Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, who termed discriminatory pay rates "indefensible" and a violation of America's "basic tradition of freedom and fair play." He said an equal pay law would protect "enlightened" employers from unfair competition and would "diminish the possibilities of using women to force wages down and of taking advantage of the sharp competition for jobs in times of substantial unemployment."
- Assistant Sec. of Labor Esther Peterson, who said the United States has lagged behind many other nations in outlawing wage discrimination based on sex. She cited inclusion of an equal pay provision in the 1957 treaty which set up the European Economic Community.

Mrs. Peterson submitted to the committee examples of discriminatory sex differentials set by employers ranging as high as $20 a week.

The Administration bill would prohibit employers in interstate commerce from "paying to any employe wages lower than those which they pay to any employe of the opposite sex" for comparable work requiring comparable skill.

Schnitzler said the President's Commission on the Status of Women, of which he is a member, is conducting a broad study which is expected to turn up a number of areas of discrimination where legislation may be needed. He emphasized, however, that "on this particular issue—the payment of the rate for the job, without regard to the sex of the workers—the equities are so obvious that no further delay is warranted."

Passage of the Administration bill, he said, "will stand as a measure of our good faith in seeking to bring about further advancements in behalf of women."

Schnitzler noted that labor over the years has carried on "a long and difficult struggle" to eliminate discriminatory wage rates. He emphasized that "even if every union had airtight equal pay contracts for their women workers, this would not begin to meet the problem for the great majority of women workers who are not members of unions."

Schnitzler pointed out that only 22 states have equal pay laws and maintained federal legislation is needed "to eliminate competition on unfair labor standards."

Swedish Women To Get Equal Pay

Stockholm—Swedish unions have negotiated a nationwide agreement with employers in the engineering and foundry industries eliminating, by 1965, all wage differentials based on sex.

The contract will result in a 20 percent wage raise for nearly 25,000 women workers. An agreement in principle on equal wages for women was reached in 1960 between the Confederation of Swedish Trade Unions and the Swedish Employers' Conference.

Library of Congress Gets Historic Labor 'Voices'

A collection of historic tape recordings by labor leaders, dating back to World War I, has been presented to the Library of Congress by the AFL-CIO.

They include a 1918 speech on Liberty Bonds by the late Samuel Gompers, founding president of the former AFL; a speech by the late AFL Pres. William Green at the federation's 1952 convention; one by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany during the New York State AFL convention in 1944; the 1949 Labor Day speech of the late Pres. Philip Murray of the former CIO, and a 1952 campaign speech for Adlai Stevenson; a talk by the late CIO Executive Vice Pres. Allan S. Haywood in Berlin in 1952, and a 1955 CIO convention speech by AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther, then president of the former CIO.

Also in the collection are the radio broadcasts made by Edward P. Morgan at the time of the Andrea Doria disaster in 1957, both before and after he learned his daughter, Linda, a Doria passenger, had been saved by a freak of the sea washing her aboard another vessel. Morgan's commentary on the ABC network is sponsored by the AFL-CIO.

Convention tapes made for use on the ABC network also were presented. Harry W. Flannery, AFL-CIO radio coordinator, has arranged with Robert H. Land, chief of the library's general reference and bibliography division, to supply the library with tapes of historical importance.

In Federal Elections:

Constitutional Poll Tax Ban Clears Senate by 77-16 Vote

Congress made its first move of the session in the civil rights field as the Senate approved a constitutional amendment to ban states from a poll tax requirement for voting in federal elections. The measure, which drew support from moderate southerners and provoked only a token filibuster from opponents, won on a 77-16 rollcall.

The Senate action was regarded as a preliminary skirmish for the all-out battle anticipated later in the session over the Administration's principal proposal—a bill prohibiting states from imposing discriminatory literacy tests as a qualification for voting.

The AFL-CIO unsuccessfully urged the Senate to substitute a simple statute abolishing the poll tax in place of the more cumbersome constitutional amendment. Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller wired Senate leaders that the AFL-CIO saw "no legal necessity" for constitutional amendment and feared the procedure might "create a dangerous precedent" for future civil rights action.

A bipartisan substitute for the amendment, sponsored by Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.) and Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.), was beaten on a motion to table, 59 to 34.

Sen. Spessard L. Holland (D-Fla.), principle sponsor of the constitutional amendment, revised his proposal to meet liberal objections by dropping a clause stating that the amendment would not invalidate state laws denying the right to vote "to paupers or persons supported at public expense or by charitable institutions."

The poll tax amendment, which must receive two-thirds approval by the House and then be ratified by three-fourths of the states, applied to primary as well as general elections.

Effort Failed in 1960

The Senate passed a similar poll tax amendment in 1960, which died when the House failed to act. On the other hand, the House has five times passed simple statutes outlawing the pool tax but they failed to get through the Senate. Five states presently impose poll taxes—Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Texas and Virginia.

In recent testimony before a House Judiciary subcommittee, Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy endorsed the constitutional amendment proposal but expressed the opinion that a simple statute would be constitutional.

In other congressional developments:

- The House Education & Labor Committee approved the Administration's Youth Opportunities bill, a major labor-backed measure combining establishment of a Youth Conservation Corps, similar to the CCC of the New Deal era, with a public service employment program aimed at providing useful work experience for jobless city youngsters.

Sponsored by Rep. Carl Perkins (D-Ky.), the bill must still pass the House Rules Committee hurdle. It is aimed at helping the nation's million unemployed, out-of-school youngsters between 16 and 21.

- The House passed a $5.17 billion appropriation bill covering funds for the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare, Labor Dept., and related agencies. Following the lead of its Appropriations Committee, it added $60 million more than the Administration had asked for medical research programs and $12.3 million above the budget request for hospital construction. Cuts were made in other areas, some of which the committee said might later lead to supplemental appropriations.

- The Senate took up a bill to authorize the President to purchase outright $25 million of United Nations bonds and to match purchases by other nations of an additional $75 million.

The labor-backed measure faces a sharp challenge in the form of a substitute proposed by Republican Senators George D. Aiken (Vt.) and Bourke B. Hickenlooper (Ia.) which would authorize a $100 million, three-year loan in place of the 25-year bond purchase.

As the Senate completed action on the poll tax measure, a Judiciary subcommittee began hearings on the literacy test bill.

Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss.) who strongly opposes the measure, heads the Judiciary Committee but Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) has served notice that he will bypass the committee to bring the measure up if it is not reported out within a reasonable time.

THE 500,000TH federally-aided public housing unit in the U.S. is occupied by Stanley Rycyk, retired member of Cafeteria Employes Local 302 of New York, and Mrs. Rycyk, who are shown preparing to move in. Their new home is in William McKinley Houses, in the Bronx.

House Group Approves Davis-Bacon 'Fringes'

A bill to amend the Davis-Bacon Act to include fringe benefits in calculating prevailing wage rates for government-financed construction has won 22-7 approval from the House Education & Labor Committee.

The Administration measure is strongly backed by the AFL-CIO as a safeguard to union building trades standards and as a protection to fair employers from being underbid by contractors whose labor costs do not include contributions to employe welfare plans.

Also approved by the committee, which acted by voice vote with only one dissent, was a companion measure requiring payment of overtime rate on construction jobs after 40 hours a week. The present law, dating back 70 years, requires premium pay after 8 hours a day, but sets no limit on the workweek. The result has been to allow contractors to work employes six or seven days a week without overtime.

The Davis-Bacon amendment was approved after the committee defeated, on a party line 17-10 vote, a Republican proposal to permit contractors to appeal to the courts a Labor Dept. determination of prevailing wages and fringe benefits.

Rep. Charles E. Goodell (R-N.Y.) served notice he will seek to add his business-backed proposal to the bill on the House floor.

The measure, which still must run the gantlet of the Rules Committee, would require contractors to match the fringe benefits prevailing in the area where the construction takes place. The contractor could either make payments to a welfare fund or pay the cash equivalent to the worker.

In earlier testimony AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller emphasized that since the passage of the Davis-Bacon Act in 1931, there has been a "dramatic growth" in fringe benefits such as health, welfare, pension and insurance plans. Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. estimated, in his testimony, that 10 percent of the "real wages" of construction workers is now in the form of fringe benefits.

During the hearings, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce called for "judicial review" of Labor Dept. prevailing wage determinations and Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg retorted that such a system would be "unworkable."

On the 22-7 committee vote approving the bill, five Republicans joined with 17 Democrats in the majority, with seven Republicans opposed and two Democrats not voting.

NMU to Elect 67 Officers in Referendum

New York—Members of the National Maritime Union will pick their national officers in a referendum election to be held from Apr. 2 through May 31.

The independent Honest Ballot Association is in full charge of the election. Members will mark ballots in the union's 30 port headquarters on all coasts, the Great Lakes and major rivers, and will mail them to the Amalgamated Bank in New York City, where they will be kept in a sealed vault until the voting period ends and they are delivered to the association for tallying.

Joseph N. Curran, president since NMU was founded in 1937 and an AFL-CIO vice president, is unopposed for re-election to his 12th term. Vice Pres. David N. Ramos has no opposition for secretary-treasurer. Running for the three vice presidencies are two incumbents, Shannon J. Wall and Rick Miller, and National Rep. Mel Barisic.

A total of 130 candidates is competing for 67 national and port offices. The winners will serve four-year terms under amendments to the constitution adopted at the last convention, in contrast to two years in the past.

1961 Convention Texts Now Available

A 200-page volume containing the text of all major policy resolutions adopted by the fourth AFL-CIO convention in December 1961 at Miami Beach, Fla., is now available from the federation.

The book, "Policy Resolutions," No. 3-C, contains over 90 resolutions adopted by the convention. Its table of contents lists the policy statements by category.

Also available is the 1,200-page two-volume complete proceedings of the convention.

Copies of both publications can be obtained from the Pamphlet Division, AFL-CIO Dept. of Publications, 815 Sixteenth St., N.W., Washington 6, D. C. "Policy Resolutions" costs 85 cents per copy or 100 copies for $75. The proceedings are available at $2.75 per volume, $5.50 for the two-volume set.

Labor Backing Pledged In Railroad Job Fight

Rail workers can count on the backing of "all of American labor" in their fight against "arbitrary" proposals for "wiping out the jobs of thousands and thousands of workers," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has declared.

Terming railroad management's handling of the industry's problems "a disgrace," Meany said solutions must be found on the basis of "justice and decency" and not through "a new club to beat down the workers."

The AFL-CIO president spoke at a dinner honoring the winner of the Locomotive Firemen's annual safety award, Richard J. Hansel, who leaped from his locomotive cab to outrace a 54-car freight train and snatch a four-year-old youngster from the tracks with only seconds to spare.

Hansel's job would be one of those abolished under the recommendations of a Presidential Railroad Commission supporting management demands to eliminate firemen-helpers on freight trains, Meany noted.

Turning to Johnny Keane, seated at the head table with his mother at the dinner honoring the man who saved his life, Meany said he was certain that "little Johnny and his family believe in having a fireman in the cab of a locomotive."

The four-year-old boy and Mrs. Keane joined vigorously in the applause.

Strong Economic Base Essential

Meany linked the job-slashing attempts of the railroads with the nation's serious employment problem, warning that a strong economic base is essential to America's security.

"Unemployment feeds on unemployment," Meany declared, noting that the nation's economy must provide 1.35 million new jobs a year just to keep up with the increase in the work force "in addition to providing jobs for those displaced by automation, technological changes and the type of thinking that goes into reports of presidential commissions."

He noted that while railroad employment has declined drastically, there has been no cutback in rail management ranks.

"Technological unemployment doesn't reach up to the executive level," he said caustically.

Meany prescribed "an injection of good old American enterprise" into the ranks of rail management, "a real effort to meet the loss of business" through methods other than "placing the burden on the workers."

Hansel, present with his wife for the presentation of the D. B. Robertson trophy and a $500 check, told the gathering of union, government and congressional leaders that he is the third generation of his family to work on the railroads. His grandfather, he noted, had worked on woodburners, his father on steam locomotives and he on diesels.

PRR President in Snub

BLFE Pres. H. E. Gilbert, praising Hansel as typifying the members' "dedication to safety," noted that this was the first of the four annual award presentations which was not attended by a representative of management. Pennsylvania Railroad Pres. A. J. Greenough, whose company operates the Reading Seashore Line on which Hansel works, did not reply to the union's invitation.

Present, however, was Interstate Commerce Commission Chairman Rupert L. Murphy, one of the five-member committee which selected Hansel from among the union's 12 monthly safety award winners. The other judges were Howard Pyle, president of the National Safety Council; Louis B. Seltzer, editor of the Cleveland Press; Canadian Labor Congress Pres. Claude Jodoin, and Gilbert.

Gov. Richard J. Hughes (D) of Hansel's home state of New Jersey sent a telegram of congratulations.

The award to Hansel wasn't the only presentation. Gilbert called up little Johnny Keane, set a junior-sized railroad cap on his head, and gave the delighted youngster a toy train set with the suggestion that he play with it at home and not on the railroad tracks.

IAM Turns Back Teamsters' Raid

St. Joseph, Mich.—The Machinists beat off a raid by the unaffiliated Teamsters in a National Labor Relations Board election at seven Whirlpool Corp. plants here and in Benton Harbor, Mich., by a vote of 823 to 324.

Teamster Pres. James R. Hoffa and a substantial group of organizers participated in the drive to take over the IAM local, with Hoffa personally making a speech to workers.

High Court Raps 'Rural Gerrymander'

Federal Suits Upheld To Gain Redistricting

By Willard Shelton

The Supreme Court in a landmark decision has opened the federal district courts for citizens to challenge the "rural gerrymander" by which state legislatures have maintained rural domination of the nation's political affairs since the turn of the century.

In a 6-to-2 decision the court reversed a three-judge lower court in Tennessee that had turned down a group of city voters charging that federal constitutional rights were violated by refusal of the state legislature to revise 60-year-old assembly districts denying equal representation to the cities.

Departing from a long line of precedents, the high court said in an opinion by Justice William J. Brennan, Jr., that federal courts have both jurisdiction and power of remedy in cases where voters charge a violation of the 14th Amendment guaranteeing equal protection of the laws.

The decision sent the case back to the Tennessee district court for trial, with an assertion that if the city voters made their case against the Tennessee voting districts, "we have no doubt" that the district court "will be able to fashion relief."

Rejects 'Political' Rule

The majority decision bluntly rejected the previously prevailing doctrine that for the courts to intervene in apportionment cases was to enter a "political thicket" despite a dissent by Justices Felix Frankfurter and John M. Harlan reiterating that fear.

Brennan's opinion stated flatly that the court would not refuse to intervene simply because some state act was termed "political," when the basic question was really constitutional rights.

The reverberations were instant and widespread as city voters underrepresented in legislatures pressed for trial of delayed cases and citizens elsewhere began framing judicial attacks on legislative apportionments.

The long-term effect was considered certain to reduce the power of sparsely-settled rural areas—clinging to power through refusal of their state legislators to vote themselves out of office—and elevate the influence of more populous city and suburban areas.

The AFL-CIO convention in Miami Beach, Fla., last December expressed a solid conviction that the "excesses of state legislatures" in depriving populous urban areas of fair representation in Congress and the states was a "violation of the constitution" from which the people "have the right to expect relief from the federal courts."

Brennan's decision did not state the form of relief federal district courts might frame in citizens' suits. Neither did it say that some forms of disproportionate representation might not be upheld judicially.

The import was nevertheless clear—city voters lacking any political power to force state legislatures to revise voting districts equitably have been given a green light for federal court attacks on districts framed in a manner that is "arbitrary and capricious," in Brennan's phrase.

Distortion has Increased

A factor in the court's decision may have been the practical reality that rural-dominated state legislatures have increasingly refused to change voting districts to take account of shifting and growing population concentrations.

A University of Virginia study showed last year that in the previous half century, over-representation of sparsely populated rural districts had jumped about two-thirds while under-representation of major populous counties became more flagrant.

1946 Precedent Seen

In a famous 1946 Illinois congressional apportionment decision, Brennan said, the court majority clearly stated a right to intervene but declined to do so because one of them thought the interference untimely.

The apparent effect of the court's decision in the Tennessee case was nevertheless to eliminate the significance of the 1946 Illinois ruling and establish a newly spelled-out rule of law—that the federal judiciary must hear apportionment cases.

Brennan was joined in the decision by Chief Justice Earl Warren and Justices Hugo L. Black, William O. Douglas, Tom C. Clark, and Potter Stewart. Justice Charles E. Whittaker, who is ill, did not participate in the decision.

Meany Backs Kennedy Program For Public Works Projects Now

layed until another recession threatens the whole economy."

Top Administration officials, including Chairman Walter W. Heller of the President's Council of Economic Advisers and Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, strongly backed the President's proposal in testimony before the House committee. Previously the Administration had withheld endorsement of labor-backed proposals for immediate large-scale public works projects.

A letter from Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.), who with Rep. John A. Blatnik (D-Minn.) sponsored the Administration's earlier public works bill, urged Kennedy to expand the program to provide immediate action.

Meany Sees 225,000 Jobs

Meany told the House committee, headed by Rep. Charles A. Buckley (D-N. Y.), that a $600 million public works program would increase employment by approximately 225,000 jobs in the next 12 months.

"In our view it is essential if recovery is to mean jobs as well as profits." he declared.

Pointing out that "each recent recession has left a larger number of workers stranded, and this one is the worst of all," Meany added:

"If the present upturn is left on its own to run its course, the increase in sales and production will probably slow down in the spring or summer. . . . Much of the steam will go out of the upturn while millions of workers remain jobless and many plants and machines remain idle."

He said the AFL-CIO favored giving priority in public works projects to areas "in which unemployment is greater than the national average," a modification of the Administration proposal which would limit eligibility to the 852 communities now designated as eligible for redevelopment aid and an additional 106 localities which had "substantial unemployment" during the past year.

Meany said the $600 million appropriation should include $200 million for federal public works programs, $300 million in matching grants for state and local governments, and $100 million for loans to state and local governments to help them match their grants.

The "basic issue," Meany declared is "human lives" rather than "mere statistics."

Discouragement Cited

He pointed out that in addition to 4.5 million totally jobless workers and their families, there are 2 million persons "who can find only part-time work" and a million more not counted in the labor market because they have become "so discouraged that they do not even try."

The AFL-CIO president said the public works projects would be a needed supplement to the area redevelopment program and would help the manpower retraining program because "retraining can be successful only when there are jobs for the trainees."

Endorsing, with some modifications, the proposed $2 billion standby program to choke off a new recession, Meany said it could create 625,000 jobs — "a powerful weapon against an economy stalled on dead center or against a looming recession."

He emphasized that the proposed public works projects would not be "leaf-raking" but would "add to the nation's wealth."

The stand-by program would authorize the President to spend the proposed funds without specific appropriations.

Food Price Increases Boost CPI to New High

Labor Dept. said net spendable earnings of factory workers rose slightly between January and February because of a three-tenths of an hour rise in weekly hours worked. Real earnings, however, showed no change, the report said, because of the increase in consumer prices.

A factory worker with three dependents, after tax deductions, had weekly earnings of $84.41 in February, a 26-cent increase from the previous month.

Net spendable earnings over the 12-month period rose 6 percent, or about $4.50, an increase termed "characteristic of a recovery period" by the Labor Dept. Almost all of the increase in earnings over the year represented additional buying power, the department said.

Although the contra-seasonal rise in food prices was the most important factor in sending the price index to a new high, increases were registered also for housing apparel, medical care and reading and recreation.

The higher index resulted in pay increases of 1 cent an hour for 77,000 workers in aircraft and missile firms.

Robert J. Meyers, BLS deputy commissioner, told reporters there was no indication that the rise was the start of a new long-term increase in price levels, but indicated the March figure may show another jump because of seasonal factors.

In the food area, prices of fresh vegetables increased by more than 4 percent and fresh fruit about 3 percent. Meats, poultry and fish prices were up eight-tenths of 1 percent. Cold weather and rain were held to be the cause of the fruit and vegetable rise, with weather affecting winter crops in Florida, California and Texas.

ICFTU Names Brown As UN Representative

Irving Brown, AFL-CIO overseas representative, has been appointed the representative of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions to the United Nations.

Omer Becu, general secretary of the ICFTU, announced Brown's appointment, declaring that it marks "an increasingly active worldwide campaign" to implement the principles of the UN charter.

Brown will take over his new post on Apr. 2 and maintain headquarters at the ICFTU office in New York.

Becu said that to assist the new ICFTU representative, trade unionists from Asia, Africa and Latin America would be appointed and assigned to further ICFTU relationships at the UN.

The ICFTU is a UN-recognized non-governmental organization which has the right to appear at sessions of UN bodies such as the Economic & Social Council to present the free trade union viewpoint.

Brown represented the former AFL in international labor activities starting in 1945. With the AFL-CIO merger he continued as labor representative on the ICFTU executive board and as a spokesman at labor conventions in different parts of the world.

In accepting the appointment Brown said the ICFTU, working at the UN, would endeavor to achieve a program supporting the independence and freedom of all peoples, the guarantee of human rights and civil liberties everywhere and universal application of the right of freedom of association.

"With these goals in mind," said Brown, "we hope that the free trade unions of the world will thus contribute to the continuing struggle against colonialism, totalitarianism and all forms of economic and social exploitation."

Job Security Gains Won In Basic Steel Agreement

THE CALL TO ORDER for the meeting of the Steelworkers executive board at which the new basic steel contract was approved was about to be sounded when this photo was taken in Pittsburgh. From left to right are Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel, Pres. David J. McDonald, Vice Pres. Howard Hague, David E. Feller and Elliott Bredhoff, union counsel, and Marvin Miller, assistant to McDonald.

Union Gets Pact Keyed To Goals

By Gervase N. Love

Pittsburgh—A precedent-setting agreement aimed at creating job opportunities and strengthening job security in the steel industry has been initialed by the Steelworkers and representatives of 11 basic producers.

The settlement, reached three months before the present contract expires on June 30, attained the goal set by the union's Wage Policy Committee when it outlined bargaining objectives at a meeting in February—"a program designed to achieve measures of employment and income security."

It provides for a savings-vacation plan carrying new vacation and retirement benefits which union and industry believe will create new jobs; improvements in the supplemental unemployment benefit plan, regular vacations, pension eligibility and benefits, and seniority; establishment of a joint committee to improve job classification manuals, and continuation of the Human Relations Committee established in the 1959 contract with a study of employment security as an immediate assignment.

The new pact has a term of two years and is estimated to have a value of 10 to 12 cents an hour during the first year. It provides for no wage increase, but may be opened for discussion of wage rates, insurance, pensions and the work of the Human Relations Committee on 90 days' notice after May 1, 1963.

With the basic settlement as their major tool and the warm congratulations of Pres. Kennedy—telephoned to the Wage Policy Committee meeting here at which the agreement was ratified—still fresh, union negotiators immediately plunged into individual negotiations with the basic producers

Wiretaps Seen Peril To Liberty

A wiretapping bill proposed by Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy is "much too broad" and "falls far short" of providing adequate safeguards against abuse, the AFL-CIO has declared.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller told the Senate Judiciary Committee that labor's position is that wiretapping should be authorized only in cases involving espionage, treason or kidnapping—and then only with the approval of a federal court.

Declaring that "individual freedom" should be ranked above "facilitating police work," Biemiller strongly opposed a provision of the bill which would authorize state and local police to obtain state court orders permitting wiretapping in investigations of various crimes.

The Justice Dept. bill, introduced by Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark.), is aimed in part at resolving the contradiction between Supreme Court rulings which have held that wiretapping by anyone under any circumstances is a federal crime and that evidence obtained by wiretapping is inadmissible in federal courts, and state laws permitting police wiretapping and the introduction of wiretap evidence in state courts.

Despite the Supreme Court rulings, based on a provision of the Federal Communications Act, the Justice Dept. has readily confirmed that the FBI uses wiretaps in security cases.

Biemiller emphasized that the AFL-CIO accepts "safeguarding of our national security" as "an overriding consideration." But he said offenses against national security should be specifically spelled out.

No Threat Seen

Pointing out that the language of the bill would permit wiretapping in cases involving an "attempt to cause insubordination" in the military forces, Biemiller declared:

"We do not regard the agitation, however ill-advised, currently being carried on by some reservists who have been called into active duty, as a threat to national security, nor do we think that wiretapping should be legalized with respect to offenses of that sort."

Strongly opposing provisions of the bill which would allow state and local police officers to obtain court permission for wiretapping, Biemiller said the number of police participating in the actual tapping of wires in a single state "could run into the tens of thousands."

He said the "public interest" in law enforcement must be weighed against "the right of the citizen to be free from excessive government surveillance." The "doubts," Biemiller emphasized, "should be resolved in favor of protection of the right of privacy."

The AFL-CIO spokesman said any wiretapping bill also should

Famine Faces Soviet Bloc:

Meany Urges U.S. To Feed Starving

The harsh facts of "starvation" in Red China and of serious food shortages in other Iron Curtain countries should be met by the free world in a "practical humanitarian way," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has declared.

Pointing to the success of the American Relief Administration in the early Twenties in saving "millions of lives" in revolution-torn Russia, Meany said that the ARA's "principles and experience" furnished a "guiding line" for helping millions more today without at the same time building up Communist governments that are "the mortal enemies of democracy."

The ARA under Herbert Hoover, he wrote in a signed editorial in the AFL-CIO American Federationist, "gave millions of dollars of food and medicines free to the suffering people, regardless of their politics," and did it by direct action and without passing the relief through the hands of the Soviet government.

That plan "won the approval of Lenin" in 1921, he pointed out, and the relief operation was so effective that the Soviet People's Commissars later declared: "The people of the Soviet Union will never forget the generous help of the American people."

We cannot and should not "engage in any commercial transactions" to send food to the millions today literally "menaced with starvation" in Communist countries, Meany said. He went on:

Imported Goods Resold

"Selling grain or goods to the dictators whose policies have brought misery and hunger will not help the people who are suffering.

"The menace of famine and the terrible shortage of goods will not stop these dictators from putting such imported supplies into reserve for their military forces geared to oppression at home and aggression abroad.

"The Chinese, Cuban and Soviet

AFL-CIO Aid Offered Needy In Birmingham

The AFL-CIO has offered its help to any legitimate move to set up a surplus food program for the needy in Birmingham, Ala.

The offer was made by Leo A. Perlis, national director of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities, after Birmingham municipal authorities voted to withdraw from the program because of a Negro boycott of downtown stores.

"The AFL-CIO Community Service Activities will assist any legitimate voluntary agency that will undertake the distribution of surplus foods to the needy of Birmingham on the basis of need, regardless of the cause of the need, should the municipality refuse to assume its responsibility," Perlis said.

"It is inconceivable that in this day and in this country food—and public food at that—should be used as a weapon to help destroy the inalienable rights of citizens to equal opportunity.

"The fact that the brunt of this will fall on little children makes it even more reprehensible."

The three-man Birmingham City Commission voted unanimously to withdraw from the county surplus food program for the poor on motion of Commissioner Eugene Connor. Most of the beneficiaries have been Negroes.

The boycott of downtown merchants began about Mar. 23 after demands were served on central city stores for desegregated rest rooms, drinking fountains and employment practices.

Labor Pushes Fight on Investment Tax Credit

By David L. Perlman

Citing major defects in the House-passed tax bill, the AFL-CIO has asked the Senate to pass a "vastly improved" measure and to scrap an investment credit provision which would give a "multi-billion dollar windfall" to America's "largest and richest" corporations.

AFL-CIO Research Dir. Stanley H. Ruttenberg told the Senate Finance Committee that the House bill had a number of "praiseworthy features," including a withholding tax on dividends and interest. But he said labor had supported it "with considerable reservation" because the measure did not go far enough in closing tax loopholes and contained provisions "not in the public interest."

As the Senate committee opened five weeks of hearings on the complex revenue measure, Treasury Sec. Douglas Dillon was vir-

Hardest-Hit Jobless Areas Up in March

The number of major labor market areas with substantial unemployment edged upward again in March and remained nearly double the pre-recession total, a Labor Dept. report has disclosed.

Major areas with a jobless rate of 6 percent or more totaled 63 in March, up from February's 62. There were 33 such areas in March 1960, before the slide into recession.

The survey of the nation's 150 major areas showed improvements in about two-thirds of the areas,

STRIKINGLY MODERN NEW HALL of Auto Workers Local 863 in Evendale, a suburb of Cincinnati, was dedicated recently by UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther. He called the $250,000 building, which will house the local's administrative offices, "a symbol of what men can do working together."

Big Cincinnati Local Dedicates New Hall

Cincinnati—This area's largest AFL-CIO affiliate, Local 863 of the Auto Workers, has dedicated its new modern $250,000 hall in suburban Evendale.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther, in a dedicatory speech, called the structure "a symbol of what men can do by working together."

It provides administrative offices for the 5,000-member local, and also is being used for quarterly general membership meetings, social functions and individual monthly meetings of the five component subgroups—four at Ford Motor Co. plants and the other at the Cincinnati Forging Co.

The local has a long history of activity in Evendale community affairs and in the political life of Hamilton County. The hall, already a local showplace, is expected to become a focal point of continued cooperation between civic and labor officials.

Local 863 Pres. William E. Hoffman presided at the dedication ceremonies.

Reuther reminded younger members in his address that "a union is not something apart from its members, but a set of tools they can use to build with."

He reviewed the UAW's history of accomplishment for its members and recalled that at all times the union has not been "dedicated only to economic gains, but to developing a sense of dignity, of belonging, of helping workers shape their own destiny in a free society."

Labor Fights on Broad Fronts

"We can't find the answers to peace, to unemployment and for education at the bargaining table," he declared. "Labor must fight on broad fronts to put a foundation under the peace and freedom of the world."

Reuther was roundly applauded when he pledged that organized labor will continue to fight "until we get" a program of medical care for the aged as part of the social security system.

He pointed out, however, that 37 million voters did not go to the polls in 1960. In order to get labor-backed programs past congressional roadblocks, labor must be active "on the citizenship as well as the collective bargaining front," he said.

Strike Gains Contract For Chicago Cab Local

Chicago—Terms of a new contract that ended Chicago's first cab strike in 25 years less than 24 hours after it started were approved at a membership meeting of the new Local 777, Democratic Union Organizing Committee, an affiliate of the Seafarers.

The speedy settlement, reached when Mayor Richard J. Daley called both parties to his City Hall office and kept them there until they came up with an agreement, made it impossible for the unaffiliated Teamsters to carry out a threat to break the strike. Local 777 broke away last year from Teamsters Local 777, headed by Joey Glimco.

The agreement was negotiated with the Yellow and Checker cab companies with the aid of SIU Pres. Paul Hall. It provided for the union shop, dues checkoff, a welfare program, wage increases totaling 26 cents an hour over the three-year term of the contract for inside employes, and an incentive bonus plan under which drivers can earn up to 50 percent of their weekly fares instead of the present 45 percent.

The union, whose president is Dominic A. Abata, agreed to prove within 60 days that it still represents at least 51 percent of the employes.

Meanwhile, U.S. District Judge Julius H. Miner upbraided Jack Shiffer, counsel for a group of dissident cab drivers, for "inflammatory" statements about Atty. Gen. Robert Kennedy and Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg, and dismissed the cabinet members as defendants.

Ordered to Name Client

Gino Pollastrini, Sam Bruno and other former members of Teamsters Local 777 had charged they were denied membership rights in the new union and sued to obtain them. Shiffer charged Kennedy with acting in a conspiracy to use his office to support Abata.

The court directed the lawyer to file an affidavit stating who had hired him to represent the defendants.

"My heart does not bleed for these defendants," Miner said. "I have serious doubt about who employed you in this case and I'm not influenced by your orations against the government.

"Your attempts to show a conspiracy . . . There is nothing in the record here to show that the government officials had any hand in it. This is a government of law, not of orations."

Minister Links 'Work' Laws To Low Pay

A southern Baptist minister has denounced so-called "right-to-work" laws as a cause of "low wages, economic insecurity and labor unrest."

Laws which ban the union shop have "eroded" the economy of the South, the Rev. W. W. Finlator charged. Mr. Finlator, pastor of the Pullen Memorial Baptist Church in Raleigh, N. C.—a state with a "right-to-work" law—said the effect of such laws has been to prevent southern workers "from being on an equal economic level" with workers in states "which have repeatedly rejected this discriminatory legislation."

Finlator's statement, released through the National Council for Industrial Peace, was sharply critical of efforts by right-wing groups in Oklahoma to place a constitutional amendment banning the union shop on the ballot in the November election.

Speaking "as a minister of the Southern Baptist Convention . . . concerned over the welfare of our southern laboring people," Finlator declared:

"These are bad laws for the South, for Oklahoma, and for all states."

Declaring that "right-to-work" laws are "patently misnamed," he added:

"These laws provide the right to weaken the position of the employe. They subvert his right to work with security and dignity and meaning. They aim a deadly blow at collective bargaining . . . The 'right-to-work' laws spell the right to destroy effective unionism."

Tobacco Workers Sign at Lorillard

Louisville — Tobacco Workers Local 201 and the P. Lorillard Co. have reached agreement on a new contract providing wage increases of 13 to 30.5 cents an hour, improved pension and insurance benefits, and double time for Saturday overtime.

TWIU Pres. John O'Hare and Sec.-Treas. Robert J. Petree said a new agreement also has been signed by TWIU locals in Richmond, Va., and Durham, N. C., covering employes of Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. It follows hourly increases of 13 to 22 cents made last November and provides improvements in early retirement for disabled workers, vacation pay, sick and accident benefits.

Liggett & Myers makes Chesterfield, Fatima, L & M, Spur and Oasis brands. Lorillard makes Old Gold, Kent, Embassy, Newport and Spring. The only major non-union brands, according to TWIU, are Camel, Winston, Salem and Brandon.

Companies Plead 'No Contest':

R-T-W Man's Firm Fined in Price Fix

A Missouri steel company headed by a member of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce key "right-to-work" committee has been fined $5,000 in federal court on a plea of no contest to conspiracy to rig prices on material sold for state highway use.

Head of the firm, Reynolds Manufacturing Co., of Springfield, Mo., is George T. Fox.

U.S. District Judge Roy W. Harper in passing sentence strongly suggested that individual officers of Reynolds and other companies involved should have been "brought into court" when their firms were "brought in under indictment."

Fox was named by the CofC last September to its newly-created so-called Special Committee for Voluntary Unionism. The new unit's function, a CofC announcement said, was to spearhead efforts to outlaw the union shop "wherever and in whatever form it may exist."

At the time, Missouri union officials described Fox's general viewpoint on industrial relations and welfare legislation as "extremely conservative."

Criminal Charge Voted Too

Fox's company, Reynolds Manufacturing, was one of seven Missouri steel firms indicted in January 1961 on criminal charges of conspiring to eliminate competition in the sale of steel fabricated for bridges on Missouri highways.

One month later, Fox got a vote of confidence from local businessmen. He was elected president of the Springfield Chamber of Commerce.

Reynolds Manufacturing, along with the other six companies, originally pleaded not guilty to the anti-trust law indictment. The government charged that the steel fabricators across five and a half years had divided the state into two districts and suppressed competition on sale of nearly $22 million worth of steel for bridge projects.

The effect, the indictment charged, was to deprive the federal and state governments of the benefits of competitive bidding.

Reynolds and other firms later shifted to a no-contest plea, which Harper called "for all purposes except civil purposes the full equivalent of a plea of guilty."

He fined the seven firms a total of $82,500 and said "if the government is really serious" about stopping price-fixing, "it will start bringing company officers into court" along with the companies.

The possibility remains that the state of Missouri will sue for triple damages under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act. A spokesman for the Highway Dept. said that after indictment of the companies, bids on new projects had been "very favorable."

News Buried

The Springfield daily newspapers, according to the Union Labor Record published by Neal W. Moore, all but suppressed the news of the conviction of the companies. The morning daily, the Labor Record said, failed to print a story. The afternoon daily, under same ownership, ran a short story "buried on page 10" with Reynolds Manufacturing "camouflaged under the name of its parent company" in Los Angeles.

"Probably not one in a hundred reading it realized a Springfield firm was involved."

Boston Transit Unit Wins 2-Day Walkout

Boston—Four thousand bus and streetcar operators here ended a two-day walkout after the state took over direct operation of Boston's transit system, reinstated nine fired workers and unsnarled the work assignment dispute which led to the strike.

The union, an affiliate of the Street Electric Railway Employes, said the walkout stemmed from the unilateral action of the Metropolitan Transit Authority, which operates the system, in changing work assignments and scheduled hours of work—and insisting on putting the new schedules into effect while the dispute was in arbitration. The union had asked that the status quo be maintained until the issue had been arbitrated.

When nine workers were fired for refusing the new assignments, the union members walked out in the face of a state court injunction banning a strike.

The issue was quickly resolved when the state legislature, called into an emergency night session, voted with bipartisan support to empower Gov. John A. Volpe (R) to seize the public transportation system.

Volpe named Maj. Gen. Otis M. Whitney, state insurance commissioner and National Guard division commander, to take charge of the transit system. The quickly-reached settlement agreement revoked the disputed work assignments pending arbitration and reinstated the dismissed workers.

Swedish Labor Body Enrolls 1.5 Million

New York—Membership in the Swedish Federation of Trade Unions increased by 15,504 in 1961 to a total of 1.5 million, including 343,673 women, the Swedish Information Service has reported. The country has 7.5 million population.

Steel Pact Linked to Security:

Local Talks Follow National Agreement

on local problems with the hope of spelling out both national and local settlements in new signed contracts by the end of the week.

Meanwhile the chief union negotiators—Pres. David J. McDonald, Vice Pres. Howard Hague and Sec.-Treas. I. W. Abel—held exploratory meetings with smaller mills and specialty steel producers who are next on the USWA bargaining schedule. Negotiations are expected to start within a few weeks, and bargaining with the aluminum industry, where contracts expire July 31, is due to get under way in about a month.

Kennedy Sought Settlement

The basic negotiations opened Feb. 14 at the behest of the President, who asked both parties to reach a non-inflationary agreement well in advance of the current contract's expiration. Early settlement, Kennedy pointed out, would avert inventory buildups by steel users which in case of a last-minute agreement could mean unemployment later in the year as stockpiles were used up.

Parleys broke down Mar. 2 but were resumed Mar. 14 under prodding by Kennedy. Sessions were held virtually each working day and several evenings before the final settlement was whipped out.

The agreement was approved first by the USWA international executive board and then by the Wage Policy Committee. The President, at his desk in Washington, gave the committee his congratulations over the telephone as the members met in the Penn-Sheraton Hotel here, calling settlement through free collective bargaining without the pressure of deadline or strike vote "industrial statesmanship of the highest order."

"The settlement you have announced is both forward-looking and responsible," he said.

"It is obviously non-inflationary and should provide a solid base for continued price stability. In doing this, you have at the same time provided for your membership new and imaginative benefits in areas most vital to employes—job and income security.

"The settlement's new vacation-savings plan is a new and distinct contribution to collective bargaining. You and the industry deserve great credit for developing this imaginative program.

"Improvements in supplemental unemployment benefits, current vacations, pensions and other rights also contribute to improving job security and alleviating the effects of involuntary unemployment."

National Interest Protected

Kennedy said the settlement "demonstrates that the national interest can be protected" while the interests of both employes and the industry are forwarded "through free and responsible collective bargaining."

A statement issued by industry negotiators headed by R. Conrad Cooper, an executive vice president of the U.S. Steel Corp., said the benefits in the new agreement would increase employment costs by "about 2.5 percent" during the first year.

Terms of Settlement Reached As Guide to Steel Bargainers

Highlights of the new basic agreement between the Steelworkers and the major producers follow:

1. A new savings-vacation plan financed by company contributions of 3 cents per hour which the Wage Policy Committee said "will make available valuable new vacation opportunities and retirement benefits to those eligible, and new employment opportunities for employes who replace those who receive these benefits."

The plan provides for a retirement benefit of one week's vacation pay at the 1960 vacation pay rate for every five years of continuous service before Dec. 31, 1960.

In addition, for every two years of continuous service after that date, one week of special vacation will be made available to employes on a seniority basis until each eligible employe has had a special vacation, after which the cycle starts again. These vacation benefits at the employe's option can be deferred at interest until retirement, termination or time of special hardship.

After Jan. 1, 1963, employes who are aged 65 and eligible for retirement will have the benefit based on past service cut by 10 percent for every quarter-year they continue to work.

2. The employer SUB contribution was increased from 5 to 9.5 cents per hour to "minimize the risk that employe benefits will have to be reduced in periods of high employment." When the fund reaches maximum financing the excess will be drained off into the new vacation-retirement fund.

The additional money will both improve and extend benefits.

The weekly gross benefit was raised from the present 65 percent of take-home pay to 24 times average hourly earnings plus $1.50 for each dependent up to four. The weekly maximum benefit was increased from the present $25 plus $2 per dependent to $37.50 plus $1.50 per dependent for employes receiving unemployment compensation, and from $47.50 plus $2 per dependent to $60 plus $1.50 for employes whose unemployment compensation is exhausted.

Other SUB improvements: An employe paid for less than 32 hours in any week in which he worked will receive his standard hourly rate for the difference between the number of hours for which he was paid and 32 hours; an employe disabled while laid off will continue to get SUB benefits if his sickness and accident insurance coverage has ceased; a moving allowance was instituted for employes who move from one plant to another under a new seniority provision; and extensive administrative simplifications were agreed to.

3. Pension eligibility rules were eased and benefits improved for employe-victims of a permanent shutdown or a layoff or disability with small chance of recall.

Under these circumstances, an employe otherwise eligible will receive a pension if his age and years of service add up to 80, or in case the employe is 55 years or older, whose age and service add up to 75.

An employe laid off because of a permanent shutdown was made eligible for an immediate pension, the old requirement of a two-year waiting period having been removed.

The present $80 monthly reduction in benefits for employes who retire under these provisions and who are not eligible for social security was removed. The new benefits and liberalized eligibility rules apply also to employes not laid off or disabled but who retire with the company's consent.

4. Regular vacations were extended and vacation pay was improved.

Employees with 3 to 5 years' service will get 2 weeks vacation and 2 weeks pay instead of the present 1 week with 1.5 weeks pay; those with 10 to 15 years will receive 3 weeks with pay instead of the present 2 weeks with 2.5 weeks pay; those with 25 years or more will get 4 weeks with pay rather than the present 3 weeks with 3.5 weeks pay.

5. An improved seniority plan which the Wage Policy Committee said was "designed to maximize the employment security and job opportunity of long-service employes" was negotiated as a guide to the individual negotiating committees for implementation in the local agreements.

It calls for the establishment of "seniority pools" in each plant to be made up, as a minimum, of all jobs in the three lowest labor grades and two-thirds of the jobs in the fourth, and to extend over a major operating unit.

An employe with two years or more seniority laid off from his seniority unit will have the right within 60 days to a job in his seniority pool if a job in that pool is held by an employe with less plant service; he will have preferential rights over new employes for any vacancy in any pool unit filled from within the seniority unit, if he can qualify; if he is the victim of a permanent shutdown or layoff, he will have a right to a job in any seniority pool in the plant which is filled by an employe with less plant continuous service; and vacancies not filled from within the seniority unit may be filled by employes "from any of the seniority units included in the area covered by the same seniority pool."

6. The continued Human Relations Committee in its study of employment security will try to arrive at contractual language dealing with the contracting out of work, scheduling of overtime while some employes are on lay-off or short workweeks, the problem of foremen performing bargaining unit work, assignment to employes outside the bargaining unit of work which could be performed by members of the bargaining unit, and the scheduling and extension of vacation.

New Meetings Slated In Aircraft Walkout

Farmingdale, N. Y.—New bargaining sessions have been set between the Republic Aviation Corp. here and more than 8,800 Machinists who had walked out when the company denied adequate severance pay and supplemental unemployment "cushions" despite the announced threat of mass layoffs.

Federal mediators were scheduled to join the negotiators.

Republic recently announced that across the next 30 months some 13,000 of its 15,500 employes would be laid off unless substantial amounts of new work were obtained to replace contracts for the F-105D fighter-bomber. The Defense Dept. had previously decided on a cutback in F-105D production.

Month-long negotiations preceding the strike produced from the company only a last-minute so-called "final" offer that provided no severance pay and a proposed SUB plan that Machinists Lodge 1987 considered wholly inadequate.

Negotiations at Republic were the first this year at a major plant in the aerospace industry. During the year, nearly all contracts in the highly-unsettled industry will open up for bargaining involving either the Machinists or Auto Workers.

Republic proposed diversion into the SUB plan of a Christmas bonus, previously paid in good years and bad, equivalent to 5 cents an hour, and the diversion of an additional 1-cent pay increase due under a cost-of-living escalator clause, plus a company contribution of 4 cents an hour in new money.

Analysis by the union indicated that employes laid off with more than 10 years of service would receive less than $6 a week in SUB for a period of 10 weeks, with no benefits payable to workers laid off before Oct. 31, 1962.

Workers with less than 10 years of seniority would get from $2 to less than $6 a week in SUB for seven or fewer weeks.

Workers laid off in 1963 and 1964 would receive SUB for a longer period but the weekly amount would not be increased. The company also demanded agreement that the plan could not be renegotiated for five years.

The company turned down proposals for job security clauses, including prohibitions against contracting-out and use of supervisors and company employes outside the bargaining unit in work normally performed by Machinists.

The union rejected the company's "final" offer 4,792 to 617 and voted to strike by a 16-to-1 margin, 5,273 to 340.

Republic decided in the face of the strike not to allow production workers in the plant and picketing was confined to token 10-man teams at each of the company's gates.

Factory Hirings Down in February

The factory hiring rate dropped more than seasonally in February while layoffs declined seasonally, the Labor Dept. has reported.

The hiring rate fell to 34 per 1,000 in February from 41 per 1,000 the month before. Of total hires, the report noted, nearly 60 percent were of persons not previously employed by the firm; the remainder were recalls of furloughed workers.

Rail Negotiators to Resume Talks

Chicago — National negotiations on work rules, pay and fringe benefits for railroad operating employes are scheduled to resume here Apr. 17, after two days of talks which found unions and management still apart on both the demands and the ground rules for the bargaining.

Management negotiators said they were prepared to negotiate "within the framework" of recommendations made earlier this year by a Presidential Railroad Commission.

The five operating unions have flatly rejected the commission report, taking the position that the goal of the negotiations is to make a fresh start toward narrowing the differences between the original management demands for drastic work rules changes and union counter-proposals which call for raising working conditions and benefits to levels long since achieved by workers in other industries.

As the operating union negotiations got under way, a Presidential Emergency Board in Washington concluded hearings on pay proposals affecting some 600,000 "non-op" railroad workers.

The unions have asked for a 25-cent wage increase and a job stabilization plan; the railroads have countered with a proposal to cut the salary of many lower-paid employes by 20 percent.

The emergency board chairman, Saul Wallen, said the three-member panel will begin mediation efforts with the two parties after studying the record of the testimony.

A spokesman for the operating brotherhoods said the unions have taken strike votes as a "practical" measure but hope to reach an agreement through negotiations.

Pres. H. E. Gilbert of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen said in a radio interview that a nationwide strike over the work rules dispute is not "imminent." He appeared on Labor News Conference, AFL-CIO public service program carried by the Mutual Broadcasting network.

HONOR STUDENTS FROM COLLEGES throughout the nation moved their classroom to AFL-CIO headquarters to hear and question union officials and staff members. The 94 students are participants in American University's Washington Seminar, a special program which enables top-ranking students to spend one semester in the nation's capital studying public affairs.

Massachusetts, Mississippi Revise Congressional Voting Districts

Boston—The Massachusetts legislature has averted an at-large election of the state's entire congressional delegation by passing a redistricting bill expected to cost the Democrats and Republicans one seat each in the House of Representatives.

The state, which presently has eight Democratic and six Republican congressmen, is entitled to only 12 representatives in the next Congress under the 1960 census apportionment. Gov. John A. Volpe (R) has said he will sign the bill, which was sponsored by a bipartisan group of incumbent congressmen.

Massachusetts was the last of 16 states which lost seats under the census apportionment to redistrict. A few days earlier, Mississippi adjusted to its one-seat loss by combining two northwest Delta districts.

While all of the states which lost seats have redistricted, five of the nine states which gained seats did not redistrict. As a result the additional representatives allowed Hawaii, Maryland, Michigan, Ohio and Texas will be elected at large.

While the Maryland legislature did enact a redistricting bill, it was blocked by an initiative petition forcing the issue to a referendum vote.

Michigan Gov. John B. Swainson (D) vetoed a redistricting bill passed by the Republican-controlled legislature, charging it would make a "shambles" of the principle of equal representation. As a result, the extra representative will be elected at large.

An analysis by Congressional Quarterly predicts a Republican gain of two House seats and a Democratic loss of four seats as "the most likely net effect" of the redistricting actions taken. The discrepancy between the Democratic loss figure of four and the Republican gain of two results from the fact that the overall membership of the House will be reduced from 437 to the permanent figure of 435. Two additional seats were created temporarily when Alaska and Hawaii were made states.

In the Massachusetts reapportionment, a Republican district embracing part of Boston and suburban Brookline and Newton was carved up and parceled out to adjoining safe Democratic districts. Incumbent Rep. Laurence Curtis previously had announced his candidacy for the Republican senatorial nomination.

The Massachusetts legislature also hacked away most of Democratic Rep. Thomas J. Lane's district, putting his home city of Lawrence into the solid Republican territory of GOP Rep. F. Bradford Morse.

Deadlock Averted

A prolonged deadlock between the Democratic legislature and the Republican governor had threatened to force an at-large election of all congressmen, and House Majority Leader John W. McCormack had tried to increase the size of the House of Representatives by three seats—which would have saved one Massachusetts congressional district.

When this move failed, however, most of the state's congressmen swung behind the plan eventually adopted. Despite initial opposition by State Senate Pres. John E. Powers, the plan was passed by a sizable margin.

The Mississippi redistricting will pit the extremely conservative Rep. Jamie L. Whitten, a veteran of 21 years in Congress, against the younger, more moderate Rep. Frank E. Smith, ex-newspaperman and former aide to Sen. John Stennis.

Smith, who has served in Congress since 1951, was one of two Mississippi representatives who supported the Kennedy-Johnson ticket in the 1960 presidential election. Whitten backed the unpledged slate of electors which carried the state. Ironically, the Kennedy ticket carried Whitten's district, trailed in Smith's.

Bargaining Resumed In Coast Ship Strike

San Francisco—Negotiations in the strike of some 12,000 members of three unions against West Coast shipping operators, broken off when an impasse was reached, have been resumed here at the request of Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg.

Goldberg summoned representatives of the unions and the employers to a meeting in Washington after parleys broke down in San Francisco and Deputy Dir. Robert H. Moore of the U.S. Mediation & Conciliation Service had left the city.

Present were Sec.-Treas. Morris Weisberger of the Sailors' Union of the Pacific; Pres. William Jordan of the Marine Firemen; Sec.-Treas. Ed Turner of the Marine Cooks & Stewards, and Pres. J. Paul St. Sure of the Pacific Maritime Association.

They agreed to go back into sessions here with a special panel Goldberg said he was appointing "with the President's approval . . . to make a further effort to assist the parties in concluding a settlement." Members of the panel are Under-Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, chairman; Moore, and Prof. James J. Healey of Harvard University, a maritime labor expert.

The panel was scheduled to report back to Goldberg on Apr. 7. He acted after pleas for federal intervention by Sen. Hiram L. Fong (R) and Gov. William F. Quinn of Hawaii.

The last contract between the unions and the shipping association expired Sept. 30, 1961. The PMA has offered a package it said is worth 11.8 percent. The three unions, citing greater increases to other employes are asking for an estimated 17 percent.

Pensions Paid to 14,286 at Chrysler

Detroit—A total of 14,286 Chrysler employes have retired and received $36.9 million in pension benefits since the Auto Workers won a pension plan from the company in 1950, according to the latest report of the UAW-Chrysler Pension Board.

The pension trust fund now contains an accumulation of $170.4 million, the board said in its report to UAW Vice Pres. Norman Matthews, director of the union's Chrysler Dept.

During the last year 1,668 UAW members at Chrysler retired under the six sections of the pension program—1,037 under the normal age retirement clause and the others under the deferred, disability, early immediate payment, early deferred payment and special early clauses. Benefits paid in 1961 amounted to $7.8 million.

Asks Inquiry by Admen:

King Scores AMA Ads as Misleading

Rep. Cecil King (D-Calif.), co-sponsor of the Anderson-King health care bill, has asked a top advertising executive to spark an investigation of what King called "lies and deceptions" in newspaper advertising by the American Medical Association.

In a telegram to the president of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, Frederick R. Gamble, King charged that in newspaper ads the AMA and its affiliates have launched "a coldly-calculated campaign of dishonesty" to discredit the social security measure.

"I appeal to you to investigate the content of this advertising which misleads the public" about the Anderson-King bill, the California congressman urged Gamble.

King in a full-scale speech on the House floor recently described in detail tactics being used by the AMA to defeat his proposal, which would provide health care for the aged under the social security system. He also obtained White House assurance that Pres. Kennedy would help combat charges that the bill would involve what the physicians' group labels "socialized medicine."

Taking up the advertising program, King told Gamble that recent ads assailing his bill had appeared in widely scattered newspapers.

"It's no accident," he said, "that the ads are almost identical. And it's obvious these ads—although signed by local medical groups—are centrally inspired by the AMA."

He said that the AMA is spending millions of dollars to defeat his bill. "That is the AMA's right. But I do object to lies, distortions, half-truths and misrepresentations being heaped upon my bill," he declared.

The ads assert that older people would not have freedom to choose their own hospital or nursing home, that such hospitals would have to be chosen by "a Washington official."

"This is not true, and the AMA knows it," King declared. "As clearly stated by Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Abraham Ribicoff, he would leave it up to each state to determine what hospitals and nursing homes meet health and safety standards. There is no plan to have somebody in Washington decide which hospital an older person might use."

The ads further claim that the Anderson-King bill "is not realistic—9 million Americans over 65 already have some form of health insurance."

'Misleading,' King Says

King said, "This is misleading. Practically the same number of Americans over 65 have no health insurance whatsoever. Moreover, the AMA is well aware that the vast majority of those who do have health insurance are inadequately protected. This is not to mention the fact that premiums on comprehensive health insurance policies for those over 65 are prohibitively high."

King acknowledged that it is "too much to hope" that the AMA will stop its attack. He urged Gamble: "Can you not at least use your good offices to see that no misrepresentation of the bill be allowed in paid advertisements, and that if the bill is attacked that it be attacked on the basis of what it is and what it says, and not with misrepresentations, distortions and half-truths?"

10,000 Rally to Back Health Care for Aged

New York—More than 10,000 retired workers and still-employed union members, rallying in support of the King-Anderson bill, filled two halls in Manhattan Center here and crowded pavements and streets outside as they made clear their demand for a health care program for the aged financed through the Social Security system.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner (D), one of a parade of government and labor leaders who spoke on behalf of the bill, called the measure "not just good legislation, not just desirable legislation, but must legislation."

He urged the audience to use votes as weapons in support of the measure and predicted that "if congressmen are not going to love the old people in June and July, the older people and all the rest of us are not going to love them in September and November."

The rally was called by the AFL-CIO Central Labor Council to launch a campaign for the bill, now stalled in the House Ways & Means Committee. A four-point program, presented by Jack Ossofsky, chairman of the subcommittee on the aging of the council's Community Services Committee, urged the retired unionists to write their congressmen, visit them personally in Washington, gather petitions in behalf of Anderson-King, and take part in a larger rally at Madison Square Garden, May 20, to be addressed by Pres. Kennedy.

Other speakers included Council Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr.; CSC Chairman Michael Sampson; Council Sec. Morris Iushewitz; AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Michael Mann, and Dr. Benedict Duffy, Seton Hall College of Medicine, a member of the new Physicians' Committee for Health Care for the Aged Through Social Security.

A feature of the rally was a dramatic presentation staged with the cooperation of theatrical unions, with members of the Television & Radio Artists and Actors' Equity as the performers. It told the story of a typical retired couple forced to get help for a badly-needed operation through the machinery of the Kerr-Mills program.

"That's one couple," said narrator Fred O'Neal, an Equity officer. "I can read you a list of 10,000 more with the same problem or worse. Ten thousand? A hundred thousand, a million, living on the thin edge of poverty, knowing that tomorrow's pain, tomorrow's fall may push them over the edge."

NLRB Expands Election Reports

The National Labor Relations Board has revised its reports on results of representation elections to provide for a tabular format and the grouping of elections by the union involved.

The new monthly "NLRB Election Report" covers consent elections as well as those directed by the board and regional directors.

108 YEARS OLD, Broadus A. Jackson, former seaman and member of the National Maritime Union, is shown between Pres. Harry Van Arsdale of the New York City Labor Council (left), and Dr. Benjamin J. Duffy, who spoke to New York rally in support of social security principle for health care for the aged.

FROM ALL OVER the city and its outlying areas came retired workers staging the rally urging enactment of the principles of the Anderson-King bill on health care. Here is a bus load of former workers in fur industry as they arrived at Manhattan Center.

New York Retirees Rally for Health Bill

GROUP OF RETIREES listens intently as New York City's Mayor Robert F. Wagner joins speakers urging Congress to act favorably on Anderson-King bill. Manhattan Center, scene of many union meetings, was jammed with 3,300 in one hall, 1,800 in another, while 5,000 outside listened to proceedings over loud speaker system.

MEMBER OF PHYSICIANS' new committee to back health care for the aged through social security, Dr. Benjamin J. Duffy, professor of preventive medicine at Seton Hall College of Medicine, addresses rally.

PETITIONS TO NEW YORK MEMBERS of House and Senate are signed by retirees in behalf of Anderson-King bill.

HERE IS SCENE outside Manhattan Center as audience moves into hall for the mammoth rally.

Good-Faith Bargaining

THE SETTLEMENT IN STEEL is a clear demonstration that good faith collective bargaining between a strong, responsible union and a management concerned with industrial peace can work.

The union won its goal of a "program designed to achieve measures of employment and income security" without being forced into a repetition of the bitter four-month strike of 1959-60 when steel management was determined to "crack the union."

The 1962 negotiations, culminating in an agreement three months before the expiration of the present contract, are living proof of the trade union movement's contention that where management recognizes a union as a responsible representative of its workers and engages in collective bargaining with a desire to achieve an agreement, industrial peace can be maintained with benefit to both parties and the nation.

The Jobs Lag

THE DISMAL CHILL of chronic unemployment is still on the land and it is doubtful if there will be any important changes in the next few months.

The Labor Dept.'s latest report on unemployment in the nation's major job areas shows an increase in the number of areas with joblessness of 6 percent or more over February.

The number of critically affected job areas reached a high of 101 at the low point of the 1960-61 recession and gradually dropped to 60 late last year. Since then it has been inching upward again and in March reached 63, or about 42 percent of all major employment centers.

The Labor Dept. report held out little hope for the months ahead, indicating that expected gains in employment would be mostly seasonal or of the "slight-to-moderate expansion" variety.

Kerr-Mills Failure

THE KERR-MILLS ACT, which was whooped through Congress two years ago as the American Medical Association's reluctant answer to medical care for the aged, has been put to the test of a full year's operation and proven a complete failure.

The Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare has filed a report with the House Ways & Means Committee disclosing that fewer than 1 percent of the nation's aged are receiving medical care under the act.

The cost of this program, reaching nearly no one, may run as high as $215 million by the end of the current fiscal year.

By last October this highly-touted replacement for a program of health care through social security was operating in 19 states, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands under wide variation of forms. Only six states provided care in the five major areas of hospitalization, nursing home care, physicians' services, prescribed drugs and dental care.

The HEW report ought to lay to rest this lame excuse for legislation geared to the inadequacies of state programs and a humiliating means test. The honest, workable answer is health care through social security and the time for Ways & Means Committee action is long overdue.

'Inadequate for Sixties':

Educator Urges New Look at State Jobless Pay Systems

THE COMPLETE INADEQUACY of our present unemployment compensation program has long been recognized by some of the nation's leading economists. Recently Prof. Jacob J. Kaufman of Pennsylvania State University expressed this with extreme clarity in a letter to the New York Times.

"We should recognize," he wrote, "that a program which was developed in the Thirties for cyclical unemployment might be inadequate to meet the structural unemployment problems of the Sixties.

"For we now face increasing numbers of workers unemployed as a result of severe technological changes and new entrants coming into the labor force each year in increasing numbers, many of whom may be inadequately trained for industry. We must reconsider the unemployment compensation program in light of these factors."

Kaufman examined some of the basic principles of the current program.

FIRST, HE WONDERED whether the unemployment compensation program should be continued on a state-by-state basis or whether it should be federalized.

"The state system," he said, "has demonstrated certain weaknesses. Some state funds have been drained because of economic changes which are not the fault of the states themselves."

Kaufman points out that state systems are almost bankrupt. They are forced to make payments to a large number of unemployed workers who may be unaffected by an upturn in business. When jobless benefits are made by all states during a serious recession all states feel the brunt equally. However, when payments are made out of state systems because of a chronic condition, other states benefit (as a result of these spendings) without the states suffering from chronic unemployment receiving benefits in return.

In addition, the Pennsylvania State University economist points out, because of variations in payments by employers and in benefits offered to unemployed, we are allowing the unemployment compensation system to become a factor in industrial location.

Kaufman also questions the desirability of having a direct relationship between taxes paid into the fund and benefits paid out.

"If we federalize the unemployment compensation system, would it not be more desirable," he asks, "from a fiscal point of view, to pay out benefits in terms of need and take in revenue based on sound tax and fiscal policies?"

There is another factor which concerns Kaufman. He wonders whether it is fair or wise to build up work histories in the form of employment and earnings before employes are entitled to benefits.

"The fact that a worker who has just entered the labor force is unemployed in no way diminishes his need for financial assistance," he writes. "Thus, new entrants in the labor force might well be considered eligible for unemployment compensation."

Since we are faced with the problems of the automation age Kaufman is particularly concerned that we consider the question of relating the training and retraining programs to the unemployment compensation program.

"IF WORKERS ARE UNEMPLOYED for lack of skills," he says, "or have skills which are no longer in demand, why not make their unemployment compensation payments relate to their willingness to undertake training for occupations for which there is a demand?"

What many economists look upon with alarm is the patchwork make-up of our jobless pay programs. The first step is to establish federal standards for the amount and duration of benefits. Then it would be proper to study the proposals of federalizing the entire program along some of the guidelines suggested by Kaufman. (PAI)

"When will you learn that the strikes I call are not subject to arbitration?"

Morgan Says:

Shameful Shenanigans Have Diluted Urban Vote for Years

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

IT IS SOMETIMES SAID of the justices of the Supreme Court that "they read the newspapers too." The derisive implication of that observation, of course, is that their decisions are shaped more by current events that by the accumulated rules of law. What these retractors ignore is that the law is a living, growing thing, and cannot be interpreted or administered in an isolation chamber insulated against the growth of change of modern society.

Morgan

This may be a handy item to remember right now because in the wake of the decision opening the way for the city dweller to claim equal voting rights with his country cousin, attacks on the Supreme Court are bound to be renewed. And they will come from the same general quarter of right-wing thinking—if thinking is the proper word—which heaved mud at the tribunal for its rulings recognizing that Negroes are people and that the constitution guarantees civil rights to all citizens whom it protects.

It is indisputable that the urban and suburban voters have had their franchise diluted by the shameful shenanigans of legislatures dominated for decades—in some cases for half a century—by rural districts. In state after state the record is clear:

Two counties in Alabama with 41 percent of the state's population have only 10 percent of the representation in the lower house, 14 percent of the upper house in the state legislature. Seven counties comprising 39 percent of Georgia's population can claim only 10.5 percent of the state's legislators. With three-quarters of the state's population, five Maryland counties get less than half the representation in the state capitol. And so on through Nevada, Vermont, Virginia almost ad infinitum.

Interestingly enough one of the few states in which the imbalance is relatively slight is California where 23 urban counties with 93 percent of the population account for 90 percent of the assemblymen—and only 48 percent of the state senators. And California was the legislative workshop of Earl Warren in his brilliant political career as governor before he became Chief Justice. He joined the 6-2 majority in the apportionment decision.

In his dissent, Justice Felix Frankfurter did not deny the wrong to urban voters but argued that the courts were not the place to right it. The proper place, he said in effect, was the voting booth itself.

"In a democratic society like ours," he wrote, "relief must come through an aroused popular conscience that sears the conscience of the people's representatives."

The ironic fact is however, that it was the accumulated callouses on the consciences of the people's representatives in Tennessee which for years turned back the hot anger of citizens of Nashville, Memphis and other cities who finally, with no other recourse, turned to the courts for relief—thus starting the action on which the Supreme Court ruled. And as Justice William O. Douglas observed in concurring with the majority, that while it is said that any decision in cases of this kind is beyond the competence of the courts—and this point was made where racial segregation was involved—"yet the legality of claims and conduct is a traditional subject for judicial determination."

In 1958, when attacks on the Supreme Court in the wake of segregation and other decisions were in full and curdling cry, Dean Eugene Rostow of the Yale Law School wrote: "The law must be an educational force and a moral force too."

IN ANOTHER PASSAGE he said: "If the individual is to have a considerable scope for personal freedom in the American society of the future, he will have to continue to rely on the courts to see to it that people are treated by the state in ways which conform to constitutional standards of democratic propriety. The weight of . . . history is evidence that the people do expect the courts to interpret, declare, adapt and apply these constitutional provisions, as one of their main protections against the possibility of abuse by presidents and legislatures."

Loading state legislatures year after year for the cows and the country squires, to deny urban voters equal representation and, therefore, equal protection, hardly conforms to constitutional standards of democratic propriety. If the legislatures refuse, as they have, to correct such manifest injustice they have only their craftily calculated neglect to blame when the courts move in, at the instigation of some outraged taxpayer, to tidy things up.

It is rather fascinating—in a depressing sort of way—to contemplate the fact that the people who are first to complain about the Supreme Court allegedly overstepping its jurisdiction are the same people who are the last to want to remove the vicious desert areas of indolence and irresponsibility and injustice into which the court, sooner or later, is bound to step.

Washington Reports:

U. S. Called 'Backward Nation' On Pay for Women's Work

WOMEN DOCTORS, lawyers, psychologists, psychiatrists, teachers and others in the professions are paid an average of $1,000 a year less than men "even though their training, experience and other factors are identical," Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.) asserted on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

Rep. Florence P. Dwyer (R-N. J.), who with Mrs. Green has introduced a bill for "equal pay for equal work," charged that the wage differential exists also in factories and offices. She urged national legislation, although 22 states have laws on the subject, because "state laws cannot regulate interstate commerce and the great bulk of commerce today is interstate." She pointed out, also that the states which have laws vary in coverage, exemptions, enforcement and other factors.

"We find loopholes, inferior policying and inspection in state laws," Mrs. Green asserted. She said committee testimony showed that women were not only usually paid less than men, but hired in lower categories in industries, offices and civil service.

"Here in Washington, D. C., the largest number of employes in Grades 1 to 5 are women," she declared. "And at the top of the ladder, Grades 15 to 18, only about 1 percent of the total work force is women."

Mrs. Dwyer said she believes that "equal pay for equal work would help stabilize wage rates and increase job security by discouraging replacement of men with women at lower rates."

Thirty-eight countries have adopted the Intl. Labor Organization conference agreement for equal remuneration for men and women, Mrs. Green pointed out, "and the United States, unfortunately, is conspicuous by its absence in ratifying this agreement. We find the countries to the north and south of us, Canada and Mexico, have national legislation for equal pay for equal work. We find that even some of the new countries in Africa have legislation of this kind. In this area, the United States is a backward country."

Among supporters she said, are all kinds of national organizations, both in labor and business, the American Association of University Women, the National Council of Jewish Women, the National Council of Catholic Women, the National Council of Negro Women and both political parties.

Mrs. Green was more hopeful of action in this session because for the first time, the chairman of the subcommittee and full committee are interested and are holding hearings.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

ASSUMING THE NORMAL erosions and attrition of time and the presumptive re-election of Pres. Kennedy in 1964, the 44-year-old President seems likely to play a role in the reshaping of the Supreme Court that may extend his influence for a generation beyond two terms in the White House.

He had been in office only a little more than a year when Justice Whittaker, fourth of Mr. Eisenhower's five appointees, retired after less than five years of service.

With the exception of Kennedy's new appointee, Byron R. White, only two of the justices were born in this century.

Three of them are legatees of the New Deal era, now a quarter century gone, appointed by Franklin D. Roosevelt in the almost-forgotten world before Pearl Harbor and the long hard years of war and cold war. They have remained for all this time the clearly-dominating influences on the bench, although the 78-year-old Hugo Black and the 63-year-old William O. Douglas represent one tradition and the nearly 80-year-old Felix Frankfurter speaks for another.

With the exception of the great Chief Justice Harlan Stone and the present Chief Justice Earl Warren, they have been unmatched in prestige and authority since the days of Holmes, Brandeis and Cardozo. And Warren himself is 72 years old.

Black and Frankfurter still pronounce their judgments and wage their ancient disagreements with vigor that seems unimpaired, and the Chief Justice has been the architect of policy as the court proclaimed the meaning of democracy in mid-century America. Not one of them dodders.

In the procession of the years, it nevertheless seems likely that among these justices and the others born around the turn of the century, death or accident or a desire for retirement may create vacancies Mr. Kennedy will fill. The President has a taste for younger men, postwar in their concepts and bringing fresh insights to old problems. His choices may be on the bench for a long time.

A FEW PRESIDENTS have been only slightly aware of the overwhelming significance of the court. It was a blind spot, oddly, for Harry S. Truman, who leaned toward naming old friends from the Senate without much consciousness of the real business of the high court—which is to relate changing concepts to the altered circumstances of a dynamic society as well as to determine the technical meaning of the law.

The late Justice Robert Jackson, in his years before he went to the bench, thought long and deeply about the nature of judicial power in the United States, and he wrote that the Supreme Court inevitably becomes the last generation's check upon each new one.

It is by no means certain that men appointed as "liberals" will remain—or ever really were—what the President appointing them thought or hoped they were. Witness the fierce intellectual and moral struggles of Justices Black and Frankfurter.

Pres. Theodore Roosevelt appointed Oliver Wendell Holmes, believing that the great lawyer and jurist from Massachusetts would support his trust-busting policies, taking Holmes into the inner circle of advisers—until a Sherman Anti-Trust law decision came down, and Holmes voted hard and sharp against the government. Roosevelt never invited him to the White House again except for the ceremonial annual state dinners a President must give.

ABOUT BYRON R. WHITE little is known. He is described by intimates as diffident, almost shy. Until he joined the Kennedy drive for the presidency, he had almost no record of political activity. He had a quiet corporation law practice in Denver. Yet for what it is worth or means, he is believed liberal and modern in his instincts.

Mr. Kennedy is an activist President, with a strong sense of history. His choices for the court seem certain to be intellectuals. They may be men of distinction who will grace and enhance a bench that has known only a few noble jurists in each generation.

"EQUAL PAY FOR EQUAL WORK" laws have been adopted by 38 countries, including Canada, Mexico and many of the new African nations, but not by the U.S., Rep. Florence Dwyer (R-N. J.), left, and Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.) asserted on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program. Both have introduced equal pay bills.

How to Buy:

Consumer-Protection Program Would Add Buying Power, Jobs

By Sidney Margolius

THE CONSUMER - PROTECTION program proposed to Congress by Pres. Kennedy is the first time consumer needs have been recognized on that high a government level.

This department estimates that if fully enacted by Congress this program could increase your family's purchasing power by as much as 10 percent, and thus also strengthen the national economy and boost employment. The program would direct more of the money you spend into actual and better-quality goods and services, and less into various forms of money waste that now keep down family living standards. For a typical family, the enactment and whole-hearted application of this program could mean as much as $500 a year more purchasing power.

This comprehensive program of consumer protection falls short of urgent currents needs in only one immediately-urgent respect. While it does call for more adequate and sincere advance testing of the true effectiveness of drugs, and would require drug manufacturers to reveal common names as well as the brand names which tell you nothing, it fails to seek a solution to present high prices of medicines. What Pres. Kennedy really did was substitute the Food & Drug Administration's weaker proposals for the Kefauver bill.

Sen. Estes Kefauver has proposed to shorten the patent monopoly on new prescription drugs to three years instead of the present 17.

Some of the potential benefits of the President's consumer program can be available to you only through government or cooperative effort. This is true not only of the need to reduce present lofty drug prices, but in relation to housing. The present high cost of housing is both the No. 1 consumer problem of our time, and the one that's hardest for a family to solve by itself. But some features of this program can go right to work for you.

Here is how the President's consumer proposals to Congress can benefit you, and how you can apply some of this program in your own family's purchasing and money handling:

True Interest Rates: The President has urged Congress to pass Sen. Paul Douglas's "truth in lending" bill which would require lenders and sellers to tell you the true annual interest rates on installment purchases and loans. This would benefit you by making it possible for you to compare rates charged by different lenders and sellers. A family that has a not-unusual installment debt of $1,200 could save a good $60 a year and sometimes more by having and using this information.

Meanwhile, until Congress does act to require frank information on interest rates, your best bet usually is to borrow from a credit union or, if you don't belong to one, from a commercial bank, to finance your needs. Costs of loans from these sources generally are lower than finance charges required by installment sellers.

Consumer Information: One of the most potentially-useful ideas proposed by the President would make available to consumers more of the information the government develops in its own research. Several agencies have discontinued consumer publications.

Now that the President has directed government agencies to make more of their information available to the public, watch for an increased flow of useful facts on buying and using merchandise in your labor, co-op and credit-union newspapers.

Some of the best money-saving information of this type to look for is facts on foods which currently are most abundant and lowest-priced; information on the relative costs of foods serving the same nutritional purposes; more and franker facts on the relative lack of nourishment in some popular packaged food such as dry cereals and carbonated beverages, and on prepared foods which contain a large amount of inexpensive fillers and even water, such as cold cuts and some frozen and canned cooked dishes.

Deceptive Packaging: This can be a real fooler, as this department has been warning for five years, which is how long it has taken to get some government attention for this problem. After further investigation (not too long a one would seem necessary) the President has promised to recommend to both private business and Congress measures to provide clearer and easier-to-understand weight markings on food, detergent and other packages.

Increases Urged in Children's Services

DESPITE SPECTACULAR IMPROVEMENT in the health and welfare of the nation's children during the past 50 years, both the quality and availability of services must be stepped up if all children are to realize their full potential.

This is the theme of a special issue of Children, a professional journal published by the Children's Bureau of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare. The March-April issue of the publication commemorates the 50th anniversary of the bureau, to be observed in Washington, D. C., Apr. 9, and points up the "need and prospects of children and youth, yesterday, today, and tomorrow."

Since the establishment of the Children's Bureau in 1912, deaths of children from ages 1 to 14 dropped from 514 per 100,000 to approximately 65.6 today, and deaths of infants dropped from almost one in 10 live births in 1915 to slightly more than two in every 100 today.

"The best in American medicine is very good indeed," says Dr. Leona Baumgartner, commissioner of health, New York City, in an article entitled "A Fresh Look at Child Health."

"But there is little chance that professional health personnel in these next few decades will increase proportionate to the growing population of youngsters. Therefore the problem of improved health care must depend on increased efficiency—better communication, better thinking, and better planning."

MRS. KATHERINE B. OETTINGER, Children's Bureau chief, writing on "A Half Century of Progress for All Children," says that "many of the tenets so evident in the bureau's previous years have emerged with even greater clarity today." Of these tenets that have been reinforced by developments of the past five years she says:

- Services essential to children's well-being must keep pace with children's needs.
- Research findings that could benefit children and their families must be translated into action throughout the country.
- A great variety of trained personnel for children's services is a prime requisite for the advancement and refinement of these services.
- Programs designed to advance the well-being of children require the cooperation of professions and agencies at all levels.
- The nation has a special obligation to remove or alleviate the handicaps suffered by children.
- Every child should have a home of his own, preferably with his own parents.
- The best knowledge and information about child growth and development must be readily available to parents seeking it.
- Children, because they cannot speak for themselves, need a spokesman.
- Children's needs know no national boundaries.

Copies of the March-April anniversary issue and subscriptions may be obtained by writing the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C. Copies of the special issue are 25 cents each.

From Soup to Nonsense:

Wait 'til She Sees Junior at The Wheel of a Souped-Up Car

By Jane Goodsell

IN ALL THE WORLD
There's nothing like
A pig-tailed girl
On a brand new bike.

Strike up the band
And beat the drums!
Watch it! Watch it!
Here she comes!

Her mother watches
Full of dread.
She hides her eyes
And shakes her head.

HER FATHER SHOUTS
With paternal pride,
"Look at the way
"The kid can ride!"

She whizzes past them
Down the street
With flying braids
And whirling feet.

And grubby hands
On handlebars,
And in her eyes
A thousand stars.

SHE'S BRAVE AS A LION
Or a Bengal Lancer,
And faster than Swaps
Or Native Dancer.

She's Buffalo Bill,
She's Paul Revere!
Or maybe she's king
Of the wild frontier.

She zooms through
Interstellar space.
She's Ben Hur in
A chariot race.

SHE'S TAKING OFF
From an aircraft carrier!
She's breaking through
The sonic barrier!

She's lickety-splitting
'Round again,
Out-astronauting
Colonel Glenn.

She's a shooting star
From the Milky Way!
She's the best and most
In the USA!

SHE'S A WINGED VICT'RY
In dungarees
With one skinned elbow
And two skinned knees.

'Hunger Knows No Politics':

Meany Calls on U.S. To Feed Starving

dictatorships are known to have resold in the foreign market some of the very goods they imported for the ostensible purpose of alleviating the shortages and hunger confronting their own people."

But "hunger knows no politics," Meany wrote in the Federationist editorial, its "conquest knows no politics," and we have the ARA experience to guide us.

Hoover Relief Plan Cited

In the Twenties, he pointed out, "American relief teams, with food and medicines, went to the stricken areas and gave aid directly to the famine victims.

"There was no possible misunderstanding by the recipients of the aid as to who helped them."

And Maxim Gorki, world-renowed Russian writer, Meany recalled, thanked Hoover in these words: "In the whole history of practical humanitarianism I know of no achievement that could compare in greatness and compassion with the help that you extended."

The suffering of the people in Red China, in Cuba, in East Germany and other satellite countries today "is far too great and the human crisis is far too grave to be met with 'business as usual' transactions and deals," the editorial stated.

A series of "natural and man-made calamities" such as the forced-commune system has created a "desperate" food shortage in Mao Tse-tung's China, so serious that about 8 million parcels had to be sent from Chinese in Hong Kong to their relatives on Asia's mainland.

People in Cuba "are facing a desperate shortage of all food staples and consumers' goods," so that Castro has been forced to "the most rigid rationing" and lowering of labor standards to prevent "the ravages of massive famine."

In the walled-in Soviet Zone of Germany, the "increasingly acute shortage of all food staples and goods" is making life "ever more drab, dismal and difficult."

Even in the Soviet Union errors in policy have caused "serious shortages, especially in agricultural products."

A revival of the ARA plan "should be welcomed" by the Communist dictators, Meany wrote, on the basis of Lenin's precedent.

By sending in relief teams, he said, we could make sure that the food goes to the starving and that the people know who is sending it, he continued.

"The American people would rather give away some of their rice, wheat, butter, textile and medicines" than to "sell these goods for gold mined by slave labor."

"Our country has always shown great generosity and capacity in helping save people from starvation," the editorial said.

"The principles and experience of the ARA in saving Lenin's Russia from famine could well provide the guiding line for our country's efforts to help those now menaced by famine behind the Iron Curtain."

Supreme Court Awaits White as 9th Justice

The Supreme Court has deferred action on 12 pending cases until its term opening next October, setting them for reargument after the newly-nominated associate justice, Byron R. White, has taken his place on the bench.

The presumption was that the court was either equally divided on the issues raised or considered the cases so important that they should be argued a second time with a full membership.

White, 44 years old, has served since the beginning of the Administration as deputy attorney general under Pres. Kennedy's brother, Robert F. Kennedy.

The Supreme Court appointment was announced by the President two days after the retirement of Justice Charles Evans Whittaker for reasons of health.

Senate approval of White was expected swiftly. Unusually quiet and unobtrusive for a high-ranking Washington official, he is rated a first-class lawyer. In Denver, where he practiced law, he was not active in politics until he formed a Citizens for Kennedy group in 1960.

The cases the high court deferred included one contempt-of-Congress conviction, the constitutionality of the Robinson-Patman Act forbidding price-cutting "for the purpose of destroying competition," and two legal attacks by the states of Virginia and Florida on the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

5-4 Division Frequent

In contempt cases involving refusal of witnesses to answer questions about communism the court in recent years has been divided 5-to-4. Whittaker, known as a strict upholder of congressional powers, has voted regularly to sustain such convictions.

The President announced that White's post as deputy attorney general would be filled by his assistant, Nicholas deB. Katzenbach.

Gerrymander Hit by COPE In New York

New York—An intensive registration-and-vote drive has been launched by the New York State AFL-CIO with the goal of upsetting "the Republican-engineered gerrymandering of congressional districts" through an "outpouring" of labor votes in the November election.

Louis Hollander, chairman of the state COPE organization, said the program is already in operation in the upstate 33rd congressional district, which includes Ithaca, Binghamton and Elmira. He said it will be extended to other areas of the state this spring.

Addressing a statewide meeting of COPE representatives, Hollander charged that the redistricting enacted by the Republican-controlled legislature last fall "was a most outrageous action, whose only purpose was to bring about the election of an even greater number of reactionary representatives." He added:

"Despite the cleverest gerrymandering possible, the effect of this attempt to rob the people of real representation in Congress can be defeated if enough of our fellow citizens, in and out of the labor movement, are persuaded to register and to come out and vote on election day."

Conservation Corps, Job Plan For Youth Draw Wide Support

Conservationists and social workers, unions and church groups have joined in a major drive for legislation to remedy neglect of America's natural and human resources.

The Administration's Youth Employment Opportunities bill has won support from those concerned with improving forests and parklands, those concerned with the future of hundreds of thousands of out-of-school, out-of-work youngsters, and those—including the AFL-CIO—concerned with both.

A Senate bill, sponsored by Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.), has had committee approval since last September. The first floor action, however, is expected in the House, where a companion bill introduced by Rep. Carl D. Perkins (D-Ky.) was recently approved by the Education & Labor Committee and is awaiting Rules Committee clearance.

Two separate programs are provided in the legislation, but both share the common feature of providing idle youth with socially useful work. The two key provisions are:

- Formation of a Youth Conservation Corps, an improved model of one of the New Deal's most successful experiments—the Civilian Conservation Corps.
- A Youth Public Service Employment program designed to provide useful work experience for jobless youngsters between 16 and 21 in the employ of local governments and non-profit social and health agencies. The federal government would pay half the wages, up to $20 a week.

Both programs were included in a three-part package proposed by Pres. Kennedy last year. The third program, job training, was included in the Manpower Training bill recently enacted.

Humphrey Backs CCC-Type

Humphrey has been plugging for a CCC-type program for years. His Senate bill would authorize 30,000 enrollees the first year, with the number rising over a four-year period to 150,000.

The AFL-CIO declared in support of this program that "sufficient experience has been gained from operation of the old CCC to permit a full-scale operation" as contrasted with the pilot program proposed by Kennedy to enroll 6,000 young men a year for work on federal and state conservation projects.

Under the House bill, which is closer to the Administration request, up to 12,000 enrollees would be authorized in each of three years.

Both measures incorporate safeguards against use of enrollees on projects which would displace regular workers or contracted work, such as road construction.

Emphasizing the backlog of needed conservation projects, the House committee report noted that estimates by the Dept. of Interior and the Dept. of Agriculture showed that 80,000 man-years of work could be usefully employed each year on federal lands alone—many times the size of the program recommended.

CCC Record Cited

In its 10-year existence—halted by World War II mobilization—the CCC completed 28 million rods of fencing, 6 million check dams, 478 square yards of seeding and sodding, 4 million acres of forest stand improvement, and 13 million acres of tree insect control, the committee noted.

Unlike the CCC, which was divided in administration with the Army operating the camps, the new program would be under the direction of the Labor Dept., with a commission representing other interested agencies and a public advisory committee. Enrollees would be between the ages of 16 through 21 and would enlist for six-month terms. The base pay in the House bill, in addition to subsistence and quarters, would be $70 a month.

Complementing the conservation corps as a means of giving work experience to jobless youth would be the public service employment program. This would provide federal funds, on a 50-50 matching basis, to assist state and local government units, and private non-profit community service agencies, in creating worth while job opportunities for young people in or near their home communities.

The type of work envisaged would include service in schools, hospitals and libraries, park improvement and recreation and in civic organizations such as the Visiting Nurses Association and the Boy Scouts.

The program would permit the employment of 25,000 young persons a year on a full-time basis or a larger number on part-time. It is aimed at furnishing "services which would not otherwise be provided," and "experience in work which will encourage the enrollees to obtain further schooling and training."

On both committees, Republicans filed dissenting reports, with the House minority charging that the conservation program would result in establishing a "youth labor corps" which has "its counterpart in every country that is presently dominated or controlled by the Communists."

Office Employes Win 2 Montana Elections

Billings, Mont.—Employes of Consolidated Freightways in Montana voted for the Office Employes and rejected the unaffiliated Teamsters in two recent elections, OEIU Pres. Howard Coughlin has reported.

Coughlin said the vote among Billings office employes was OEIU 11, neither 1, Teamsters 0. Statewide it was OEIU 23, neither 5, Teamsters 1.

Bakery Unions Appoint Merger Plan Committees

Top-level committees have been appointed to discuss a merger between the AFL-CIO-affiliated American Bakery & Confectionery Workers and the Bakery & Confectionery Workers union which was expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of corrupt leadership.

The BCW last January elected a new "reform" slate of officers pledged to a cleanup of the union and to seek reaffiliation with the AFL-CIO through a merger with the ABC.

The ABC named an eight-man negotiating committee of Pres. Daniel E. Conway, Sec.-Treas. Curtis R. Sims, Exec. Vice Pres. John DeConcini, and five other executive board members—Peter W. Carbonara of Chicago; M. E. Hollis, Jr., Atlanta; Edward Kemmitt, San Francisco; Harry Lorber, New York, and Robert E. Lynn, Philadelphia. The BCW committee will be headed by Pres. Max Kralstein and Sec.-Treas. Henry Bartosh.

MAJOR IMPROVEMENTS in House-passed tax bill were asked by AFL-CIO in testimony by Research Dir. Stanley H. Ruttenberg before Senate Finance Committee. At left is AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller.

Labor Pushes Fight On Tax 'Windfall'

tually alone in defending the Administration's investment credit proposal—which would allow businessmen to reduce their tax payments by a portion of the cost of newly-purchased equipment.

While labor opposed the measure as a "mountainous giveaway," strong opposition was expressed also by fiscal conservatives who warned it would lead to a heavily unbalanced budget and by some business groups, including the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers.

The business groups, however, advanced a substitute proposal to permit more rapid tax write-offs for depreciation. Ruttenberg told the committee this would be "totally unjustified" and equally costly.

Less 'Embarrassing'

He pointed out that liberalized depreciation allowances also reduce taxes paid by corporations, but aren't as "embarrassing" to the firms because the money saved doesn't show up in after-tax profits.

"It makes little difference," Ruttenberg said, "whether the additional $1.2 billion tax benefit had been gained via the investment credit or the still faster depreciation write-off route. Either way, the deck is stacked against the average tax-paying family and the national interest."

If investment tax credit is left in the bill, the AFL-CIO spokesman said, it should be sharply limited to businesses "substantially engaged in or affected by international trade."

Ruttenberg said the problem of improving the nation's balance of payment position can be met through the Administration's trade and tariff reform program, through a greater contribution by other prosperous nations to foreign aid programs and the expenses of international organizations, and through "a system of 'off-shore procurement' in reverse."

"Just as a few years ago we wisely built up the dollar earnings of other nations by buying military and other supplies from them," he added, "other countries now must be encouraged to buy from us, particularly those who are directly receiving or indirectly benefiting from our aid."

End of All Exemptions Urged

Ruttenberg told the committee, headed by Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.), that the House bill "goes only part of the way" in closing the loopholes which give "preferential tax treatment" to income earned abroad.

Labor's position, he declared, is for "complete termination of all special tax exemptions and deferral privileges now enjoyed by Americans living abroad and businesses operating overseas, except in the case of income earned in less-developed countries."

The AFL-CIO also sharply criticized a provision in the House bill —not supported by the Administration—which would make many lobbying expenses of businesses tax deductible.

Declaring that this provision "would surely open wide the flood gates," Ruttenberg said:

"Every corporation in the country could well seek to have the public underwrite its lobbying efforts to lower its income taxes, on the ground that tax rates affect specific businesses . . . lobbying outlays can be expected to increase enormously."

In other areas of tax revision, the AFL-CIO:

- Supported Pres. Kennedy's request that "the inequitable dividend credit and exclusion be repealed."
- Urged that the House bill "be further tightened" to end the "business expense racket."
- Supported the House proposal to terminate the capital gains treatment on the sale of depreciable business assets and urged that it be made applicable also to "profiteering from the sale of real estate as well as from the sale of personal property."
- Endorsed the Administration proposal to raise the tax liability of savings and loan associations and mutual savings banks.

Ruttenberg praised the Administration's efforts to close tax loopholes as "a hopeful although belated beginning of tax reform." He added:

"Only when loopholes are closed and the billions of dollars lost by the Treasury each year are recouped, can Congress afford to significantly lighten the near-wartime tax burden still being imposed upon the average American family."

AFL-CIO Revises Consumer Booklet

A new, completely revised edition of the AFL-CIO's popular pamphlet on consumer finances, "Consumer Beware," is now available from the federation.

The 24-page pamphlet includes complete up-to-date tables on state small loan rates, summaries of state laws on installment sales contracts and true rates of interest on various types of loans.

"Consumer Beware," Publication No. 47, is available from the Pamphlet Division, AFL-CIO Dept. of Publications. Single copies are free; up to 100 copies the price is 15 cents each; the bulk rate is $13.50 per 100.

In First Nine Months:

52 Firms Reported Pledged To Anti-Discrimination Plan

"Significant progress" has been achieved in making equal opportunity a reality both in government and on federal contract work, Pres. Kennedy's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity has reported in marking its first anniversary.

Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, after filing a 64-page report with the White House, told a press conference his committee has held talks with the AFL-CIO on the idea of signing up unions in the "Plans for Progress" program.

A total of 52 employers, covering 3.5 million workers and including the biggest defense contractors, has pledged under these plans to reexamine employment practices and make periodic reports to ensure full observance of the merit principle. Johnson said plans are under negotiation with 31 more employers, with a goal of 100 not far off.

Asst. Sec. of Labor Jerry R. Holleman, executive vice-chairman of the committee, met recently with the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Committee to discuss labor's role in "Plans for Progress."

Johnson also told reporters he had discussed the matter with AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

Johnson, who serves as chairman of the committee, said worker confidence in the committee is demonstrated by figures which show 1,850 complaints were received in the first year of its work. This compares, he noted, with a combined total of 2,095 received over a 7-year span by two committees under the Eisenhower Administration.

In government employment, the Johnson group reported 1,146 complaints filed and 358 disposed of, with corrective action taken in 128 or 36 percent. In contract employment, there were 704 complaints filed and 386 disposed of, with corrective action taken in 215 or 65 percent.

National Policy Seen

Johnson said Kennedy's executive order expressed a national policy that "the doors of opportunity should be opened equally to all in government employment and in work on government contracts."

But, he added, the elimination of discrimination requires more than "a mere policing" of federal contracts and government employment. "To strike at the roots of discrimination itself," Johnson said, a four-point program has been developed:

- Signing the nation's largest corporations to voluntary plans pledging them to positive steps; smaller employers will be enlisted as well.
- Negotiations with unions for similar voluntary plans "to help eliminate discrimination in a field which otherwise is very difficult to reach."
- Review of personnel rosters by Cabinet officers and department heads to determine if anyone has been passed over for promotion for reasons irrelevant to merit.
- A conference of educators and community leaders planned for mid-May to map an action program in cases where "outmoded customs" stand as obstacles to opportunities.

The report, entitled "The First Nine Months," reviewed the policies and programs and specific actions taken in the two basic areas of government employment and government contract employment. It also dealt with state employment services, the labor liaison program and community relations programs.

In government employment, the committee's original survey showed a concentration of non-white employes in the lower grades. Thus the emphasis was put on improving promotional and upgrading policies and on recruiting qualified minority group workers for skilled and professional grade levels.

In private employment under government contracts, the report noted that the checking of a justified complaint usually uncovers a wider policy or practice in need of change.

"This has resulted," the report explained, "in Negroes becoming production workers in a tobacco plant in North Carolina; getting into production jobs in an oil refinery in Illinois and oil and chemical plants in Louisiana; becoming seamstresses in a textile plant in South Carolina; getting metal fabricating jobs in a Missouri plant; transferring into production work in aircraft plants in Georgia and North Carolina; getting carpenter work in Florida; moving into electronic production jobs in Connecticut and Tennessee, and many other breakthroughs in other areas."

Such "breakthroughs" frequently lead to similar changes in the general geographical area, the report added.

Joint Safety Committee Established by AEC

The Atomic Energy Commission, after years of urging by the AFL-CIO, has announced the creation of a labor-management advisory committee to make recommendations on the radiological aspects of industrial safety.

Labor members of the group are Pres. Peter T. Schoemann of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters; Pres. Gordon M. Freeman of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Pres. James A. Brownlow of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept.; Vice Pres. Elwood Swisher of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers, and Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation.

Announcement by AEC Chairman Glenn T. Seaborg that the committee had been established was the climax of a campaign for a labor-advisory group in the agency that opened at the AFL-CIO convention in 1957, and grew out of a series of conferences between AFL-CIO representatives and AEC spokesmen under the Kennedy Administration on the function of such a body.

Seaborg said the committee would bring together spokesmen for management and for unions with membership in atomic energy industries to discuss general problems, procedures and requirements in the area of safety.

AEC technicians, the announcement said, will be made available to the committee for consultation so that the hazards of radioactivity in all phases of industrial safety can be fully explored.

The new committee will not concern itself with matters usually handled through collective bargaining.

At Machinists' Conference:

Full Employment Held Basic to Trade

New York—Given a full employment economy in America, an increase of imports from foreign countries would have a negligible effect on job security and industry profits.

This was the consensus of a panel of union and government experts and Dir. Gen. David Morse of the Intl. Labor Organization at the 34th semi-annual convention of the New York State Council of Machinists. Theme of the session was "World Trade: Your Job."

Addressing the 200 delegates were Stanley Ruttenberg, AFL-CIO research director; Everett Kassalow, research director of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., and Hy Bookbinder, former AFL-CIO legislative representative and now labor assistant to Sec. of Commerce Luther Hodges. Rudy Faupl, IAM international affairs representative and U.S. worker delegate to the ILO, was panel moderator.

A positive approach to liberalization of international trade, said Morse in a dinner speech, "is possible on one major condition; that is, continuing expansion of economic activity and rising levels of employment in the industrialized countries."

"The corollary to large-scale foreign aid and liberal trade policies," said the ILO chief, "is growing prosperity—and well-spread prosperity—at home. If employment and earnings were to shrink or even to expand insufficiently fast, trade unions and governments would find it hard to resist a resurgence of protectionism."

Kennedy Program Backed

The panel speakers urged support of Pres. Kennedy's trade expansion program. Raising tariffs, said Ruttenberg, is a poor solution because there is no guarantee that an industry, adversely affected by foreign imports, would maintain its previous price level if duties were increased. He offered as examples of such a policy the flat glass, Swiss watch and non-ferrous (lead and zinc) industries, where tariffs were increased.

Increased industry efficiency can meet overseas competition, he asserted, citing the example of the transistor radio industry which did not exist in America until Japan began producing these items for the American market. Today, he noted, American industry is successfully competing with Japanese imports, which have fallen 1.5 million units while American production has increased 750,000 units.

Ruttenberg emphasized to the Machinist audience that AFL-CIO support of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962 was conditioned upon inclusion of readjustment assistance for workers and businesses injured by an increase in foreign competition.

Kassalow argued that cutting foreign trade would not solve America's unemployment problem.

Exports Not the Key

"Basically the problem of full employment," said the IUD economist, "has to do with taxes, prices, wages, investment. Foreign trade or increasing exports is not the key to full employment."

Bookbinder minimized the problem of foreign competition by arguing that "there are plenty of untapped markets in this country, where consumers could buy more of what we produce. If 10 million more purchasers right here in America could buy what we produce, there would be no need to worry about imports."

FIRST CONGRESSIONAL DINNER of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. draws heavy outpouring of House and Senate members and Administration officials. Department Pres. Walter P. Reuther is shown speaking to audience that numbered more than 400. Reuther said dinner would be made annual affair.

Missile Sites Labor Unit to Tour Bases

A renewed effort to instill a "sense of urgency" among workers and management officials in the missile and space programs was announced by Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg after a Pentagon conference of labor-management representatives.

Goldberg said there had been a "small" upsurge in work interruptions at missile sites in the January-March period and announced an Apr. 25-26 tour for person-to-person conversations.

Members of the President's Missile Sites Labor Commission, he said, would inform workers on local sites of the procedures available for settling disputes and encourage use of these procedures.

The announcement came as the Senate Investigations subcommittee, headed by Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark.), began hearings on what it charged were "pyramided" profits by companies in the missile field.

The parent Senate Government Operations Committee had previously issued a sharply denunciatory report charging that before Mar. 31, 1961, the missile and space programs had been "intolerably delayed" by work disputes and what it termed "slowdowns."

'Sharp' vs. 'Small'

The report cited a "substantial" reduction in man-days lost in management-labor disputes following creation of the Missile Sites Labor Commission but said the trend upward in 1962 was "sharp." This was the same increase to 2,400 man-days lost per month that Goldberg described as "small."

The Government Operations Committee did not recommend special legislation to impose dispute-settling machinery.

The Investigations subcommittee, as it turned to the issue of business profits, cited evidence that three companies had "pyramided" profits of more than $9 million each for a total of $29.5 million or 20 percent on production of equipment for Nike missile bases.

"I'm not saying for the moment that was unreasonable," said McClellan. The committee nevertheless had a duty to see if the government "might not save money" by eliminating some of the "tiers" of subcontractors, he said.

The three companies named were Western Electric, the prime contractor; Douglas Aircraft, a major subcontractor; and Consolidated Western Steel Co., which actually built the equipment.

A committee staff investigator, Robert E. Dunne, also charged that Western Electric and Douglas Aircraft pocketed an additional $7 million in "pure profits"—with no costs or expenses—from sale of van-size trailers built for Nike bases.

The Army eventually cut the price in two steps, an ordnance engineer testified, from $12,000 to $5,300 for each trailer. Western Electric and Douglas officials challenged the accuracy of the committee's profit figures.

Low Pay Seen Subsidizing Symphonies

New York—Musicians are "subsidizing" symphony orchestras through their low salaries, August Hecksher, White House cultural coordinator, said in a television discussion which found the nation's cultural life economically unsound.

"One realizes," he said, "to how large an extent our symphony orchestras are subsidized—not by government or by municipalities or even by foundations—actually by the low salaries, the low wages which our musicians are forced to accept in our society.

"In the long run I don't think we can accept that any more than we can accept the thought that our universities should be subsidized by low wages on the part of professors."

He said it is "perfectly normal" for municipalities and states to give support or subsidies to the arts.

"If the federal government should match money with the states," he added, "and the states with localities, I don't think we would find the federal government affecting the freedom of the individual artist.

Weak Foundations

"Some of our greatest institutions of art are resting on very weak foundations.

"There isn't a great opera company, there isn't a great symphony orchestra which isn't in an insecure economic position. There is hardly a great performer whose own life isn't economically insecure."

Hecksher said the "last thing" the federal government wants to do with culture is to "coordinate" it, but that cultural activities as they exist in different parts of the government "perhaps" can be coordinated to the country's benefit.

AFL-CIO Backs Scholarship Fund

The AFL-CIO News has joined newspapers throughout the world in contributing to the Dag Hammarskjold Scholarship Fund set up by the United Nations Correspondents Association to honor the late secretary-general of the UN.

The federation, in the name of the News, has given $250 to the scholarship fund, noting that the paper has maintained a correspondent at the UN for many years because of the importance the labor movement attaches to the world organization.

The News' correspondent at the UN is Arnold Beichman.

Union Officials Named To Youth Aid Council

Three labor representatives have been named to the Citizens Advisory Council to the President's Committee on Juvenile Delinquency in recognition of labor's role in the development of the country's young people.

They are Pres. John H. Lyons, Jr., of the Iron Workers; Sec.-Treas. Thomas L. Pitts of the California AFL-CIO, and Dir. Leo Perlis of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities.

W. Don Ellinger, formerly director of COPE Area 8, which is comprised of Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri, since earlier this year has been labor and employment consultant to the committee.

The committee was set up under the Juvenile Delinquency & Youth Offenses Act passed by Congress last year and is intended to back programs which will demonstrate and evaluate techniques and practices that will contribute to the prevention and control of juvenile delinquency. Expenditure of $30 million over three years was authorized.

Plans are under way for demonstration projects, training programs and informational exchanges and technical assistance.

Pilot Projects Authorized

Grants to help 12 to 20 communities plan comprehensive demonstration projects which would utilize all of a city's resources in a total attack on the problem are envisioned. Well-developed projects if successful can be used as models for action in other areas, it is felt.

Planning grants will be made, the committee has decided, where proposed demonstration programs are comprehensive in that they attack all sources of youth problems; involve a broad selection of public and private agencies; are paid for in part by community funds; include a plan for self-evaluation, and are of the type that can be effectively transferred from one city to another.

Citizens Group Formed To Aid Public Schools

Formation of a new national citizens' group to impress upon the American people the need for adequate financial support of the public schools has been announced in Washington.

Mrs. Eugene Meyer, widow of a former publisher of the Washington Post, is chairman of the unit, called the National Committee for Support of the Public Schools. Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers is one of the 39 members from public service, business, the arts and the professions.

The committee will do no lobbying for legislation and will go beyond the federal government in its quest for proper financing for the schools, Mrs. Meyer said.

"We shall not propose legislation," she stressed, "but will rely on the intelligence of the American people first to make the maximum effort locally, then to demand whatever help may be needed from their state governments and the federal government to supplement the resources of local school districts."

Areas of Activity Listed

The committee will try to convince the public, she said, that modern, efficient elementary and secondary schools are essential in an age that places emphasis on science and technology. In addition it will prepare reports and studies on the tax structure that finances public education, and will propose improvements in the quality of education.

"The committee believes that the American people will provide the funds needed for public schools," said Mrs. Meyer, "once they appreciate more fully the value of education and the critical financial situation faced by many public schools."

Bond Issues Rejected

Pres. Emeritus Ralph W. McDonald of Bowling Green (O.) State University, executive director of the committee, said the group is concerned at the number of school construction bond issues that have been turned down by voters.

Other officers are former Pres. Harold Taylor of Sarah Lawrence College, Bronxville, N. Y., vice chairman, and David Scoll, New York attorney, secretary-treasurer.

Among the members in addition to Reuther are former Pres. Harry S. Truman; Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt; Alf M. Landon, Republican presidential candidate in 1936; Gen. Omar N. Bradley; former Pres. James B. Conant of Harvard University; Pres. James G. Patton of the Farmers Union and Poet Carl Sandburg.

In AFL-CIO Testimony:

Curb on Literacy Tests Backed As Safeguard of Right to Vote

The arbitrary use of literacy tests "to deny the right to vote" must be barred by federal legislation, the AFL-CIO told Congress.

The federation declared, however, that "elimination of restrictions on voting rights cannot and must not be a substitute for meaningful legislation to eliminate discrimination and segregation in the fields of education, jobs and housing."

The AFL-CIO's position was presented to the Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights by Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller and Associate Gen. Counsel Thomas E. Harris. The subcommittee is holding hearings on measures designed to abolish discriminatory literacy tests.

Biemiller told the committee there is widespread evidence that literacy tests "are frequently used in many areas of the country to deny the right to vote to many citizens based on their race or color." He stressed that the AFL-CIO strongly favors legislation to bar arbitrary use of literacy tests rather than a constitutional amendment.

He noted that the 1961 report of the Civil Rights Commission recommended unanimously legislation providing that completion of "at least six grades of formal education" shall be "sufficient for qualification" as a voter. Nineteen states now have laws requiring voters to demonstrate their literacy in order to vote.

Biemiller supported the bill introduced by the Senate majority and minority leaders setting up the sixth grade qualification as evidence of literacy. He endorsed also the bill's provision that literacy in a foreign language—specifically Spanish—should be acceptable grounds for the qualification of voters.

Aimed at Arbitrary Use

He said the bill would not abolish literacy qualifications as such, but only the "arbitrary use of such tests to deny the right to vote" to citizens who on any reasonable grounds are entitled to it.

The AFL-CIO spokesman also approved provisions of a bill introduced by Sen. Kenneth B. Keating (R-N. Y.) that would extend the legislation to elections for state as well as federal office. Biemiller urged the additional provisions of the Keating bill as "clearly necessary and desirable" and urged committee consideration.

Harris reviewed the proposed legislation in terms of the Constitution and the 14th and 15th Amendments. He contended the U. S. Supreme Court would uphold the legislation if it believes "Congress had a rational basis for concluding that literacy tests were being used as a cover for impermissible discriminations with respect to voting."

Congress now has the power, Harris argued, "to regulate state and presidential elections not only to insure that no one be denied the right to vote on account of race, color or sex, but that no one be denied the franchise by any state-prescribed voting qualifications violative of due process or equal protection."

AFL-CIO Hits Flaws In Wiretap Proposal

cover electronic eavesdropping devices as well as actual tapping of telephone lines. He asked also that use of wiretap information for backmail purposes, "whether or not lawfully obtained, should explicitly be made criminal."

Biemiller told the committee that labor's position, spelled out in a resolution adopted at the 1961 AFL-CIO convention, is for:

"Federal legislation which should contain an absolute ban on tapping or divulging of tapped information by any person—private, federal or local official—with the following exception: federal agents, under specific court orders, may tap and divulge in an area clearly defined to cover espionage, treason and kidnapping. The ban on divulging should include a prohibition of the use of tapped information at congressional hearings."

IUE For Tighter Laws

Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers also urged tightening, rather than liberalization, of wiretapping laws.

He said private and business phones have been tapped "in order to spy on unions, business partners, political rivals and possibly erring husbands and wives."

Wire taps by state and local law enforcement officers, he said in a statement to the committee, have been used against union members at Henderson, N. C., and "in New Orleans against clergymen advocating racial desegregation."

Canada Steelworkers Give 5 Scholarships

Toronto, Ont.—The Canadian Steelworkers Education Fund has established five annual scholarships for union members at the new Canadian Labor College to be opened this summer by McGill University and the University of Montreal.

Each scholarship will cover transportation to and from Montreal and $125 a week for the seven-week course.

Areas With 6% Jobless Edge Upward in March

the Labor Dept. said, but the job gains were too slight to justify reclassification.

When the 1960-61 recession hit bottom a year ago, the areas of substantial unemployment—6 percent and over jobless—hit an all-time high of 101. This total was reduced steadily to 60 such areas in November and December, but has moved upward since then.

The number of smaller areas with unemployment of 6 percent or over totaled 203 in March. This group totaled 204 in February, 199 in January and 184 in March 1961. The pre-recession total was 109 in March 1960.

Only four major areas were reclassified in March.

The giant Los Angeles-Long Beach area—the nation's second largest job market—improved from Group D, with 6.0 to 8.9 percent unemployment, to Group C, 3.0 to 5.9 percent joblessness.

The job situation worsened in three major areas. In New Jersey, the Paterson-Clifton-Passaic area and the Trenton area moved into the 6.0 to 8.9 percent unemployment range. Scranton, Pa., already suffering 9.0 to 11.9 percent unemployment, slumped into the highest unemployment category—Group F, with a 12.0 percent or higher jobless rate.

Among smaller job areas, the cities of Monroe, La., Geneva, N. Y., and Roanoke Rapids, N. C., were added to the 6 percent or over grouping. Removed from that list were Leesburg, Fla., Corning-Hornell, N. Y., Kinston, N. C., and Ardmore, Okla.

The Labor Dept. report said the recent job improvements reflected "slight-to-moderate advances in manufacturing employment, centered in the durable goods sector, particularly in metals and metal-using industries."

The report added that projected manpower needs reported by leading employers to local public employment offices in the 150 major areas "point to a continuing employment uptrend between March and May."

Seasonal Gains Seen

The report went on to say that the expected gains would be "predominantly seasonal," most likely in construction, trade and service. In most areas, "slight-to-moderate expansions" were predicted for factory employment, with job gains seen in such key durable goods areas as metals, machinery and ordnance.

But, the report cautioned, "anticipated requirements reported by major auto centers indicate a slight decline in payrolls in that industry may be in the offing to mid-May."

USES Services Open To Foreign Students

Students from foreign countries seeking summer employment again this year will have the facilities of the 2,000 local offices of the U.S. Employment Service open to them, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has announced.

Vote Drive in South Hailed as Service

A drive to increase the number of Negro and white southerners registered and voting has been praised by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany as "a valuable service to advance and make meaningful the democratic process for all Americans."

The campaign has been launched by the Southern Regional Council, in cooperation with a number of civil rights groups. The two-year Voters Education Project has received financial grants of $250,000 from the Taconic Foundation and $75,000 from the Field Foundation.

In a letter to Wiley Branton, Arkansas attorney who is heading the program, Meany said the project "is wholly in accord with the policy objective of the AFL-CIO to assure all American citizens their full and free exercise of the franchise."

PERSISTENT UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEM is illustrated by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany at House hearings on public works construction bill. The chart shows that joblessness declined 45.7 percent a year after the low point of the 1948-49 recession, but only 20.4 percent 12 months after the bottom of the 1960-61 recession. At left is Rep. John A. Blatnik (D-Minn.), House sponsor of the labor-backed public works bill.

Kennedy Sets May 21 For Economic Parley

A White House Conference on National Economic Issues has been set for next May 21-23 on recommendation of the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy.

Pres. Kennedy will make the opening address to a group expected to number between 150 and 200. It will include representatives of the general public as well as union and management spokesmen.

The date for the conference, which had been previously approved in principle by the President, was announced at the Labor Dept. after a two-day meeting of the labor-management advisory group.

The advisers were unable to reach agreement on a broad statement on collective bargaining and industrial peace, which had been tentatively scheduled for delivery to Kennedy Apr. 4. Instead, a Labor Dept. spokesman at a news conference said that a third draft of a proposed statement would be circulated to members of the 21-member advisory group, with the hope that agreement could be reached at the commission's next meeting, set for May 1 and 2.

In a statement released by Vice Chairman Luther H. Hodges, presiding temporarily in the absence of Chairman Arthur J. Goldberg, the advisory group took "formal notice" of the success of the recent steel negotiations.

The "thoughtfulness and sense of responsibility" shown by both sides, the group said, was "most heartening and encouraging."

"It demonstrates better than any exposition we can compose," the statement continued, "that free collective bargaining is capable of fashioning itself into an instrument for the promotion of the general welfare."

The Steelworkers and steel management, it said, had approached their problems "in a reasonable and conciliatory manner, well in advance of any crisis."

The May 21-23 conference will include public, labor and business representatives suggested by members of the advisory group plus others. Invitations to attend will be sent by the President.

Speakers will include Goldberg, Hodges, Sec. of State Dean Rusk, Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy, Treasury Sec. Douglas Dillon and Chairman Walter W. Heller of the Council of Economic Advisers.

There will also be five round-table discussions dealing with major issues the Labor-Management Advisory Committee has under consideration. Chairmen of the round-tables will be drawn from the Advisory Committee.

All sessions, including the round-table discussions, will be public.

Felony Trial Faces Man in 'Bunco' Case

Los Angeles—William Stockton, alleged director of a scheme by which scores of aspiring actors and actresses were defrauded of thousands of dollars, has been arrested in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., on complaint of the Screen Actors Guild and is being extradited for trial here.

Stockton and Jack Montgomery, former actor's agent still being sought, are accused in an eight-point felony charge of collecting $215 from each of their victims as SAG "initiation fees and dues" after promising them roles in a filmed TV series. The SAG has never authorized anyone outside its office to collect money for it.

URW Urges War on Bias In All Locals

Akron, O.—Top officers of the Rubber Workers have reminded officers of URW local unions that the union has both a moral and a legal responsibility to help eliminate race discrimination in hiring, promotion, layoffs and recalls of workers represented by the union.

A letter signed by Pres. George Burdon, Vice Pres. Peter Bommarito and Treas. I. Gold points out that the President's Committee on Equal Opportunity requires unions to certify that their policies and practices are "consistent" with the nondiscrimination provisions of government contracts.

The URW officers added:

"In addition to this being the law of the land under a presidential executive order, it is also our moral responsibility."

Meany Demands U.S. Probe Of 'Price-Gouging' by Steel

Full Program Backed:

Foreign Aid Called Vital to U.S. Goals

By David L. Perlman

Terming long-term foreign aid "absolutely necessary" to America's interests, the AFL-CIO has urged Congress to approve in full Pres. Kennedy's request for funds to help "poverty-plagued, developing countries" in Asia, Africa and Latin America.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller told the House Foreign Affairs Committee that a comparison of "the free world as it is today with the world as it might have been" without America's foreign aid efforts over the years is "convincing proof" of the value of the aid programs.

The committee hearings marked the first stage in the annual congressional battle over the level of foreign aid spending.

Kennedy last month asked Congress to vote a total of $3.38 billion for economic aid, including $600 million as a first installment on a four-year $3 billion Alliance for Progress program in Latin America.

The President's economic aid program is more than $1 billion above the amount appropriated last year — after heavy slashes had been made by the House.

A separate military aid budget, on which the AFL-CIO did not testify, asked $1.5 billion for the 1963 fiscal year, a reduction from last year's appropriations.

Biemiller told the House committee that labor disagrees strongly with those who argue that the U.S. must "drastically cut back" foreign aid in order to meet "urgent needs at home."

Sees No Conflict

Not only is there "no conflict," he declared, but foreign aid benefits the domestic economy with 73 cents of every dollar "spent directly for goods and services produced in the U.S."

Biemiller said the money the U.S. sends abroad to help eliminate

Job Force Drops; Idle Rate 5.5%

Visible, chronic unemployment continued to dominate the economic scene in March as joblessness dipped seasonally to 4.4 million and the unemployment rate registered 5.5 percent.

The March figures released by the Labor Dept. revealed however what the government's top economist described as a "good bit of submerged unemployment," stemming from a shrinkage of 315,000 in the civilian labor force over the year.

Dr. Walter Heller, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, told the two-day Secretary of Labor's Conference for Editors and Reporters, at which the job figures were released, that the reduction in size of the civilian labor force from a year ago, in light of projections for a sharp increase, was "disturbing."

Over the past few months the civilian labor force, has either remained the same over a 12-month period or dropped as in March, indicating that many persons are dropping out of the labor force and not actively seek-

Missile Labor Record Praised by Goldberg

The record of labor-management relations in construction of the nation's missile bases has been "in all candor a pretty good record," Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has told the nation's labor reporters.

"I am thoroughly convinced" that the problem of work relations and work stoppages "should be handled voluntarily" through the President's Missile Sites Labor Commission, Goldberg continued.

"You could not do as well under the most drastic type of legislation," he declared, in reference to bills pending in Congress to impose sanctions against stoppages.

The secretary gave his statement, supporting it with charts on the 10-month over-all record of the Missile Sites Commission, to a briefing session of reporters and editors in the management-labor field from all over the country.

Since the commission began op-

Pressure Seen Telling:

GOP Feud Erupts Over Health Care

A bitter Republican internal battle has erupted over a proposed party substitute for the Anderson-King health care bill, with GOP National Committee Chairman William E. Miller pushing the substitute and House Republican leaders rejecting and denouncing it.

Supporters of the Anderson-King bill, backed by labor and the Kennedy Administration, interpreted the Republican uproar as a confession the GOP was suffering severe pressure on the health-care issue. At the same time they ridiculed Miller's suddenly adopted substitute as both inadequate and grossly wasteful.

Picking up a bill offered by Rep. Frank T. Bow (R-O.), which would give "free" government-paid private insurance company health policies to citizens 65 years of age and older, Miller as national chairman urged all 170 other Republican House members to "join me" in co-sponsoring the measure.

"We have to be for something," retorted Miller, when House GOP Policy Committee Chairman John W. Byrnes (Wis.) coldly commented:

"This doesn't represent any policy that was made through normal channels on the Republican side of the House."

A week later, only a small minority of Republican members had "joined" Miller, himself a New York representative, in "co-sponsorship."

There were these other developments:

- An analysis by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security said the Bow substitute would burden the Treasury with costs of about $1.75 billion a year, rising each year, without providing any revenue source, and would offer 17 million aged citizens only "illusory" benefits.

"It can fairly be said," declared department Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank, that the bill's "only meaningful promise" is "to the insurance industry—the promise of profits without providing any real protection to the aged."

- House Speaker John W. McCormack (D-Mass.) said he was now "more optimistic" that the Anderson-King bill, stuck for more than a year in the Ways & Means Committee, would be favorably reported next month. When it reaches the House floor, he said, "it will pass."
- Democratic National Committee Chairman John M. Bailey commented that Miller must be receiving the same reports from GOP county chairmen that Democratic county chairmen send—that the people "want health care for the aged" through the Anderson-King bill's provision for financing it through the social security system.
- Former Rep. Aime Forand (D-R.I.), now chairman of the fast-growing National Council of Senior Citizens, lashed the Bow-Miller substitute as a "last-ditch political smokescreen" designed to provide conservative Republicans with a pretense they were "for" some kind of health care plan, even though it offers a "hodge-podge of

Indignation Swells, Led By Kennedy

By Robert B. Cooney

The steel industry's "corporate abuse of economic might" and its challenge to the "power of government and of our entire society" must not go unanswered, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has declared.

The spotlight of public attention "must quickly be placed on all the details," Meany said. He demanded "a direct and public investigation of this action by federal agencies and the Congress."

Meany lashed the $6-a-ton steel industry price rise as a "price-gouging action" and "a direct affront" to the American people as a mounting wave of public indignation swept the country led by Pres. Kennedy's sharp attack on the steel firms for their "irresponsible defiance" of the public interest.

Kennedy, in a grim mood and speaking in stern tones over television, assailed the "simultaneous and identical" price hikes as "wholly unjustifiable."

He charged that "a tiny handful of steel executives" had acted in "pursuit of private power and profit" and with "utter contempt for the interests of 185 million Americans."

Kennedy pointed out the steel industry leaders had boosted prices at a time when the American people were being asked for "restraint and sacrifice," when reservists are asked to leave home and families, when the nation faces crises in Berlin and Southeast Asia, when "servicemen are risking their lives."

The action of U. S. Steel in boosting prices by $6 a ton effective April 11—followed by a series of identical price increases by other steel firms—sparked these reactions:

- Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-

Kennedy Asks Extension of Jobless Pay

Pres. Kennedy has asked Congress to continue the government's temporary program of extended jobless benefits for another year because "there are still large numbers of long-term unemployed" and "it seems unlikely" that permanent improvements in unemployment compensation standards can be enacted this year.

Noting that the temporary program (TUC) had expired on Apr. 1, except for persons already receiving extended benefits, the Pres-

Injunction Issued:

New York Teachers End 1-Day Walkout

New York—This city's thousands of public school teachers went back to their classrooms Apr. 12 after a one-day strike called off by the United Federation of Teachers executive board when the state Supreme Court issued a temporary injunction directing the officers to end the walkout.

The strike followed a turbulent delegate meeting in which the UFT officers split, with Pres. Charles Cogan and the executive board urging a delay for further collective bargaining on salary increases. Other officers urged a walkout. The margin for an immediate strike was narrow—2,544 to 2,231.

Behind was a tortuous history of negotiations totally confused by wrangling between state and city governments over budgets and the amount of state aid funds.

The teachers, whose salaries now range from $4,800 to $8,600 a year, demanded increases totaling $53 million. The Board of Education finally stated it had no more than $28 million available. That would amount to an average of $700 per teacher.

On the eve of the walkout, Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R) announced the city could legally borrow against deferred state aid funds and Mayor Robert F. Wagner (D) declared this would mean a $48 million increase for the current budget.

Delegates Reject Plea

The UFT Delegate Assembly nevertheless narrowly rejected the executive board's pleas for delay until a report from a committee named by Wagner to search for new funds, and the walkout began.

It was the second one-day strike in the history of the UFT. The earlier walkout, on Nov. 7, 1960, ended with appointment of an advisory committee that recommended to a former Board of Education that genuine collective bargaining be adopted. That unit was later ousted by the state legislature and the newly-appointed board named by Wagner put the advisory committee proposals into effect. The UFT last December won bargaining rights for the 40,000 public school teachers in a secret-ballot election.

The fiscal crisis and the urgency of the teachers for sharp salary increases — which newspapers, businessmen and labor unions concede they deserve—still collided.

Behind all this was the fouled-up situation of the public school system as a victim, entangled with state, local and partisan politics.

The system is a billion-dollar business affecting more than a million pupils plus the thousands of teachers, but observers agree it hasn't been run along intelligent management lines for half a century.

Despite all the experience gained in labor-management relations, there isn't any kind of grievance procedure for teachers.

Albany Controls Finances

Despite the fact that New York City has a budget second only to that of the federal government, that its population is larger than the population of 43 of the 50 states—it has no more control over its finances than a small village. Its finances are controlled in Albany, the state capital.

Everybody is responsible for the schools with the result that nobody is responsible. The governor has something to say about it, the state legislature, the mayor, the city Board of Estimate, the city's Board of Education, the State Dept. of Education—there are "bosses" all around, so that the school system is bedevilled by the kind of politics which makes the welfare of pupils relatively secondary.

There are school buildings which date from the Civil War and look like it. This despite the fact that $634 million was allocated to public education in 1960-61 out of the city's total expense budget of $2.35 billion—more than a quarter of the total.

The Condon-Wadlin Act imposes penalties so savage—immediate discharge and loss of all rights even if rehired—that it hasn't been enforced since its passage in 1947. Yet with some 21,000 to 25,000 teachers on strike, School Board Pres. Max J. Rubin said they were "out of jobs. They have themselves terminated their employment." The statement was generally considered absurd, since it is difficult to see how a school system could function with half its teachers ousted.

The UFT executive board at first said the union would defy the Supreme Court injunction, but in a split meeting decided to obey, and the walkout ended.

In a situation demanding the highest kind of statesmanship, it was obvious that in the preceding months there had been a failure of communication, a lack of goodwill and trust, a series of state-versus-city jousts that left the teachers embittered and frustrated. A million school pupils were caught in the one-day squeeze.

Bethlehem, Pa., Mayor Hit by NLRB Charge

Bethlehem, Pa.—The Clothing Workers, in filing charges of unfair labor practices against the Forte Neckwear Co. here, have accused the mayor of Bethlehem, the public safety director and two city detectives with helping the employer by intimidating workers who had signed union membership cards.

Specifically named as "agents" of the company—the city's largest unorganized employer—were Mayor H. Gordon Payrow, Jr.; Public Safety Dir. Irwin Good and Detectives Ralph Fleming and George Cherais.

The charges against the firm were filed with the National Labor Relations Board regional office in Philadelphia.

The ACWA organizing drive at the neckwear plant began in January under the direction of National Rep. Murray Gassman.

Gassman reported to the NLRB that the employers, Robert and Mary Forte, with Payrow, Good and the two detectives "by threats, promises, interrogation and surveillance have interfered with, restrained and coerced" the employes.

He said that the Mayor "instructed" Good to "protect" the employes against the union, and that the latter then sent the two detectives into the plant. The detectives questioned employes as to whether they had signed union cards, Gassman asserted, and attempted to coerce them into signing affidavits against the union.

Anderson-King a Family Need, Says Dr. Spock

The nation's best-known specialist in child care, Dr. Benjamin Spock, says health insurance for the aged under the social security system is essential for the well-being of youngsters.

In a series of three columns distributed to weekly newspapers throughout the country, Dr. Spock finds that the "emotional stress" of a sudden hospital bill for a grandparent is felt throughout the family group.

"The burden most often falls on parents in their 30s or 40s, when their children are growing up but are not yet self-supporting," he points out. "The bills for food, clothing and housing are at a maximum and cannot easily be reduced . . . At this stage in a family's development a whopping hospital bill for an aged grandparent . . . can be shattering . . .

"What do you do—as the breadwinner of the family—to meet this crisis?

"Do you allow your retired parents to go on public relief? . . . Or do you exhaust your own savings, mortgage your home, dip into the fund for your children's education or even use some of the money intended to pay for the special medical needs of a handicapped child?

"Neither you nor anyone else would choose to do any of these things. And yet you might have to face such facts."

Fortunately, Dr. Spock says, a "sound and sensible" remedy is available in the Anderson-King bill, which he describes as "family security through social security."

shiny gimmicks that wouldn't work." "I'm not surprised there was consternation" among Republican House leaders at Miller's surprise endorsement of the bill, he said.

Income Tax Rebates

The Bow bill would provide government payments of $125 a year, through income tax rebates to people 65 years of age and older, for private-company health insurance policies.

It would offer two benefit plans. One offers $12 a day for 90 days a year toward hospital charges plus supplemental payments and a maximum of $300 for surgical fees. The other, said the AFL-CIO analysis, is "essentially a catastrophic illness plan" providing "at least 75 percent" of specified medical expenses, with $100 deductible, to a lifetime maximum of $5,000, or with $200 deductible, to a lifetime maximum of $10,000.

Cruikshank pointed out that there were vast differences between actual provisions of the bill and a sweeping "preamble" recently devised by Bow that talks about objectives. He listed specific weaknesses:

- There is no guarantee of specific health services. The "common practice" of physicians has often been to interpret insurance protection as an increase in a patient's "ability to pay" and thus to raise fees.
- There is no legal requirement for insurance companies to provide proposed cash benefits for the government premium payment of $125 a year. Companies might charge a higher premium, burdening the individual with an additional cost.
- The hospitalization payment of $12 a day "falls far short" of meeting the need when a semi-private hospital room costs "close to twice that in most cities" and "continues to rise."
- An insurance company could raise premium rates for a person who becomes seriously ill until costs go "far beyond his reach."
- Since existing private health insurance policies in 1961 paid back in benefits only 39 percent of premium receipts, administrative costs and profits under the Bow bill might mean "as little as $50 worth of actual protection for the $125 premium taken out of the federal Treasury." The administrative economies of group hospitalization plans would not be available.
- Despite an apparent guarantee that policies would be non-cancelable, a person's exhaustion of a $5,000 lifetime maximum in benefits would have the same effect as cancellation.
- Insurance companies would be free to deny certain benefits to people who are ill when they reach 65 or have a history of serious illness.

Royal York Strike Ends In Settlement

Toronto — Royal York Hotel strikers voted by a 4-1 margin to end their year-long strike and return to work under a settlement recommended by their bargaining committee.

The terms were a 2.5-cent-an-hour wage increase and another penny after 18 months. But the 1,199 workers who walked out 50 weeks ago, determined to win a 10-cent increase, had dwindled to 452 at the strike's end.

Before the vote was taken, Hotel & Restaurant Employes Pres. Ed S. Miller had wired a pledge that the international union would continue its financial support if the workers voted to reject the settlement.

The union, its Toronto local and other unions contributed more than $800,000 to strike benefits.

The Canadian Pacific hotel, which earlier had said it would "never" take all the workers back, agreed to rehire 447 strikers by Aug. 15 and to arbitrate reinstatement in two cases in dispute.

The agreement preserves the seniority rights of the strikers.

Removal of the picket lines also brought back union musicians, who had passed up nearly $100,000 in fees by refusing to play in the struck hotel.

Still before Canada's Supreme Court is a case involving the right of the hotel to discharge its employes during the strike. Also pending is a decision by a board of umpires on an application by strikers for unemployment insurance.

Two Aerospace Unions Launch Contract Drive

Union workers at aircraft and missile plants throughout the United States and Canada have kicked off their new contract drive by passing out leaflets stressing improved job security.

In their joint bargaining campaign, the Machinists and Auto Workers representing workers in the highly volatile areospace industry said bluntly that the U. S. and Canadian governments must play a "positive and forceful role" in establishing justice and equity in new contracts.

IAM and UAW members know that the aerospace industry is not one against which the unions "can use the power of economic force without any thought of the consequences," workers were told in the leaflet distribution at plant gates.

The missiles and planes produced and serviced "help keep the free world secure," the two unions declared, and their members "know their responsibilities."

"This industry is government enterprise run for private profit," they said.

The manner in which workers have been "rewarded" has been one of "unemployment, lagging wage rates, substandard insurance protection and open shops," they charged.

The IAM-UAW declaration, listing objectives approved by a recent joint bargaining conference, cited provisions of contracts in other industries to support the accusation that the U. S. and Canadian governments have allowed the aerospace companies to lag far behind pay and protection standards generally current today.

"Hundreds of thousands" have lost their jobs since 1957 and others face layoffs with only "incredibly inadequate" separation pay. The top severance pay is $500 after 30 years of service, contrasted with as much as $7,200 in other industries.

Take-home wages in other companies have increased 19 to 23 cents an hour since 1960 but only 11 to 14 cents in the aerospace field, the unions declared.

Aerospace company contributions to insurance plans range from 3.1 to 5.6 cents an hour, contrasted with as much as 15 to 18 cents in other major industries.

Union Shop Sought

The union shop, requiring each employe in a bargaining unit to pay his fair share of the cost of functioning effectively, is common in other major industries but applies in less than one-third of aerospace plants.

Problems involving the protection of workers are "far less difficult to solve" than those associated with putting a human being into orbit, and the solution of them will cost "infinitely less," the UAW and IAM said.

The two governments have helped create problems by lack of adequate planning, scheduling and contract allocations and by "lack of concern" for workers in aerospace industry, they declared.

The unions urged all eligible workers to join in demanding recognition of the "moral responsibility" of the governments and the companies in working out new contracts measuring up to equitable standards.

Kennedy Invokes T-H:

Court Order Halts Coast Ship Strike

San Francisco—Members of three West Coast maritime unions began returning to work Apr. 11 after a U.S. District Court here issued a temporary restraining order under the national emergency sections of the Taft-Hartley Act to halt, for 80 days, a 24-day-old strike.

The restrainer was issued by U.S. District Judge George B. Harris on petition of the Dept. of Justice, which was ordered into action by Pres. Kennedy. Harris set Apr. 16 for a hearing on transforming the restrainer into a temporary injunction.

The President said at his Apr. 11 news conference that a Taft-Hartley Board of Inquiry had reported that "approximately 130 cargo and passenger ships" would be tied up unless the walkout were halted and that these form the "principal mode of transportation" of vital goods to the State of Hawaii.

The three striking unions, seeking contract gains they said were needed to match 1961 East Coast maritime workers' benefits, and the Pacific Maritime Association, representing ship owners, separately sent messages to the Board of Inquiry, protesting use of an injunction.

Both sides told the board that no purpose would be served by an 80-day court prohibition allowing the strike to be renewed thereafter, because it would not alter the basic issues.

The unions are the Sailors Union of the Pacific, the Marine Firemen and the Marine Cooks & Stewards, all affiliates of the Seafarers. They sought a wage increase and benefits estimated at 17 to 17.5 percent. The shippers said they could not justify, in competition with other U.S. and foreign shipping, wage and fringe benefits of more than 12 percent over three years.

The owners' offer was "withdrawn," they told the Board of Inquiry, after pre-strike negotiations failed.

No settlement is possible, said Seafarers' negotiator Morris Weisberger, that does not meet the workers' demands. The shipowners, through Pres. J. Paul St. Sure, said an 80-day postponement of basic decisions would increase the economic damage. It seems "ironic," St. Sure added, that the President can seek an injunction but lacks statutory power to "propose or invoke" a method for "settling the dispute itself."

7 Affidavits Filed

The Justice Dept. supported its application to Judge Harris with seven affidavits affirming a threat to the national interest justifying an injunction.

The affidavits were filed by the secretaries of agriculture, labor, defense and commerce, and by the chairman of the Maritime Commission, the director of the Agency for Intl. Development and Gov. William F. Quinn of Hawaii.

The President said he hoped the injunction request would not "interfere in any way" with efforts of the two parties toward a full settlement. The Board of Inquiry report and "other reports" he had received, he declared, "clearly manifest" that continuation of the strike at this time "imperils the national interest" to an extent that "does not permit further delay."

The White House invoked a Taft-Hartley injunction in 1961 to halt an East Coast maritime strike.

Three Summer Institutes Scheduled To Guide Work Rate Bargaining

Three major industrial engineering institutes have been scheduled by the AFL-CIO next July to assist unions faced with new management demands that threaten collective bargaining and established working conditions.

The three institutes, to held simultaneously July 9-20 at the University of Wisconsin, are sponsored jointly by the federation and by the university's School for Workers.

The courses, according to Bertram Gottlieb, industrial engineer with the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, are designed for "full-time international representatives, business agents, union education and research department personnel and other full-time union representatives and staff."

Their function is to "provide the knowledge and understanding needed" for union staff workers "to do a better job in representing members in the areas of time study, synthetic work measurement, wage incentives, job evaluation and related problems," an AFL-CIO brochure states.

A letter from AFL-CIO Sec. Treas. William F. Schnitzler points out that the recent convention warned that both new and old "work measurement" techniques are being used by management "to set unfair production standards and work loads."

Incentive systems of "questionable validity" also are being installed to step up the pace of work and job evaluation techniques "are being used to downgrade workers and reduce legitimate wage gains," the letter warns.

The convention resolution on the threat of such practices says that unions "must be prepared to negotiate maximum contractual protection" to minimize the effect on the well-being of workers and that even contract language is not sufficient, Schnitzler notes.

"Unionists must be as fully informed as possible to cope with the 'traditional' as well as the 'modern' industrial engineering techniques" now being used by management.

The purpose of the institutes at the University of Wisconsin, the AFL-CIO secretary-treasurer said, is to provide responsible union representatives with the industrial engineering "know-how" to defend the interests of members from "management's misuse" of such techniques.

One institute will deal with time study and wage incentives, a second with job evaluation and related problems, a third with synthetic work measurement systems.

The teaching and demonstration staff will be drawn from unions and the university. Tuition for a two-week institute is $70, with cost of meals and of housing in university dormitories to be met by participants. Registration forms, obtainable from the AFL-CIO, must be returned to the Dept. of Research no later than June 11.

Survey Gathers Data on Jobless

The U. S. Census Bureau is conducting a special survey for the Labor Dept. for use in developing and evaluating programs to meet the problems of the long-term unemployed.

A sampling of jobless persons is being asked questions relating to patterns of employment and unemployment in recent years, kinds of jobs held, education and training, coverage by unemployment insurance, and sources of income.

New York Labor Sees Few Legislative Gains

Albany, N. Y.—The New York State AFL-CIO has rated the recently-completed session of the state legislature "conspicuous for its inaction" on the federation's program, despite "a few improvements" in labor laws.

Raymond R. Corbett, State AFL-CIO legislative chairman, noted that a bill to bar professional strikebreakers was still in Senate committee when the session ended, although it had been passed by a large margin in the lower house.

Much of the legislation enacted, he said, fell considerably short of labor's goals. The legislature followed the recommendations of Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R) and raised the state minimum wage from $1 to $1.15 effective next Oct. 15, and to $1.25 a year later. The State AFL-CIO had sought unsuccessfully to boost the minimum to $1.50.

Maximum workmen's compensation benefits were raised $5 to $55, but labor's proposal to peg both unemployment benefits and workmen's compensation to two-thirds of the average state wage was rejected.

The federation's legislative analysis also criticized failure to eliminate "the degrading means test" in medical care for the aged and the failure to reapportion the legislature.

On the "plus side," the State AFL-CIO cited enactment of legislation to permit workers undergoing retraining to continue to receive unemployment compensation and to provide, through an uninsured employers' fund, payments of benefits to injured workers whose employers failed to obtain required compensation insurance.

The legislature also rejected labor-opposed legislation which would disqualify persons receiving pensions from unemployment compensation, an attempt to weaken the anti-injunction law, and a bill to make it illegal for labor to organize or represent farm workers.

Cities Have 71% Of Potential Voters

Seven in every 10 persons of voting age live in urban areas, according to a study based on the 1960 census and released by the Census Bureau of the Commerce Dept.

When the census was taken in April 1960 there were 108.5 million men and women of voting age, of whom 77.4 million or 71.4 percent lived in urban territory compared with 31 million or 22.6 percent living in rural areas. Of the rural residents, 7.7 million lived on farms.

There were 97.5 million whites in the voting age group of whom 69.1 million or 70.9 percent were urban dwellers, and 11 million nonwhites of whom 8.3 million, or 75.7 percent, lived in cities.

Of the non-whites, 5.9 million or 53.6 percent lived in the South and made up 18.3 percent of its voting age population. Nationally, nonwhites compare 10.1 percent of the voting age group.

Schnitzler Calls ULLICO Good Example

Baltimore, Md.—The Union Labor Life Insurance Co. won praise from AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler at a meeting here as a "shining example" of what can be accomplished for the common good by "the perfect coordination of management and labor."

Earlier the shareholders heard ULLICO Pres. Edmund P. Tobin report that assets have risen by 9.5 percent since the end of 1960, and that payments to policy holders and beneficiaries in 1961 reached a new high of $51 million.

Tobin said the company, established in 1927 by unions for workers, was pleased also with the success of the recently created group annuities department. He said ULLICO assets rose from $38.5 million at the end of 1960 to $42 million.

Schnitzler in a luncheon speech applauded the company's steady growth in the highly competitive insurance market. Other speakers included Arthur Hess of the Social Security Administration and F. Douglass Sears, Maryland state insurance commissioner.

IOLANI PALACE, where the Hawaii Legislature meets, was picketed by the Honolulu Central Labor Council to impress upon the Senate the urgency of boosting the minimum wage to $1.25 an hour. The State House has already passed a bill raising the minimum from the present $1 to $1.15 effective July 1 and to $1.25 effective a year later.

5th Circuit Reversed On Special Labor Rule

A 21-year-old rule applied in reinstatement and back-pay cases by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals—a special rule under which National Labor Relations Board reinstatement orders have been frequently denied enforcement in the southeastern states—has been knocked out by the Supreme Court.

The high court in a 6-2 decision said the 5th Circuit Court had "repeatedly" followed its "special rule" since 1941, despite a decision by the Supreme Court 10 years later laying down different standards. The majority sent two new cases back for reconsideration in light of the general standards.

The special rule—applied by the 5th Circuit Court in labor board cases in its six Gulf Coast states from Texas to Florida—set much tougher standards of proof in NLRB cases ordering reinstatement of fired workers with back pay than in other issues.

A cease-and-desist order was one thing, the 5th Circuit had held, but forcing an employer to reinstate a worker with back pay might "impoverish or break" him. In its rule, it gave special weight to an employer's sworn testimony that he had fired union members for some other reason than membership or union activity.

An employer's oath to this effect could not be disbelieved by the labor board trial examiner, unless there was "impeachment" of the witness, or "substantial contradiction," or if circumstances raised doubts, the doubts "must be inconsistent with the positive sworn evidence on this exact point."

Rule Called Onerous

The Supreme Court majority called this rule "onerous"—and inconsistent with the high court's own decision as long ago as 1951 in the Universal Camera Co. case, which "stated a rule of review for courts of appeal in all labor board cases."

The NLRB trial examiner is the person who hears the witnesses, and sees them, the Supreme Court pointed out then, and can appraise their credibility, while the labor board and the appellate courts look "only at cold records."

"There is no place . . . for one test" of the credibility and substance of an employer's testimony in fired-worker reinstatement cases and "another test" for other witnesses in all other issues, the majority declared.

The court instructed the 5th Circuit to reconsider the cases under the general review rules now that it was "rid of the yardstick" of its special rule.

The majority decision was by the court as a body, unsigned. Justices Felix Frankfurter and John M. Harlan dissented.

Senate Votes 70-22 for UN Loan on Bonds

The Senate, by a bipartisan 70-22 vote, authorized the President to loan up to $100 million to the United Nations to help tide it over a financial crisis.

The measure, a compromise backed by both Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) and GOP Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.), averted a showdown battle over an Administration bill authorizing the purchasing of 25-year UN bonds. The language of the compromise bill, its sponsors agreed, was broad enough to permit the President either to purchase the bonds or make a conventional loan.

On final passage, 48 Democrats and 22 Republicans supported the measure while 11 senators from each party opposed it.

Dirksen, under fire from his party's right wing for agreeing to the bill, said support of the UN was "a moral question" and not a financial issue. Sen. Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.) had attacked the measure as "the most complete case of surrender to the executive department that I have seen."

Administration forces counted on the bipartisan vote in the Senate to improve the bill's chances in the more conservative House.

URW Wins Recognition At General Tire Plant

Mayfield, Ky.—Negotiations on a first contract for hourly rated workers of the General Tire & Rubber Co. plant here are scheduled to begin soon, the Rubber Workers have announced. Management signed a recognition agreement when most of the 308 workers joined the URW at the new $15 million tire plant. Other company plants in Akron and Waco are under URW contract.

In Collective Bargaining Report:

Beware Generalized Data On Benefits, Unions Told

U.S. manufacturers put an average of 5.4 cents per payroll hour into pension plans for production workers during 1959, according to a U.S. Dept. of Labor survey.

According to the same survey, manufacturers with pension plans put in an average of 9 cents per payroll hour for production workers.

Both of these seemingly contradictory statements are equally true—and are equally likely to be quoted over the bargaining table.

The careful reader—or experienced negotiator—will note that the first figure covers all manufacturing plants, including those which do not have pension plans and thus bring the average down. The second statement deals only with plants which actually provide pensions for workers. The distinction, of course, is significant.

Both the Labor Dept. survey and pitfalls involved in its use are analyzed in the April issue of the American Federationist.

The AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, which prepared the Collective Bargaining Report feature of the publication, emphasized that "benefit expenditure figures must be approached cautiously. Union negotiators should not rush into ready acceptance of any figures put before them."

Beware Broad Averages

The wide range of statistics which can be drawn from the survey points to the hazard of accepting broad-based averages as criteria. For example, pension expenditures in the oil refining industry average 20 cents an hour, more than double the national average. Yet in the same industry, health benefit costs of 3.8 cents were below the national average of 5.4 cents.

The survey does, however, give a guide to the general prevalence of various types of fringe benefits.

Thus pension expenditures were reported in 1959 by manufacturing plants with 60 percent of the production workers. Paid holidays were provided in plants with 89 percent of the workers, with nearly three-fifths enjoying seven or more holidays a year. More than 93 percent of workers received paid vacations.

About 88 percent of workers were covered by some form of health or life insurance, although the plans varied widely. Paid sick leave was provided for 23 percent of production workers but most of the remaining workers were in plants which had sick benefit insurance.

Supplemental unemployment insurance was provided for large proportions of workers in certain industries, although for manufacturing as a whole the proportion was only 14 percent. Some benefits, such as severance pay, were hard to measure in cents-per-hour since a number of such programs are not funded but are paid out as needed.

The AFL-CIO analysis notes also that "in plants under union contract average expenditures for benefits are substantially larger than in unorganized plants."

A special section of the article emphasizes the need for caution in dealing with benefit expenditure figures. It makes these points:

- Some employers have used figures on fringe benefits "to create the impression that workers are receiving far more income than shown by their wage rates." Many of the benefits, the article notes, mean additional security or leisure time but do not provide any additional income for the worker.
- While benefit "expenditures" and benefit "costs" are often used interchangeably, there is "an important distinction." For example, employer expenditures for vacations or health benefits may be offset in part by productivity gains "as a result of reduced absenteeism, reduced labor turnover and improved worker morale."
- Figures combining expenditures on different benefits may be "particularly misleading." In terms of "worker needs," a liberal vacation plan does not substitute for an inadequate life insurance or pension plan. And some employers, in lumping together the amount they claim to spend on fringe benefits, have even included such items as the costs of rest rooms, the company publication and orientation of new employes.
- Expenditures are greatly affected by such factors as length of service, and the age and sex of workers, in addition to liberality of the benefit.

Meany Assails Paper's Public Works Editorial

Opposition to Pres. Kennedy's $600 million public works program by The Washington Post is "irresponsible" and distorts the facts of economic life in the 1960s, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has charged.

In a letter to the editor, Meany challenged an editorial appearing in the Post entitled "A New WPA?" in which the paper declared the program "has the earmarks of economic ineffectiveness and political mischief."

The federation president said the editorial demonstrated how "your preoccupation with the 30s can distort facts in the 60s." He reviewed the chronic unemployment situation, noting that since November 1957 a 5 percent or higher jobless rate has "marked every single month but one."

The public works facts, said Meany, disclose recent planning work by state and local governments on 88,000 projects with an estimated cost of $21.7 billion. These were scheduled to reach final planning stages in the 18-month period from July 1960 through December 1961.

These plans, he added, are mostly awaiting the time when funds are available. "Federal money and matching state and local grants-in-aid can take some of them off the shelf, put people to work at necessary projects and spur economic activity," he pointed out.

Meany wrote: "We would like more money spent this way because the need is great both for jobs and public services. We think $600 million should be spent in 12 months rather than over about two years."

But, he added, "to ignore the need as The Washington Post does for such projects as water supply improvements, sewage systems, parks, water pollution control, construction of public buildings, conservation efforts, is irresponsible."

U. S. Requires Developers To Ban Bias

The federal government has acted to strengthen enforcement of state and local laws prohibiting discrimination in housing by requiring private developers in urban renewal projects to sign contracts pledging compliance with anti-bias laws in "sale, lease, or occupancy."

Urban Renewal Commissioner William L. Slayton spelled out the new policy in letters to 539 local public agencies involved in federally-assisted slum clearance and urban renewal.

While the directive bolsters enforcement of the 17 state laws and a number of local ordinances, it does not prohibit discriminatory rental or sales policies by builders or developers in areas which do not have anti-discrimination laws.

The AFL-CIO, in a convention resolution, has urged Pres. Kennedy to issue "an executive order denying federal funds, credit, mortgage guarantee, or any type of financial assistance to construction of any housing which is not available to all regardless of race, color, creed or national origin."

Meany Demands U.S. Probe Steel Industry 'Price-Gouging'

Tenn.), chairman of the Senate Anti-Trust and Monopoly Subcommittee, blasted the steel industry as "shocking and irresponsible." He ordered the committee staff, which had exposed the links between administered pricing practices and the inflation of the 1950s, to investigate the latest price hikes.

● Chairman Emanuel Celler (D-N.Y.) of the House Judiciary Anti-Trust Subcommittee announced hearings on the steel price hike starting May 2. Celler declared the price boost "so plainly inflationary in its impact" that Congress cannot afford to ignore it.

● Steelworkers' Pres. David J. McDonald, whose union a week earlier had signed a "non-inflationary" contract with the steel companies, said he was "surprised, troubled and concerned" over the price hike. He pointed out the union had been commended by Kennedy for keeping the union gains within the bounds of productivity increases.

McDonald said the labor cost per ton of steel has gone down, not up, and he was "troubled" by U. S. Steel's attempt to blame the Steelworkers for the hike.

● House Speaker John W. McCormack (D-Mass.) called the steel industry actions "an arrogant disregard of the national interest."

● Senate Democratic Whip Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.) accused U. S. Steel of "economic arrogance." Of the price increase: "It is inflationary. It is an affront to the President. It is an irritant to labor."

● Sen. Albert Gore (D-Tenn.) charged U. S. Steel with a "breach of faith with the American people." The steel hike further convinces him, he said, that Congress must look into the impact of administered prices on the economy and devise a remedy.

Gore suggested a federal grand jury in New York now inquiring into alleged anti-trust violations in the steel casting industry might expand the inquiry to cover basic steel pricing and marketing practices. Gore said Congress might consider a "National Consumers Advisory Board" to protect the public interest on prices; if this proves ineffective, then "utility-type regulation" should be considered.

Meany's statement described the U. S. Steel decision as the latest in a series "of price-gouging unconscionable abuses of its dominant position in a key industry that lacks effective price competition."

Neither supply and demand nor cost factors can explain "this price-gouging action," Meany said. There are no steel shortages or pressures on the industry's capacity; instead, Meany added, there are large inventories, idle plants and machines, declining orders and production.

From an operating rate of only about 80 percent in recent weeks, Meany said, the present decline is expected to bring production schedules down to about 60 percent of productive capacity in June.

The recently negotiated steel contracts, Meany noted, providing improved fringe benefits and no wage increases, will result in a 2 to 2.5 percent increase in payroll costs. This was below the industry's pace of rising productivity, he added, and was hailed by Kennedy as clearly non-inflationary.

Meany said that U. S. Steel, instead of cutting prices on a selected basis to improve its competitive position at home and abroad, chose to show its power by a price boost.

"The very future of a free economy in America requires a direct and responsible public investigation of this action by federal agencies and the Congress," Meany declared.

Kennedy asserted at his press conference that there was "no justification" for a price increase.

He said the Justice Dept. and the Federal Trade Commission are examining the matter and the Defense Dept. is reviewing the impact on military procurement. He said he had been advised by Defense Sec. McNamara that the price rise would "add $1 billion to the cost of our defenses at a time when every dollar is needed for national defense."

The President said the government had stressed in its talks with steel labor and management its interest in a contract settlement which would hold price stability.

The steel contracts did, he added, "until yesterday."

Higher Steel Prices OK With Goldwater

Condemnation of the steel companies for raising prices wasn't quite unanimous.

Sen. Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.) termed the price hike "reasonable."

Addressing a meeting in St. Louis, Goldwater said Pres. Kennedy showed a basic lack of economic understanding by being surprised at the price increase.

Administered Steel Pricing Nothing New

Gardiner C. Means, a highly-respected economist, uncovered the practice of administered prices in the course of investigating the inflation of the 1950s.

Means has this to say in a just-published book on "Pricing Power and the Public Interest":

"On the whole, one must conclude that responsibility for the big increase in steel prices after 1953 rests primarily with steel management.

"It used its pricing power to widen profit margins and increase the profit at any given rate of operation. Only to a much smaller extent does responsibility rest with labor.

"The crux of the matter is management's power to administer prices and the post-1953 rise in steel prices is a clear example of its use."

Means wrote that U.S. Steel in fiscal 1959 could have broken even at about 30 percent of operating capacity. Only a large increase in the profit margin could have brought such a large drop in the break-even point, he said.

'At Nation's Expense . . .'

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany issued the following statement on the steel price increase:

U.S. Steel's announcement of a $6 per ton price boost—a rise of 3.5 percent—is the most recent example of the flagrant abuse of vast economic power by the dominant, price-leading corporation in a key industry. It represents a further step by the top corporate executives of this major industry to increase profits on each ton of steel, at the expense of their customers and the entire nation.

Neither supply-and-demand nor cost factors can explain this price-gouging action, which is a direct affront to the federal government and the American people. There are no steel shortages or pressures on the industry's productive capacity. Instead there are large inventories, idle plants and machines, declining orders and production schedules. From an operating rate of only 80 percent in recent weeks, the present drop in operations is expected to bring production schedules down to about 60 percent of productive capacity in June.

The recently negotiated improvements in fringe benefits, with no wage increases, will result in a rise of 2 percent-2.5 percent in the hourly compensation of the steel industry's production and maintenance workers—below the industry's pace of rising productivity. These results were hailed as clearly non-inflationary, and well within the bounds of reasonably stable unit employment costs, by Pres. Kennedy and his economic advisers.

Instead of cutting prices on a selective basis to improve the industry's competitive position in world markets and against substitute products at home, U.S. Steel chose to demonstrate its power. The corporation's action of Apr. 10, 1962 is the most recent in a series of price-gouging unconscionable abuses of its dominant position in a key industry that lacks effective price competition.

The power of government and of our entire society is now being tested by the economic might of a corporate giant and a major industry. This test must not go unanswered. The spotlight of public attention must quickly be placed on all the details of this corporate abuse of economic might. The very future of a free economy in America requires a direct and responsible public investigation of this action by federal agencies and the Congress, the representatives of the American people.

At its Fourth Constitutional Convention last December, the AFL-CIO declared: "The pricing policies of the dominant corporations in key industries, in which prices are administered, present a potential threat to the price level and to sustaining a fast pace of economic growth. . . . The administered price formulas of the dominant corporations in major industries are set to produce profits at low-level operations and there is little incentive for such industries to follow policies that aim for maximum production rates in a rapidly expanding economy. In addition, price rises by such industries could establish the pretext for restrictive government measures.

To curb these potential dangers from the pricing policies of the dominant corporations in major administered-price industries, the spotlight of public attention is needed. Only the federal government—federal agencies, congressional committees or both—can adequately focus public attention on the facts of the cost-price-investment policies of these corporations, in an attempt to curtail their price-raising ability."

Kennedy—'No Justification'

Here is the text of Pres. Kennedy's statement on the steel price increase:

Simultaneous and identical actions of United States Steel and other leading steel corporations increasing steel prices by some $6 a ton constitute a wholly unjustifiable and irresponsible defiance of the public interest.

In this serious hour in our nation's history, when we are confronted with grave crises in Berlin and Southeast Asia, when we are devoting our energies to economic recovery and stability, when we are asking reservists to leave their homes and families for months on end and servicemen to risk their lives—and four were killed in the last two days in Viet Nam—and asking union members to hold down their wage increases, at a time when restraint and sacrifices are being asked of every citizen, the American people will find it hard, as I do, to accept a situation in which a tiny handful of steel executives whose pursuit of private power and profit exceeds their sense of public responsibility can show such utter contempt for the interests of 185 million Americans.

If this rise in the cost of steel is imitated by the rest of the industry, instead of rescinded, it would increase the cost of homes, autos, appliances, and most other items for every American family. It would increase the cost of machinery and tools to every American businessman and farmer. It would seriously handicap our efforts to prevent an inflationary spiral from eating up the pensions of our older citizens, and our new gains in purchasing power.

It would add, Sec. McNamara informed me this morning, an estimated $1 billion to the cost of our defenses at a time when every dollar is needed for national security and other purposes. It would make it more difficult for American goods to compete in foreign markets, more difficult to withstand competition from foreign imports, and thus more difficult to improve our balance of payments position, and stem the flow of gold. And it is necessary to stem it for our national security, if we are going to pay for our security commitments abroad. And it would surely handicap our efforts to induce other industries and unions to adopt responsible price and wage policies.

The facts of the matter are that there is no justification for an increase in steel prices. The recent settlement between the industry and the union, which does not even take place until July 1, was widely acknowledged to be non-inflationary, and the whole purpose and effect of this Administration's role, which both parties understood, was to achieve an agreement which would make unnecessary any increase in prices.

Steel output per man is rising so fast that labor costs per ton of steel can actually be expected to decline in the next 12 months. And in fact, the Acting Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics informed me this morning that, and I quote: "Employment costs per unit of steel output in 1961 were essentially the same as they were in 1958."

The cost of the major raw materials, steel scrap and coal, has also been declining and for an industry which has been generally operating at less than two-thirds of capacity, its profit rate has been normal and can be expected to rise sharply this year in view of the reduction in idle capacity. Their lot has been easier than that of 100,000 steelworkers thrown out of work in the last three years. The industry's cash dividends have exceeded $600 million in each of the last five years, and earnings in the first quarter of this year were estimated in the Feb. 28th Wall Street Journal to be among the highest in history.

In short, at a time when they could be exploring how much more efficient and better prices could be obtained, reducing prices in this industry in recognition of lower costs, their unusually good labor contract, their foreign competition and their increase in production and profits which are coming this year, a few gigantic corporations have decided to increase prices in ruthless disregard of their public responsibilities.

The Steelworkers Union can be proud that it abided by its responsibilities in this agreement, and this government also has responsibilities which we intend to meet. The Dept. of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission are examining the significance of this action in a free, competitive economy. The Dept. of Defense and other agencies are reviewing its impact on their policies of procurement and I am informed that steps are under way by those members of the Congress who plan appropriate inquiries into how these price decisions are so quickly made and reached, and what legislative safeguards may be needed to protect the public interest.

Price and wage decisions in this country, except for very limited restrictions in the case of monopolies and national emergency strikes, are and ought to be freely and privately made, but the American people have a right to expect, in return for that freedom, a higher sense of business responsibility for the welfare of their country than has been shown in the last two days.

Some time ago I asked each American to consider what he would do for his country and I asked the steel companies. In the last 24 hours we had their answer.

A New Economic Virus

TWO BASIC FACTS are beginning to emerge from the flow of government statistics on unemployment and both emphasize that the nation is running into a new type of economic virus.

First, there is the demonstrated fact that about one million persons who would normally be actively seeking employment have given up the search and taken themselves out of the labor market. They are not officially listed among the unemployed, but Dr. Walter W. Heller, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, has described their status as "submerged unemployment."

There are a few indications that the very young and the very old may be dropping out of the labor market. There is some evidence of a decrease in school drop-outs and earlier retirement. But the "submerged unemployment" most directly affects the vast majority who are neither young nor old.

Second, there is the demonstrated fact that productivity in 1961 increased at a tremendously rapid rate, a rate well in excess of the normal recovery from a recession. The sharp increase has knocked into a cocked hat the economists' formula for relating a rise in the gross national product—the total of all goods and services produced—to a drop in the unemployment rate.

The factor that has thrown this formula out of whack is the sharp impact of automation and technological change, a factor that has been underestimated and understated in the analysis of the nation's economy.

Both these facts add up to an issue of overriding urgency. We cannot tolerate a situation where the gross national product zooms to new records while actual unemployment remains chronically high.

Conventional solutions geared to economic history that is no longer pertinent will not restore the nation's economic health. New and bolder programs must be examined and analyzed if the unemployment problem is to be eliminated as the No. 1 domestic issue.

Distrust of Their People

THE EDITORIAL "Hunger Knows No Politics" by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in the April issue of the American Federationist has aroused considerable interest and comment in America and abroad.

Numerous letters have been received commenting on the proposal for direct aid to people behind the Iron Curtain threatened by famine "without prior appropriation or dictation by the Soviet government." Many writers have expressed enthusiastic agreement, others all-out opposition.

A closer reading of the editorial would eliminate most of the objections raised by persons whose knowledge of the proposal came from a brief news item in the general press.

But basic to understanding the proposal and its aims is an understanding of the nature of totalitarian dictatorships. Whether Communist, Nazi, Fascist or of any other stripe, dictatorships are in mortal fear of any policy or action which might lead to a weakening of their absolute, total control over their own people.

Thus direct aid from abroad to their populations who face food and other shortages as a result of the "false economic and inhuman political policies" of Communist regimes brings into sharp relief the distrust that the Communist rulers have of their own people.

In view of this distrust, all those deeply interested in eliminating human suffering are awaiting the response of the Communist dictatorships to this humanitarian proposal to feed hungry millions living under despotism.

'It's Really Not So Deep'

20-Year Review:

Increase in Paid Leisure Time Adds Nearly 4 Weeks a Year

The following is excerpted from an article by Peter Henle, special assistant to the Commissioner, Bureau of Labor Statistics, in the Monthly Labor Review, March 1962, on "Recent Growth of Paid Leisure for U.S. Workers."

THERE HAS BEEN a marked increase in leisure time over the past 20 years. Admittedly, estimates of how much increase has taken place must be rough approximations, particularly since few data are available for 1940. Nevertheless they give for the first time some indication of the magnitude of changes in paid leisure time. Essentially the increase in leisure time in 1960 over 1940 consists of the following:

	Hours per year per full-time employed person
1½ hours less in the workweek	75
6 days more paid vacation	48
4 days more paid holidays	32
Total	155

For the economy as a whole, this additional leisure time amounts to over 10 billion hours (5.0 billion from the shorter workweek, 3.2 billion in additional vacation, and 2.1 billion in added holidays).

Many of these hours represent additional time away from work. This is obviously true, for example, of the reduction in the workweek. However, the additional paid holidays largely represent payment for time which in 1940 was spent away from the plant without compensation. The additional vacation time is a combination of these two factors.

The 155 hours represent almost four average weeks of employment, but they represent only a small fraction of the gain in productivity that the national economy has achieved since 1940. BLS estimates of output per man-hour would indicate that to produce the 1960 output with the 1940 productivity would have required an additional 1,447 hours of working time—or 71 percent more—for each employed member of the 1960 labor force.

THUS THE 155 HOURS that have been accounted for in terms of reduced hours of work, increased vacations, and paid holidays amount to only 11 percent of the hours that have been made available by the nation's increased productivity since 1940.

This gain in leisure time represents only a relatively small proportion of the increased productivity since 1940, but this is not unexpected. Much of the limited productivity gains of the previous decade, 1930-40, were reflected in shorter hours of work, not because workers preferred greater leisure but because of the depressed conditions of the decade.

The passage of the Fair Labor Standards Act to a large extent reflected changes in hours that already had taken place. In the two decades following the 1930s the emphasis quite naturally was on income rather than leisure.

A review of the changes in paid leisure between 1940 and 1960 shows that there was no major shift in the standard workweek. Perhaps the most significant development was that more than half the total gain in paid leisure resulted from increased vacation and holiday time, rather than from a reduction in working hours. This is a definite shift from the pattern of earlier years and seems to indicate that leisure time preferences are running more to additional whole days each year rather than additional minutes each day.

Of course the leisure time gained since 1940 does not necessarily represent time available for travel, recreation, etc. The nature of the economy and the nation's living habits have changed in important ways since 1940, and since individuals now live farther from their place of employment, some of this additional "leisure" time may now be spent in commuting to and from work.

It is difficult to generalize about future trends in leisure time from this record. There is no way to measure the intensity of the demand for more leisure time against the intensity of the demand for greater income to be spent on leisure time activities. Trade unions continue to present demands for a shorter workweek, although much union pressure in this direction is motivated not by the desire for more leisure but by the possibility of increasing the number of jobs. Of course, regardless of the motivation, the attainment of shorter hours of work would bring with it greater leisure time.

One new factor is the form which the demands for leisure time are likely to take. The relatively slight decline in average hours of work in recent years has been accompanied by a greater interest in more extended paid vacations and a greater number of paid holidays. Providing a greater number of days off seems likely to continue to receive greater emphasis than reducing the time spent each day at work.

Morgan Says:

Minow Not the First to See The Noisy Decay of Radio, TV

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

JUST ONE YEAR ago the chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, Newton Minow, told the NAB—the National Association of Broadcasters—that commercial television was a wasteland and invited them if they didn't believe it to sit down in front of their sets and watch the programming for one day from sign-on in the morning to sign-off at night.

Morgan

There is no record that anybody in the industry subjected himself to such torture but there are some heartening indications that Minow's words were not dropped into a vacuum. The chairman himself thinks he detects some small green oases of progress scattered over the wasteland and he has begun to stir the public, parched and famished as it has been on a wayfarer's diet, to demand more nourishing fare in this cultural desert.

Indeed, while some broadcasters still brood darkly in their tents about how to waylay Minow's crusading caravan, the public seems to have discovered in him a champion. At any rate mail has been arriving at the FCC by the bale for many months and Minow's office reports that most of it is favorable.

THUS EMBOLDENED to pursue even more vigorously what he has called the Commission's only business—the public interest—Minow appeared before the NAB again at its Chicago convention. This time he turned his major attention to the quality of radio broadcasting.

If TV had been a wasteland, radio, he said in effect, was a kind of garbage dump wired for sound. He saluted that rare exception, the station with "well-prepared newscasts, imaginative entertainment, a drama, a children's program, enlightening commentary, breathtaking variety.

"But," he warned, "in too many cases the results today are incredibly bad. In too many communities, to twist the radio dial . . . is to be shoved through a bazaar, a clamorous Casbah of pitchmen and commercials which plead, bleat, pressure, whistle, groan and shout. Too many stations have turned themselves into publicly franchised jukeboxes."

It is almost as if radio had become a conveyor belt of endless commercials and moaning music, a seven-day bicycle race for disc jockeys with gluey voices and a comic-book approach to culture. Minow was not the first to discover this phenomenon of noisy decay. There are many responsible people within the broadcasting industry who have been striving long for improvement. One of these, Morris Novik, a broadcast consultant to labor and liberal groups, pointed out major flaws in a speech at an Ohio State University gathering last May. He described the typical radio station programming of dubious music and little belches of news bulletins as a "no talk policy."

HE PRODUCED the embarrassing fact that less than one-quarter of the nation's 3,500 radio stations carried the Kennedy-Nixon 1960 campaign debates and he noted public complaints to the White House that not enough were carrying presidential news conferences now. He deplored the disappearance of such programs as Town Hall of the Air and the necessity of citizens of Atlanta and other cities to arrange a specially tailored network so they could continue to hear the Metropolitan Opera broadcasts. "Somebody," Novik said, "pulled the plug on public service programming."

In his Chicago speech Minow saluted the many stations to whom "the public interest is a way of life." He warned that unless radio broadcasting can achieve self-discipline to sustain satisfactory self-regulation, the FCC "may have to adopt a rule on commercials which does apply to everyone."

This immediately provoked howls of "government intervention" and strident charges that Minow was "declaring war" on radio. If intervention comes it will be only because the irresponsibility of radio broadcasters asked for it.

In the interim, he suggested, we should learn from history; we are in haste to improve our communications systems and bounce signals off satellites but what if we have nothing worthwhile to say?

But he allowed that broadcasting had plenty to say, if it would. "Something happened to America," he said, the day radio and TV carried the consuming chronicle of John Glenn's orbital flight. And he asked the radio (as well as the TV) industry to improve its public service programming in proportion to that feat. "Am I guilty of asking too much of broadcasting?" the FCC chairman concluded. "Or are you guilty of asking too little?" The answers are not all in yet.

Washington Report:

Fast Action on Public Works Urged to Ease Unemployment

UNITED STATES UNEMPLOYMENT remains high even while the nations of Western Europe are obliged to import workers, Rep. John A. Blatnik (D-Minn.) declared in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program, heard on more than 500 radio stations.

"Unemployment in some of the countries of Western Europe runs 1.2, 1.6, 1.7 percent. Japan is a flat 1 percent," Blatnik said as he argued for passage of the Administration bill that would provide $600 million for immediate public works programs in areas of economic distress, and give the President stand-by authority to use $2 billion for public works when an economic downswing continues over four months.

Rep. John F. Baldwin, Jr. (R-Calif.) called upon the Administration to make immediate use of funds already authorized by Congress. He cited $300 million of Veterans Administration home-building money, and $63 million for shipbuilding that has been deferred beyond the fiscal year ending June 30.

Baldwin also said he believes Congress should set up a more modest standby fund, "maybe $500 million, so that if Congress is not in session and unemployment reaches a certain rate, the President could therefore make the expenditure." But he believes the responsibility for action rests primarily upon Congress.

"If Congress is in session, I believe our constituents sent us here to exercise our rights as members of Congress to vote on appropriations," Baldwin asserted.

BLATNIK SAID the $600 million is needed at once and he expected it would be passed by Congress. The standby authority may need some modifications, he said, but he was hopeful of its passage, too.

"There is no question as to whether we can afford this money," he said of the $600 million fund. "We are spending it now. In the recession of 1960-61, the federal government alone spent over $4 billion for unemployment compensation for people who could not find work.

"The counties and municipalities are spending millions of dollars in my district. In fact they are setting all-time record levels since 1938 for welfare costs and relief.

"I would like to see the money go not for relief, but to get men and women to work, give them a chance to earn their living, while at the same time providing the community with a needed facility that will provide for 40 or 50 years to come."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THOSE MERRY LITTLE LABOR RELATIONS experts, Representatives Landrum of Georgia and Griffin of Michigan, took the House floor the other day for an assault on the way the National Labor Relations Board has been interpreting the 1959 amendments of the Taft-Hartley Act to which Landrum and Griffin lent their names.

The incident was predictable and inevitable. The labor board has been reversing or limiting novel decisions of the former board named by Mr. Eisenhower. It has restored long-established precedents the Eisenhower board had declined to let stand. It has interpreted the publicity clause of the Landrum-Griffin amendments in a manner that assumes, among other things, it was meant to conform to the First Amendment guaranteeing free speech.

So Landrum and Griffin charged that the NLRB has "all but gutted" their amendments, has "eroded and all but repealed" the "key provisions." Reiterating their belief that in 1959 an "overwhelming demand" arose for an end to boycotts and what they term "blackmail" picketing, they profess themselves "discouraged" to find the board "has carved out new loopholes."

They supported this press release language with a once-over-lightly House floor analysis of more than 20 decisions, in which they tossed the ball back and forth to express ridicule and avow alarm.

THEY DO NOT FORGET, naturally, but they failed to acknowledge that the decisions come from a board to which Pres. Kennedy has named only two of five members, Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Gerald A. Brown.

They express astonishment at a Brown speech discussing the "policymaking" function of the board. What Brown said he explained clearly—that the board is charged with promoting a "public policy," declared in the original Wagner Act and never repealed or modified, the "encouragement of collective bargaining" as the "democratic method" of settling labor problems.

Brown added that circumstances change—quite naturally—and that arbitrary rules do not necessarily provide permanent guidelines in meeting concrete situations, in which an employer and his workers must live with each other after specific dispute.

He noted that excessive initiative by the NLRB would be, and has been, "limited by the effective check of judicial review."

Indeed, major "policymaking" decisions of the board as created by Pres. Eisenhower were kicked out forthwith when they reached the Supreme Court. On that board's "Black Monday," April 17, 1961, the high court reversed no fewer than four key decisions hitting unions punitively.

GRIFFIN COMPLAINED the so-called "publicity proviso" worked out in the House-Senate conference committee on the 1959 amendments is being applied by the NLRB "to all sorts of situations." He said that the conferees had rejected then Sen. Kennedy's original language, that he himself "participated" in redrafting it, and that it was intended to be "precise and limited."

This is also what he told the House in 1959, but it is merely what he thought was the case or hoped was the case.

In explaining the conference bill to the Senate, Kennedy as head of the Senate conferees described the intent and meaning of the publicity proviso far differently, far more broadly. He explained it, in fact, in exactly the terms in which the NLRB is now applying it.

In the end, of course, the Supreme Court will apply the tests of legislative intent and how the language should be read in relation to the basic declaration of the law on "encouraging" collective bargaining, and how it must be read to be held valid under the free speech clause.

CONTINUED HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT requires congressional action on the proposed public works bill, Rep. John F. Baldwin, Jr. (R-Calif.), left, and Rep. John A. Blatnik (D-Minn.) said on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program. Baldwin also urged release of home-building and shipbuilding funds already appropriated by Congress.

How to Buy:

Look Out for Bill Collectors Who Try to Frighten Workers

By Sidney Margolius

OF ALL THE HORRORS perpetrated on financially hag-ridden working people, the official-looking documents sent out by bill collectors are perhaps the most terrifying.

Recently a hotel busboy got a punch-card form from an outfit calling itself "Current Employment Records," with a return address in Washington, D. C. This looked for all the world like some sort of income tax notice. It demanded the name and address of the man's new employer and quoted a section of the state unemployment insurance law about making false statements under penalty of $500 fine and a year's imprisonment.

The young worker was sure the tax collectors were after him for no reason he could understand. Fortunately he took the notice to the union shop chairman, who read the notice with care and observed a paragraph at the end in small print. This said: "The purpose of this card is to obtain information regarding a delinquent debtor, and further advise that this is not connected in any way with any state or the United States Government."

An official of this worker's union points out that the document had very cleverly put together the seeming authority of federal and state governments to browbeat the humble or unknowing. The threatening quotation from the state law of course was wholly irrelevant and merely provided an excuse to mention the state and a legal threat of fine or imprisonment.

This is by no means an isolated incident. The Federal Trade Commission has been chasing down bill-collecting outfits all over the country which use legal-looking or official-sounding documents.

But the practice persists. Often it takes the form of a pretense at garnishment. This is especially effective in frightening workers, who in at least some cases had been misled by sales misrepresentations or excessive charges into unfair and dubious debts, frequently by installment sellers.

For example, the FCC cited a firm—The Carl Co., of Lisbon, O.—which supplied deceptive collection forms to collection agencies and creditors. Both in language and appearance these forms gave the impression they were legal documents. They carried such headings as "Final Notice Before Statutory Garnishment" and "Final Notice Before Suit," and even displayed an official-looking seal.

The St. Louis Better Business Bureau reports the case of the collection firm calling itself the "National Deposit System." It sent out cards telling recipients that there was a "sum of money on deposit for you, not in excess of $100." People who answered sure enough did get checks—for ten cents.

At the urging of New York unions and the Metropolitan Consumer Council, a bill has been introduced in that state which can serve as a model for other state legislatures in eliminating the firing threat connected with debts. Workers fear their employers will fire them if garnishment is threatened, even when they have a legal defense against a debt. This gives high-pressure bill collectors a strong weapon to coerce payment.

BUT THE SPIEGEL bill now being considered by a New York state legislative committee would make it unlawful for an employer to discharge an employe against whom a garnishee execution is filed solely because of such filing.

Such state laws, while eliminating one major injustice, still won't solve the problem of other types of deceptively official-looking forms sent to debtors. If anyone in your shop does get such a notice, read it carefully to find out what it really means.

THE GRAPHIC STORY of what has happened to jobs since the beginning of the recession in May 1960 is revealed in this Dept. of Labor chart. In two categories—finance and services, state and local governments—job opportunities kept growing throughout the recession and thereafter. In other areas—transportation, construction and mining—the total job loss has not been even partially recovered by returning business activity. In others—metal durable goods, other durables, nondurables—the recession job loss has been only partially recovered.

From Soup to Nonsense:

Why Do Men Go Ga Ga Over Those Low-Slung Sports Cars?

By Jane Goodsell

A LOT OF MEN these days are making goo-goo eyes at little foreign jobs—and I don't mean imported movie starlets. I mean those low-slung, snout-nosed little sports cars.

Now, I've no objection to sports cars. How could I? What I know about cars you could write on the head of a pinion gear. I can't tell a tachometer from a carburetor, and I don't want to learn.

So, for all I know, those little jet jobs may be miracles of automotive engineering. When I hear about a car that can turn on a dime and deliver 210 horsepower at 7,200 rpm, I just think, "That's nice." I don't get excited about it, as I do about a revolutionary new type of skin cream.

If I'm told that a car can accelerate from zero to sixty miles an hour in 9.2 seconds and cruise at 110, I don't gasp. Unless, of course, I happen to be in the car.

One thing I know for a fact, though. A sports car can ruin a brand new $3.50 hairdo in four seconds flat.

But what really worries me about sports cars is the way men act about them. It isn't normal. Take a steady, dependable, upright citizen who watches his diet, pays his insurance premiums and looks both ways before he crosses the street. Now put him behind the wheel of a racy little roadster and—quicker than you can say four-barrel carb—he changes his personality. With a maniacal grin on his face, he skids around corners and darts in and out of traffic.

I don't understand it. I'm no psychiatrist. All I know is that a little itsy-bitsy car makes the masculine ego swell like a popover. Maybe it's because he's bigger than his car (well, anyway, he seems bigger than his car when he tries to heave his 185 pounds in or out of it).

Take the way he talks about his car. He rhapsodizes about its overhead cams and its tubular shocks like a lovelorn swain describing his sweetheart's charms. You've seen him, I'm sure, with his head buried under the hood, a dreamy expression on his face, looking like a man lost in love. And he is in love—with a car!

FRANKLY, THE WHOLE THING scares me. Just between you and me, those sports cars are taking the place of women.

I remember how it used to be—before anybody knew how to pronounce "Porsche" and a Jaguar was a wild, four-legged beast. In those days when a man gave a long admiring whistle and made curvy motions in the air with his hands, you knew what he had in mind. But today he may be describing a Jaguar XK-150.

We women have never had an easy time getting (and keeping) a man. It's uphill work. Men are men, and the world is full of other women. But other women are, at least, off the same assembly line that produced us. They have the same basic specifications, and even the most deluxe models come equipped with a standard number of accessories.

But beware the male who loses his heart to a Mercedes. She has old-world glamor, 240 horsepower, a wheelbase of 94.5 inches, a low-pivot axle and a price tag of $10,950!

What woman can compete with that?

Crime Is An 'Octopus':

Underworld Seen as A Threat to Society

THE AMERICAN UNDERWORLD is an octopus that has extended its tentacles into government, business and labor and is becoming a "new class" in American society threatening our democratic institutions.

That's the theme of a new comprehensive book of readings entitled "Organized Crime in America" by Gus Tyler, political education director of the Intl. Ladies' Garment Workers Union, published by the University of Michigan Press.

"The American underworld," states Tyler, "does not issue from the trade unions, nor from the business community, nor from government—although it has penetrated all these basic institutions. Nor is organized crime the child of the Italians, or Irish, or Jews, or the Puerto Ricans—although it has drawn recruits from all of these, and other ethnic groups."

Tyler describes the underworld as a "new class" that "has risen to a position of power and prestige in America" with the object of "taking over the institutions on which the professional criminal traditionally preys."

In his introduction to this "unique study," Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) describes the book "as exciting as any whodunit on television. It goes beyond simply dramatizing the criminal in 'human interest terms,'" adds Kefauver. "More importantly, it adds to our knowledge of crime and the criminal personality by putting at our disposal a great amount of material hitherto unavailable or difficult to find. It gives us the background of organized crime, including its historical roots, its development into a flourishing business and its relationship to American society. And it concludes with a penetrating look at the place of juvenile delinquency in our culture."

Tyler was commissioned by the Fund for the Republic to do a study on the impact of organized crime in our democratic institutions. This book is a by-product of his study. It includes contributions from Walter Lippmann, Arthur M. Schlesinger, Herbert Asbury, Virgil Peterson, Daniel Bell, Murray Gurfein, Roger Touhy, Sylvia Porter, Robert F. Kennedy, Judge Morris Ploscowe, Gaetano Mosca, Gay Talese, Harry Elmer Barnes and Max Lerner, to mention only a few of the authors represented in the 51 entries.

"Organized Crime in America" surveys the gangs of old New York, Chicago, San Francisco and the Wild West; traces the roots of organized crime in the American culture; describes the development of the syndicate through the Prohibition years up to the present. It has separate sections on the penetration of the underworld into Wall Street, the movies, theaters, real estate, management, labor. A long special section examines the controversial question of the "Mafia."

In its closing section, the book examines the future of organized crime in America, foretelling a period of intra-gang wars involving the present juvenile elements.

In 22 States:

Bracero Pay Bases Set at 60 Cents-$1

The U.S. Labor Dept. has announced state-by-state minimum hourly wage levels for imported Mexican farm workers ranging from 60 cents in Arkansas and 70 cents in Texas to $1 in California and other states.

About half of the 300,000 Mexican nationals imported for big growers each year have been used in Texas and California.

In setting the minimums for 22 states where the "braceros" have been used, the Labor Dept. specified that where a piece-rate system of payment is used, the hourly earnings must at least equal the minimum.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg, speaking before a conference of labor reporters in Washington, D. C., explained he has the duty under the public law governing the importation program to ensure there is no adverse effect on domestic wages and conditions. He noted the federal wage-hour law exempts U.S. farm labor from its protection and thus he has no authority to establish wage minimums for American farm workers.

Goldberg said the setting of the minimums for imported Mexicans was based on surveys of domestic farm wage levels and also considered the past effect on wages stemming from the use of Mexicans.

'Adverse Effect'

Organized labor long has argued that the Mexican importation program had a built-in "adverse effect" on domestic wages and job opportunities. The Labor Dept. recently agreed publicly for the first time; the setting of the minimums for Mexicans followed regional hearings on the "adverse effect" issue.

The California AFL-CIO hit the $1 an hour minimum set for California as falling "far short" of labor's proposal.

The state labor body had proposed a wage formula to end what it called a 10-year adverse effect from the large-scale use of braceros. If there was a shortage of domestic labor—the theory of the law for importing Mexicans—then American farm worker wages should have risen by about the same 91 percent since 1950 as occurred in the related "food and kindred products" industry, the state federation argued.

Under this formula, no Mexicans would be used for crop activities showing a wage increase of less than 91 percent since the import program was legalized in 1950, the state AFL-CIO said.

Growers Protest

The $1 an hour minimum also drew immediate fire from corporate growers, a spokesman for the California Council of Growers saying the minimum for Mexicans will exert pressure toward higher wages for Americans "who really have no desire or are unqualified" for farm work.

A Labor Dept. field representative in California said the expected effect of the minimum would be to induce growers to take a closer look at the source of their labor and may provide an incentive for American farm workers.

MORRIS S. NOVIK
Named to U.S. Advisory Commission on Information

Novik Named Adviser to USIA Unit

Morris S. Novik, radio and television consultant to the AFL-CIO, has been chosen by Pres. Kennedy as a member on the U.S. Advisory Commission on Information.

The commission, a five-member group, serves in an advisory capacity to the director of the U.S. Information Agency on its worldwide network of services carrying news about the United States to other peoples. The commission also reports directly to Congress on the USIA's operations.

Novik has had a long career as communications and radio consultant to both unions and government agencies and has also operated radio stations in New York City.

From 1927 through 1936 he was director of Unity House, the Ladies' Garment Workers summer resort in Pennsylvania, and from 1938 to 1945 was director of communications for radio station WNYC in New York.

In 1952 he was a member of the U.S. delegation to the Paris meeting of the United Nations Educational, Scientific & Cultural Organization.

Chosen by Kennedy for another place on the Advisory Commission was Clark Mollenhoff, a Washington correspondent for the Cowles newspapers.

Beirne, Doherty Report:

Beleaguered Berlin Seeks Labor's Hand

The people of West Berlin, undergoing the stress of the cold war, need from American labor "only one thing—the friendly word, the pat on the back, the warm handshake of friendship."

This was the word brought back from a visit to that divided city by AFL-CIO Vice Presidents Joseph Beirne and William Doherty.

Beirne and Doherty were interviewed on their experiences on the AFL-CIO radio program, Labor News Conference. The inquiring reporters were John Herling of the National Newspaper Syndicate and Boyd France, the Washington foreign affairs correspondent for Business Week magazine.

Beirne, head of the Communications Workers, and Doherty, president of the Letter Carriers, went to Frankfurt to attend a conference of the Postal Telegraph & Telephone Intl. They then went on to visit Berlin and inspect the 26-mile wall erected by the East Germans to curtail and control intercourse between the free and communist-controlled sectors.

The reporters asked about the mood of the Berliners and the relationship between labor and Berlin.

"The people of West Berlin themselves and the organized workers of West Berlin," Beirne replied, "recognize the very severe international crisis they face. Their morale is extremely good.

'Look to the West'

"They look toward the leaders of the West and particularly the labor leaders to bring to them only one thing—the most human of things in the recorded pages of history—the moral support of other people outside of their communist-surrounded island."

Doherty agreed. He said he and Beirne met with the leaders of the West German trade union movement and the communications union and with West Berlin Mayor Willy Brandt.

"In all of our contacts," Doherty said, "we marveled at the great courage the people of West Berlin, in particular, are demonstrating."

Asked about the effect of the wall and the increased Communist pressures on Berlin, Beirne said the first reaction was an exodus of workers and businessmen and their families.

That trend has petered out, he added, reporting Mayor Brandt as saying "a reverse picture has developed."

"People are now coming back because they have more confidence in what the West will do, particularly the United States of America," Beirne said. He added praise of Gen. Lucius Clay, American missions in the city, and the visits of U.S. government leaders and AFL-CIO leaders.

Doherty said the wall dividing Berlin is a symbol of "man's inhumanity toward man" because it has split up families and relatives.

Fence Called Dirty

Beirne called it "a dirty, disgusting, shoddy fence." He said it has divided "wholesome human beings" in both West and East Berlin. He expressed the view the East German people would tear it down if they had the chance.

"So there stands a human being," Beirne said of the Berliner, "who needs only one thing—the friendly word, the pat on the back, the warm handshake of friendship."

Beirne, asked about the role of labor in international affairs, commented:

"Throughout the whole free world—and this is true in West Berlin, in Africa, in Latin America—the one responsible spokesman of the American viewpoint who is accepted, whose credentials are not questioned at all by anyone, who has no ulterior motive, who has nothing to gain, who has only to give, is the American labor leader and the movement he represents."

Steel Can Meet Foreign Competition, Union Says

Steel produced in the United States is, "or at the discretion of the producers can be," competitive with that of foreign countries, the Steelworkers told the House Ways & Means Committee.

The Steelworkers' testimony presented by Meyer Bernstein, international affairs director of the union, came as the committee wound up five weeks of hearings on Pres. Kennedy's expanded trade program.

Bernstein, on the basis of intensive studies made by the union, said "there is a small employment cost advantage abroad which is more than counter-balanced by a materials cost disadvantage." He declared that several of the largest American steel companies have labor costs" either lower than or barely above those of our chief foreign competitors."

Another union, the United Textile Workers, called for international fair labor standards to stop exploitation of labor by foreign "profiteers." UTW Pres. George Baldanzi said such agreements should establish fair wages based on each country's level of development. Countries which refused to go along would have their shipments subject to a special tax under Baldanzi's proposal. He urged also liberalization of the proposed trade adjustment assistance program.

The committee is expected to go into closed-door sessions for the next two or three weeks to draft its version of the Kennedy program.

The AFL-CIO has strongly supported the President's proposals but has called for more liberal treatment of workers who lose jobs because of increased imports.

Technical Engineers Win Two Elections

The American Federation of Technical Engineers won bargaining rights in two recent elections, the union has reported. The vote at the Niagara Frontier plants of Bell Aerosystems Co., Niagara County, N. Y., was AFTE 240, no union 80. At the South Shore Engineering Corp., Boxboro, Mass., it was AFTE 12, no union 3.

Representing the union in both elections was Miles W. Holmes of Providence, R. I., international representative.

Delaney Named to Labor Liaison Post

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg has named George P. Delaney, a former AFL - CIO international representative, as his special assistant for liaison with the American labor movement.

Goldberg said the new liaison post was established because of the "increasing interrelation" of union activities with those of the Labor Dept., and in recognition of labor's expanding role in national affairs.

Delaney has been with the Labor Dept. since late 1959, handling international labor affairs assignments. He served as U.S. worker delegate to the Intl. Labor Organization and as a member of the ILO governing board from 1948 to 1958. Before joining the Labor Dept. staff he was director of organization for the Operating Engineers.

President Asks Changes In U. S. Transit

Pres. Kennedy has proposed to Congress what he termed "a new national transportation policy" emphasizing less regulation and greater price competition among different forms of transportation, and a large-scale program of federal aid to cities with public transportation problems.

The President reiterated tax changes he had proposed earlier, including elimination of the 10 percent federal tax on railroad passenger tickets and imposition of a 5 percent tax on air tickets.

He announced that the Administration will set up an interdepartmental committee to "formulate general policies" on mergers "in each segment of the transportation industry" and to "assist" the Justice Dept. in developing "a government position" on each merger application submitted to regulatory agencies.

The President proposed a three-year $500 million program of federal aid to metropolitan areas for expansion and modernization of public mass transportation. He asked that $100 million be made available for this purpose during the fiscal year beginning next July 1.

36-Hour Week Won By Textile Binders

New York — New agreements which will give some 500 workers in the city's bias binding industry the 36-hour week next March have been signed by the Textile Workers Union of America with the operators of 32 plants.

Meany Renews Student Job Plea

AFL-CIO unions again will play a major role in helping to find summer jobs for nearly 3,000 African students attending U.S. colleges—many on scholarships or grants insufficient to enable them to complete their education without supplementary earnings.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany noted in a letter to international union presidents that unions last year placed more than 200 African students in summer jobs in response to an emergency plea from the federation.

The need for jobs this year is "still urgent," he declared.

Labor's efforts last year enabled students to find summer jobs in organized plants and on the staffs of international and local unions, state and city central bodies. Mrs. Maida Springer of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs, who is coordinating the program, said students from Ethiopia, Nigeria, Liberia, Sierra Leone, Rhodesia, Kenya, Ghana, Tunisia, Uganda and Somalia. Tunisia, Uganda and Somalia were among those helped.

Meany pointed out that many of the students are or will be leaders in their nations and the AFL-CIO is "vitally interested in assuring that these African students acquire the best possible experience in this country" as a contribution to "democratic national development, which will ultimately help build a lasting world peace."

FIVE OBSERVERS from the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions attended recent sessions of the United Nations Commission on the Status of Women at UN headquarters in New York. The commission was created under the UN's Economic & Social Council, to which the ICFTU is accredited as a spokesman for free labor. Left to right are Mrs. Bessie Hillman, Clothing Workers; Marcelle Dehareng, secretary of the women's committee of the ICFTU's trade secretariats; Yvette Charpentier, Ladies' Garment Workers affiliated with the Canadian Labor Congress; Clara Allen, Communications Workers; Dorothy Haener, Auto Workers' Women's Dept.

Jodoin Rallies Canadian Labor For White Collar Organizing

By Gervase N. Love

Vancouver, B. C.—The unorganized field of "white collar" and "white smock" workers was hailed as an opportunity rather than a problem by Pres. Claude Jodoin in his keynote address to the 4th constitutional convention of the Canadian Labor Congress.

Jodoin's fighting speech was cheered by some 1,600 delegates to the largest convention ever held in Vancouver.

"Organizing may not be easy today but it never was easy," he said. "Those before us had to meet in back kitchens and cellars; they had to observe the strictest oaths of secrecy. They didn't organize the unions we have today by a snap of the fingers.

"They had opposition from employers, just as we have opposition from employers today. Trade unions are still not accepted by some reactionary groups. The right of employes to join the union of their choice may be written into the law of the country but that law is today defied, time and again, by managements which try to create fear in the hearts of their employes."

Jodoin said office, technical and administrative workers know that their wages and working conditions stem from contracts negotiated by unionized workers. In many cases, he added, the gains were subsequently enacted into law.

"We can help these people form their associations or their unions and they, through association with our movement, can help us toward the objectives we all seek," he said. "This is a challenge which faces the labor movement today and we can meet it by working together."

Jodoin assailed the Canadian Chamber of Commerce for promoting the "Operation Freedom" it borrowed from the Chamber of Commerce of the U.S., calling it opposition to "a sharing of the better things of life among all people." The CofC purported to find "the greatest erosion of freedom" in "the gray area of the welfare state."

"What kind of freedom do these people want?" he asked.

Freedom to Suffer?

"Do they want injured workmen to be free to suffer without the benefits of workmen's compensation?

"Do they want widows and orphans to be free to try to get along without the social legislation that has been provided to help them?

"Do they want the aged to be free to struggle for a mere existence without the welfare that pensions provide?

". . . The program of 'Operation Freedom' lumps together socialism and communism. There are many in this hall today who are proud to call themselves Socialists and I'm sure they don't appreciate the efforts of the Chamber to tar them with the brush of communism.

"No one in this country has fought communism harder than has our labor movement. We will continue that fight—and at the same time, we fight this kind of John Birchism.

"What the Canadian Chamber of Commerce is proposing is a copy of what the Chamber of Commerce in the United States previously proposed. This attempt to import McCarthyism into Canada—duty free—is all too clear."

Jodoin warned in addition against regarding unemployment with "complacency" because it has not been as bad this year as last; called for greater labor-management cooperation and proposed a joint committee to go to Europe to study "conditions and attitudes there and see if we can learn something that might improve the situation here," and demanded improvements in social security.

NDP Called 'Vehicle'

He welcomed the establishment of the New Democratic Party, saying it "forms a vehicle" by which unions if they so decide "can contribute to a greater Canada," and strongly defended moves by CLC unions to "liberate" workers whose unions are dominated by Communists or employers. He also urged strengthening of the United Nations and a sharing of Canada's abundance with the underdeveloped nations.

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. L. M. Raftery, president of the Painters and AFL-CIO fraternal delegate to the convention, brought greetings from Pres. George Meany and the AFL-CIO Executive Council.

The free world, he said, must accept the "stark, the unpalatable truth" that the cold war will be "hard and bitter and long." The great psychological advantage the free world has in the "crucial tests" that lie ahead, he said, "is the growing hysteria of the Soviet leadership in this fight for survival."

"Man historically has had to struggle for freedom from oppression from government," he said, "but more recently the corporation has become the oppressor in social terms.

"It is this legal entity which provides management of property, that fixes the prices of bread, shelter, clothing and other essentials.

"Accordingly, a renewed sense of the public responsibility of business interests must be applied. Experience suggests that this will not spring simultaneously, or to any measurable degree, from the altruism of management. On the contrary it must be supplied, even as the traffic lights on the corner, through democratic process."

The Secret of Success

Raftery called mass purchasing power the real secret of America's economic success. But before there can be mass production, he added, "there must be the power of mass consumption." The free world's power to out-produce the Communist bloc, he continued, is a material advantage to add to its psychological advantage.

Some international unions came under attack during discussion of a resolution dealing with political activities. Many Canadian unions which want to affiliate with the New Democratic Party are prohibited from doing so by union constitutional clauses which Canadians feel are tailored more to the U.S. than their own country.

Gerry Gallagher of the Toronto Laborers said that some international union constitutions are hampering the development of Canadian unions as well as interfering with their political activities.

Rock Slides Delay CLC Delegates

Vancouver, B. C. — Some 120 Delegates from Eastern Canada to the convention of the Canadian Labor Congress arrived nearly 24 hours late because of rock slides along the Canadian Pacific Railway's main line.

The CPR Canadian found the rails blocked near Revelstoke, B. C., near the Alberta border. Passengers were transferred to buses for the 300 miles into Vancouver.

UAW Member Volunteers:

'Kathy Clause' Wins Peace Corps Goal

Milwaukee—Mrs. Katherine Schultz, mother of two sons in college, a skilled assembler at a General Motors plant here, and financial secretary of the 2,500-member Local 438 of the Auto Workers, will use her training as a medical technician and her fluency in Spanish on a new $75-a-month job.

She's been accepted as a Peace Corps volunteer and will soon be on her way to Bolivia to work on a public health project.

When Mrs. Schultz completes her two-year tour of duty, she will be able to reclaim her job at GM's A-C Spark Plug plant here—thanks to the "Kathy clause" the union insisted on writing into the contract last fall. This is a leave of absence provision, negotiated with "Kathy" Shultz' desire to join the Peace Corps specifically in mind.

Mrs. Schultz decided to apply for the Peace Corps because "it sounded like something I always wanted to do."

She brings to her new assignment skills she acquired by commuting three days a week to Chicago—after completing her 7 a. m. to 3 p. m. shift at the plant—to study laboratory and X-ray technology.

She also brings to the Peace Corps a background of years of active union membership, participation in union summer schools, education programs, and as a delegate to UAW conferences.

At a farewell dinner in Milwaukee, messages of congratulation and tribute came from Wisconsin Gov. Gaylord Nelson (D), UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Rep. Henry S. Reuss (D-Wis.), among others.

Praised for Service

UAW Regional Dir. Harvey Kitzman praised Kathy as "a conscientious union officer" inspired to broader fields of service to her fellow human beings, and Wisconsin Atty. Gen. John W. Reynolds told the gathering that Mrs. Schultz demonstrated labor's role in social reform at home and abroad.

Mrs. Schultz, in response, said simply: "There is a great need for public health service in Bolivia, and I hope to learn from the people there as much as I help in a small way."

Peace Corps Wins In Both Houses

Both Senate and House have voted to authorize $63.75 million for the Peace Corps' 1963 fiscal year budget—the full amount requested by the Administration.

The bill received bipartisan support and a number of congressmen who voted against establishing the Peace Corps last year said the corps had "proved its worth" and they favored expansion. The 1961 House vote was 288-97; this year's was 317-70.

Among those who changed from opposition to support of the Peace Corps was Rep. Howard W. Smith (D-Va.), conservative chairman of the Rules Committee, who said: "I think they have done a good job."

Farmers Told R-T-W Hits Best Customers

National Farmers Union Pres. James G. Patton has called on Oklahoma's farmers to reject a so-called "right-to-work" constitutional amendment, warning that it would hurt their "best customer—the working man and woman."

Patton's blast at the "right-to-work" drive came as sponsors of a constitutional amendment to outlaw union shop agreements neared an Apr. 16 deadline for filing the 137,000 signatures needed to place the referendum on the ballot in November.

In another development, Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg emphasized his support of the union shop and his opposition to "right-to-work" laws in a letter to an Oklahoma University professor.

Goldberg said attempts by "right-to-work" supporters to use his comments on the propriety of the union shop in the federal civil service to imply opposition to the union shop in private industry "misinterpreted" his position.

"Quite the contrary," he wrote Prof. Paul A. Brinker, "I believe that the union shop has been an important element of labor-management stability and has contributed greatly to industrial peace and the improvement of working conditions for American labor."

Brinker, a member of the Oklahoma Committee to Preserve Free Marketing and Bargaining—a citizens' group opposed to "right-to-work"—had written Goldberg that a speech he made in January to the American Federation of Government Employes "is being used out of context" by "work" law supporters in Oklahoma.

Patton urged Oklahoma farmers "to stand firm with organized labor for the improvement of living standards for both groups and to help do so by defeating the so-called 'right-to-work' law."

Target Is Security

Declaring that the same groups seeking to ban the union shop are also, "wearing different hats," attacking farm cooperatives, Patton said:

"Oklahoma farmers must realize the target of the so-called 'right-to-work' campaign is destruction of the same kind of security for wage workers that farmers here fought to achieve for themselves in the form of marketing agreements.

"We appreciate help from organized labor to improve farm prices and provide more security for family farmers. We are glad therefore to join with Oklahoma working men and women in fighting this latest of many proposals for destroying the effectiveness of collective bargaining."

New Jersey Governor Acclaims Labor Press

Trenton—A New Jersey Labor Press Day proclamation, signed by Gov. Richard F. Hughes, expressed gratitude for the continued growth in the number and professional standards of labor publications. It was read at the seventh annual labor editors conference at Rutgers University.

Kennedy Program Urged:

Full Foreign Aid Necessary To U.S. Interests, Labor Says

"hunger, disease and illiteracy" directly serves this nation's "fundamental national interest" by creating conditions which can enable democracy to "take root" in the newly independent nations.

Describing the "new and different" economic aid program of the Kennedy Administration as "more realistic" in its emphasis on the need for economic and social progress, Biemiller praised these features:

- Long-range national development, accompanied by long-term financing. "Each proposed project is now viewed not as a single isolated entity but in terms of its potential contribution to overall national progress."

- Self-help and social reform. "Our help will fail unless the people of the developing countries are ready and willing to help themselves. One way of assuring that there will be the necessary mass support for progressive measures in these countries is if social reform goes hand-in-hand with economic development."

- Alliance for Progress. "This large-scale effort to promote economic and social development in Latin America . . . represents a welcome evidence of our deep concern for the welfare of the people in our own hemisphere."

- Free World Cooperation. "The U.S. has rightly urged other free world industrially advanced nations to shoulder their fair share of assistance to developing countries. . . . Our NATO allies and Japan have increased their foreign aid commitments."

The AFL-CIO praised the emphasis on long-term development loans, grants and technical assistance in the Administration proposals, declaring:

"This coordinated approach makes sense to us and should mean that we will be getting the maximum value in terms of human betterment and human progress."

Noting that additional funds have been requested to help the new African states, Biemiller said U.S. help in building the economy of the new nations "can also help them to maintain their political independence, particularly from the Soviet Bloc, which is using every possible device to woo their support."

Part of the President's foreign aid budget was authorized last year, so the additional authorizations requested for economic aid total only $2.1 billion.

Two Chances to Cut

Opponents of foreign aid have two chances to cut away at the President's program. First, Congress must vote on authorization for funds—in effect a ceiling on the amount which can be appropriated. Then, after a new round of hearings before the Appropriations Committees, Congress votes the actual amount which can be spent.

Last year the President asked for $4.78 billion in combined economic and military aid; Congress authorized $4.25 billion, and then appropriated only $3.91 billion.

Hidden Unemployment Seen in Job Force Dip

ing work because of the scarcity of jobs. If a person is not actively seeking work the government does not count him in the labor force.

Heller termed this "submerged unemployment" and said it probably stemmed from the "inadequate strong pressing job opportunities" that would normally bring persons into the labor force.

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg told the editors and reporters at the conference that "things are happening with respect to the labor force which we did not contemplate in terms of normal development in this area." He said, however, that "preliminary indications are that the April labor force is rising again."

Seasonal Changes Listed

Initial indications from a study undertaken by the Labor Dept. on the labor force problem shows, said Goldberg, that "school dropouts are being arrested" and that more persons are retiring and leaving the labor force because of improvements in social security legislation.

He promised "another look at the situation in April."

The job figures showed a drop in unemployment from February to March of 160,000 and a drop in the jobless rate from 5.6 to 5.5 percent. Both are within the seasonal changes that occur in March.

However, long term unemployment showed a slight increase in those unemployed both 15 weeks or longer and 27 weeks or longer, the first category going from 1.431 million in February to 1.475 million in March and the second from 703,000 to 734,000. A year ago March the figures were 1.862 million and 799,000.

In addition to those completely unemployed, the Labor Dept. reported that 2.336 million were employed part-time for economic reasons, an increase of about 150,000 over February.

Goldberg told the conference that long-term joblessness is still "too high" and that the Administration is not satisfied with the unemployment situation although he said the March figures "continue a favorable trend."

Compared with March 1961, unemployment was down 1.1 million and employment at 66.6 million was up 800,000.

Case Bill Would Extend Davis-Bacon

A bill to extend the Davis-Bacon prevailing wage act to construction of leased post office buildings has been introduced by Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N. J.).

Case noted that the Post Office Dept. has shifted to a leasing arrangement for its new buildings and there is no present requirement that Davis-Bacon policies be followed in such contracts.

Legislation is necessary, he declared, to "close this large loophole in our government's labor standards."

PLANTATION WORKERS UNION of Malaya extended greetings to Michigan State University in the form of a plaque presented to Jack Stieber (left), director of the MSU Labor & Industrial Relations Center, by P. P. Narayanan, chairman of the Asian Regional Organization of the ICFTU. Narayanan, who also is the president of the Malayan Trade Union Congress and organizer of the Plantation Workers, was attending the week-long land-grant centennial conference at MSU on Educational Institutions and International Labor.

Labor's Role Assessed In Developing Nations

East Lansing, Mich.—"Human resources are not merely the means for economic development. They are its very end. Trade unions believe that man alone is the measure of all progress and the true end of all development."

These words by P. P. Narayanan, chairman of the Asian Regional Organization of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and president of the Malayan Trades Union Congress, helped keynote a week-long conference on the role of universities, labor unions, and governments in working with the developing countries of the world.

The conference, held at Michigan State University, drew more than 130 representatives of labor, education and government from all over the world.

Discussions centered on factors in economic development for social progress and on the means of developing and applying human resources in the economic growth of Africa, Latin America, and Asia.

Also on the agenda were discussions of the place of labor education in these societies and an assessment of existing labor education programs.

Clemente K. Lubembe, deputy general secretary of the Kenya Federation of Labor, pointing to the role of trade unions in Africa, noted that the heads of most African states are products of the labor movement there.

"The first responsibility of labor education in underdeveloped areas is to train informed, intelligent, and dedicated labor leaders from the rank and file, and supplant the leadership being furnished by the politicians, government bureaucrats, 'labor dealers' and by those who use the trade unions to subvert democracy," added Cicero Calderon, director of the Asian Labor Education Center, University of the Philippines.

Weaver on Education

Speaking of education as one of the major forces in the transition from colonial status to independence of developing nations, Assistant Sec. of Labor George L-P Weaver pointed out that the cost of all activities of the United Nations and all of its specialized agencies is only about 40 cents a year for each American citizen.

Speakers from the American labor movement included Victor Reuther of the United Auto Workers, who addressed the conference dinner meeting; Gus Tyler, director of politics, education and training for the Ladies' Garment Workers; and Morris Paladino, director of education, Inter-American Regional Organization, ICFTU.

Among the foreign speakers were Luis Alberto Monge, president of the Costa Rica Federation of Labor; Alhaki H. P. Adebola, president of the Trade Union Congress of Nigeria; K. N. Subramanian, joint secretary of the Indian Ministry of Labor; and Thorbjorn Carlsson, labor attache at the Royal Swedish Embassy, Washington, D. C.

Co-sponsored by the Centennial Office of the American Association of Land-Grant Colleges and State Universities, the conference was part of the official observance of the Land-Grant Centennial this year.

Other sponsors were the MSU Labor & Industrial Relations Center and the U.S. Agency for International Development.

VISITING TRADE UNIONISTS from three continents were guests of the AFL-CIO at a luncheon in Washington. Seated are, left to right: Gen. Sec. George T. Skinner of the National Workers' Union, Jamaica, B.W.I.; AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, and Mrs. Maida Springer, AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs. Standing: Sec.-Treas. Osmund Dyce of the Caribbean Congress of Labor; AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler; Howard Robinson, former Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions representative in Korea; Luis Alberto Monge, member of the Costa Rica Legislative Assembly and former general secretary of ORIT; AFL-CIO Vice Presidents Joseph A. Beirne, Joseph D. Keenan and William C. Doherty; P. P. Narayanan, chairman of the Asian Regional Organization of the ICFTU; Serafino Romualdi, AFL-CIO inter-American representative; Deputy Gen. Sec. Clement Lubembe of the Kenya Federation of Labor; Harry H. Pollak, Dept. of Intl. Affairs, and A. C. McLellan, AFL-CIO associate inter-American representative.

Economist Tells Reporters:

Rapid Productivity Rise in '61 Cited as Factor in Jobs Lag

The "remarkably rapid increase in productivity" in 1961 "seems to have gone beyond the bounds" of the normal pickup from a recession and is contributing to the unemployment problem, the nation's top economist has declared.

Dr. Walter W. Heller, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, said that while there is always an upsurge in productivity from the low point of a recession "the upsurge in 1961" was unusual.

While this may bring the nation closer "to our growth objectives," Heller told the Sec. of Labor's Conference for Editors and Reporters, it also means that the nation can produce a gross national product of $570 to $580 billion "with less hands, with less manpower."

This would mean, Heller added, that "we were releasing or displacing or liberating more manpower through technological advance and, at the same time, that means a higher unemployment problem."

Until 1961, said the CEA chairman, there seemed to be "a long-term relationship where you could convert unemployment reduction into GNP, or back, GNP into unemployment reduction." These relationships, he said, did not hold for 1961.

In terms of the general economic situation, Heller said there is some "evidence of an accelerated pickup" in the economy and there may be a "resurgence" this spring to compensate for the slowdown in the economy's recovery during January and February.

Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, in the opening address to the conference, told the editors and reporters that the Administration had introduced "three new dimensions" in the field of labor policy: "the calculated use of official candor and frankness in regard to labor issues and problems," a deliberate policy of determining and "disclosing the public interest" in regard to collective bargaining and a "purposeful effort to respond vigorously to external forces affecting the base on which our entire labor-management structure stands."

Reviewing the program in the economic and labor areas, Johnson described the Administration as one of "builders" rather than "remodelers." A major problem, he said, is to provide 26 million Americans who will enter the job market in the next decade the finest possible education and "jobs meaningful to them and to society."

In other talks and discussions at the conference these points emerged:

- The Kennedy Administration expects to propose this year extension of the minimum wage law to cover workers in laundries, hotels and restaurants and other areas where workers are presently uncovered.
- White House Press Sec. Pierre Salinger reviewed the Administration's information policies and reported that there has been a decrease in the publication of news that might aid the nation's adversaries. He assailed charges that the government is trying to create an "image" of the President, declaring that the President's popularity is real and not the creation of public relations experts.
- A panel discussion of manpower and employment problems emphasized the need for training and improved job placement services. It was estimated that about 100,000 to 120,000 workers will be trained under the new manpower retraining law in the next fiscal year.
- Treasury Under Sec. Robert V. Roosa said there are hopes of trimming the deficit in the U.S. balance of payments this year by at least one-third below the 1961 level.
- Frank W. McCulloch, chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, reviewed the work of the board and touched on the many complex issues coming before it as a result of automation and changes in production techniques. Appropriate units for bargaining is one of the problems brought on by technological changes, he said.
- William E. Simkin, director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, said mediators should not seek to bring about settlements at any price but should work within the framework of achieving non-inflationary settlements.

EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET Pres. Walter Hallstein, center, discussed the potentialities of expanded world trade at a luncheon meeting with AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, right, and Vice Pres. Joseph A. City-Wide Pensions Won In New York

New York — Representatives of five union-management pension plans have signed a reciprocal agreement under which some 26,000 members of five locals will be able to move from job to job among restaurants, cafeterias and luncheonettes without losing their retirement rights.

"Until now," said Pres. David Siegal of the New York Joint Board of the Hotel & Restaurant Employes, "restaurant workers covered by the five individual pension plans in our industry lost pension rights when they moved from the jurisdiction of one local to another, or from one employer to another."

Under the old system, he observed, a worker might work 30 years or so in the restaurant industry, shifting from one job to another, without building up enough credits under any one pension plan to earn retirement benefits.

The reciprocity agreement was signed for the union by Sec. Arthur Russell of Restaurant, Luncheonette & Soda Fountain Employes Local 11; Pres. Joseph Decker and Sec. Al Specht of Delicatessen & Restaurant Countermen's Local 60; Pres. Arduilio Susi of Chefs, Cooks, Pastry Cooks & Assistants Local 89; Pres. Joseph Fox of Cafeteria Employes Local 302, and Pres. Harry Dallas and Sec. Abe Silverstein of Cooks, Countermen, Soda Dispensers, Food Checkers, Cashiers & Assistants Local 325.

Jobs covered by the agreement include those of chefs, cooks, kitchen assistants, countermen, soda dispensers and cashiers. The pact provides that though a worker might change jobs, employers and locals, so long as he remained in the industry he would be entitled on retirement to a pension roughly the same as what he would have been entitled to had he stayed on one job.

CORRECTION

The caption received from a news service for the photograph appearing on page 9 of the Apr. 7 edition of the AFL-CIO News incorrectly identified the official administering the oath to the Arms Control Advisory Committee as Frank Sander. The correct identification is Herbert L. Miller, assistant executive clerk at the White House.

Missile Labor Record Praised by Goldberg

erating last June, he said, the man-days lost in work stoppages dropped to slightly less than eleven hundredths of 1 percent of potential man-days.

This was at the rate of one day lost for every 927, he said, which is "better than industry in general" and "far better than construction in general."

Old Record Cited

The record for four and a half years before creation of the commission, he said, showed a site work stoppage rate of 1.37 percent, or one day lost for every 73.2 potential days worked.

In 18 of the nation's 22 sites, he continued, the record for work without stoppages since last June is "virtually perfect." Counting all 22 sites, he said, the record "is about eight times better in terms of performance than it is in construction generally in the U.S."

The June-December 1961 figure of one day lost in 1,518, he said, was "really phenomenal, almost perfection."

Acknowledging a rise in the 1962 first-quarter figure, most of it in March, he said, the record still "is very substantially improved" from the period before creation of the Missile Sites Commission—only one day lost in stoppages out of 508 worked.

"We had a turn upward. We are hopeful that we can reverse this turn."

Referring to Air Force testimony on the March rise, Goldberg said the Defense Dept. and the Labor Dept. have the same objective—"to do everything we can to prevent" a rise in time lost, and to "bring it down."

But although the record is "not as good as we would like it, it is a pretty good record," he declared.

The problem in many of the lonely, isolated construction sites, he pointed out, "is to keep the labor force," not encourage it into "picking up and walking off."

The motto of the commission, he said, is "Talk, Don't Walk," and the essential problem is simply "one of communication."

The normal penalties such as discharge of an offender, which can be applied in normal employment, he commented, cannot be used in "out-of-the-way places" where the bases are being constructed.

The Field Problem

The Missile Sites Commission has "good cooperation" with international unions and with top contractors, but both groups have "problems with their own people—supervisors on the one hand and the local people on the other."

An apparently impressive figure of man-days lost in a stoppage "can pile up easily as the result of a couple of people walking off a particular site," he said. In Little Rock, Ark., in March, 2,400 man-days were lost "in two days" by the time international union officials could get to the scene to get people back to work while the dispute was discussed.

1-Year TUC Extension Asked by President

ident asked that the one-year extension be made retroactive to that date. An estimated 5,000 workers a day who have exhausted their regular state benefits since Apr. 1 are dependent on congressional action for further payments.

'Urgent' Plea

Kennedy last month made an "especially urgent" plea to Congress to enact the labor-backed McCarthy-King bill for permanent improvements rather than another "stopgap" measure.

His new message—an Apr. 10 letter sent to the Speaker of the House and the President of the Senate—acknowledged that permanent legislation was "unlikely" to get "the consideration it deserves" because of the "heavy schedule" faced by the House Ways & Means Committee and its Senate counterpart.

The House committee, where the legislation must originate, has before it two of the Administration's top priority measures — the trade bill, on which hearings are continuing, and the social security health care for the aged bill.

Would Help 1.1 Million

Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg estimated that 1.1 million workers expected to exhaust their state benefits during the next year would be helped by an extension of the program. He said some 2.5 million jobless workers had drawn more than $695 million in benefits through February, with the first year total expected to reach $800 million.

Kennedy told Congress that the temporary increase in unemployment taxes paid by employers to finance the program would leave a surplus which would reduce the additional cost of a one-year extension.

He proposed that the four-tenths of 1 percent additional tax which has been imposed for 1962 and 1963 be reduced to one-tenth of 1 percent for 1964.

Except for the financing feature, the proposed extension would continue the provisions of the act passed last year. Workers who have exhausted their regular state benefits and are still unemployed would be entitled to an extension of their benefits for half the period of their state entitlement, up to a maximum of 13 additional weeks.

The sidetracked permanent improvement bill in addition would have provided incentives for states to raise their jobless benefit ceilings by steps to two-thirds of the statewide average weekly wage, and would have extended coverage to an additional three million workers.

L. P. MacRostie Dies, Fire Fighters' Trustee

Ottawa, Ont.—Lorne P. MacRostie, a trustee of the Fire Fighters since 1957 and a past president of Local 162, Ottawa, died here following a long illness.

Court Orders Teamsters to Open Books

A federal district court subpoena directing the Teamsters to allow Labor Dept. inspection of the union's records and books relating to organizational and financial reports has been upheld by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

The Teamsters, expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957, challenged the subpoena authority of Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg under the Landrum-Griffin Act's financial reporting sections. The appellate court upheld Goldberg's power to seek a subpoena under the 1959 amendments to the Taft-Hartley Act.

The court ruled that a demand for production of membership lists for checking the union financial reports should be remanded for decision by the district court.

Earlier, Teamster Locals 299 in Detroit and 614 in Pontiac, Mich., had challenged the secretary's subpoena power in the Supreme Court, which refused review. The U.S. Sixth Circuit Court ordered the locals to make their books and records available to the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor-Management Reports.

Key Bills Await Congress Following Midterm Recess

Steel Firms Still Face Price Quiz

By John M. Barry

The steel industry faces a series of government investigations of its structure and pricing policies despite the sudden retreat of major firms from the $6-a-ton increase that incensed Pres. Kennedy and provoked an uproar of public criticism.

The scope and intensity of the inquiries was uncertain, however, as the President adopted a conciliatory attitude toward the steel companies in the wake of his success in forcing them to back-track on the price rise.

At his weekly news conference, Kennedy disclaimed any feeling of "hostility or vindictiveness" and said nothing would be gained "from further public recriminations."

He said further that he was "not unmindful" of the need expressed by the industry for more investment capital, but suggested that this might better come from fuller use of existing plant capacity as the economy expands than from a price increase. Steel production at 90 percent of capacity, instead of the present 60 or 70 percent, would bring more profits than a price hike, the President observed.

He also expressed hopes that the price-rise incident would be "of assistance" in winning passage of the 8 percent tax credit he has proposed for new business investment.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said he was "very pleased" by the cancellation of the increase. Earlier he had urged "a direct and public investigation" of the almost simultaneous action by major companies in jumping prices.

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.), assistant Senate majority leader, called for appointment of a "blue-ribbon" presidential commission to study the economic problems and practices of the steel industry without engaging in a "vendetta."

Chairman Emanuel Celler (D-N. Y.) said the House Anti-trust subcommittee would go ahead with plans for an investigation into the need for legislation "to prevent a recurrence of a second inflationary spiral by concerted steel price increases." But Celler said the subcommittee would not conduct an "extensive across-the-board investigation" because "the penitent shall not be punished."

Cost Figures Demanded

Attorney Gen. Robert F. Kennedy announced that withdrawal of the price increase would not deter the Justice Dept. from pursuing its grand jury investigation into possible monopoly practices in steel.

And Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.), chairman of the Senate

NLRB in Reversal:

Bargaining Ordered On Contracted Work

The National Labor Relations Board, reversing an earlier decision, has ruled that an employer must bargain with the union representing his workers before contracting out work they have been doing, even if he decides to "farm out" the work solely for business reasons.

In the case before it, the board found that the Town & Country Manufacturing Co. of Lawton, Okla., had violated the Taft-Hartley Act by subcontracting its trucking operations to another firm and firing its drivers without consulting the union.

Overturning a trial examiner's decision, the NLRB further found that Town & Country, which makes mobile home trailers, was engaging in pretext when it justified its action on economic grounds. Management's true motive, the board said, "was because the men had joined and selected the union [the unaffiliated Teamsters] as their bargaining representative."

The board ordered the company to cancel the subcontract, resume its trucking operations and reinstate its drivers with back pay as "the most meaningful way" it could remedy its wrong.

The majority opinion—signed by Chairman Frank W. McCulloch, John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown—then went on to assert that all such subcontracting of work, even when done for legitimate business purposes, is a mandatory subject of collective bargaining.

To hold otherwise, the opinion said, would "unduly extend the area within which the employer may curtail or eliminate entirely job opportunities for its employes without notice to them or negotiations with their bargaining representatives."

The majority noted, however, that the duty to bargain in such matters does not obligate an employer to agree to a union's position opposing such a subcontract.

In its decision, the board majority acknowledged that it was departing from a March 1961 ruling in which it found that subcontracting of work for economic reasons was a management prerogative and did not require consultation with the union.

The majority in the Town &

Kennedy Program Nears Showdown

By David L. Perlman

Congress has reached the midpoint of its election-year session with the legislative record it will take to the polls in November still largely unwritten.

At the Easter recess—a 10-day intermission for the House and a four-day weekend for the Senate—more than a dozen major bills were stacked up in committee or awaiting floor action.

These included the heart of Pres. Kennedy's legislative program, and all of them still face sharp opposition from the conservative coalition which has repeatedly demonstrated continued power in the House.

The delayed measures also include most top-priority programs urged by labor.

Still to be acted on are such key Kennedy bills as health care under social security, foreign aid, trade expansion, public works, tax revision and a youth employment opportunities bill.

Other major administration and labor-backed measures which will rank high in the evaluation of the 87th Congress include civil rights bills, improvement of the Davis-Bacon prevailing wage law, pay raises for government workers, several aid to education bills, equal pay for women and a package of consumer protection bills.

GOP Votes May Boomerang

Of three major bills reaching a decisive vote this year, one—the Dept. of Urban Affairs reorganization plan—faced the full strength of the conservative coalition and the result was a defeat for the President. Some observers think the vote might boomerang on opponents at the polls.

Two other bills—manpower retraining and amendments strengthening the Welfare & Pension Plan Disclosure Act—were supported by a number of Republicans, with only the hard core of the coalition in opposition. A House bat-

Anti-'Scab' Act Passed In Michigan

Lansing, Mich.—A law prohibiting the use of professional strikebreakers in Michigan has passed both houses of the legislature and is expected to be signed promptly by Gov. John B. Swainson (D).

Passed unanimously by the House and 26-5 by the Senate, the bill:

- Prohibits any employer, firm or agent involved in a strike or lockout from "knowingly employing" in place of a striking worker anyone who "customarily and repeatedly offers himself for employment in the place of employes involved in a strike or a lockout."
- Prohibits such professional strikebreakers from taking the place or offering to take the place of a striking worker.
- Requires employment agencies to notify workers sent to a struck plant of the existence of a strike or lockout and prevents employers from hiring persons as strike replacements without informing them of the existence of the dispute.

Violations are punishable by up to 90 days in jail and up to a $1,000 fine.

Pilots-Pan Am Case Heads for Arbitration

The Air Line Pilots and Pan American World Airways have agreed to submit to arbitration their dispute over proposed reduction of cockpit crews, thus ending the possibility of a strike by the company's 1,400 pilots originally set for midnight, Apr. 16.

Pres. Kennedy personally announced the ALPA decision following a meeting with union officials and after Labor Sec. Arthur J. Goldberg had entered the contract talks, urging the parties to accept the proposal for final and binding arbitration by a three-member panel.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has accepted appointment by the President to the arbitration panel, along with Edgar Kaiser, head of the Kaiser Steel Co., and Prof. George W. Taylor of the University of Pennsylvania's Wharton School of Finance.

Kennedy congratulated both the Pilots and the airline "on this constructive accomplishment."

He directed the arbitrators to return a decision by May 20. ALPA Pres. Clarence N. Sayen said the union is scheduled to present its case to the panel May 1.

77 Million in U. S. Seen At Substandard Levels

More than 77 million Americans, "or more than two-fifths of a nation," lived in poverty or deprivation in 1960, a new study by the Conference on Economic Progress discloses.

The low rate of economic growth in recent years and the chronically rising idleness of manpower and plant have aggravated the situation by slowing down the rate of reduction of poverty and deprivation to half the 1947-1953 rate, the study declares.

Entitled, "Poverty and Deprivation in the USA," the CEP study directed by Leon H. Keyserling, former chairman of Pres. Truman's Council of Economic Advisers, makes these points:

- In the "poverty" classification were 10.5 million families with annual incomes under $4,000. Almost 4 million individuals with annual incomes of under $2,000 brought the total for this group to 38 million Americans, or more than one-fifth of the nation.
- In the deprivation category, defined as above poverty but short of minimum requirements for a modestly comfortable level of living, were 10.5 million families with

THE CARTOON ABOVE is an American cartoonist's comment on AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany's suggestion that food and medicines, distributed directly by U.S. teams, be sent to Soviet bloc countries now suffering severe shortages. Meany's proposal, advanced in a signed editorial in the AFL-CIO American Federationist, pointed out that the American Relief Administration under Herbert Hoover's direction distributed millions of dollars in food and medicines in Russia during the Twenties, and that a comparable program could be effectively developed now. UAW Separation Pact Upheld at Mack Plant

Newark, N. J.—A separation agreement between Mack Trucks Inc. and the Auto Workers, spelling out rights on employment and transfer of the firm's plant from Plainfield, N. J. to Hagerstown, Md., adequately protected the rights of all workers, a U.S. District Court here ruled.

The court specifically dismissed a suit against Mack Trucks filed by a group of 116 workers seeking $11.8 million in damages on the contention that the plant was a "runaway" and that the employer ignored their vested rights in seniority, pensions and other benefits.

The group of workers based their suit on a 2d U. S. Court of Appeals decision that seniority rights were vested rights and were not lost when a collective bargaining agreement expired.

The district court here held that the separation agreement spells the difference in this case. The court noted that the separation agreement provides for arbitration of disputes arising under its provisions.

Mack Trucks negotiated the agreement with the UAW after it decided to move and a few days after the regular union contract expired. The agreement affected a total of 2,700 workers at the Plainfield plant.

Job Board Tells Who Is Where

Fort Worth, Tex.—For unions that have trouble keeping track of 380 scattered workers, Business Agent O. C. Yancy of Iron Workers Local 263 has an answer—build a job board.

By using a pegboard and colored tags, Yancy can tell at a glance which members are working on which of 32 current jobs. He can tell, too, how many members are working on local jobs, how many are working out of town, and how many members of out of town locals are working here.

Yancy developed the system by using pegboard, 4 ft. by 8 ft., mounted horizontally on an office wall.

Metal pegs were inserted in the board, and on the pegs are tags of white, red and green, each with the name of one ironworker. The white tags have the names of members working on local jobs; red tags are for union members from other areas working in Local 263's jurisdiction; green for Local 263 members working elsewhere.

For members who have retired, are sick, in the armed forces or at college, Yancy keeps track of their names on a separate part of the board with appropriate markings.

Does the system work? Much better than hunting around in books or the files, he said.

KEEPING TRACK of 380 members of Iron Workers Local 263 in Ft. Worth is easy with this giant schedule board. Business Agent O. C. Yancy points to a tag with the name of a member working on one of 32 construction jobs in the area. Each tag has a color denoting whether the member is working on a local job or on an out-of-town job, or whether an out-of-town member is working in Local 263's area. At right are the names of those ill, retired, or not working for other reasons.

Labor Dept.'s March Report:

Job Recovery Found Lagging Despite Some Bright Spots

The nation's recovery from the 1960-61 recession still lags in the area of job recovery, the Labor Dept. analysis of employment-unemployment statistics for March has revealed.

There were some bright spots. Manufacturing jobs, particularly in heavy goods, continued to advance instead of showing a seasonal decline. For "those who have jobs," the situation is "quite encouraging," Deputy Assistant Sec. of Labor Seymour L. Wolfbein told a news conference. He cited a rise in the factory workweek to 40.3 hours—1.2 hours greater than a year ago—and an increase in average weekly earnings of factory workers to $95.91, a record for the month.

A drop in the seasonally adjusted jobless rate from 5.6 percent in February to 5.5 percent in March is not considered significant, economists agree.

Wolfbein emphasized the picture is "hardly as good" in the key area of persistent heavy unemployment as in manufacturing. No measurable dent was made from February in the number of workers jobless for half a year or longer—734,000, or one out of six of the nation's 4.4 million unemployed. The number is little changed from more than a year ago, when one of eight jobless workers had been unemployed for 27 weeks or longer.

No Construction Pickup

Another soft spot was seen in the Labor Dept.'s report of a continued slump in construction employment, which failed to show its usual sharp pickup in March. The number of employed construction workers was the lowest for the month since 1950 and 160,000 below a year ago.

Wolfbein also noted a continued high unemployment rate among out-of-school, out-of-work youth.

While persons between the ages of 16 and 25 make up only 13 percent of the labor force, they represent 26 percent of the unemployed, he observed.

If part-time unemployment—the number of hours of work lost by persons on short time for economic reasons—were added to the full-time unemployment the seasonally-adjusted 5.5 percent unemployment rate in March would rise to 6.6 percent, the Labor Dept. said. Both percentages are virtually unchanged from February.

There were 2.3 million workers on part time for economic reasons during March, an increase of 150,000 over February but a drop of 600,000 from a year ago.

Manufacturing employment, which usually declines in March, rose by 60,000 to 16.5 million. While this was 700,000 above the recession low in February 1961, it remained 300,000 below the pre-recession level of May 1960.

Employment by state and local governments continued its steady increase as did service and finance employment. But the Labor Dept. noted that there has been "virtually no recovery" from recession levels in transportation and mining employment.

Wolfbein said he sees "a pretty good chance" that the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate will drop to 5 percent by the end of 1962.

If it remains at the 5.5 percent level, he noted, actual full-time unemployment would drop to 3.9 million in April, 3.7 million in May, rise to 4.5 million as schools let out, and drop again in the fall.

Strikebreaker Curbs Passed By Michigan

by printing and newspaper unions throughout the nation, had strong bipartisan support in the Republican-controlled legislature. Only five Republicans opposed the measure in the Senate, while 16 Republicans joined with a solid Democratic bloc to support the labor-backed measure.

A similar bill died in the last session of the legislature when amendments restricting picketing were added to it, resulting in withdrawal of labor support. No such efforts were made this year.

Catskills Hotel Halts Warfare Against Union

South Fallsburg, N. Y.—The owners of New Pines, Inc., resort hotel in the Catskills, have surrendered in their fight to halt an organizing drive by Local 343, Hotel & Restaurant Employes.

The hotel management, involved in sworn charges of a waiter that he was paid $600 to "spy" on union meetings and a charge by union Sec.-Treas. Philip Kazansky, who said a hotel guard fired at him, has signed a settlement stipulation which frees the union of charges brought by management and permits it to resume its campaign to organize Catskill Mountain summer resorts.

In the settlement, approved by an NLRB panel of three members, the hotel has agreed to take these actions:

- Reinstate employe Helen Hydock at once, and seven other employes at the beginning of the 1962 summer season—all with lost pay.
- Pay employe Sarah Danon all the back pay she lost on layoff.
- Stop offering to pay or paying money to induce any employe to report on union activities, the names of union members or the organizing plans used by Local 343.
- Cease interrogating employes on their feelings about the union; threatening them with discharge or other reprisals; engaging in spying on employes, discouraging membership in Local 343 or any other union, or interfering in any manner with the right of employes to engage in concerted activities.

The stipulation, entered into by management and the union on Mar. 30, has been approved by an NLRB panel made up of Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and members Boyd Leedom and Gerald A. Brown.

The union had been fighting since last summer to establish its right to represent employes. It set up picket lines after the hotel fired 16 of the local's newly-signed members, and the NLRB Buffalo regional office refused to credit a complaint that the employes had been fired for union activities.

The regional office instead accepted management's charge that the union was picketing illegally to force recognition and issued a complaint. However, during a hearing on the regional NLRB's application for an injunction against the picketing, Waiter Larry Slofsky testified that he served as an "undercover" man for hotel management when the latter threatened to fire him and "blackball" him at other Catskills resorts.

U.S. District Judge Charles M. Metzner promptly halted the hearing to allow time for the NLRB to investigate. The result was the settlement stipulation and the labor board's subsequent order against the hotel to cease illegal interference with the union and reinstate, with back pay, employes illegally fired for union activity.

Board Shifts Rule on Work Subcontracts

Country case cited an April 1960 decision of the Supreme Court under what the NLRB termed a parallel provision of the Railway Labor Act. In that case, the board said, the high court "made it patently clear that the elimination of unit jobs for economic reasons was a 'term or condition of employment' over which an employer must first bargain with a duly designated union. . . ."

Board member Boyd Leedom joined the majority in ordering the company to restore its trucking operations, but only on the ground that management had acted out of discriminatory motives, not for business purposes. Philip Ray Rodgers dissented entirely.

'More Jobs, More Work':

Plumbers Get 3-Year National Agreement

The Plumbers & Pipe Fitters have negotiated a three-year national agreement raising minimum wages 10 cents an hour each year for members employed on large industrial construction projects.

The wage floor for journeymen is raised to a minimum range of $3.15 this year to $3.35 in 1964. Actual wages rates, set by local agreement, in many areas are higher than this minimum.

Union Pres. Peter T. Schoemann said the agreement—longest in duration ever negotiated with the National Constructors Association—means "that we and our employers are anticipating an extended period of steady industrial expansion, with more jobs for our contractors and more work for our union members."

The agreement specifies that workers will be referred to all jobs without regard to race, creed or color. This is in line with public policy contained in the President's executive order on government contracts.

Employment of union members by the contractors' group, made up of engineering and construction firms which design and build large industrial plants in the United States and abroad, normally fluctuates between 50,000 and 100,000.

In addition to the wage increase and the anti-discrimination clause, features of the agreement include:

- A guarantee of two hours of reporting-time pay, beginning Jan. 1, 1963, for workers who report to jobs but cannot work because of bad weather.
- Provision for either the union or the employer to utilize the National Disputes Adjustment Plan established last year by the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. and the constructors' association. This provides referral to a special arbitration board of disputes which cannot be solved by normal procedures.

Schoemann said the three-year agreement would be a "stabilizing factor" in the nation's economy and John E. Quinn, chairman of the management negotiating committee, described it as a "non-inflationary" settlement.

National agreements on minimum wage levels have been negotiated by the association and the union since 1941. The previous agreements covered a two-year period.

BRIEFING SESSION FOR JUNIOR BUSINESS EXECUTIVES is conducted at AFL-CIO headquarters in Washington by federation staff members. In meeting presided over by John D. Connors, assistant to Pres. George Meany, businessmen now on Alfred P. Sloan Fellowships at Massachusetts Institute of Technology heard Nat Goldfinger of Dept. of Research and Associate General Counsel Thomas E. Harris, shown seated at table, and Assistant Dir. John Schreier of the Dept. of Organization, not shown in pictures.

Supervisors Ruled Out As U. S. Union Officers

Supervisors with "substantial management responsibilities" will be ineligible to hold office in federal employe unions under guidelines issued by the Civil Service Commission to carry out the President's executive order on employe-management relations.

The commission told government agencies they should allow a "reasonable" transition time before requiring supervisors to give up union posts.

While postal employe unions have traditionally been made up and led exclusively by rank-and-file employes, most other unions of government employes have made no distinction in membership.

The new government policy permits supervisors to be members of the same union as other employes so long as they do not hold office or serve as a union representative or spokesman.

The Civil Service Commission also advised agencies that while so-called "employe councils" sponsored by management are not prohibited under the President's order, agencies in which there is substantial union membership "should take a rather close look" at an "employe council." Such a council, the CSC said, would definitely "not be appropriate" where a legitimate union represents a majority of workers and has exclusive bargaining rights.

Pan Am and Pilots Agree To Arbitrate

the Pilots postponed their strike deadline for 24 hours, then agreed to the arbitration procedure.

They have been negotiating for a new contract with Pan Am for nearly two years. At the heart of the dispute is management's insistence on reducing the crew complement of its jet airliners from three pilots and a flight engineer to two pilots and an engineer. The Pilots want the third man in the cockpit to be a pilot qualified as an engineer.

Negotiations between the airline and the Flight Engineers also are stalled over the issue. That union, too, agreed last month at the urging of Goldberg to postpone a scheduled walkout.

The President's announcement said the arbitration would provide "full recognition of the equal interests in this matter of the flight engineers who are represented by the Flight Engineers Intl. Association.

"There must be and there will be full equity achieved here for all affected parties," Kennedy's statement said.

annual incomes of from $4,000 to $6,000 and more than 2 million individuals more with incomes from $2,000 to $3,000, a total of 39 million Americans, also more than one-fifth of a nation.

- Below the level of poverty there were 3.5 million families with incomes under $2,000 and 1.75 million individuals earning under $1,000—a total of 12.5 million.

The study notes that at the opposite extreme there were 3.5 million families with incomes of $15,000 and over, and less than 500,000 individuals with incomes of $7,500 and over, a total of 12.5 million or about 7 percent of the population.

Tracing the rate of reduction in poverty, the study reveals that in the years 1929-1960 the average annual rate was 2.2 percent. From 1935 to 1947 the annual rate of reduction was 4.8 percent; from 1947 to 1953 it dropped to 2.7 percent; during the years 1953 to 1960 the annual rate dropped to 1.1 percent.

An analysis of those living in poverty in 1960 showed that more than one-fourth were in consumer units where the head was unemployed; far more than half were in units whose heads had eight years of education or less; almost a third were in units whose head was female.

About one-fourth of the total number of persons living in poverty had consumer unit heads aged 65 or over; more than one-fifth were non-white; more than one-sixth were rural farm people; and more than two-fifths lived in the South.

Lifting the living standards of the 77 million in poverty or deprivation is "not only imperative in human terms," says the study, but also is the key to maximum employment and production and more rapid economic growth.

The CEP booklet calls for maximum employment by the end of 1963, with joblessness reduced to less than 3 percent, and a total 1962 increase in production 10 to 11 percent higher than in 1961.

The study calls also for an increase in the federal budget, increased social security benefits and strengthened unemployment compensation programs, reduction of the tax burden on low-income families, liberalization of monetary policy, an all-out attack on farm poverty, and urgently needed wage adjustments.

The goal, the study declares, is to reduce families living in poverty from 10 million to 2 million by 1965 and to a half-million by 1970.

The CEP is a non-profit organization engaged in economic research and education. Serving on its national committee are AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Vice Presidents Walter P. Reuther, Al J. Hayes and O. A. Knight.

Copies of "Poverty and Deprivation in the USA" are available from the conference at 50 cents a copy with reductions in price for bulk orders. The CEP is at 1001 Connecticut Ave., N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

200 Study World Labor Relations

More than 200 delegates from universities, government and the labor movement attended a conference on international labor training at American University in Washington, D. C., with 10 foreign countries represented.

Held under the auspices of American University's School of Intl. Service and Workers Education Local 189 of the Teachers, this was the first in a series of conferences designed to clarify specific problems in international labor training and find new methods of meeting them.

Panels of experts analyzed the emerging labor movements in underdeveloped countries of Africa, Asia and Latin America. They emphasized the individual nature of the worker's problems in each country. As one panelist put it, "We cannot help labor leaders in these countries if we attempt to transplant the successful methods of American labor to their soil."

Principal speakers included George S. McGovern, director of Food for Peace and Jacob Clayman, administrative director of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.

Pilots Group Elects Sayen, Three Others

Chicago—Pres. C. N. Sayen of the Air Line Pilots was re-elected president of the Intl. Federation of Air Line Pilots Associations for his 10th term at the international trade secretariat's convention in Stockholm.

Named regional vice presidents from the United States were Capt. W. A. Masland of Pan American World Airways; Capt. F. Sterling, Jr., of Pan American Grace Airways, and Capt. Marvin Cooney of Northwest Airlines.

Confederation of Free Trade Unions, reports on progress toward a settlement. Welsh, a former AFL-CIO organizer, had been asked to assist the workers by Gen. Sec. Tom Mboya of the Kenya Federation of Labor, who at the time was participating in constitutional talks in London. An arbitration agreement ended the walkout. (Photo by East African Newspapers Ltd.).

Labor Given Thanks for Aid to CARE

AFL-CIO contributions to CARE helped the organization provide 70 tons of relief supplies to flood victims in Viet Nam, according to word received at AFL-CIO headquarters.

"The governor's representative welcomed CARE to the area and in his speech officially thanked CARE donors for their aid," Harold Sillcox, chief of the CARE mission to Viet Nam, reported to Dir. Michael Ross of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs.

"In reply the CARE representative emphasized the person-to-person aspect of CARE's operations and the concern of CARE donors for the welfare of their Vietnamese friends who had suffered in the flood.

"The flood victims are most appreciative of the assistance you have made available through CARE and at their request I convey to you their gratefulness."

The floods took place in an area west of Saigon, along the Cambodian border, when the Mekong River went over its banks last September and devastated two provinces whose average land level is normally only a foot or two above the river. An estimated 90 percent of the houses were destroyed. Crops were washed out—particularly rice—and the fact that the waters required months to drain off prevented new plantings.

On Nov. 21 CARE distributed 600 bags of rice, 600 jars of fish sauce, 1,200 tins of sardines and 600 cotton packages. On Dec. 10 and 11, it made a second delivery of 1,000 bags of rice, 2,000 tins of sardines, 2,000 tins of fish sauce and 1,000 blankets.

Philadelphia Library Has Union Exhibit

Philadelphia—An exhibit at the Logan Square Library here is an outgrowth of the cooperation between labor and libraries sponsored by the Joint Committee on Library Service to Labor Groups, created on a national basis by the AFL-CIO and the American Library Association.

The exhibit of labor books, pamphlets and materials is one of the projects carried out by the Free Library of Philadelphia and the Philadelphia AFL-CIO. Others include supplying unions, schools and other groups with lists of reading materials, the use of a bookmobile at union halls, and similar activities.

Local sponsors are the city central labor body and the school extension division of the Philadelphia School District, headed by Robert H. Coates. Central body heads are Pres. Norman Blumberg and Sec.-Treas. Joseph T. Kelley.

Representatives both of labor and libraries have shown increasing awareness of the advantages of cooperation. They have set up a national committee to review progress and to suggest new projects and techniques.

The AFL-CIO has given its endorsement to this cooperation and a number of central bodies have sponsored exhibits and urged local unions to make more use of library services.

Stock Option Deals Branded as 'Shady'

Chicago—The practice of permitting corporation executives to buy stock at prices far under market costs is a "putrid system" which is "shady" though not considered illegal, Pres. Thomas J. Lloyd and Sec.-Treas. Patrick E. Gorman of the Meat Cutters have said.

AT THE PENNSYLVANIA AFL-CIO convention, which opened the day the U.S. Steel Corp. announced its now-rescinded 3.5 percent price increase, Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald declared to the 2,000 delegates and visitors that the recently negotiated USWA contracts with the steel companies could not be considered "in any sense inflationary."

Cooperate With Labor, Management Advised

New York—The future will demand closer cooperation between labor and management, Pres. Howard Coughlin of the Office Workers recently predicted in a speech at an American Management Association forum here.

"This cooperation must, of necessity, be a two-way street," he said. "Labor will have to make itself more aware of the problems of management, and management will have to take unto itself some of the problems of labor.

"I don't think management can content itself with its prior position of waiting for labor to make its collective bargaining proposals on the contract termination date. I believe that management, in its regular contact with representatives of its employes, will in many instances have to propose changes which will appear to be detrimental to management's interests but, in the long run, may improve efficiency and increase production."

Coughlin said that regular labor-management meetings to discuss mutual problems may "appear to be a waste of time," but cited close liaison of the Tennessee Valley Authority with workers' representatives as productive of substantial savings, particularly in the elimination of wasteful operations.

Labor can help management to increase profits and the company can help improve employes' working conditions, he said, if collective bargaining is made "a truly continuing process."

"Management must become part of the collective bargaining process to the extent that its proposals will always take into account not only the interests of management but also those of labor," he said.

"Management . . . does not always have to sit back and adopt a defensive attitude.

"What, if anything, was achieved in the way of good labor-management relations by those firms which adopted the collective bargaining tactics of Lemuel Boulware?"

New Officers Elected:

Pennsylvania Backs Steel Price Rollback

Pittsburgh—The now-rescinded $6 per ton steel price increase, announced by the press on the opening day of the third constitutional convention of the Pennsylvania AFL-CIO here, acted as a sounding board for speakers and delegates alike and provided an element of drama and current interest.

Delegates unanimously approved a motion to send a telegram of support to Pres. Kennedy for his stand on the steel price increase.

Top comment was reserved for David J. McDonald, president of the Steelworkers, who told 2,000 cheering delegates that the recent labor-management agreements "cannot in any sense be considered inflationary." The agreements do not go into effect until July 1, he pointed out, and "this indicates that if a price increase goes into effect, it is a price-wage spiral rather than the reverse."

Richardson Dilworth, Democratic candidate for governor, told the convention that "there has never been a double-cross of the people of the United States like it (the steel price increase) in this century."

In the only floor contest for elected office, Michael Johnson, former education director of the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor, more recently labor director of the Eleanor Roosevelt Cancer Foundation, defeated Leonard P. Mahoney, president of the Philadelphia Building & Construction Trades Council, for the office of full-time executive vice president. The office was created by the ending of the co-president structure of the state body, in effect since merger in 1960.

Harry Boyer, incumbent co-president, was named president, Harry Block was re-elected secretary, and Earl C. Bohr, incumbent, was named treasurer. All three were chosen without opposition for four-year terms. Joseph F. Burke, co-president, had announced earlier that he would not be a candidate for any full-time office.

In other actions, the delegates amended the state constitution to provide for two additional vice presidents. It elected a full complement of 32 vice presidents and 6 auditors.

During the four-day sessions, held in the new Pittsburgh Civic Auditorium, delegates also heard as speakers: James McDevitt, national director of COPE, who called for renewed efforts to elect liberal representatives and U.S. senators; Edward Leonard, president of the Plasterers, who is also a former city councilman from Pittsburgh; State Sec. of Labor & Industry A. Allen Sulcowe; U.S. Sen. Joseph S. Clark, candidate for re-election; Paul Hutchings, director of research, AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept.; and others.

Among the 140 resolutions considered were those calling for support of the Anderson-King bill on health care for the aged, a federal aid to education program, federal aid for low-cost housing and urban redevelopment, opposition to rail mergers, higher standards for migrant workers and improved compensation standards.

Still other resolutions called for stepped-up COPE, community services and workers education activity on local and state levels.

Steel Union Achieves Bias Ban in New Pacts

Pittsburgh—The Steelworkers, with non-discrimination clauses included in the recently-negotiated basic steel contracts, are pushing for similar provisos in all current bargaining.

USWA Pres. David J. McDonald said the first anti-bias clause in 1962 basic steel negotiations was agreed upon with U.S. Steel and was quickly followed by similar agreements with Bethlehem, Jones & Laughlin, Youngstown Sheet & Tube, Colorado Fuel & Iron, Republic, Wheeling, Pittsburgh Steel and Armco. Agreement had been reached earlier with Great Lakes and Inland.

A majority of USWA members working in basic steel plants for the first time are now covered by contract language that fully protects them against in-plant discrimination because of race, creed or color, McDonald said.

"There is no question in my mind that the inclusion of the non-discrimination clause in the agreement means the beginning of the end to discrimination in basic steel plants," he added.

"It is our intention to negotiate similar clauses in the contracts of all companies with which we have negotiations scheduled.

"In the matter of hiring, all of the basic steel producing companies and many of the fabricating companies are either prime or secondary tier contractors with the federal government. As such they are required to file compliance reports with the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity which specifically states their intention to hire without discrimination."

He added that the union expects a "high degree of cooperation" from employers because the clause sought offers an opportunity "to show the manner in which democracy can really be applied to its fullest under good labor-management relations."

LABOR AND LIBRARY PERSONNEL cooperated in an exhibit of labor books, pamphlets and materials collected by the Free Library of Philadelphia and various unions. Shown with one of the exhibits sponsored by the Philadelphia AFL-CIO Council and the School District of Philadelphia are, left, Sec. Sara Fredgant of the labor council's education committee; Ben Stahl of the School District's worker education program; Council Pres. Norman Blumberg and Sec.-Treas. Joseph T. Kelley; F. D. Reese, in charge of library exhibits; and Mrs. Jean Hopper of the library.

'Price Leadership' Laid to Key Firms

Economic Analysis Cites Two Industries

Administered pricing through "price leadership" is a widespread practice in America's major industries which achieves essentially the same results as price-fixing, an article in the current issue of the American Federationist asserts.

"It requires no meetings between companies, no formal agreement of any kind," the article observes. "All that is needed is an understanding that no one will 'rock the boat.' "

Prices thus "administered"—that is, set by a leading firm with other companies following—"have little relationship to the forces of demand for goods," says the magazine.

The article, titled Modern Monopolies and the Public Interest, was prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research as an Economic Review feature of the federation's monthly publication.

Citing the steel industry as a prime example of administered pricing, the article appeared only a few days before the U. S. Steel Corp. kicked off a nationwide furor with its 3.5 percent increase, swiftly matched by several other firms but subsequently rescinded.

In industries such as steel and autos, there is no effective price competition, the Dept. of Research declares. Auto manufacturers compete in styling and quality and steel firms face competition from other products such as aluminum, it notes, but the companies within either industry "do not compete with each other on prices."

Nevertheless administered pricing in itself is not the problem so much as "the manner in which prices are administered to produce high profits at relatively low levels of operations," says the article.

Nor is bigness per se necessarily bad, the analysis adds:

The Issue

"The issue arises when one big company or a few large firms dominate a segment of the economy and use their power to set the industry's prices at high levels through illegal collusion or administered pricing and pursue policies that result in poor social performance."

Of the goal of good social performance, Economic Review states:

"In an ideal sense, a product should be produced at the lowest possible cost, with decent wages and working conditions for employes and sold at a price that corresponds to costs after making allowance for a fair profit on investment."

The magazine article cites several proposed methods of improving the social performance of private industry and curbing abuse of economic power by corporate giants, including public investigation and disclosure of administered pricing by Congress or a government agency set up for that purpose; detailed regulation of administered-price industries in the manner that public utilities are now regulated; establishment of government-owned "yardstick" companies to serve as models in various industries, a system which has proved successful in some West European countries.

Anti-Trust Cases Cited

While there are few total, single-company monopolies in this country outside the utility field, recent anti-trust cases involving drug manufacturers and price-fixing in the electrical equipment industry point up the need for new approaches to the problem of high industrial concentration, the article states. It suggests, among other things:

- Greater flexibility in anti-trust laws to permit the tailoring of remedies to specific abuses.
- More vigorous enforcement of existing laws and provision of adequate funds and staff to the Justice Dept. for that purpose.
- Stiffer penalties for violators to replace the existing small fines regarded by some companies merely as a "cost of doing business."
- Establishment of a new federal agency, similar to the now-defunct Reconstruction Finance Corp., to help new companies get started in industries where the barriers are high and competition is limited.

Steel Stock Record Shows Big Gains for Investors

Steel investors, as well as employes, are sharing the fruits of increased productivity and "have a very strong equity" position, Pres. Kennedy told his weekly press conference.

Just how well steel stockholders are doing as a result of productivity gains is revealed in an analysis by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research of the performance of U.S. Steel stock over the past 20 years.

A person who bought a single share of U.S. Steel common stock on Dec. 5, 1941—the Friday before Pearl Harbor Day—would have paid $46.88, the analysis found. If he held the stock until Dec. 7, 1961, as a result of splits he would then have had six shares selling at $80.75 each, for a total of $484.50. Dividends over the period would have amounted to $201.60, making the total value of the original investment $686.10.

Putting it another way—and assuming it is possible to buy a part share—the Dept. of Research found that a stockholder with $75 on Dec. 5, 1941, could have bought 1.6 shares of U.S. Steel common. This would have mounted up over the next 20 years to 9.6 shares worth $775.20. With dividends of $322.56, total value of the investment would have come to $1,097.76.

By comparison, the analysis noted, if the same stockholder had spent his $75 on a U.S. Savings Bond, Series E, in December 1941 and cashed it 20 years later, he would have received a total of $135.32.

DETROIT COPE AREA CONFERENCE drew more than 750 AFL-CIO unionists from three states, some of whom are shown as they registered for the sessions. The conference was one of 14 being conducted across the country in preparation for this year's congressional election campaigns. Topics include registration drives, getting out the vote, setting up local COPE committees and raising COPE dollars.

U. S. Agencies Prepare to Look Into Steel Industry's Pricing Policies

Anti-trust subcommittee, pushed ahead with subpoenas instructing the 12 largest steel companies to produce their cost figures.

"We're interested in the monopoly situation of all those price increases one after another," a spokesman for the Senate subcommittee said. "This hasn't changed now that there has been an equally quick reversal."

Kefauver's Tennessee colleague, Sen. Albert Gore (D), introduced a series of bills designed to force delays in future price hikes and make it easier for the government to break up existing big firms with monopoly characteristics.

Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald called the action rescinding the price rise "a healthy thing" for the American economy, helpful in preventing another "price-wage spiral." Less than a week before the 3.5 percent increase was announced by U.S. Steel—and quickly copied by a number of other major producers—McDonald had led USWA negotiators in concluding new labor contracts which Pres. Kennedy had commended as "non-inflationary."

Kennedy had staked the prestige of his office on an appeal to the union and the companies to reach an early agreement that would maintain payroll costs within the bounds of productivity increases and thus leave no excuse for a price rise that would resound throughout the economy.

Increase Denounced

The President apparently thought he had succeeded until the abrupt announcement by U.S. Steel—largest firm in the industry and traditionally the price leader—that rates were being raised anyway, although no wage increase was provided in the first year and the contract with the union would not become effective until July 1.

With visible anger, the President denounced the increase at a press conference as "wholly unjustifiable" and "irresponsible defiance" of the public interest.

He turned the full weight of the Administration against the steel firms and an industry retreat developed into a rout within 48 hours.

First, Inland Steel Co., eighth largest producer, which along with a handful of other companies had held back when U.S. Steel took the price-increase lead, announced it would not put the rise into effect at this time.

Next, Kaiser Steel Corp., the ninth ranking firm, said that it, too, would forego an immediate price hike.

Bethlehem Steel, second largest company and the first to match U.S. Steel's increase, broke ranks and rescinded the action.

The leader, U.S. Steel, promptly reversed itself, and other companies followed in the rollback.

Roger M. Blough, board chairman of U.S. Steel earlier had observed that failure of Inland and Kaiser to match the price rise "would make it very difficult for us."

At a press conference called in response to the President's condemnation of the increase, Blough sought to justify the action as necessary to improve profits and provide capital for plant and equipment modernization which, he said, would enable the company to keep pace with foreign competitors.

He defended the price rise as consistent with the company's "responsibilities to the nation" as well as to its employes and stockholders and said it would be unfair to assume "that we are less deeply concerned with the welfare, and the strength, and the vitality of this nation than are those who have criticized our action."

Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara, however, expressed concern that the increase might have "grave consequences" on the security of the country.

In a statement that left no doubt the Administration would use every available weapon to combat the price rise, McNamara said that henceforth the Defense Dept. would buy steel where possible only from companies which had not increased prices.

$1 Billion Added Cost

If the steel hike "fans out across other sectors of the economy," the secretary declared, it would add $1 billion a year to defense costs, impair the nation's favorable balance of trade and thus cut into its ability to maintain troops abroad.

The subsequent cancellation of the price increase lifted much of the pressure from the steel companies, even though government investigators still were seeking answers to anti-trust questions raised by the "follow-the-leader" pattern of the rise.

In calling for a study by a presidential commission, Humphrey said an inquiry into the industry's pricing practices was "essential." It should be "objective, fair and comprehensive . . . removed from all possible party considerations," he told the Senate.

Nevertheless a federal grand jury in New York continued its investigation, issuing subpoenas to officials of U.S. Steel, Bethlehem and Colorado Fuel & Iron Corp. Justice Dept. officials said the inquiry would cover the possibility of collusion to fix prices and whether U.S. Steel so dominates the industry that it controls prices and should be broken up.

One of Gore's Senate bills would amend the Sherman Anti-trust Act to give courts "the same yardstick to break up existing large concentrations that they can already apply to prevent proposed mergers and acquisitions."

Other measures introduced by the Tennessee Senator would:

- Amend the Taft-Hartley Act to give the President power to impose an 80-day waiting period before price increases in basic commodities may be put into effect, thus paralleling the 80-day "cooling off" period in strikes.
- Establish a National Consumers Advisory Board, with regional boards, to study and publicize the facts relating to proposed price increases.

Reuther Renews Plan

Along similar lines, Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther wrote the President urging consideration of a plan long advocated by the UAW to require price-leading industries to justify proposed increases publicly before a government panel. The plan also would require unions to defend their collective bargaining demands if management argued these dictated a price rise.

The plan, which would rely on the force of public opinion to influence the parties, "would preserve the freedom of private decision but assure that such freedom would be exercised within a framework of public responsibility," Reuther declared.

Chance for the Voters

THE FATE OF major legislation in the 87th Congress may well be determined in the next week as members of the House of Representatives return home to gauge the political situation in their districts and take soundings on voter sentiment.

The major legislative decisions are still ahead on health care for the aged, foreign trade, public works, unemployment compensation and a number of other issues. There is a general consensus that the House holds the key to what happens on these vital issues.

This mid-season break, then, is the time for personal visits to bolster an uncertain congressman's position, to give him first-hand perspective on how the voters in his district feel about these matters. The congressman who is committed to a liberal position will be grateful for evidence of continued support; and those who take a conservative position are receptive to argument, especially if it involves a large group of constituents.

The House is closely divided on many of the critical issues and a shift of a few votes may make the difference. Your congressman may have one of those votes. See him this week and ask him to support the AFL-CIO's program for a strong and prosperous America as a leader of the free world.

Administered Prices

THE WIDE POPULAR support for Pres. Kennedy's strong attack on the basic steel industry's attempt to hike prices $6 a ton has cleared the way for a close, detailed look at the economic role of administered pricing.

When U.S. Steel announced the $6 price hike, and a half dozen major steel firms fell immediately into line and quoted identical increases, a postwar pricing pattern was being repeated. But whereas in the past there were bursts of opposition and denunciation, this time Pres. Kennedy wheeled up the full power of his office and the executive branch of government and blazed away.

Challenged for the first time in the postwar era, Big Steel backed down and rescinded the price increase. But while public anger has abated, the problem persists: how to deal with big industrial complexes that base their prices not on the marketplace but to yield a pre-determined rate of profit.

Administered pricing, prevalent in many industries dominated by a handful of large companies, has been one of the major economic problems of the postwar era. It has been used to build profits without relationship to costs and has been responsible for a continuing high level of prices even through the periods of recession.

Wage increases and other benefits negotiated with companies involved in administered pricing have been magnified and distorted out of all proportion by price increases. These costs normally can be absorbed through increased productivity without hiking prices.

The steel increase is an example. The contract negotiated by the Steelworkers increased a number of fringe benefits of vital importance to the union. But nearly all economists agree that the rising productivity of the steel industry will absorb these costs, adding nothing to the basic labor cost per ton of steel manufactured.

The unwise decision of the basic steel industry to hike prices and the President's stern and immediate response has focused public attention as never before on the mechanism of prices and how they are set. This opportunity for a thorough examination of pricing policies and relationship to the national interest must not be lost.

Having glimpsed dramatically how prices can march up the hill and then down again without any relationship to economic facts or conditions, the public is now entitled to a full-scale investigation of what goes into the price tag.

The Work Load Left Behind

In Newspaper Editorials:

Steel Price Rollback Hailed, Teacher Pay Demands Backed

Two of the nation's leading newspapers commented cogently on two recent major news events—Pres. Kennedy's success in forcing the steel industry to rescind price increases that had been initiated by United States Steel Corp. and the brief strike of school teachers in New York City. Excerpts follow:

New Turn in Steel

(From the New York Times)

THE DECISION of the United States Steel Corp. to rescind its ill-considered price increase avoids a destructive new war between industry and government at a time when national unity is badly needed. The day's developments on the steel price front have done much to reinforce faith in the independence of corporate decision-making and the free play of market forces in basic industries.

The refusal of two relatively small companies—Inland and Kaiser—to join the parade started by United States Steel forced a collapse of the industry front in support of higher prices. Inland took the view that the national interest, as well as competitive pressure, made a price increase "untimely." When Kaiser joined in this display of economic good citizenship and good sense, Bethlehem decided that sound business judgment required it to rescind its increase in order to remain competitive."

United States Steel's surrender guarantees a general cancellation of the price advance. Maintenance of the old price line will guard the country against a new inflationary spiral, foster sanity in collective bargaining and help the steel companies preserve the high-level demand for steel that is their best insurance of improved profits.

The whole episode has provided powerful support for President Kennedy's theory that the White House has a duty to define the public interest in prices and wages while leaving the ultimate decision to management and labor. The recent steel wage agreement provided no excuse for higher steel prices, and the President served the nation well by rebuking the major companies for shattering four years of price stability.

AUTOMATION, HARD - CORE UNEMPLOYMENT and the emergence of efficient overseas competitors have created urgent new problems in the relationship of big government, big business and big labor in this country. These need solution in an atmosphere of cooperation, free of vengefulness or class distrust.

No Right to Strike?

(From the Washington Post)

SCHOOL TEACHERS generally are forbidden to go on strike as a means of enforcing a price increase for their services. New York City's experience of the past week with a brief but frightening teachers' strike suggests that such laws are at once futile and unfair unless they are accompanied by a conscientious willingness on the part of the community to deal generously with the affected employes.

After a day of picketing during which the school system was badly crippled, the New York teachers went back to their classrooms in conformity with a Supreme Court injunction.

One thing seems clear: the strikers violated New York's Condon-Wadlin Act which prohibits strikes by public employes under penalty of automatic dismissal and provides that although those dismissed may be rehired, they must forfeit all pay increases for three years and remain on probation for five years. But it would be sheer folly for New York to inflict this punishment on the strikers. It would mean an automatic closing of the public schools. The schools are desperately understaffed, and qualified teachers are in extremely short supply.

A salary scale starting at $5,000 and rising after many years of service to a maximum of $10,000 is not extravagantly generous for a profession requiring a high degree of education and training and involving a function of the utmost social importance. If one reckons what the community pays to the average teacher for each child under her care and tutelage, one discovers that it amounts to just about what one pays to put a new set of tires on an automobile.

Why are teachers not better paid for their vital work? It is hard to escape the conclusion that the community has been taking advantage of the economic impotence they suffer because they have been denied the right to strike. Taking advantage of teachers in this way is morally contemptible. What the community seems to forget, moreover, is that if teachers cannot strike, there is nothing to keep them from leaving the teaching profession individually for some more equitably compensated calling. The victims of this kind of meanness and neglect in dealing with teachers are the community's children—your children.

Morgan Says:

Lack of Adequate Libraries Stifles Adventure of Learning

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

ONE OF THE HEROINES of my western boyhood was a gentle woman named Miss Olive Locey who wore amber combs in her auburn hair—but that was only an incidental reason for her attraction. She was the town librarian and though perhaps not quite so comely as Marian the Librarian in that Broadway delight The Music Man, she was very special. She reigned over a quiet cove only half as big as the Metropole Billiard Parlor and not nearly so well populated but to move into her shaded realm was a journey of high adventure. The modest stacks anchored to the linseed-oiled floor were like strange ships waiting to share their cargoes of books with the curious traveler.

Morgan

There was great dignity to this, the Idaho dry farming community's cultural waterfront where nobody ever spoke above a whisper but Miss Locey's advice and counsel seemed to be more authoritative in subdued tones and perhaps it was the sense she gave of wanting to share an intellectual conspiracy that got me onto the high seas with Melville and Conrad and into some of the inviting intricacies of Balzac. Otherwise I might have been permanently drydocked with Ralph Henry Barbour or tooling along inanely but oh so happily with The Motor Boys Across the Plains, and Old Doc Yak who, as I fuzzily remember it, was the funnypaper precursor of Andy Gump.

Recalling these early tentative samplings of serious reading only serves to emphasize the excitement that a new, unread book seems to promise, and I boggle incredulously at the thought that there are still areas in this so-called civilized country of ours that have not shared that experience because neither books nor libraries are available.

This is a thought to ponder along with the equally—if not more—shocking intelligence that the House Rules Committee is sitting on an Administration bill to provide federal aid to combat adult illiteracy. Of course that pillar of 18th century enlightenment, Rules Committee Chairman Howard Smith of old Virginia, may figure that the taxpayers can't stand the cultural spurt that would be involved in bringing book-learning to the more than 11 million citizens over 18 in the U.S.A. who can't read or write, especially since the taxpayers have not provided adequate libraries even for the already literate to use.

If you doubt this latter fact here is some proof furnished by the American Library Association: two-thirds of all the elementary schools in the country are without libraries; one out of five college libraries has less than 25,000 volumes, and there are some American junior colleges with enrollments as high as 1,000 students each which have no library facilities. Less than 50 percent of all the college libraries in the country can meet the modest standard of a 50,000-volume library recommended by the association.

THESE AND OTHER worse situations in some rural areas are undoubtedly happy ones for those voluntary guardians of the public morals, the would-be book burners and book-banners. On second thought, of course, their work is never done. The self-appointed super-patriot or community paragon can nearly always find some passage in some volume, usually out of context, as actually or potentially capable, in his righteous eyes, of subverting or perverting some segment of the population.

I concede the need for certain restrictive rules in the selection of books for elementary and high school libraries but almost without exception the librarians themselves are far better equipped to draw and apply these rules than a protesting citizen. And what an exercise in ignorant arrogance it is, what indignity to and feverish distrust of a so-called free society it is, to allow zealots or pressure groups to dictate what the public at large can or cannot read.

It is heartening to note a slight improvement in American reading habits. The circulation of so-called adult books has increased about 30 percent in the last five years and reading emphasis has shifted from westerns and mysteries—not necessarily useless in themselves—toward the more culturally dimensional veins of art, music, science and even political affairs.

An apt motto for celebration of National Library Week might go something like this: Read a book, the mind you aid may be your own.

Washington Reports:

Public Demand Seen Assuring Passage of Anderson-King Bill

PUBLIC DEMAND assures the passage of medical care for the aged under social security when the Anderson-King bill gets to the floor of the House and Senate after the Easter recess, Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.M.) and Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N.J.) asserted on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

The many bills for health care for the aged introduced by Republican members of Congress this year are in themselves the result of public pressure, Anderson said.

"They want to give themselves a chance to say they voted for something," the senator declared.

Case said his mail was heavily in favor of the social security approach. He voted for an earlier similar measure, the Kennedy-Anderson amendment to the 1960 social security bill, and declared: "I certainly hope I get a chance to vote for it again."

The Anderson-King bill would provide 90 days of hospital care, 189 days of nursing home care, out-patient diagnostic services as required and up to 240 visits to patient's home for nursing and therapy. It would be paid for by a social security tax of one-fourth of 1 percent on the employer and the same on the employe.

"That's a pretty small amount," Anderson commented. "Only $17 a year for health insurance."

"Although voluntary health insurance has done a very fine job in great areas of our society," Case declared, "the cost is so high for persons over 65 that most retired persons are priced out of the market. The private insurance companies can't assume the cost which comes with insuring older persons."

ANDERSON POINTED OUT that the Kerr-Mills Act, passed in 1960, in addition to requiring a means test, is of assistance to people in only a few states.

"About 65,000 people were being helped in January of this year, two-thirds in New York and Massachusetts," he asserted.

Case also spoke about his sponsorship of the extension of the Davis-Bacon Act provisions to construction of post office building. The Post Office Dept. is no longer building most of its buildings directly, but having them constructed by others and then leasing them. The Davis-Bacon Act, which requires payment of the prevailing wage on federal construction, does not, therefore, apply.

Case said such extension is needed, especially since more than 1,900 buildings were constructed last year alone.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

A NATIONAL REPUBLICAN WOMEN'S conference held here, to whoop up enthusiasm in advance of the November elections, ended up acting about the way the GOP convention platform committee's bigwigs did back in 1960, just before the convention nominated Mr. Nixon and lost the White House to John F. Kennedy.

The Republican women were scrupulously fair in issuing major speech invitations to party leaders of stature, including Gov. Nelson Rockefeller of New York. But it was clear that their hearts belonged to Sen. Barry Goldwater of Arizona.

This is where a number of political reporters came in the first time.

In Chicago in 1960, Rockefeller asked for and got permission to outline to the platform committee his views on appropriate policy lines for the Republican Party to declare. He got out again without being lynched—but this is the most that could be said for his reception, which was frigid to the point of barely suppressed hostility.

It seemed for a minute or two as if, after his formal presentation, he might be dismissed without anyone taking the trouble to ask him a question allowing further delineation of his views.

Goldwater, by contrast, was given ovations before, during and after his presentation of his self-styled "conservative" philosophy for the party's consideration. If the platform writers had voted their preferences, they would obviously have nominated Goldwater for first or second spot on the ticket in five minutes.

* * *

WITH THE REPUBLICAN WOMEN here, the situation was about the same except perhaps more so.

Goldwater on the first day gave a keynote address that included vintage samples of his now-familiar style. On the GOP's political adversaries he observed:

"There is no Democratic Party left. I don't know what you call them—Socialists, Fabians, left-wingers. We need no longer hold back and be careful what we say about our opposition."

This is the kind of stuff that won Goldwater the platform committee and the votes of the South Carolina delegation at the 1960 nominating convention. It wooed and won the Republican ladies, who lapped up the words and cheered their hero.

The ladies were bored to death by Rockefeller, who talked about what he said he had done as governor of New York to improve schools and expand middle-income housing. He told about his fiscal responsibility—that is, when he needed more revenue to support expanded services, he put through a tax increase. He said that Democrats were very properly concerned with the rights of city people and minority groups, because equity is involved and besides that is the way to win elections.

The GOP ladies acted as if they couldn't care less. They cheered more tumultuously when Goldwater got into the act on Rockefeller's day by sending the chairman an orchid, which she promptly pinned on her shoulder and announced as a gift of the Arizona senator.

SURELY THIS IS AN EXTRAORDINARY thing in a major political party, which hopes to pick up congressional seats in the November elections and has not abandoned hopes of defeating Kennedy for the presidency in 1964.

Rockefeller is the second Republican in two generations to win election as governor of New York. He is seeking re-election this year.

He has had long experience in public life, has run a conservative administration in fiscal and economic affairs. His vote-pulling powers, at least in New York cities and suburban areas, have been demonstrated. He may end up as his party's 1964 nominee for the White House.

The GOP congressional powers, with the exception of Rep. William E. Miller of New York, who is chairman of the party's national committee, nevertheless are writing a record that would make it more difficult for him to win in 1964. The ladies from all over the country, brought in by the national committee, didn't boo the governor, but they gave him no encouragement to think they liked him or his politics.

HEALTH CARE FOR THE AGED under social security stands "a good chance of passage this year," Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N.J.), left, said, adding that action depends largely on how hard the Administration pushes. Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.M.), also on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program, emphasized that public pressure on GOP members of Congress has improved prospects for the legislation.

How to Buy:

Telephone 'Boiler Rooms' Hurt Both Buyers and Salesmen

By Sidney Margolius

THE TELEPHONE obviously is a convenience and often a necessity. But in the hands of high-pressure sellers it is also a trap for the unwary. This department gets many complaints about the electronic entrapment of working families, to the point where demands are being raised for laws against "boiler room" promotions.

"Boiler room" is the name given to a selling operation that consists chiefly of a room with a lot of phones and a crew of people calling lists of names. At one time boiler rooms mainly concentrated on spurious stock-selling schemes and dubious charity solicitations.

But now that wages are higher and working people have more money to be separated from, boiler rooms recently have sold everything from carpeting to dancing lessons and children's photographs. The Midwest especially has suffered from carpet boiler rooms. Trade sources report that boiler rooms buy carpeting at $2.50 a square yard and sell it at $15. This is more than three times as much as regular stores charge for similar low-quality goods.

The phone recently trapped a California working family into buying a garbage disposer at an extraordinary price. The wife tells us:

"I was contacted on the phone. I said I would not be interested. The lady on the phone said I would be under no obligation but they would like to show us the unit for advertising purposes only, and our name had been chosen in this location. I still said I wouldn't be interested but that evening a demonstrator called. He said he was not a salesman. Just a demonstrator. We let him demonstrate.

"The deal is that you pay for the machine alone. No installation fee. Free soap for a year. Free service for a year. They also pay part of the cost of pumping the septic tank. My husband signed the contract. The disposer was installed the next morning at 8 o'clock. I asked the firm not to put the contract through the bank as I would draw the money out of savings to save the finance charge. They didn't wait but that same day were paid by the bank for the full amount of the contract—$339."

Actually, high-quality garbage disposer units with one-half HP motor cost less than $85; one-third HP motors, less than $60. Typical installation, if there are no special problems, costs $20-$25.

The telephone also is a favorite approach for high-pressure encyclopedia salesmen.

The voice on the other end of the phone, asking such prize-winning questions as which arm of the Statue of Liberty holds up the torch, often is a woman. Is she a deliberate crook? No, the likelihood is that she is a money-pinched housewife hoping to earn a few extra dollars, and as exploited by the boiler-room operator as you will be if you agree to an appointment.

The St. Louis Better Business Bureau reports that often boiler-room solicitors are themselves trapped by innocent-looking ads which read "Women Wanted for Part-Time Work." One woman told the bureau that when she arrived with four other girls at the address given, she found the office had no furniture except six-typewriter tables with phones. The women sat facing a chart which displayed their speech in large type. They were told to read it word for word. It began: "You have been selected to receive a free gift."

The purpose was to sell a magazine and the gift was its cookbook. By 11 o'clock, none of the girls had made a sale so the lists were changed to cover different sections of the city. One discouraged solicitor wanted to leave but was too afraid of the supervisor. Instead she dialed her own number several times to kill time, and read the speech into the empty phone, inventing replies to unasked questions.

The solicitors were allowed to leave at 1 for lunch. The pay offered was $1.25 an hour plus 25 cents on each sale after the first ten. But none of the women returned to collect. They were just glad to get out.

PEOPLE ARE BEGINNING to say that such solicitations ought to be against the law. In Oregon, an active unionist, Robert D. Huffman, has attracted attention for a proposal that phone companies be required to star your number if you so desire. This would warn that yours is a listed but "protected" number. Solicitations of "protected" numbers would be illegal under the proposed legislation.

The phone companies make at least some efforts to work with the Better Business Bureaus to deprive unscrupulous sellers of facilities. But apparently it is difficult to police the no-man's land between the merely aggressive sellers, and the deliberately high-pressure and even dishonest. Until the growing resentment forces more-adequate control, these incidents should put you on guard against the equally-unhappy voice at the other end of the line. It is impossible for the poor to live off the poor.

Meany Again Pledges Labor Support of USO

The AFL-CIO has again given its official endorsement to the United Service Organizations and the assurance that union members will continue to "do their full share toward insuring its effectiveness" around the world.

Federation Pres. George Meany, in a letter extending the organization's "official endorsement and commendation" to the USO, told Chairman Harvey Firestone, Jr., of the USO board of governors that the labor movement has been a "full partner in USO from the beginning."

He cited the achievement of Lt. Col. John H. Glenn as a reminder of the "undiminished importance to our national security of the men and women in uniform, and our obligation to them."

Because USO "symbolizes that obligation and is a vital instrument in meeting it," Meany said, unions and union members have provided financial support and have taken a significant part in formulating USO programs.

"The labor movement is inherently committed to the proposition that the sole purpose of machines is to serve the interests of man, and that man, in turn, is indispensable to his own most incredible creations," he said.

"The USO is an important element in labor's Community Service Activities and I am confident that trade unionists will continue to do their full share" in supporting it effectively.

Why Not a Price Cut?

'Free' Trading Stamp Cost Put at 2 Percent

A CLOSE LOOK AT TRADING STAMPS offered by food, drug stores and service stations raises some doubts as to how "free" the stamps really are.

This theme is developed in an article in the April issue of "Changing Times," a magazine dealing with consumer interests and problems, entitled "Why Don't They Just Cut the Price?"

Trading stamp volume has "swelled to flood proportions," the magazine says, and about 40 million families save stamps. About 43 percent of all the food sold each year goes through stores that use stamp plans. One-third of all service stations and about 15 percent of all drug stores also are involved.

The magazine explains that retailers buy stamps from private companies at from $1.50 to $3 a thousand, with big stores generally paying less than the small ones.

Customers receive stamps at the rate of one for every dime spent or, in effect a rebate of 2 percent—2 cents on every dollar. Says "Changing Times":

"What puzzles critics of the plan is how a store can afford to pay out 2 percent of its sales dollar when its net profit may normally amount to a bare 1.5 percent of sales, as it does among larger supermarket chains."

Who Pays For Stamps

The article declares that an Agriculture Dept. study showed that prices paid by consumers in stamp stores rose over a three and one-half-year period .6 percent more than in non-stamp stores. The department report concluded, says "Changing Times," that the consumer did pay part of the cost of stamps "and the rest was covered either by larger profits or by a sacrifice of part of the stores' normal profits."

It is reasonable to assume, says the magazine, that a supermarket "has to raise sales by about 15 percent to offset the full cost of stamps."

To shift the cost to the consumer, a store can take the easy way out of not reducing prices or not lowering them as much as it would have ordinarily, says the magazine, adding: "One national survey indicates that this has happened on a fairly widespread scale."

The magazine concludes that "a dollar spent by the company on gimmicks may pull in more customers than a dollar spent by reducing prices," and that, plus attempts to build "customer loyalty" and to create a different appeal, all go into the many promotion schemes.

The key to successful shopping, says "Changing Times," is a "healthy skepticism, particularly toward anything proclaimed as 'free.' By the way you buy, you can demonstrate to stores and manufacturers that you're not interested in gimmicks but in the best product at the lowest price. Maybe some day companies will discover, as a result, that it may be cheaper to offer you fewer deals and more bargains."

House Passes 40-Hour Week In Building

The House has passed and sent to the Senate a bill requiring contractors on government-financed projects to pay overtime rates after 40 hours a week. The bill, which had bipartisan support and labor and Administration endorsement, was approved by a 163-46 vote.

Existing federal law requires overtime payment on federally-aided construction after 8 hours in one day, but sets no weekly limitation on hours. Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.), who steered the bill through the House, pointed out that this permitted employers to work crews as long as 56 hours a week without paying any overtime.

Roosevelt said the bill was brought up under suspension of the rules—a procedure requiring a two-thirds vote to bypass the House Rules Committee—because of "the large legislative jam" of bills awaiting clearance.

Still pending in the Rules Committee is a companion bill which would amend the Davis-Bacon Act by including the value of fringe benefits in determining prevailing minimum wage rates to be paid on federally-financed construction.

From Soup to Nonsense:

It's Not a Heap o' Livin'—It's Heap o' Work That Bothers Ma

By Jane Goodsell

THE LINE OF POETRY about which I feel most bitter and unforgivin'
Is the one statin' that what it takes to make a home is a heap o' livin'.
Those are the silliest words ever mouthed by tongue or writ by pen,
And every time I hear them, I get so mad I have to count to ten.
I'm sure I needn't tell you that those words were said by a man;
No woman would say a thing like that unless she were nutty as a pecan.

NOW, A HOUSE in which nobody does any livin' may be just an address,
But conversely, a heap o' livin' is what makes a house a mess.
Actually, it doesn't take a heap o'. A little bit o' livin' will do the trick;
A bit o' sleepin' and a bit o' eatin' and a bit o' bathin' will make the house look mighty sick.
A housewife can spend her whole day cleanin' and straightenin' her house,
And ten minutes after the children get home from school, it'll look like the scene of an all-night carouse.

WHAT DOES A WOMAN GAIN by gettin' a bathroom all scrubbed and scoured?
It'll look like the aftermath of the Johnstown Flood after her husband has shaved and showered.
As soon as she gets the kitchen all slicked up, nice and neat,
It's time to mess it up again, fixin' something to eat.
Take bed-makin'. There's a chore at which it's impossible to get ahead.
Somebody's always ruinin' your handiwork by goin' to bed.

LISTEN, IF ALL IT TOOK to make a house a home was a heap o' livin',
The female o' the species would be in a state of perpetual thanksgivin'.
The truth is, what it takes to keep a house from turnin' into a heap o' rubble,
Is a heap o' housewifely toil and trouble.

AFL-CIO Backs Kennedy Program:

Aid to Emerging Nations Urged As Key to U. S. Foreign Policy

Assistance to the economic and social development of the emerging countries is a key element in overall U. S. foreign policy, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller said in testimony filed with the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

"In a very real sense," said Biemiller, "we are trying to launch a new and different kind of foreign aid effort today. To our mind, it is a more realistic program based on principles and procedures which are geared to the most urgent requirements of the poorer nations for economic and social progress."

Pres. Kennedy has asked a total of $4.88 billion for military and economic assistance, with $3.38 billion earmarked for the latter. As last year's legislation authorized $1.2 for the long-term development program, only $1.2 billion in new authorization is called for. The AFL-CIO testimony urged the full amount, while at the same time following the traditional practice of not commenting on the proposed military aid appropriation.

Biemiller said the U. S. program is not "just a humanitarian effort, although we would be the last to deprecate our obligation to help those less fortunate than ourselves to eliminate hunger, disease and illiteracy."

"Our foreign assistance activities also advance our fundamental national interest in establishing a sound international economic and social framework which is absolutely necessary if we are ever to have a stable and peaceful world," he explained.

Gives Freedom A Chance

"Let me not be mistaken. I do not say that our foreign aid program will guarantee that the recipient nations will remain democratic for all time, certainly not in our exact sense of the term, or even forever in the anti-Communist camp. I do say our foreign aid efforts measurably improve the chances of the newly-independent countries to develop the kind of institutions, both governmental and non-governmental, which will permit freedom and democracy to take root.

"They may not be our institutions, but they can be free institutions nonetheless."

Comment on specific phases of the foreign aid program included:

- Long-range national development: "What is needed is a relatively long-term commitment both by us and by the assisted nation" with each proposed project viewed "not as a single isolated entity but in terms of its potential contribution to overall national progress.'
- Self-help and social reform: "Our help will fail unless the people of the developing countries are ready and willing to help themselves . . . We have rightly emphasized the need for tax reform, land reform, housing and support for trade unions and other democratic institutions" as essential to success.
- Alliance for Progress: "While we cannot ignore the urgent needs of the people in other parts of the world, certainly we should be particularly sympathetic to the aspirations for a better life of our neighbors in Latin America."
- Free World cooperation: "We think this insistence on cooperative free world effort is thoroughly justified."

"There are those who say we have failed in these programs," the testimony concluded, "that they have accomplished nothing, that they have hurt America.

"But a comparison of the free world as it is today with the world it might have been without our foreign aid efforts provides convincing proof of the value of foreign assistance.

"Instead of a Western Europe overrun by the Soviets, we have a Europe strong, democratic and prosperous allied with us in the struggle against the Soviet drive for world domination. Free democratic trade unions in Europe, fostered in large measure through the Marshall Plan program, are an important bulwark to freedom and democracy in Western Europe.

"Now, we must do a similar job in the developing nations."

Laborer's Son Wins USWA College Grant

Cincinnati—Ronald H. Muhlenkamp of Rural Route 2, Fort Recovery, O., was presented with a $3,500 scholarship award at the annual conference of Steelworkers' Dist. 25 here.

The winner is the son of I. S. Muhlenkamp, a foundry laborer at the New Idea Division of the Avco Corp. at Coldwater, O.

Kenya Women Hail Gifts from U.S. Labor

A sewing machine is an odd sort of gift for one labor federation to give another, but the pair the AFL-CIO presented to the Kenya Federation of Labor was received with a warm welcome and promptly put to good use in the KFL's program for women.

So reported Maida Springer, of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs, on her return from Tanganyika, where she was a state guest during the Independence Day rites, and Kenya.

The KFL women's program has been the answer to a long-felt need to involve African women in trade union activities, she said. As a first step it includes labor history, cooperatives, domestic science, child care and nutrition—all intended to prepare the women to help raise living standards.

Named assistant education director in charge of the program was Hilda Otieno. She got things moving quickly, Mrs. Springer said, but a crisis soon developed—the KFL didn't have any sewing machines to use in its classes. Some of the women brought their own, but the need was felt for machines which would be the property of the KFL and could be moved for classes in different parts of the country.

The AFL-CIO made arrangements to ship two machines to the KFL through the office of Lewis Johnson, labor liaison officer with CARE.

Mrs. Springer, who was in Kenya when they arrived and saw them unpacked, said the program in which they are involved has been "wholly successful."

Mrs. Springer addressed the class in Nairobi, tieing in the sewing machine project with the labor movement and stressing the role African women will play in the labor movement of the future.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR WOMEN in the labor movement were outlined by Maida Springer (second from left) of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs at a sewing class for women sponsored by the Kenya Federation of Labor in its headquarters in Nairobi. The class is one of the several organized by KFL Assistant Education Dir. Hilda Otieno (left) in a broad program for women, and its equipment includes two sewing machines given by the AFL-CIO through CARE.

NEW FREIGHTER for the American Export Lines, the S.S. Export Courier, was dedicated at Chester, Pa., to the memory of Harvey G. Shriner, who served the line for 38 years as chief engineer and helped found the Brotherhood of Marine Officers, an affiliate of the National Maritime Union. Mrs. Shriner, whose husband was vice president of the BMO at the time of his death, is shown christening the ship. Behind her is BMO Sec.-Treas. E. Joseph Farr. A plaque commemorating the dedication was placed aboard the vessel by the union.

Georgia Governor Calls Redistricting Session

A special session of the Georgia state legislature, described as in a "fighting" mood, has met in Atlanta at the call of Gov. Ernest Vandiver to consider reapportioning the General Assembly's membership.

It is the first such special session since the Supreme Court in a Tennessee case opened the doors of federal district courts to city voters who charged that rural-dominated state legislatures were denying urban citizens the equal protection of the laws by refusing to change legislative districts to reflect population shifts from rural to city areas.

Tennessee's Gov. Buford Ellington announced that he would call the legislature into special session if he were assured the reapportionment issue could be handled satisfactorily. This was taken to mean that rural and urban groups would have to agree in advance on a compromise reapportionment plan.

In Alabama, Gov. John Patterson protested a federal district court decision ordering the state legislature to reapportion the districts by July 16 or face the threat that the court itself would do it.

Patterson had earlier said he hoped the Alabama legislature would act on its own initiative to reapportion districts in which rural areas are far more heavily represented on a population basis than city and suburban areas.

Despite Patterson's protest, the impact of the high court's decision seemed certain to lead to spreading activity in many states where city voters have contended they are grossly under-represented by out-of-date apportionment systems.

Unit System Involved

Vandiver's call for the special session of the Georgia General Assembly cited two specific subjects he said needed attention—a realignment of both houses to grant more representation to urban and suburban counties and a possible abolition of the so-called county-unit system in party primaries.

The county-unit system, giving each small county two votes in selecting party nominees while counties 20 times as large were granted a maximum of six, has frequently resulted in primary "defeat" of a candidate with the largest popular vote in a legislative or congressional district.

Meanwhile, in a radio interview on the Supreme Court's Tennessee decision, the general counsel of the AFL-CIO, J. Albert Woll, declared flatly that the high court was "justified" in intervening in the issue of fair representation of city and suburban voters because there was a question of "constitutional rights" and it was the court's "duty" to correct any violation of such rights.

"Public reaction will be such that we will see many changes take place quite soon," Woll said in the interview on Labor News Conference, a Mutual Broadcasting System public service program.

City Voters 'Helpless'

Woll pointed out that in the Tennessee case, the court found that the state legislature was charged with ignoring a state constitutional clause requiring reapportionment each 10 years on the basis of the United States census. City and suburban voters were "helpless" to remedy the situation, he said, because the effect of the legislature's refusal to redistrict was to deprive populous areas of enough members to force through a reapportionment law.

The Supreme Court's decision, Woll emphasized, did not lay down any guidelines by which federal courts should try to correct under-representation of urban areas. The remedies a district court might order, he said, will have to be decided by the lower court itself after it has found that "discrimination has adversely affected the constitutional rights" of city voters.

He pointed out that the AFL-CIO's constitutional convention meeting last December approved a resolution deploring the widespread under-representation of populous areas and over-representation of rural regions, and specifically declared that the federal courts should be able to require that inequities be corrected.

"I think that this (Tennessee) decision should be looked upon with great elation by organized labor," he said, because the under-represented city areas are the ones where "a great proportion" of union members live and vote.

WHEN FLOODS THREATENED Sioux City, Ia., members of the Packinghouse Workers volunteered for emergency duty, raising 10 miles of dikes with hastily-filled sandbags. These UPWA members were among the volunteers from Armour and Swift plants in the city.

Press Freedom Awards Set Up By Hemisphere Newsmen's Body

Mexico City—A program of awards to promote press freedom, newspaper unionism and international cooperation in the Western Hemisphere has been adopted by the Inter-American Federation of Working Newspapermen's Organizations.

The IAFWNO executive committee at its spring meeting here announced establishment of the Free Newspapermen of America Award for distinguished writing by a member of an affiliated organization on the subject of freedom of the press.

In addition, the Santiago Senen Gonzalez Memorial Award, named for the late founder of the Argentine Federation of Newspapermen, will honor outstanding work in trade unionism or in promotion of international understanding.

Winners of both awards will receive $250 and bronze plaques.

Sec.-Treas. Charles A. Perlik, Jr., of the Newspaper Guild and Luis Carnero Checa of Peru, as co-chairmen, presided over the sessions, which also:

- Scheduled the federation's second congress for Aug. 17-20 at Bogota, Colombia, and a 10-day seminar on freedom of information and professional problems, to be held at Panama City immediately prior to the Bogota congress.
- Accepted as new affiliates the Sindicato de Periodistas de Panama, the Asociacion Colombiana de Periodistas and the Sindicato de Periodistas de Managua, Nicaragua.
- Approved sponsorship of three participants in advanced trade union training courses to be given by the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT).
- Adopted resolutions condemning the imprisonment of Cuban newspapermen by the Castro regime, supporting Argentine newspapermen in their defense of union rights and press freedom, and assailing as unnecessary the recent suspension of two Los Angeles dailies with a resulting loss of 1,000 jobs.

Teacher Training Aids Get Labor's Backing

An Administration bill aimed at improving the quality of education through better teacher training has been backed by the AFL-CIO as a "constructive" approach to "a very real problem."

AFL-CIO Legislative Rep. Clinton M. Fair emphasized, however, that improved training and scholarships for advanced teacher study made up only part of the answer to the problems of raising educational standards.

"Nothing would do quite so much to improve the quality of American education as raising teachers' salaries and reducing class size," Fair told the education subcommittee of the Senate Labor Committee.

The labor-backed Administration bill would award up to 2,500 scholarships to outstanding teachers for a year of full-time study and provide grants for colleges to improve teacher training programs and special courses. It would also help local public school systems conduct demonstration or experimental projects designed to improve the quality of instruction.

Fair told the subcommittee that the labor movement is especially concerned at the quality of teaching in economics, which he described as "too often shamefully inadequate."

Polls of high school students, he said, show "astonishing ignorance" about labor-management relations. Citing results of one survey, Fair declared:

"Whether or not a person is sympathetic to organized labor's goals, it is alarming to learn that nearly one high school student in 10 thinks that strikes are called by a notice sent from the company to the union or that one in five students thinks that a closed shop is a device used by employers to keep out unions."

'Dependence' Cited

Fair said inadequate teacher preparation and training often result in dependence on "special interest groups" such as the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, which prepares an examination on economic problems along with the "correct" answers "which treat questions of opinion and judgment as though they were matters of fact to be simply answered yes or no." He added:

"So far as we are concerned, the situation would be no better if instead of turning to the Chamber of Commerce, the teachers turned to the AFL-CIO.

"Economic problems should be taught by teachers who are themselves prepared by their training and education to handle the subject."

URW Staff Man Joins Mediation Service

Akron, O.—Field Rep. Paul E. Bowers of the Rubber Workers has been granted a leave of absence to join the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service.

A pioneer member and past president of Local 85 in the Gro-Cord Rubber Co. plant in Lima, O., he has been a URW staff member since 1943.

ICFTU Seeks Freedom for Libyan Labor

Brussels — The Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions is weighing "strong and effective measures" to obtain from the Libyan government respect for union rights and to halt interference with relationships between Libyan unions and the international labor movement.

Formulation of a program got under way after an ICFTU delegation headed by Gen. Sec. Omer Becu was refused admission to the country despite the valid visas of its members.

The delegation, also included Gen. Sec. Loyd (cq) A. Haskins of the Intl. Federation of Petroleum Workers, a member of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers of the United States; Gen. Sec. Ahmed Tlili of the General Union of Tunisian Workers (UGTT) and Gen. Sec. Peter de Vries of the Intl. Transportworkers Federation.

An earlier ICFTU delegation had been turned back at the Libyan border in September 1961. This was followed by a complaint to the Intl. Labor Organization on which the Governing Body took action. The Libyan government in November assured the ILO that "ICFTU representatives would always be welcome in Libya."

New 'Slavery' Hit:

ILO Group Reports Forced Labor Found

Geneva, Switzerland—Forced labor is still a fact of existence in a number of countries, an Intl. Labor Organization survey committee has reported, and despite international agreements there are "pointers" indicating that in some areas a compulsory labor system "is being born anew."

The survey, conducted by the ILO's Committee of Experts maintaining an annual study of the application of ILO conventions, said specifically that in some underdeveloped regions forced labor is used for "economic purposes."

The committee did not name the countries involved but said that its report to the annual ILO conference here next June would list them.

The governments, the committee stated, "will be called upon to reply" either in the conference or in official reports on their faithful adherence to conventions.

There are two major ILO conventions against forced labor, which the Committee on Experts bluntly labeled a "modern form of slavery" in which workers are exploited for political, social or economic purposes.

The first convention, approved in 1930, has been ratified and thus has treaty effect in 80 countries and is termed applicable by the ILO in 67 other recognizable political subdivisions. The second, approved in 1957, has been ratified by 54 countries and is held applicable in 52 non-metropolitan territories.

Prohibited in 1957

The ILO's Committee of Experts pointed out that the 1957 convention prohibits forced labor "as a means of political coercion or education" or punishment for opposing existing systems; as a "method of labor discipline"; as a means of "racial, social, national or religious discrimination"; and as a "method of mobilizing and using labor for purposes of economic development."

A 1961 report, the committee recalled, acknowledged that forced labor for economic purposes had "progressively diminished" and in some cases "completely disappeared." There was "noticeable progress" also in regard to forced labor for purposes of "political coercion."

Nevertheless, the committee survey said this year, remaining forms of forced labor cannot be called merely "vestiges of a dead past." In some cases, compulsory work is imposed in the name of "emergency" needs of a nation with the meaning of "emergency" imprecisely defined.

Recognizing the new awareness among underdeveloped areas of the urgent need for economic progress, the committee nevertheless warns "there can be no real economic development without parallel social development."

"Social development by definition means the removal of various constraints, one of the most pernicious of which is undoubtedly the modern form of slavery represented by forced labor."

Teacher 'Merit Rating' Denounced as Menace

Chicago—The merit rating system of paying teachers is an "educational cancer which must be stopped," Pres. Carl J. Megel of the Teachers declared recently at a conference for union leaders from all parts of the country.

"It is a device leading to educational ward-heeling among faculties, to public deception, and to poor education for children," Megel charged.

"It fosters confusion, friction, and ill-will among teachers."

Under merit rating, teachers who are supposed to be better than their fellow-teachers are paid more than others with equal or better training. The system, Megel maintained, "wrecks the single salary schedules under which teachers receive equal pay for equal training and experience."

He urged that school boards and teachers adopt collective bargaining to increase the low salaries of teachers and to correct poor working conditions uniformly for all teachers under the single salary system, which replaced the merit system in most U.S. schools in the 1930s.

No way of determining the superiority of one teacher over another has ever been devised, Megel said. He claimed the system leads to political favoritism and to resentment from teachers not "rewarded," and by publicizing a few "merit maximums," misleads the public into believing that all teachers are paid more than they actually are.

1.7 Million Members In California Unions

San Francisco — Approximately 1.737 million California workers were union members in July 1961, or about 19,000 under the peak membership reached in 1960, according to the annual count of the State Department of Industrial Relations.

The tally reflected the long-term drop in industrial employment.

ROBERT E. POWELL

A vice president of the Laborers' Union, Robert E. Powell has been named by Pres. George Meany to the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Committee. Powell, born and schooled in Kansas City, Kan., served 8 years as business agent of Local 1290 there; in 1960, he became the international union's representative in St. Louis, Mo. He has attended the labor-management program at Harvard University. Powell was elected a vice president at the Laborers' 1961 convention.

At Midpoint of Session:

Major Bills Await Action in Congress

tle over a rider in the welfare plan bill, aimed at AFL-CIO-affiliated government employes, ended in a 218-182 defeat of the anti-labor provision.

In these votes, as in the 1961 session, the key has been the Administration's success or failure in whittling away the coalition's strength and winning votes from moderate Republicans and economic liberals among southern Democrats.

An uncertain factor in the future congressional timetable is the length of the expected southern Senate filibuster on a bill to abolish discriminatory literacy tests in federal elections—one of two major civil rights measures.

Sharp Battle Seen

Earlier in the session, a constitutional amendment to abolish poll taxes in federal elections passed the Senate with ease after a token filibuster. A sharper battle is anticipated over the literacy bill, which would prevent states from challenging for voting purposes the literacy of persons with a sixth-grade education. It is designed to halt the use of literacy tests as a registration subterfuge for racial discrimination. The bill would also eliminate language barriers to voting by Spanish-speaking Americans.

The battle—which may eventually hinge on the success or failure of an attempt to invoke cloture and cut off debate—will get under way when Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield attempts to bypass the Judiciary Committee to take up the literacy bill.

The heavy logjam of major bills is a reflection of the continuing flow of legislative proposals from the White House. In addition to 19 formal messages sent Congress this year, Kennedy has pressed for legislation in a series of letters to the House and Senate and to individual committee chairmen.

The aggressive White House leadership appears to have brought demands from some Republicans for an alternative to a policy of outright opposition to apparently popular programs.

House Republicans, through a series of unobjectionable amendments to the manpower training bill, found themselves able to support the measure and assert it had been "improved" through GOP efforts.

On health care for the aged, one group of Republicans suddenly supported a substitute for the Anderson-King bill, which would finance the system through social security. The substitute, offered by Rep. Frank T. Bow (R-O.), would give "free" private insurance health policies to persons 65 years and older, paid for out of general Treasury funds and not through the self-financing provision of the social security system.

GOP Plan Offered

In another move to pin a GOP label on health care, Rep. John V. Lindsay (R-N.Y.) proposed a social security health care measure with a provision that retired persons be given the choice of direct benefits comparable to the Anderson-King provisions or an $8-a-month allowance to purchase private health insurance.

AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank termed the Lindsay bill "a great improvement over the Bow bill," but said it still has "the major deficiency of using public tax power to assure profits for private insurance companies."

Large Locals to Get Short Report Form

A new four-page form, half the size of its predecessor, is now available to large unions reporting finances under the Labor-Management Reporting & Disclosure Act.

About 20 percent of the more than 52,000 reporting unions are required to use the long form and will find the new version gives them a major reduction in paper-work, Sec. of Labor Arthur J. Goldberg said. Other unions previously have used a one-page "short" form.

The new form is known as LM-2. Required to use it are all unions whose total receipts, regardless of source and without exception, were $30,000 or more in the 12-month period covered by the report, and all unions that were in trusteeship at the end of their fiscal year.

Form LM-2 comes as a booklet, with extra copies and instructions included, and is being mailed currently to unions whose fiscal year has ended recently.

DELEGATES from 11 universities with labor education programs and from unions listen to Don Stevens, Michigan State AFL-CIO education director, at recent Midwest education conference sponsored by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education in Chicago. Seventy-five delegates attended the conference.

Labor Scorecard on Current Status Of Still-Pending Legislative Issues

ISSUE	STATUS
HEALTH CARE FOR THE AGED: Both the Administration and the AFL-CIO are strongly supporting the Anderson-King bill, which would provide health benefits for persons 65 and over under the social security and railroad retirement systems—without a means test. It would be self-financed by increasing the social security tax.	The House Ways & Means Committee held hearings last year, is expected to vote on the issue next month. There are indications that within the committee some conservative opposition is melting, and attempts by Republicans to come up with alternative plans testify to strong public support.
TRADE EXPANSION: The booming European Common Market and need for a high level of U.S. exports to maintain employment and check the outflow of dollars is the basis for Pres. Kennedy's request for broad authority to negotiate across-the-board tariff reductions. The AFL-CIO has actively backed the program, emphasizing the need for strong trade adjustment safeguards for workers and industries.	The House Ways & Means Committee has completed hearings, is expected to report out bill containing the key elements of the Administration proposal. The bill is expected to reach the House floor about mid-May under a closed rule prohibiting piecemeal amendments.
TAX REVISION: Both the Administration and the AFL-CIO have called for closing of loopholes including preferential tax treatment on profits earned abroad. The original program would provide a withholding tax on dividends and interest, limits on expense account spending, and repeal the dividend tax credit provision. Labor strongly opposed one Administration proposal for an investment tax credit as a "multi-billion dollar windfall to big corporations."	The House passed, 219-196, a modified tax revision bill after a strong appeal by Pres. Kennedy. In Senate Finance Committee hearings, still continuing, the AFL-CIO has asked major changes to improve the bill.
PUBLIC WORKS: Long backed by labor and now supported by the Administration, with modifications, is a public works program combining immediate, short-term construction of needed projects with stand-by authority for additional large-scale public works when economic indicators point to a future recession. Legislation has been sponsored by Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) and Rep. John A. Blatnik (D-Minn.).	The Senate Public Works Committee on Apr. 17 approved a bill authorizing $600 million for public works projects in areas of heavy unemployment, coupled with stand-by authority for the President to use up to $2 billion without specific appropriation to head off a future recession. Republicans centered their fire on the stand-by provision. The House committee has completed hearings and is taking up the bill in executive session.
YOUTH OPPORTUNITIES: A single labor-supported, Administration-endorsed bill combines establishment of a Youth Conservation Corps—modeled after the CCC of the New Deal—with a public service employment program to provide job opportunities for young people with local governments and non-profit social agencies.	The House Labor Committee on Mar. 29 reported the bill favorably and the measure is awaiting Rules Committee clearance to go to the floor. A companion bill was cleared by the Senate late in the first session and is still pending.
FOREIGN AID: Kennedy has asked and labor is strongly supporting a $3.38 billion economic aid program, including a $600 million first installment on the Alliance for Progress program.	Hearings are under way in both the House and Senate. After a first-round battle over the amount of new funds to be authorized, the procedure starts over again on legislation actually appropriating the money.
DAVIS-BACON: A bill to include the value of fringe benefits in determining the area prevailing wage rates on federally-financed construction has strong support from labor, and Administration endorsement. A companion bill, also endorsed, would require payment of overtime rates on construction after 40 hours a week.	The 40-hour week bill was passed by the House Apr. 16 by a 163-46 vote. The Davis-Bacon amendments were approved by the House Labor Committee, 22-7, last month and are awaiting Rules Committee clearance.
GOVERNMENT PAY RAISE: An Administration bill raising federal employe pay scales over a three-year period, with the biggest increase going to the top grades, has been criticized by the AFL-CIO as not adequate for postal and other lower-paid government employes.	The Senate Post Office & Civil Service Committee has held hearings and is expected to resume consideration of the issue after hearings on postage rates. The House committee has scheduled hearings to start May 3.
EQUAL PAY FOR WOMEN: Legislation to guarantee women workers equal pay for equal work has labor and Administration support.	A House Labor subcommittee has held hearings, is expected to report a bill favorably.
SCHOOL AID: Need for large-scale federal aid is emphasized in labor and Administration-supported bills for school construction funds and teachers' salaries, college and medical school aid, and related measures.	The House Rules Committee has informally agreed to clear the way for a conference between the House and Senate on differing college aid bills. House conferees agreed that if the Senate insisted on aid to students as scholarships rather than loans, the House would have a chance to vote instructions on the issue. Also awaiting Rules Committee approval is a bill providing grants and loans for medical school expansion.
CIVIL RIGHTS: The AFL-CIO has asked for an enforceable fair employment law and greater authority for the government to aid school desegregation and protect civil rights. Labor also supports two Administration civil rights measures: a bill abolishing discriminatory literacy tests and abolition of poll taxes.	A proposed constitutional amendment to end poll taxes has passed the Senate and hearings have been held in House Judiciary Committee. A bill to prevent states from challenging for voting purposes the literacy of persons with a sixth-grade education is expected to be brought up in Senate Apr. 24, with a filibuster by opponents expected. The House Labor Committee has approved a fair employment bill.
CONSUMER PROTECTION: Both the truth-in-lending bill by Sen. Paul Douglas (D-Ill.) and the drug bill drafted by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) after two years of anti-trust hearings have labor's strong endorsement and Administration approval.	The bills have been held up by conservative opposition in the Senate Banking & Currency Committee, which is considering the Douglas bill, and the Judiciary Committee, which has the Kefauver bill.

Election Set for June 18:

Full Labor Support Voted For New Canadian Party

By Gervase N. Love

Vancouver, B. C.—The fourth biennial convention of the Canadian Labor Congress, on the eve of a national election, voted full support to the New Democratic Party and urged all affiliates and their members to back it with their votes.

The delegates—many of whom had helped establish the party—took their action only a few days before Prime Minister John Diefenbaker announced June 18 as the election date. A score or more of union members, many of whom represented their locals at the convention, are NDP candidates for federal parliament.
